The Hitler book was written at about the same time as the Ford book, roughly a quarter century after the appearance of The Protocols in Russia and some thirty or so years before the Marschalko book in Hungary. Here I was able to look at the Jewish phenomenon as seen by men of three different generations and in four different countries. Then to add to this I was able to compare the contents with what was currently being written by A.K. Chesterton in his newsletter Candour, which though of international scope was primarily derived from observations of developments in Britain. The similarity of the picture portrayed was remarkable, and it was, to my mind, sufficient justification for my starting to take the subject very seriously.

BOOK BAN

But here another factor intervened, which itself was something of a revelation. Both Hitler and Henry Ford had been people of world renown, whether for good or ill. This being so, surely their writings ought to be of great public interest. In that case they ought to be available straight off the shelves in any library, as well as in larger bookshops. My investigations soon told me that they were not—as was the case also with The Protocols and The World Conquerors. Why, in a supposed 'democracy', had such books been virtually obliterated from public view? And why indeed, in times when the subject of 'anti-Semitism' was under constant discussion on radio and television and in the press, and when it was the central theme in so many products of the cinema dealing with World War II, was is not possible to walk into an ordinary bookshop or library and pick up a book explaining the subject from the standpoint of the so-called 'anti-Semite'?

Asking myself these questions, I recalled what had been said to me some little time before one of my acquaintances in the patriotic movement. The Jews, he said, had seen to it that all criticism of them in print was effectively banned by the simple method of pressuring bookshop chains and libraries into withdrawing such books from sale and from view.

Had this man sufficient evidence to support his claim? I did not know then and I do not know now, but one thing I do know is that someone quite clearly was able to ensure that these books were withdrawn from circulation through the normal channels, and is able to ensure likewise today. And if so, who? I leave the reader to deliberate over this question; and the question itself takes us right forward to about a month ago, when I watched the TV programme referred to at the beginning of this article. Under whose pressure, and in whose interest, was it decided that such a programme, whose central subject was 'anti-Semitism', should totally exclude any contribution from that quarter from which 'anti-Semitic' doctrines are supposed to emanate? Surely this is like a discussion on feminism which excludes all feminists!

Three years ago I produced my own book, The Eleventh Hour. In this book no attempt was made to analyse the Jewish Question in any great depth, as I felt that this had been amply done by other authors. But I did make reference to the strange censorship on the subject that has been described here, saying,

> One thing we must take into account concerning the theory of a Jewish international conspiracy and that is that it cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be regarded as an obscure subject. It lies at the heart of that doctrine that the Jews call 'anti-Semitism', and it has been acknowledged by writers on the so-called 'holocaust' as being the theory that underlay the anti-Jewish doctrines of Hitler and the Nazis.
> And we are never allowed to forget 'anti-Semitism'. It is hurled at us almost every day of our lives by means of the television screen, newspapers and book trade. If two weeks of TV programmes and films go by without a reference to it, the guardians of the Semitic interest being to become greatly worried that the public may be in the process of being permitted to forget this the world's most important issue!
> Considering all this, might it not reasonably be argued that the theory of a Jewish conspiracy must be one of sufficient public interest for it to be subjected to a thorough public enquiry, to an even-sided public debate in which someone is permitted to speak for those many people of historical importance who might be classed as 'anti-Semites'—from Luther to Hitler, from Shakespeare to Belloc and A.K. Chesterton, from Richard Wagner to Henry Ford?
> Surely, if the theory of a Jewish conspiracy underlying 'anti-Semitism' has caused so much misery in the world, the proper way to avoid future misery of the same kind is to knock the theory thoroughly on the head by having an open debate about it and once and for all demolishing it by the power of arguments and facts! Yet it seems that those who control the channels of communication whereby such a debate may be staged are strangely reluctant to do this. Why?

Whether or not there actually is such a thing as a Jewish conspiracy for world domination, there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that there is a conspiracy, being conducted by someone, to place a gag on all public discussion of the subject.

NATURE OF THE OPPOSITION

After having read a number of serious books, as well as a few cranky ones, in which the 'anti-Semitic' point of view was presented, I became convinced that this doctrine certainly could not be airily brushed aside as the invention of mere bigots and 'hatemongers'. I was not yet disposed to accept it completely, however, without putting it to the test of my own further enquiries and practical experiences. I joined the patriotic movement, as I have related, to do something for Britain rather than to promote hostility to other nations or races. When I began speaking, at first on street corners, in 1958, the main thrust of my speeches consisted of a series of proposals for constructive changes of British policy, on economic, social and political questions. I opposed the break-up of the British Empire, and advocated that it was in the mutual interest of the United Kingdom and her mainly British dominions to stick together in close alliance. I opposed the moves to embroil Britain in the Common Market, because they ran contrary to this policy. I advocated economic nationalism through the protection of British manufacturing industry, in a series of speeches and articles that anticipated, many years ahead of time, the industrial collapse that we have seen during the last decade under the impact of cup-price foreign imports. I put forward proposals for an integrated national community of the British people, with all helping one another, as opposed to the individual-centered society that is the consequence of liberalism. I opposed non-white immigration into Britain, though without hatred for the immigrant races involved. I spoke and wrote in favour of strong defences and for the restoration of national service.

In none of these early activities did I bang the drum of 'anti-Semitism'. Although I was starting to think seriously about the Jewish Question I was, like many others, anxious not to be dubbed a 'Nazi', and I sought therefore to avoid association with Hitler's treatment of the Jews.

Bit by bit, however, personal experiences were leading me to a position in which involvement in this issue could not be avoided.

I found that the people most hostile to our patriotic ideas were, in very large part, Jewish. In arguments with Jews I could not notice the contrast between their attitudes to questions affecting Britain as a nation and to those affecting the interests of their own community and the state of Israel, to which they were all attached. They condemned British Nationalism and patriotism vehemently, yet they were the most passionate Jewish Nationalists. What they would never acknowledge Britain's right to do in defence of her interests they enthusiastically applauded Israel's right to do when her interest were thought to be at stake.

This Jewish hostility towards our ideas was evident at our meetings—at which, as yet, we had not started to mention Jews in any unfavourable context. Jews were the most vociferous protesters and, when attempts to wreck the meetings by physical attack were made, Jews were in the forefront of those involved in the violence.

PARALLEL EXPERIENCES

At about this time I had started to make the acquaintance of some people who had taken part in the Mosley movement in the 1930s, and I also obtained some literature produced by supporters of that movement. One revelation that caught my interest was that Mosley had had exactly the same experience as the people with whom I had now become associated: he started out with a programme for Britain that contained no policies directed against Jews; but the Jewish community in this country immediately organised itself against him and Jews predominated among those found guilty of physical assaults against Mosley's supporters.

I began to read Jewish publications, including the world-famous Jewish Chronicle. They were veritably dripping with hatred against any and all people in this country who took a strong stand for British interests and advocated patriotic policies, quite regardless of whether such people had ever attacked Jews. I was then reminded of a passage that I had read in Hitler's Mein Kampf a little while earlier, in which the author said that he had been unable to find any newspaper in Germany under Jewish ownership that could properly be called 'national'.

In the books that I mentioned earlier, and in many others that I had read, it had been alleged that almost the entire Soviet leadership that took over Russia after the red revolution in 1917 had been Jewish, many of the people involved operating under false Russian-sounding names, such as Trotsky, Kamenev, Zinoviev, Sverdlov and so on. It was also pointed out that Karl Marx, the intellectual father of bolshevism, had been Jewish. Was this just 'anti-Semitic' propaganda? In due course I found out that the Jews themselves had never made any attempt to deny such facts but simply explained them away as the result of Jews having been driven towards the revolutionary movement in Russia by the oppression they had suffered under the Czars. Would that have explained the extent of their predominance in the first Soviet State? I think not. Nor would it have explained why, as I myself found out first hand, middle-class Jews from quite prosperous families were to be found disproportionately represented among communists in Britain—a country which had been extremely kind to their race for three centuries. I was able to make these observations on a trip to Russia, sponsored and organised by sundry left-wing groups, to attend the World Youth Festival in Moscow in 1957. I had enlisted to go on that trip after seeing an advertisement for it in a sporting magazine and being struck by how cheap it was: £43 all-in! I went for no political motives but only to exploit a unique opportunity to visit a country that had been shrouded in mystery and which I thought was worth seeing. By going there I did not learn a lot about communism in Russia because we were only permitted to travel within limits laid down by our Soviet hosts. I did learn quite a bit about communism in Britain, however, by acquaintance with the organisers of the 'British' party during a three-day train journey across Europe. I never forgot the impact of the large Jewish presence among these people, particularly at official level.

The Jewish presence in communism today is not what it was, but then neither is communism itself. For many years collapsing under the weight of its own internal rottenness, this system which has been the creator of most of the misery we have seen in the 20th century is now on its way out, and no longer serves as a magnet for those who want to be at the centre of political power. Nevertheless, among the communist rearguard in East Germany we have seen Jews to the fore, as we also see them in the white intelligentsia of the communist-dominated African National Congress.

THE STATE THAT IS A LAW UNTO ITSELF

If we seek a focal point of Jewish power in the world today, we will find it in the State of Israel and in the mobilisation, through the American political system, of US support for that state in the face of growing international concern at the rampant imperialism and racism that is evident in Israeli policy. Use of these terms is not made with derogatory intent, but only to illustrate a paradox; the most passionate denigrators of imperialism and racism when practised by others, Jews are only too ready to support them when practised by their own kin in the bandit state that was set up in 1948 on foundations of bribery and terror: bribery in the way of favours bought for Jewish support of America's entry into World War I, terror in the way of the methods used against enforcers of the British Mandate and against those Palestinians who have not taken kindly to their traditional homelands being occupied and themselves being driven out of them.

At the beginning of this year a massive military operation was launched under United States leadership to stop the Iraqis annexing Kuwait. And yet it has been this same United States that has not only sanctioned Israeli occupation of Gaza and the West Bank but has continued to provide huge economic subsidies to the state responsible for it and has given implicit guarantees of military security to that state within the framework of its present illegal borders. It will also be remembered that Israeli forces rampaged into Lebanon just a few years ago without any American action to stop them.

All this is a clear indication that Israel is able to get away with things that virtually no other small state, and very few larger states, in the world are allowed to get away with. Israel, in other words, seems to enjoy a special status and to be the beneficiary of the workings of a special power—a power formidable enough to determine United States foreign policy by being able virtually to elect and unelect American presidents and American Congresses. I could go on almost indefinitely citing further examples of this selfsame Jewish power in operation, but space imposes limits, and it should suffice to illustrate this one example to show that the Jewish Nation expects and enjoys privileges in this world that are given to no other. Yet the moment that anyone draws attention to this and protests that it ought-not to be so he is certain to have his name filed away in the archives recording the world's 'anti-Semites', who of course must not be permitted to present their case on British television nor in the British press nor have their ample literature on display in British libraries or bookshops. It is a difficult state of affairs to come to terms with, and some of us simply cannot come to terms with it. Hence we are 'anti-Semitic'!

THE SOLUTION

I think I am correct in deducing from all that the Jews have said on the subject of 'anti-Semitism' that they would like to see an end to it. They may not believe this, but there are many of us whom they label 'anti-Semites' who share that sentiment.

The point at issue is whether the initiative for achieving this needs to come from the 'anti-Semites' or the Jews themselves.

For many centuries the Jews with a few exceptions, have been adamant on this point. It is we who have to reform and not they. 'Anti-Semitism', they claim, is an unmitigated evil and must be eradicated, either by the 'anti-Semites' undergoing a change of heart and learning to love the Jews or by their simply being silenced.

The Jews, in order to accomplish the first object, lay great stress on the value of 'education'—education in the great benefits their race has brought to the world and education in the appalling suffering and persecution to which they have been subjected, particularly under Hitler.

But this education must be a wholly one-way business. The people of the world must be educated, under the tutelage of the Jews and their Gentile supporters, to appreciate the Jewish point of view and understand Jewish suffering.

None of this education may permit the airing of any other point of view, nor may it suggest that Jews anywhere might themselves have inflicted suffering—such as in the bloodstained years of the building of the Soviet State in Russia, in which millions of Gentiles were murdered by decree of a leadership that was, as stated, predominantly Jewish.

I would suggest that it is time for a change in this policy. And I would suggest that that change is as much in the interest of the Jews as of anyone else.

Because for all the howling over the centuries against 'anti-Semitism', for all the measures used to wipe it out, for all the wars waged to oppose it, it still has not disappeared. Indeed there is evidence that today it is again on the upsurge. My source of this information? Why, the Jews themselves!

So why not a new approach to the problem?

Why not start by accepting that there may be two sides to this argument: that not all the guilt is on the side of the 'anti-Semites', that at least some of the guilt may lie with the 'Semites'? Why not permit an open debate on the matter—in the press, on TV and radio, in the book trade, in the schools and universities?

And why not make public meeting halls around the country available to 'racists' and 'anti-Semites' so that they can speak to audiences and explain why they are 'racists' and 'anti-Semites', so that the latter can then make up their own minds?

For surely if there is no reasoned foundation for 'anti-Semitism' the Jews and their supporters will be able to convince the people of this by winning an open and honest debate. In this way they can bury the bogey once and for all.

I challenge them to do this.

SAME TREATMENT

But this is just a start. There are other ways in which the Jews can take steps to put an end to 'anti-Semitism.'

The first is for them to abandon their idea of themselves as a special people, as a 'Chosen Race', as a nation that must be treated differently from other nations.

They might make a start in this by withdrawing from its occupation of territories that do not belong to it and which have only been acquired by the use of naked force.

Then they might continue the good work by dismantling their formidable apparatus of power and influence by which they play a decisive role in the politics of so many other nations. They might, to begin with, abandon their attempts to direct the foreign policy of the United States and leave this instead to Americans.

And they might, similarly, discontinue their efforts to play a disproportionately powerful role in the politics of this country.

As an example, they might withdraw their pressure on the present British Government to push the infamous 'War Crimes Bill' through parliament—a Bill that is causing great offence to many Britons who are not 'anti-Semites', in as much as it amounts to the violation of hallowed British legal traditions and practices at the behest of an ethnic minority.

The Jews dislike the allegations of 'anti-Semites' that they aim to control the British press. Very well, they can demolish those allegations very effectively by persuading their own Sir Robert Maxwell to sell off his newspaper empire and by their never again attempting to influence the editorial policy of any paper by means of the threat of canceling advertising contracts.

And there is another thing the Jews can do.

It is their constant claim that the German Nation is tainted by the record of Nazism and Hitler, and they have always urged that the Germans must for ever stand up before the world and acknowledge their guilt in having given birth to the Nazi movement, and that those Germans must atone for their country's past crimes.

Would it not therefore be reasonable to ask that the Jews acknowledge before the world the predominant role that members of their race played in the creation of Communism, and that they are under some obligation to atone for the sufferings that that system has inflicted on mankind?

This would be just another way in which the Jews could demonstrate to us all that what holds good for other nations and races holds good also for themselves.

There is another way in which the Jews can do this.

They can decide once and for all whether they are nationalists or internationalists.

If, as they claim, they are in favour of internationalism, if they support the demise of the sovereign nation-state and the merging of all nations and races into 'one-world', let them set an example in this regard by abandoning Jewish Nationalism, by dismantling the State of Israel, by handing Palestine back to the Palestinians and themselves either remaining there as integrated members of the Palestinian Nation under Palestinian rule or migrating elsewhere and integrating themselves thoroughly with the nations among which they settle.

If, on the other hand, they choose to be nationalists, to be intensely patriotic towards Israel and to fight doggedly for Jewish national interests at all times, they surely cannot object to other peoples—Briton, Germans, French, Americans and so on—doing likewise. This would mean that they should abandon their bitter hostility and their organised opposition to all non-Jewish nationalism wherever it manifests itself.

Is this really an unreasonable proposition to put to the Jews?

Should the Jews decide to integrate fully with other nations as part of the 'one-world' ideal in which they profess to believe, no-one would with fairness object to their maintaining their own distinct religion, with their own churches (synagogues) and their own traditions of worship. I certainly, for one, would not.

But Jewish communities would be expected to disband the numerous organisations that they now maintain within the states in which they live which are dedicated to promoting special Jewish interests and which lend credence to the view of many of their hosts that they regard themselves as separate and distinct from the societies around them.

All this amounts to a suggestion that a better way might be found to put an end to 'anti-Semitism' if the Jews themselves change—instead of always insisting that it must be us who must change, and us alone.

The Jews will be the first to remind us that 'anti-Semitism' is far from new but is a phenomenon that has reared its head again and again over the centuries, and in one country after another. Absolutely true, and in acknowledging this in The Eleventh Hour I said:

> No parallel exists anywhere of movements of opposition to any other race or religious group that have manifested themselves with the same intensity, the same universality and the same repetitiveness as these movements against Jewry. Are we to believe that the people involved in such movements were all lunatics, beasts or sadists, intent on persecuting a racial group just out of the malevolence of their natures? Was William Shakespeare, Britain's and perhaps the world's, greatest dramatist, so wrong in his manner of dealing with this subject, as in The Merchant of Venice, while he was considered so right in his observations of practically every other human problem under the sun?
> Or did all these people perhaps have a reason for their attitudes towards Jewry? We are surely entitled, if we live in a society in which intellectual freedom is allowed, to debate the matter in a spirit of open enquiry by hearing both sides of the argument. Yet in fact we are only allowed to hear one side. Again I put the question: why?

The gist of what I was saying in this passage should be plain to the reader: were all these people, and nations, out of step and only the Jews in step? Is there any particular reason why we should assume that all of them were in the wrong and just the Jews in the right? And if the latter, just why did it all happen? Why this universal and repeated opposition to the Jews and never on any comparable scale to other races?

From this it is pertinent to ask: why the insistence that the remainder of the world must change? Why is it not at least equally fair to propose that the Jews change?

Will the latter ever happen? I am not a crystal-ball gazer, and I am not given to making such forecasts.

All I can say with certainty is that if it does not happen, there seems little prospect that the Jewish future will be any the less turbulent than the Jewish past.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

Revisionist Perspectives on the "Holocaust" Extermination Thesis

by

Raymond Goodwin

8 April 1991

The following paper is authored by a layman interested in both finding and spreading TRUTH. Through the dissemination of this truth, it is hoped that some measure of justice and fair play may be rendered those who, for decades, have been vilified in so many ways by the purveyors of a massive LIE. The information contained herein is available to any and all who would take the time to THINK for themselves, ask questions (demanding logical answers), and stop accepting as truth what they are bombarded with daily from the bench, dais, and pulpit.

The Revisionist position on the "Holocaust"—the term used to describe the supposed genocide of the Jews during World War II by use of the fumigating agent Zyklon B (a commercial preparation containing hydrogen cyanide)—is that there was no such attempt by National Socialist Germany to exterminate any ethnic group. Many deaths ocurred due to disease, starvation, and the horrid conditions of war, but "gas chambers" for homicidal purposes were non-existent. Those who accept the conventional view as true are designated generally as "Exterminationists" by Revisionists.

Among many credible arguments against a genocide program presented by the Revisionists is evidence of the technical and physical impossibility of claims regarding the alleged gassings and cremations. It is to this area that this paper is directed. However, a chronological background of the origin of Revisionist research is necessary for a proper understanding of Revisionist contentions.

In 1961, Paul Rassinier of France became the first author to refute the accuracy of claims of genocide in print (astute readers will note, of course, that Yockey's Imperium was published in 1948, but did not deal directly with the hoax). Rassinier, a socialist and member of the French resistance, had been interned in the concentration camps of Buchenwald and Dora. Liberated in 1945 and returning to France as an invalid, he was both puzzled and outraged at the claims of "genocide" and gas chambers, especially at the two camps where he had seen no evidence of either as an inmate. His initial works on the subject of extermination of the Jews, The Lie of Ulysses, and, in 1964, The Drama of the European Jews, called into question the "Holocaust" legend. His writings have inspired an ever growing library of Revisionist literature.

The year 1976 featured the appearance of a thorough and well-documented Revisionist book by Dr. Arthur R. Butz of Northwestern University. The Hoax of the Twentieth Century dissected the extermination claims from the pre-war and post-war population standpoint. The crucial role played by the Allied trials and their extreme importance in implanting the legend were also addressed:

> ...it is a fact that without the evidence generated at these trials, there would be no significant evidence that the program of killing Jews ever existed at all...If the trials had not been held, a person claiming the existence of an extermination program could not, if challenged, produce any evidence for this save a few books...whose claims are just as unsupported as his original claim. Thus the problem that had been involved in deciding whether or not to try mass murder; unlike the usual murder case, there was legitimate and very solid doubt that the deed had been committed at all.
> This may surprise the reader who regards the tale of Jewish extermination as a near certainty; such is simply not the case. There are many considerations supporting this view and some are so simple that they may surprise the reader even further. The simplest valid reason for being skeptical about the extermination claim is also the simplest conceivable reason; at the end of the war they were still there (The Hoax of the Twentieth Century, page 10).

Adding credence to the claims made by Butz is the 1983 book by Walter N. Sanning, The Dissolution of Eastern European Jewry. This detailed demographic study offers evidence that the vast majority of the "exterminated" Jews survived, being absorbed primarily into the Soviet Union, Palestine, and the United States. Professor Sanning challenges the Exterminationist school of thought thusly:

> The purpose of this analysis was not to investigate the content of truth in the 'Holocaust' story, but to outline the extent and the direction of the Jewish population movement before, during and after World War Two. If the developments as traced here are in conflict with the taboos of contemporary historians, it is their task to reconsider an untenable position.

In his book, The Holocaust – 120 Questions and Answers, Dr. Charles E. Weber does a masterful job of provoking thought while keeping his approach simple and plain-spoken. This 1983 publication addresses a myriad of issues related to the Holocaust legend, and reminds the reader from the outset that the funding available to those who disseminate material from the Exterminationist viewpoint far outweighs the minute resources available to the Revisionist (p. 8). This is, of course, a major factor in the relative obscurity of Revisionist research and conclusions on the issue.

One of the most definitive books on the conduct of "war crimes" trials, The Auschwitz Myth by Dr. Wilhelm Stäglich, gives one insight into the "show-trial" and political nature of Allied courtroom procedures. This 1986 book stresses the ignoring of proper judicial standards and the appalling way in which the search for truth was impeded, rather than furthered, by the court.By October of 1990 the Revisionist assault on the legend had come full circle with the admission by Britain's leading historian, David Irving, that he was now convinced of the fraudulent nature of the entire Extermination Thesis (Irving, pp. 498-499), and would include a statement to this effect in new editions of his previously published books.

According to Revisionist investigation, none of the alleged gas chambers had ventilation or exhaust systems capable of handling the gassing of inmates. The square footage in all the chambers would allow for a hypothetical total of 123,976 gassings in all the years of the supposed "genocide" program (The Leuchter Report, p. 14). Also, in September of 1989, the Russians released the Auschwitz death books, which show a death toll of 74,000 at that camp from all causes (Irving p. 500). Confessions by Germans obtained by torture, "eyewitness" testimony, and exterminationist historians put the number gassed at Auschwitz alone at four million. This massive contradiction deserves further examination in the interest of historical truth.On August 19, 1960, the director of the prestigious Institute for Contemporary History in Munich, Dr. Martin Broszat, announced to his amazed countrymen that there had never been a "gas chamber" in the entirety of the German Reich, but only in a few other places, namely, in occupied Poland (Faurisson, "The Problem of the Gas Chambers," pp. 107-108).

Broszat has never provided an explanation for this contention. Professor Robert Faurisson of France asks: 1. How does Dr. Broszat know that the "gas chambers" in the Old Reich were frauds? 2. How does he know that the "gas chambers" in Poland are genuine? 3. Why do the proofs and certainties and eyewitness accounts concerning the concentration camps in the west suddenly have no value, while these same criteria still remain true for the camps in Poland (p. 108)?

As the Exterminationists themselves have since abandoned the claim of the use of gas chambers in Germany proper, primary attention is now devoted to the main camps in Poland, Majdanek, and Auschwitz-Birkenau. Relative, however, is the confession regarding the German camp of Bergen-Belsen.

Two pillars upon which rest the claims of the Exterminationists are the confessions of Kurt Gerstein and Rudolf Hoess. Gerstein, one time commandant of Bergen-Belsen, states in his confession that 700 to 800 people went into each of the four chambers each time the gassings took place. The size of each room varies slightly, but worked out in terms of occupants per square meter (39" x 39"), the rooms would have had a minimum of 30 to a maximum of 40 people in each of these square meters (Felderer, p. 170). Revisionist researcher Ditlieb Felderer concludes,

> In spite of all the absurdities, impossibilities, erroneous and contradictory figures, the 'Gerstein Statement' continues to maintain its supremacy in Exterminationist lore. Perhaps this is just as well, from a cynical Revisionist viewpoint, for few things could better illustrate the mythical nature of the 'Holocaust' than this very item. (Felderer. p. 172)

Rudolf Hoess, one of the three successive commanding officers at Auschwitz, was the only one to leave a confession. His description of the actual gassing procedures is remarkably short and vague, just as all other "eyewitness" accounts are vague and brief and full of contradictions on many points. As described by Hoess, one-half hour after having released the gas, the Germans would open the door and turn on the fan, and immediately begin to remove the bodies. Hoess adds that the crew in charge would remove the 2000 bodies and begin transporting them to the crematory ovens while eating and smoking (quoted in Faurisson, "The Mechanics..." p. 24). This confession implies that it is possible to enter an area saturated with hydrogen cyanide (HCN), while taking no precautions for self-protection, and bare-handedly handle 2000 cadavers contaminated with the deadly gas. The air pockets between the bodies heaped on top of one another would have also been filled with HCN. This "confession" lacks common sense, and is in accord with Revisionist claims that it is a fabrication extracted by torture.

Testimony to the contrary by "witnesses" at Nuremberg and other show trials was readily accepted as gospel by Allied judges anxious to do their duty for "humanity".

The DuPont Company Material Safety Data Sheet (MSDS) on hydrogen cyanide, updated January 14, 1991, describes HCN as unstable with heat and extremely flammable. It is a fast-acting poison and could be fatal if inhaled, swallowed, or absorbed through the skin. The MSDS adds that in most cases cyanide poisoning causes a deceptively healthy pink to red skin color, and that skin permeation can occur in amounts capable of producing systemic toxicity. The user is advised to use the gas only in closed systems and with ventilation adequate to keep vapor concentrations below exposure limits. Warnings are given to evacuate the area immediately if HCN fumes are detected, and to don protective clothing before re-entry. The minimum personal protective equipment recommended is goggles and rubber gloves, and the user should have at hand rubber suits and boots, a full-body chemical suit, and a selfcontained breathing air supply. DuPont also warns that with eye or skin contact, one should immediately flush the eyes with plenty of water, remove contaminated clothing, including shoes, and wash the skin. Skin absorption can occur from cyanide dust, solutions, or HCN vapor (MSDS, pp. 3-10). Therefore, the abundance of technical and physical impossibilities inherent in the confessions become apparent upon examination of the sites and the dimensions of the supposed gas chambers. The technical problems inherent in any plan to gas millions of people would have necessitated meetings of experts and the issuance of plans, instructions, and commands. No evidence that any of this was done has ever been found (Faurisson, "The Mechanics..." p. 29). Passes would not have been granted to Germans in the camps nor their families allowed to visit; prisoners who had served their sentences would not have been released and allowed to return to their respective countries, or the extermination program would have been revealed to the whole world.

Faurisson concludes his article with what he regards as the criteria of false evidence regarding the gas chambers. He avers that all the statements, as vague and inconsistent as they may be, agree on one thing: the crew responsible for removing the bodies entered the site either "immediately" or "a few moments" after the deaths of the victims. Calling this a physical impossibility, he states:

> I contend that this point alone constitutes the cornerstone of the false evidence, because this is a physical impossibility. If you encounter a person who believes in the existence of the "gas chambers," ask him how, in his opinion, the thousands of cadavers were removed to make room for the next batch ("The Mechanics...", p. 30).

Perhaps the most severe blow to the Extermination Thesis was delivered in 1988 with the publication of The Leuchter Report: The End of a Myth. The author's treatise is a technical report on the alleged execution chambers at Auschwitz, Birkenau, and Majdanek, Poland, using comparisons with American gas chamber designs and operations.

In states that use lethal gas for capital punishment, stringent rules and procedures must be met. All lighting and electrical hardware must be explosion-proof (none of the rooms designated as "gas-chambers" had this important safety feature). The chamber is operated under a vacuum so that any leak would be inward. An eminent authority on capital executions, Leuchter states that many complicated problems must be considered in the design of an execution gas chamber. A mistake may, and probably will, cause death or injury to anyone outside the chamber (Leuchter, p. 6). This expert states that an area of nine square feet is the minimum required for gas circulation around the occupants of any gas chamber. As the floor area for Auschwitz Krema I "gas chamber" is 844 square feet, allowance for gas circulation means that a maximum of 94 people could fit into this room at once. "Eyewitness testimony" places 600 people at a time in this room (Leuchter, p. 11).

The tourist attractions exhibited to the public as gas chambers in all the camps examined by Leuchter have no gasketed doors or windows, and very few have vents; the inside walls of the structures are not sealed to prevent leakage or absorption of the gas, so that the exposed, porous brick and mortar would accumulate HCN and be dangerous to humans for several years. The fact that these chambers are located next to the crematories also would make them a prime source for potential explosion.

Leuchter found that Krema I has floor drains connected to the main sewer of the camp. This would allow the deadly gas to get into every building at the facility. The "gas chambers" here, as in all the camps, are too small to contain the numbers claimed. The doors to these chambers all open inward (a poor design consideration by those supposedly so efficient in mass slaughter; it would be difficult to push such a door open against piles of bodies after the gassings). Enough leakage would occur in all the gas chambers so that the administering technicians would have been killed (Leuchter, p. 9).

The strongest physical evidences against the gas chamber legend are the forensic samples of brick, mortar, concrete, and sediment taken by the Leuchter team from the three Polish camps. Cyanide and cyanide compounds are quite residual. Leuchter took thirty-one samples at the alleged gas chambers, and a control sample was taken from delousing facility number one at Birkenau. The control sample showed a very heavy cyanide content of 1050 milligrams of cyanide per kilogram of brick (mg/kg), consistent with the use of Zyklon B as a delousing agent. However, of the other 31 samples, 17 had no measurable trace of HCN. Ten had 1.9 mg/kg or lower, and the other four ranged from 2.3 to 7.9 mg/kg. The very small quantities detected indicate that these buildings were deloused at some time, as were all the buildings at all three camps (Leuchter, p. 11). This forensic analysis supports the evidence that these facilities were not execution gas chambers. Of course, "eyewitness testimony" by those who are incapable of lying was responsible for the death sentences meted out to German camp personnel here, as well as in the camps in Germany proper, where the non-existence of homicidal gas chambers has been admitted even by the Exterminationists. No charges of perjury, or suggestions of redress to the "survivors" of the wrongly and vindictively executed Germans have ever been profered by the moralistic proponents of the Extermination thesis.

Investigation of the cremation of the alleged gassing victims evinces the same degree of contradiction. A tour of Evergreen Memorial Park Cemetery and Crematory in Wharton, Texas and a personal interview with technician Helen Goode revealed that the 1985 "retort chamber" (the proper name for the crematory oven) is comparable in size to the ovens of the camps in Poland. The Wharton unit is 31" high, 36" wide, 8' deep, and lined with fire-brick. This modern unit, however, has an electrical timer and controls, uses propane gas, and has a uniform degree of heating to 2000° Fahrenheit. Goode, executive vice-president and technician, states that each cremation takes four hours—three for the reduction of a body to ashes and fragments, and one hour for a "cool-down." Goode says that even after these four hours, the unit is still hot enough to singe one's hair and could cause blister burns on anyone opening the door. She makes it a practice to wait at least two more hours before attempting to remove the remains. The total residue of one body would fit into a container the size of a shoe box. The burial of four million shoe boxes would have made quite a mound at the supposed execution site of Auschwitz. No such accumulation of ashes exists (one should also take into account the incredible amount of ash residue from the fuel it would have taken to accomplish the alleged millions of cremations).

Goode stated that her unit could possibly process a maximum of six cadavers in 24 hours, but more likely three or four. When asked about placing multiple bodies in the oven at once, she replied that this would lessen the efficiency of the unit and result in an incomplete cremation (Goode, Personal interview, 13 March 1991).

Leuchter's engineering study of cremation operations affirms that factory recommendations for normal operation and sustained use allows for three or fewer cremations per day. He says that modern retorts are capable of actually cremating one corpse in 1.25 hours, and that, theoretically, 19 corpses could be cremated in 24 hours; in the ovens of the camps, coal and coke were used and normally took 3.5 to 4 hours to cremate one body. These ovens generally were capable of sustaining temperatures of 1400 degrees Fahrenheit, and were fueled by hand. Theoretically, they could process 6.8 corpses per 24 hours. None of the ovens were designed for multiple-corpse incineration. Unless specifically designed, the retort will not consume the materials placed within it. Thus for all the crematory ovens inclusive of Majdanek, Auschwitz, and Birkenau, the 69 total retorts in the seven Kremas could theoretically cremate 469.2 bodies in 24 hours. In actual practice, the number would be closer to 207 (Leuchter, p. 10).

In March of 1991, a television special on the "Holocaust," made in 1985, entitled "A Painful Reminder" was aired on the Discovery Channel. The standard claims of gassings were made by the interviewed "survivors." It was clearly stated on this program that 279,000 bodies per month (over 9,000 per day) were being cremated at Auschwitz-Birkenau in a continuous, round-the-clock operation. When technician Helen Goode was asked how many bodies could be cremated per day in 70 modern units like her own (remember, there were 69 units at the Auschwitz complex), she replied "420 at the most." And if another technician told you he had cremated almost 10,000 per day? "Impossible," she replied. "Totally impossible." Yet it was on the basis of such "eyewitness" testimony as the 279,000 cremations per month that German military and concentration camp personnel were executed (Goode, Personal interview, 13 Mar. 1991).

In summation of his technical studies of the camps in Poland, Leuchter concluded:

> After reviewing all of the material and inspecting all the sites at Auschwitz, Birkenau, and Majdanek, your author finds the evidence as overwhelming. There were no execution gas chambers at any of these locations. It is the best engineering opinion of this author that the alleged gas chambers at the inspected sites could not have then been, or now, be utilized or seriously considered to function as execution gas chambers. (Leuchter, p. 15)

The Revisionist viewpoint on the Holocaust can be a dangerous one—especially for one in a position to influence the thoughts of others. Faurisson has been physically attacked in a near-fatal beating; Leuchter has been for all purposes destroyed economically; the Institute for Historical Review was heavily damaged in a professional-style arson attack. Such occurrences are the rule, not the exception. Any classroom instructor who dares address the Revisionist position is risking reprimand and/or loss of employment. This "academic terrorism" would seem to have no place in an American institute of learning.

Why the paradoxical reaction of Zionists to Revisionist revelations that Jews were not the victims of extermination but survived the war? One would think that such a thing as the debunking of the Auschwitz myth would elicit a joyful response, especially from those who have believed for decades that their people were the victims of genocide. The Revisionists offer three fundamental reasons for untoward reactions of Jews in general to Revisionist conclusions: (1) the Holocaust is a huge financial business; (2) the Palestinian issue; and (3), the immensely powerful influence of Zionists upon the direction of American foreign and domestic policy.

The people of West Germany have been forced to pay billions of marks in reparations over the years to individual Jews as "survivors" as well as to Israel, a nation that did not even exist at the time of the alleged genocide. These reparations are based upon the now legendary "six million" figure, and as reparations payments are ongoing, any reduction in that number would be intolerable to the recipients of such largesse. As expressed by historian Irving, in notably British style:

> Now if you go to a grocer's shop and you buy six kilos of potatoes, and all you get is two kilos left in the bag and the grocer still charges you for the six...Which is what happened to the Germans: they've had to pay 150 billion deutschmarks, in compensation. So the grocer says: 'You're still going to have to pay for the six kilos,' then you're entitled to call that a bit of a rap! You buy six liters of milk and you find that the jug's only got 2 liters in it and the milkman says: 'I'm sorry, madam, you're still going to have to pay for the six, and that's the way it is.' That, too, is a swindle (Irving, p. 501).

In essence, should Revisionist findings be accurate, and accepted as such, the goose that lays the golden eggs would disappear. And those folks who have been forced to bear the guilt and pay the bill for decades just might be a little upset about being lied to and robbed all these years.Israel was established in 1948, due in large part to the overwhelming sympathy toward Jews worldwide engendered by the alleged National Socialist extermination program. The Zionists were given the land of the Palestinians by the British as a homeland for the establishment of a Jewish state. The Palestinians have been a homeless, tortured people since then, victims of both the repressive Zionists as well as an uninformed world not understanding the nature of their grief and generally unsympathetic toward righting a decades-old injustice.

As the United States government and all facets of the media played the key role in establishing the legend of genocide, perhaps this is why both institutions turn their backs on the attacks upon Revisionists and Palestinians alike. Both also continue an ever-increasing effort to propagate the Extermination Thesis. The state of Illinois has mandated the teaching of the "Holocaust" in its schools; the U.S. government, with taxpayer funds, is constructing a multi-million dollar "Holocaust" remembrance museum in Washington, D.C. No political lobby in America plays a more influential role in electing and/or defeating political candidates as do Jewish political action committees. These are all factors in maintaining the "Holocaust" legend and also explains the silence of politicos on the subject. Jewish organizations, overtly as well as through seemingly innocuous fronts, are pressuring all levels of government to adopt legislation that would make doubting the "Holocaust" a crime punishable by heavy fines and imprisonment. Their efforts have been successful in most foreign countries and are making headway in the United States.

Why would key members of the United States government have participated for so many years in perpetuating and supporting the legend of the "Holocaust?" Besides self-aggrandizement, of course, obliteration by contrast is the likely reason. Without the genocide claim to use against Germany, several aspects of the initiation and conduct of the war by the Roosevelt Administration could have caused much popular unrest in this country. The dubious story of the "surprise" attack on Pearl Harbor, the cover-up of the massacre of the Polish officer corps at Katyn by our Soviet allies, Operation Keelhaul, the barbaric saturation bombings of non-military targets, and the orgy of rape and pillage engaged in by the Soviets and "resistance" forces in particular, could justifiably be termed "war crimes." With the genocide claim against the Germans, these actions, as well as the secret decision before the end of the war to divide Germany and Europe with the Soviets, are "justified." With this particular mind-set established, atrocities committed by Israel are also viewed as at least somewhat "justified."

The veracity of Revisionist or Exterminationist claims may only be adjudged if both sides receive a hearing. Revisionists are willing to debate their contentions. Exterminationists, however, refuse on the grounds that the issue is not debatable or questionable. Jewish individuals and organizations are particularly vehement in their opposition to any airing of Revisionist findings, labeling Revisionists "anti-Semites," "neo-Nazis," and "defamers of the dead." For example, Shelly Shapiro, head of the New York based Holocaust Survivors and Friends in Pursuit of Justice, terms Leuchter a neo-Nazi propagandist, no scientist, and a liar (Estes, p. 26). She does not, however, address the viability of any of his research.

A valuable aid to learning would be served those in search of truth if the critics of revisionism would devote their energies and direct their attentions to disproving revisionist claims in an honest and honorable manner. Their silence on the issues, combined with their vehement personal attacks upon anyone questioning the legend, says it all. It is no wonder the Exterminationist position crumbles ever more with the passing of each day.

A not-exact version of this paper was submitted as a class project in a branch of the University of Houston. The interest it aroused was indeed encouraging; copies were requested by some 20 students and other individuals. The professor who graded the paper commented, "Though I do not agree with your position, your argument is well written and documented.....". The class was a course in advanced writing and research, not history. The paper received an A-minus grade.

COULD THE U.S. BREAK APART?

By
Allan Callahan

The U.S.S.R. was, until recently, the world's largest country. Maybe it was too big to endure, but the speed at which it fell apart, once it started, surprised most everybody.

Could the U.S. suffer a similar fate soon? Probably not any time soon, but I believe there is a chance, a very good chance, that it will happen sometime in the 21st century.

A very large chunk of America fell off for a time, starting in 1861, and it took the Civil War, and the defeat of the Confederacy, to put the two pieces back together again. Two main factors caused the Southern secession: slavery and states rights. The former no longer exists, and the latter is no longer a bone of contention, so if we break up any time within the next hundred years or so, it will almost certainly be from some other cause, or causes.

That cause is shaping up to be race. No other country on earth has so many diverse racial and ethnic groups either coming into it, or already in it. This is bound to weaken the cohesion of the nation. The congressmen (mostly white) who passed the laws allowing the non-white immigrants to flood in thought they wanted to share our "good life" and our "values." They are right about the first but not so right about the second.

Our values are tied up with our history. All colored immigrants consider the U.S. a good place to make money, but as far as embracing our values, meaning Caucasian values, they are not jumping for joy at this prospect. Rather, they are continually complaining that our schools are far too slanted toward white studies, and not paying anywhere near enough attention to non-white studies. Asians want more Asian history, Mexicans want more Mexican history, negroes want more black history, and so on. They feel no particular kinship toward white history.

As far as the other "virtues" supposedly in great supply here in the U.S., things like "liberty," "freedom" and "democracy," they mean different things to different people. No doubt they serve as dandy slogans for use by the colored elements for promoting their own interests, but as far as being of any use for uniting disparate peoples, they are proving to be weak reeds.

In speculating as to whether the U.S. might come apart as a nation, we need to first ask ourselves just what a nation is. The dictionary describes it in terms of people sharing a distinctive culture, territory, economy and language, united under a central government. Right off, we see that Americans of today only partly fit this definition. They do share a common territory and economy, and to a great extent a language, but not a distinctive culture. Washington desperately wants everyone to learn English (without making them), and while most still do, it appears that other languages are slowly expanding their footholds. And as far as being united under a central government, all that can be said for sure is that Americans are under a central government.

Francis Parker Yockey said that "the nation is an Idea," and that the Idea is incapable of being expressed in words. Under this definition we see that the U.S. is becoming less and less a nation every day.

If you are a white person, open your eyes and look around. You see the population getting darker all the time, and you may know that your own race is declining all the time, percentage-wise. Does this arouse feelings of warmth and kindship within your blood, or feelings of aversion and withdrawal? As Yockey said, you probably could not express in words just what the Idea of our nation should be, but whatever it is, what you see coming into existence in the U.S. today sure as hell isn't it.

Man is a territorial animal. Whenever Mexicans create a "Little Mexico" somewhere in the U.S., they want to at least keep, and probably expand, this territory, even though they might not want to admit it. Asians and blacks feel the same way about each "Little Asia" and "Little Africa" they create, even if they might not want to admit it. These territories are popping up all over. America is becoming a mosaic of races and cultures, rather than a more unified nation. (The white man is more or less ignoring his own territorial instincts right now, as he is too brainwashed.) All these colored territories come into being at the expense of the white territory.

Unless there is a change in the birth rates and the rate of immigration, America is projected to become a predominantly colored nation sometime in the 21st century, probably around the middle of it. And how are whites reacting to this projection? Many appear to be ignorant of it or unconcerned, but some some are moving, or talking of moving, to the Pacific Northwest. Others are eyeing various other states with low percentages of non-whites. And still others—mostly Southerners—are talking about something like a "New Dixie" or "Greater Dixie," in the deep South, maybe somewhat along the borders of the Old Confederacy, as a future bastion for the white race. But most whites are staying put, and not even thinking about moving to another state or section of the U.S.

During the War Between the States, a white government in the North defeated a white government in the South which had much smaller manpower and resources, but in the coming conflict (if there is one) we should not expect the Washington government to be unified, racially. In two or three generations it is likely to be heavily laced with non-whites of every stripe. And the military high command may be the same way, with all the generals and admirals subject to deep race-feelings for their own kind. We would thus have a psychologically divided command. When commanders are ordered to do such-and-such, they do not always obey. What did Julius Caesar do when ordered not to cross the Rubicon?

Unless there is a surprising turn-around, the Moscow government seems committed to letting the secession-minded republics go their own way, with maybe only some loose economic and defense ties. Washington, too, might someday consider a heavily polarized U.S. ungovernable, or at least not worth the bloodshed that it might take to bring everybody back in line.

However, there might be plenty of bloodshed here anyway among squabbling factions as they dispute various states or territories or boundaries. If a breakup occurs in the next thirty or forty years the Mexicans may want California, Texas, Arizona and New Mexico; if it doesn't occur for eighty or ninety years they may want a lot of other states besides. But the Asians are a fast growing segment of the population too, and might fight hard for some of the same states, especially California. Then there are the (non-Mexican) Hispanics, Puerto Ricans, Philippinoes, Indians (from India), American Indians, blacks and, of course—whites. America is getting to be such a mixed bag racially that there's no telling who might try to stake out a future claim to what. The U.S.S.R. is breaking up along the lines everybody more or less expected, and (so far) without much bloodshed, but in the U.S. we really don't know what to expect.

If we integrate and hold together as a nation we can expect white Americans to eventually disappear, being both mongrelized and squeezed out of existence, since our present birth-rates are not keeping up with our death-rates. But if America does break apart, I would like to see whites hang on to as much territory as they can. One encouraging sign is that some are looking around and rubbing their eyes in amazement at what is going on; and, ever so slowly, are starting to get their backs up. Any breakup, if it comes, is probably decades away, but—who knows? Until Gorbachev came along, a breakup of the U.S.S.R. seemed kind of far fetched, too. A lot can (and did) happen in five or six years.

Although many whites are alarmed at the fact that America has become a dumping ground for millions of racial aliens, we do not know how they feel about the possibility of the nation eventually splitting up over the presence of these aliens. This is a subject that is not discussed in the news media. No doubt many whites are willing to fight, if need be, to keep from giving up any territory, but they, as yet, have no leaders who have been able to gain national stature.

Caucasian Americans, though, may not be able to hold on to even Rhode Island, unless they get their thinking straightened out. They are too prone to get hung up on something like the "morality" of it all, and would probably be so worried about "doing the right thing" that they would not act until too late.

There is nothing written in the stars that says that the U.S. should not be populated solely by whites, or Mexicans, or blacks, or baboons. The only thing that counts in this case is the will-to-power! Do white Americans have it? Could they get it back if they've lost it?

What our people are going to need for the eventual denouement of the race problem is a careful yet bold leader with his wits about him, at the head of an army or mass movement, who could act as Caesar did when he reached the Rubicon. In his Life of Caesar, Plutarch tells us that when he came to the fateful stream in 49 B.C., he paused in thought for a long time, silently "computing how many calamities his passing that river would bring upon mankind." Finally, though, "with a sort of passion....uttering the phrase with which men usually prelude their plunge into desperate and daring fortunes, 'Let the die be cast,' he hastened to cross the river." ❑

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. THE FAILURE IN LOUISIANA

The candidacy of David Duke for the office of Governor of Louisiana aroused ardent hopes in the bosoms of the tiny minority of intelligent Americans who persist in believing that their race is fit to survive. They hoped that he would have an opportunity to use gubernatorial power, such as it is, to encourage members of our race to exercise such rights as they think they still have, and that his electoral victory would stimulate and encourage throughout the country the Aryan minority that is not content with its present status of degradation and servitude. His defeat has disappointed them—disappointed some bitterly.

They deserve our sympathy, but our function here is to inquire what lessons are to be drawn from Duke's failure and perhaps especially from his failure even in the parish that had started him on his political career.

Assumptions

We must assume that Duke received fewer votes than the well-known crook who was his opponent. About forty years ago, a man named Ned Touchstone, who at that time published an excellent little newspaper, The Councilor, and was engaged in a vain attempt to arouse a measure of intelligence in a majority of Americans, especially in the South and in his own state of Louisiana, was a candidate for some state office—one concerned with education, as I recall. He was defeated, and in one parish he received fewer votes than the number of persons who had contributed money to his campaign, while his opponent received a greater number of votes than the total of qualified electors in the parish. What had happened, of course, was that the technicians who had wired the voting machines had been overly enthusiastic. I have heard no rumors of a similar stealing of votes this time, so we may assume that while Duke may have received more than the reported 40% of the votes, he received less than 50%, and was really defeated.

We must also assume that Duke wanted to be elected Governor. About a fortnight before the election, I received a telephone call from a sagacious man in Louisiana who confided to me, in strict confidence, his belief that Duke had 'sold out' and was 'throwing' the election. Whether or not that gentleman was right, the character of Duke's campaign and his defeat inevitably aroused the rumors that are even now, on the morrow of the election, becoming rife.

Given the course of events, the suspicions and allegations that Duke did intentionally sabotage his own candidacy can be supported by plausible assessment of the evidence, even if they are entirely wrong. We can neither confirm nor refute them. We have no means of knowing what was in the adyts of Duke's mind, and it would be bootless to speculate. For the purposes of our inquiry, we must assume that he made an honest and serious effort to become Governor of Louisiana.

Our enemies, the rulers of the United States, certainly seemed to believe that Duke was in earnest, might be elected, and might become the leader of a slave revolt. His candidacy released a flood of obloquy of almost unprecedented intensity. The jewspapers throughout the country were filled with purulent pus, as from "Liberal" ulcers that had broken.[1] The War Lord screamed that Duke was a "charlatan," manifestly gabbling with fear that he was not. (And, as usual, Bushy could not resist the opportunity to spit again in the faces of his stupid American cattle by affirming that the measure of intelligence is willingness to believe the Kikes' absurd Holohoax.) Sheenies foamed at the mouth with venom and uttered their usual wails about the evil of a 'racism' that questions the immeasurable superiority of their own divinely-ordained Master Race. The professional con men, commonly called politicians, of the so-called Republican Party, which Duke might lead to victory in Louisiana, reviled the man who was, by political tradition, their own candidate. But all this was to be expected. It was a result that is produced automatically whenever there is danger that the American boobs might come to their senses, and should not detain us here.

1. Some editors probably are befuddled by the slightly disguised Marxism of the self-styled "Liberals," but most of them are simply like hitmen for the Mafia, doing dirty work for pay. It was in 1914 that John Swinton, editor of the New York Times, told his fellow journalists, assembled in the convention of the American Press Association, that he and they were "intellectual prostitutes," who were employed "to lie, to distort, to revile, to toady at the feet of Mammon, and to sell their country and their race for their daily bread." Note especially the reference to race, made before the Jews had consolidated their now total control of the American press and other media of communication. The term 'prostitute' is somewhat misleading, since whores do no harm to anyone, except, sometimes, their customers. An editor is better compared to a 'hit-man' for the Mafia or the C.I.A. It is true that he works longer hours than the hit-man, but, in compensation, he does not need to have the degree of courage that is requisite to shoot a man in the back from ambush on a dark night.

Confirmations

Duke's remarkable success in becoming a serious candidate for gubernatorial power in a populous state is proof, if any be needed, that the only way by which Americans can obtain a chance to vote for a candidate of their own is by imitating the poor boys of the past century who succeeded in attending a circus by finding unguarded places at which they could crawl under the canvas of the tent. Americans who wish to have a candidate of their own must find openings in the façade of their state's electoral system and crawl through them before the negligent supervisors notice what is being done and close the fissures they should have been guarding.

Duke succeeded in entering politics by finding a parish in which the agents of our rulers were complacent and negligent, assuming that the boobs would be content to be amused and bemused by the usual routine dance-act performed by Tweedledum and Tweedledee. Duke saw his opportunity and crawled under the canvas. He was thus able to procure a nomination in one wing of the ruling party before he could be suppressed.[2]

2. I described this sequence of events in greater detail in Liberty Bell, February 1990.

Greater vigilance will doubtless be exercised in the future, but there may still occur some opportunities for boys to crawl into the circus tent. Henceforth, however, they will be very rare. And it is unlikely that anyone can repeat Duke's feat. For reasons which will become apparent below, his campaign will, in all probability, be the last of its kind in this country.

Duke's comparative success should be effective proof—if there is still need of proof that the day dawns in the east—that, as I pointed out in my long article in Liberty Bell, February 1990, attempts to form an American political party are simply nugatory. No "third" (i.e., second) party now has the slightest chance of appearing on the ballot of any populous state—probably no chance anywhere—and hence not even a chance to waste more of its dupes' contributions before undergoing an ignominious and risible defeat at the polls.

As recently as thirty years ago, there was a reasonable chance that a new party might conceivably succeed, but that time is long past: the loopholes in state legislation have been plugged and the composition of the electorate has changed. Today, a projected new party has not the slightest chance of even appearing on the ballot in any state, and the promoters of such illusory parties must know that, if they are sufficiently intelligent to write intelligible letters.

The common excuse that such futile efforts may provide publicity favorable to American interests is, at best, dubious. American media of communication, when not openly operated by Sheenies, are run by the Sheenies' hirelings, and will simply ignore American promotions, or, if compelled to take notice of one, will do so with ridicule and slander.

The election in Louisiana conclusively exposed the sham of opposition between "Republican" and "Democratic" parties, which are merely the two arms of the same feral monster. There can exist in fact between them only so much rivalry and antagonism as exists between your right and left hands. That was made obvious by several recent events, some of which I mentioned in February 1990.

The election in Louisiana was another proof of the solidarity of the politicians who are employed to keep the boobs amused and create an illusion that there are significant political contests.[3] The ruling party could properly be called Communist, if that name had not somehow come to connote the specific trappings of the rulers of Soviet Russia, which were recently discarded so that American boobs would willingly finance the same thing under another name in Russia, as they long have done in what was once their own country.[4] Since it will be convenient to have a specific designation of the political party to which our real rulers have ostensibly given political responsibility, it will be well to invent some appropriate designation. Perhaps 'Demopublican' would be a good term. It would have the advantage of calling to mind the 'publicans' who are so uniformly detested in the Christians' appendix to the Jews' popular story-book.

The foregoing reminders of political realities should be supererogatory, but it may perhaps be worthwhile to point out that the realities were again unmistakably demonstrated in Louisiana.

Practical Politics

It is the consensus of quite a few judicious and impartial observers that if the election in Louisiana had been held two weeks earlier, Duke would have been elected, and that if the White people's candidate had been anyone but Duke, he would have been elected on 16 November. I accept that opinion, though with less confidence that it is unexceptionable.

3. There are, to be sure, personal rivalries within both wings of the ruling party, just as there are rivalries within the Mafia, a similar though much smaller organization. At the lower levels there are real contests between persons seeking employment in the gang by campaigning for some minor office and thus demonstrating their ability to cozen voters. I need not add that there are still some candidates for local offices (mayor, state's attorney, county clerk, etc.) who are sincere in their purposes, are not infrequently elected, and may survive in small towns and thinly populated regions, which the Demopublicans think it not worthwhile to loot on the local level, and are content to plunder on the state and Federal levels.

4. As a discerning German writer observed a few years ago, the Americans' habit of lying to themselves enables them to profess horror at Communism in Russia while practicing it themselves at home, using a superficially different terminology.

It behooves us, therefore, to inquire about the blunders by which Duke may have contributed to his own defeat.

One error, which some observers think to have been of some importance, was inevitable. I trust that henceforth every White man who aspires to lead a political organization, however minuscule, will take it for granted that among his most ardent supporters will be one or more agents of the enemy, who will continuously report to their employers his resources, his plans, and any secrets with which they may have been entrusted, always ready to betray and denounce him publicly when they can do so most effectively.[5]

The one really important and debatable question about Duke's performance is the expediency of his hypocrisy. Did he lose more votes than he gained by his obviously spurious apologies for his past activities and pretense that he regretted his 'youthful mistakes'?

His gravest blunder was his attempt to use religion to entice voters. Today, Christianity in politics, like arsenic in coffee, is never salubrious.

By pretending to have become a Christian, Duke alienated rational men, whether or not they believed him. If they imagined that he had really become superstitious, they thought him too weak-minded to be trusted with a responsible office. If they recognized the pretense as mere bait for voters, they recoiled from a man who was as unscrupulous a liar as ordinary politicians.

Christians, if not simple-minded, naturally suspected the too tempestive 'conversion,' but were, on the whole, even more offended than the sceptics. They found themselves in the same dilemma, and if they were satisfied of his insincerity, they had strong religious reasons for disapproving of such duplicity and even for regarding it as a manifestation and proof of evil intent.

5. A decade or more ago, a 'Neo-Nazi' (i.e., intelligent and honest White man) held a convention of his organization to which only a few of his followers came. A friend of mine attended the meeting and tried to estimate the composition of the small audience. His rule is that whenever five men come together to plan for the survival of our race, one will be an agent of the Federal Bureau of Intimidation, keeping watch on the restive cattle, one will be an agent of the Mossad, keeping watch on the watcher, and one will be an opportunist, ready to sell out at the first good offer. The remaining two, he concluded, thus necessarily become babes in the woods. The larger the attendance, the more spies and, if the movement is thought to have any potential, agents provocateurs.

Furthermore, Duke professed to have become, almost overnight, a "born again" Christian, using a phrase that is almost confined to "fundamentalist" Protestant sects.[6] He thus, whether thought sincere or recognized as a pretender, gratuitously offended all Roman Catholics, who, remember, form the majority of the White population of Louisiana. That was like singing "Mademoiselle from Armentières" or "Auprès de ma blonde" at a convention of the League for Sexual Morality. It will not matter whether you are believed to have actually had the adventures described in the later stanzas.

The pretense was almost equally detrimental in its effect on Protestants. It was especially offensive to the clergy of the large and established Protestant churches, who have accepted the Marxian Reformation. They are, almost without exception, the knowing or unthinking hirelings of our enemies. They hypocritically profess a religion based on a book they admit to be full of lies, and befuddle their audiences with a glutinous treacle of humanitarian gibberish that conceals the Jews' deadly poison dissolved in it. They vend to their dozing congregations a doctrine of the divinely-ordained inferiority of the Aryan race, and their heroes are such murderers as Mandela, whom they use their dupes' money to subsidize. They dream of seeing gloriously bloody massacres of the White dolts who pay their salaries. At the first suggestion that Aryans are not an inferior species born to serve the Master Race and the anthropoid garbage that God's Race use as one of their principal weapons against us, the venal fakirs in the up-to-date holiness business have fits. They spontaneously go into a haka (haiku), the war dance of the Maoris, howling, leaping, gesticulating, and sticking out their tongues to daunt their adversaries. It was easy for them to expose, in terms of the hokum

6. Duke is a man of some education, and it is therefore conceivable, though unlikely, that he privately used "born again" as a sly pun. The phrase obviously is equivalent to 'twice born,' dvija in Sanskrit, and according to the basic religion of India, on which all the many Hindu sects agree, every Aryan is, by definition, dvija.

they were vending, how impious was the spurious 'conversion' that Duke claimed to have experienced.

He fared little better with the "Fundamentalists" whom he evidently most wanted to influence. His brand new coat of many colors served only to antagonize many of them. Some of his erstwhile supporters, who were almost certainly sincere in their devotion to the survival of our race, repudiated and denounced him because he had bought the wrong brand of Jesus.

Christianity has aptly been called a blind denial of reality and a revolt against Nature. It is not remarkable, therefore, that its votaries, with very few exceptions, are incapable of subordinating their emotional fixations to an urgent need to act for the survival of their manifestly endangered and probably doomed race and its civilization.[7]

What can be said to the highly select and mentally alert readers of Liberty Bell cannot advantageously be told to the general public. Various polls indicate that between 80% and 90% of the present population believe, or claim to believe, that somewhere in the welkin above the clouds they have a Big Daddy who might conceivably do something for them sometime. There seem to be no means of determining whether these percentages apply to the Aryans, the valuable part of the population. I should like to believe that their religiosity is less endemic, but I hazard no opinion.

Obviously, it is expedient, it is imperative, for a political candidate carefully to avoid all offense to Christians, and to treat them with the respect they deserve, for most of them are indeed respectable and worthy persons. But it is wildly imprudent to meddle with irreconcilable sectarian differences, and it is sheer folly to court one comparatively small faction at the expense of all the others.

7. My little booklet, Christianity and the Survival of the West (first edition, 1973; second edition, with new preface and added postscript, 1978; reprinted, 1987; temporarily out-of-print, both in this country and South Africa), was a last attempt to persuade Christians that the survival of our race, including their own progeny, should take precedence over theological beliefs and animosities. A very few, including a few clergymen, understood, but the several publications of the booklet brought me chiefly letters that assured me that Jesus would take care of everything or pointed out that the Roman Catholics are spawn of Satan or revealed to me the crucial fact that we Aryans are really Yahweh's Chosen and the heroes of the "Old Testament"!. I vaguely recall a letter of some fourteen closely-typewritten pages that proved that we Aryans belong to the tribe of Manasseh instead of Judah!

Oi! Dose awful Kluxers!

One of the youthful misdeeds for which Duke in his campaign ostentatiously professed repentance and contrition was his association with a Ku Klux Klan.

In 1972, as I recall, Duke took over or organized a Ku Klux Klan in Louisiana, naturally appointing himself the Grand Wizard,[8] publishing a little periodical called the Klan Crusader, and issuing a manifesto that won him the public approbation of Mr. Richard Cotten, who was at that time the foremost spokesman of the American cause through his broadcasts over many radio stations, from which he purchased time with funds sent him by his supporters, and who had been able to defeat the Sheenies' Defamation League when it sought to have his broadcasts prohibited as not kosher. Mr. Cotten predicted that Duke was a young man who would go far, as indeed he should with such support.

At one time I took the trouble of ascertaining how many Ku Klux Klans were operating and competing in each of three southern states. I do not recall the total for Louisiana, but it was at least seven or eight and may have been eleven or twelve. Most of them, infiltrated, subverted, and persecuted by the rulers of the United States, ended in bankruptcy, scandal, and loud recriminations, but only a prolonged, difficult, and expensive investigation would fix the gravamen of responsibility or guilt in any one instance.

I do not now remember which Knights of the Ku Klux Klan was Duke's, nor do I precisely recall the circumstances of its dissolution. He was ceremoniously expelled from one of the older Klans of which he may not then have been a member. Unlike the Klans that hoped to avoid attention from the poison-pen press, Duke, who was a literate, adroit, and persuasive speaker and writer, sought publicity for his organization, and he certainly alarmed our enemies.[9] A visit to England netted him considerable notoriety on both sides of the Atlantic, since he proclaimed an intent to establish a British branch of his Klan and ostentatiously appeared in its regalia; he was seized and deported by the British police on the orders of a government that obviously feared lest Duke might arouse some common sense in the dim wits of its White cattle.

After his enforced return to the United States, he came to the conclusion that his talents required a wider scope, such as would be provided by the National Association for the Advancement of White People, which he then founded and continues to head, except in name, and in 1980 he retired from what had been his Klan. He claimed to have resigned in disgust at the stolid stupidity of the 'red necks' who composed most of the membership of the various Klans.[10]

Duke's withdrawal from his Klan was given other explanations. There was a report that he had been offered $35,000 for the membership list, doubtless by an open or disguised agent of the Federal Bureau of Intimidation, Mossad, or the Defamation League. Whether or not he accepted that offer depended on the source of the report.

I can neither affirm nor deny the veracity of a story that was circulated in "right wing" circles and believed by some unprejudiced

9. For example, he was the subject of an expert pus-job in the widely-circulated pornographic magazine called Playboy, published by a Kike who attracted some attention with his private 707 airplane, painted black and called "The Flying Whorehouse." The well-compounded slime was entitled "The Buttondown Terror of David Duke," and, to sustain the interest of readers, it was continued through many pages, interlaced with photographs of nude women and of nude men who were exhibiting their penises for the admiration of fashionably-dressed audiences of modernized women.

10. I have a copy of his undated announcement of his resignation. It is dignified, a well-reasoned and cogent analysis of the existing situation, including the effects of the idiotic in-fighting among Klans and of the slime perpetually vomited by the jewspapers, by which many naïve Americans are influenced, even today. It transmits the power of his office to his successor, and ends with the pledge, "I will never publicly denigrate the Ku Klux Klan, or its legitimate leaders."

observers. It was said that Duke, before his resignation, had arranged a secret meeting with a man named Wilkinson, the head of another Klan. Wilkinson received him in a hotel room and listened to Duke's offer to sell his Klan for a large sum of money. There followed prolonged haggling over the price, during which Wilkinson confined himself to asking questions and making non-committal comments to elicit further proof of Duke's cynicism. Wilkinson finally refused to purchase, even at a 'rock-bottom' price, and Duke then discovered that Wilkinson had treacherously arranged to have the interview recorded on hidden microphones and photographed by a concealed camera. I now regret that I then made no effort to verify the story, which did not astonish or particularly interest me. Had I been younger, I should have deemed the conduct of both men reprehensible and been shocked by it, but I had participated in the John Birch Society until I discovered its secret supervisors and resigned from it, and for more than a quarter of a century I had observed the numerous patriotic and pseudo-patriotic organizations of the "right-wing," most of which sprang up like wild flowers and withered as quickly. Many of these organizations, although purportedly designed to oppose "the Communists" or, more candidly, the Jews, were principally engaged during their brief life in violent polemics against each other, making reciprocal allegations of dishonesty and treason that may or not have been true on both sides. The reported conference between Duke and Wilkinson seemed to me only normal and commonplace in such activities.

Since I neglected to check the story at the time, I can only record my uncertainty and give Duke the benefit of the doubt. Let us assume here that the report was false and proceed on that basis.

Duke could properly have expressed regret that he had devoted so much time and energy to an operation that failed, and, if such was his mature judgement, he could properly apologize for having mismanaged it or having mistaken the conditions and situation at that time and thus misdirected his efforts on behalf of our race. But in his campaign oratory, if he was correctly reported in the press, he confessed to a youthful sin and asked indulgence for it.

Rational men immediately asked themselves the obvious question. Was it a sin to espouse (however unsuccessfully) the cause of the White race? Was it wicked to claim for our race the right to possess, control, and govern for its own advantage the half of a continent it had taken from the savages?[11] If so, then why shouldn't Americans acquiesce in their present slavery and humbly hope their owners will throw them scraps from their table, as promised in the doctrine with which the Ebionites tried to enlist degenerate goyim.[12]

Duke was again impaled on both horns of a dilemma and undoubtedly alienated many of his whilom supporters. If his remorse was sincere, he was no longer their champion; if it was feigned, he was patently dishonest. He probably assumed that they would recognize his recantation as a political subterfuge to fool many stupidly sentimental or brainwashed persons into voting for him, but many of his followers had the Aryan (Nordic) disdain for meanness and deceit.

The question is, did he gain more than he lost by that charade? I do not know the answer, but I am inclined to guess that his duplicity was at least one reason why he was repudiated by a majority of the persons who had made his career possible in the parish that elected him to the legislature.

11. Muddle-headed sentimentalists bemoan such conquests, just as they, under the baton of their Marxist directors, wailed in chorus about "colonialism," since their minds are not sufficiently active to perceive that the only valid titles to territory anywhere in the world were bestowed by conquest and occupation. I have repeatedly offered to believe in the sincerity of the yowling "Liberals" as soon as even one of them has shown that he believes what he says and demonstrates his moral unwillingness to receive what he describes as stolen goods: he will kill his wife and children and then commit suicide, after leaving a will that bequeaths all his property to the nearest Indian tribe. So far, I have not heard of a practicing "Liberal."

12. Cf. Matth. 15.20-28; Marc. 7-26-28; whence it appears that the famous Jesus, a good Ebionite at that point, was wont to show contemptuous kindness to goyim who humbly confessed themselves to be dogs couched at the feet of the Master Race. Over the centuries, a great many Christians must have cast their eyes on these passages, but the meaning evidently failed to percolate through the scar-tissue that enclosed their encapsulated minds.

It is true that the name of the Ku Klux Klan in itself aroused resentment or fear in ignorant minds. The Klan was revived in the 1920s and enlisted a large number of members and sympathizers, chiefly from the unsophisticated lower classes, who, less insulated from quotidian reality than the better educated and more prosperous classes, sensed that their nation was falling under alien domination. The Klan's propaganda was defective. For one thing, they stigmatized and excluded Catholics, carrying on the old British fear of sectaries who were subject to the dictates of an alien and hostile monarch in Rome. That was not unreasonable in the Seventeenth Century, but in the Twentieth it was beating a dead donkey.[13]

The Klan in the 1920s attracted some persons who were not uneducated, but it also attracted opportunists[14] and, of course, enemy agents. There appears to have been some dishonesty, and several officers of the Klan were convicted of real or simulated offenses and imprisoned, but again it is impossible to distinguish, without long investigation, between guilt and the work of clever saboteurs and perjurers. What ruined the Klan in the 1920s was the concerted outpouring of derision and filth by the newspapers. It must be remembered that in that period the Americans, although they were beginning to realize that professional liars had herded them like cattle

13. It may be relevant to note that Duke's Klan in 1973 specifically admitted Catholics, thus antagonizing some of his competitors. As for the 1920s, one should remember that The Menace and similar rabble-rousing newspapers were still spreading not only sensational stories about the sexual immorality of Catholic clergy and ecclesiastics, which was contrasted with the piously ascetic purity of all Protestants, but especially fantastic tales about Catholic plans for an armed insurrection and coup d'état in the United States. These were credited by ignorant and unthinking persons, much as the Sheenies' Holohoax is accepted today, but they were not so implausible to believing Christians, who, if Protestants, had the highest religious authority for an unshakable conviction that the Pope and all his followers were Satanists, diabolical agents of the supernatural source of all evil.

14. E.g., the Hugo Black who later became a Justice of the Supreme Court. He seems to have been only a scallawag and scoundrel, but there were persistent reports that he had committed several murders and was therefore subject to blackmail by the persons who knew where the bodies were buried.

into a war against their own kindred and their own interests, still cherished the illusion that the newspapers were, on the whole, independent and veracious, and they usually believed what they read.[15]

The Alternative

The Klan of the 1920s was really irrelevant to Duke's problem. Instead of defending himself with a suspect repentance, he could have attacked his opponents by merely stating the historical truth that Ku Klux Klan had, in the bitter aftermath of the invasion of the South in 1861, heroically preserved the South from becoming what the scabrous gang of Republicans intended, a vast and stinking slum filled with diseased and mindless mongrels.

I have no doubt but that the shysters of "Education," in the South as elsewhere, had for decades zealously injected hallucinogenic lies into the unformed minds of their victims in the public schools, but the historical record cannot have been entirely effaced.[16]

Duke had a perfect opportunity to take pride in the tradition of the Klan. In New Orleans there must still persist memories of the reign of terror when that hapless city fell under the despotic control

15. There were, of course, a few who knew better. As a youth I was acquainted with a man who had gone to a friend, the editor of the leading newspaper in a fairly large city, and asked why he was attacking the Klan with preposterous piffle that implied that true "Americanism" dictated the repudiation of American principles and denigration of men who, however untutored, were rather courageously affirming loyalty to their nation. The editor's explanation was succinct: "Boss's orders."

16. In the middle 1950s, as I recall, at a reception that followed a lecture on a scholarly subject that I had given in Richmond, I complained to two prominent Virginians that the South had grievously andperhaps disastrously failed to insist that the factual history of the so-called "Civil War" be taught in the schools that were financed by Southern taxpayers. They agreed politely, but without conviction. I was dismayed by the confidence of so many present that nothing untoward could happen in Virginia, where "we know how to manage niggers," although there might be trouble in the raw newer states, such as Mississippi and Louisiana, where the White population lacked the culture, experience, and sagacity of the upper classes in Virginia—a state which, I notice, now has a nigger governor!

of General Benjamin "Beast" Butler,[17] a loathsome creature whose crudity made him conspicuous even among the leaders of the Republican Party in 1865. He not only did his best to encourage rape of White women in New Orleans and himself murdered White men of good family, but, having risen from poverty by becoming a very clever and very corrupt lawyer, he distinguished himself as a coward, a bogus soldier,[18] an utterly incompetent commander, a thief, a murderer, an arsonist, a traitor, a blackmailer, an embezzler, a swindling capitalist,[19] and, of course, a sadist in his relations with women.

Despite all the brainwashing by the hirelings of our vicious enemies, the South cannot have entirely forgotten a pod of venom, called Karl Schurz, that escaped from Germany in 1849 and became one of the founders of the Republican Party,[20] when it, the usual alliance between alien invaders, greedy criminals, and crackpots whose minds

17. I must again remark that by applying the word 'beast' to such creatures as Butler, we slander and defame all quadrupeds, who are incapable of such depravity and crime. It is only natural that all the fearsome beasts of myth and fiction, from Grendel in Beowulf to Smaug, the dragon in Tolkien's Hobbit, have to be endowed with human characteristics to make them truly evil. Butler's career is reluctantly described by Robert Werlich in his "Beast" Butler, (Washington, D.C., Quaker Press, 1962). Some even more unsavory details could be added.

18. He was without military experience, and owed his factitious rank as General to political appointment by the Republican gangsters, most of whom were somewhat less blatant than he in their criminal careers. Some of his concepts of military strategy would have been discreditable in a ten-year-old boy. He, with the approbation of the gangsters in power in Washington, claimed credit for the capture of New Orleans, with which he, cowering in an encampment from which he did not move until after the victory had been won, had nothing to do.

19. One of his corporations supplied overcoats to the Northern armies, by arrangement, of course, with the Republican government. His admitted profits were around 65%, and his shoddy overcoats were described, graphically though hyperbolically, by the common soldiers who had to wear them and affirmed that the overcoats would wash off in a good rain.

20. Even the name was stolen from the American Republican Party, which was then being disrupted by members who stupidly listened to the rant of the Abolitionists.

festered with righteousness and blood-lust, was organized in 1855 to contrive a wonderfully lucrative and gloriously bloody war. Schurz, who is called a German although the few pictures of him show a remarkable likeness to Leib Bronstein, alias Trotsky, attached himself to Lincoln, for whom he vigorously campaigned, and was, like Butler, later transformed into a General by presidential order.

This appalling creature proposed a law condemning White women in the South who refused to "marry" (i.e., copulate with) a nigger who tapped them on the shoulder to spend years in prison, unless they were able to persuade a Federal "judge" that they had a valid reason for evading their Christian duty. Even in the emotional frenzy the Republicans contrived in 1865,[21] they did not dare enact this humanitarian law at that time, and it is probably being reserved for inclusion in the "Civil Rights" Act of 1997 or 1998. It is, of course, only a logical and even necessary preparation for the Integration half-witted Americans have been made to want.

An American in whom manhood is not entirely withered must hang his head in shame as he records the shocking fact that both Butler and Schurz lived to die natural deaths many years later. It was only a matter of course that under the Republican government they both condignly attained various high political offices and dignities before their venom was exhausted in 1893 and 1906 respectively.

The dissolution of the American Republic and the invasion of the South in 1861, with its consequences, enormous slaughter, irreversible genetic impoverishment of the nation, and the devastation of half of the country, must rank as one of the greatest crimes of recorded history, and forever debars Americans from pretending to a moral

21. The assassination of Lincoln was a political masterpiece, and should be taken as a model by the C.I.A. in its studies of ways to spread "democracy." Its assassination of Jackanapes Kennedy was, by comparison, amateurish. This is not to say that the assassination of Lincoln was perfectly carried out and without some slight slips, which betrayed the plot, but they were probably the result of mere chance and unforeseen coincidences. It would be rash to blame Stanton, the Secretary of War who was in charge of arrangements on the spot, for such mischances as Booth's miscalculation in his doubtless practiced leap to the stage, which broke his leg and led to a series of other mischances.

superiority over Genghiz Khan, Hulagu, Attila, and other barbarians of comparable repute.[22]

The horrors of the subsequent terror of compounded atrocities, called "Reconstruction" with characteristic falsehood, with the unspeakable suffering sadistically imposed on the survivors of what had been the most cultivated and civilized part of the nation by the scabrous gang of enriched but still greedy thieves, hate-crazed lunatics, and disgusting degenerates[23] who ruled the Republican Party, are almost beyond belief. The designs of those blots on humanity were defeated by the heroism of the men who valiantly risked their lives to preserve our race and a vestige of civilization in the Ku Klux Klan and its affiliates. Their memory should be honored by White men everywhere, but particularly in the South, which they preserved.

I cannot but believe that if Duke, instead of behaving in a manner that sometimes reminded one of a small boy whose ball had broken a window, had met the issue openly and honestly, reason and manhood are not so nearly extinct in Louisiana that he would not have received the additional 10% of the White vote that would have given him victory, despite the record marshalling and herding of niggers to the polls.

Such is my belief. I do not live in Louisiana and have not been in that state recently, but I hope that men of discernment who were on the scene and witnessed events day by day will make a reasoned estimate of my conjecture.

22. Lord Palmerston at first refused to credit the news from across the Atlantic, maintaining (correctly) that a civilized people would be incapable of such outrage. A young man with an interest in historical study could earn high honors by devoting years to research to establish, so far as possible, the rôle of the Sheenies in contriving the "Civil War" from which they so richly profited. He would, of course, permanently debar himself from employment in the fraudulent diploma-factories that are now called colleges and universities.

23. E.g., the infamous Thaddeus Stevens, a misshapen creature who hated White women and was so degenerate that he preferred to copulate with female niggers, whom he could treat as mere chattels, entirely at his mercy. He is plausibly suspected of having avoided public disgrace as a young man by murdering a negress whom he had made pregnant.

No one wins by dodging

Whatever the expediency of paltering about the Klan, one must wonder at Duke's decision not to exploit other issues that could have aroused the support he needed.

The recent "Civil Rights" legislation, intended to ruin every American proprietor of a business, was delayed by a factitious disagreement between the War Lord and the Den of Thieves[24] and thus timed to prevent Duke from exploiting fully its frank proclamation of White Inferiority, but could he not have at least mentioned it effectively on the eve of the election?

The issue could at least have served as a defence against the campaign that was timed for the last fortnight before the election, and which, in the opinion of some observers, was decisive.

It is said, I know not how accurately, that many large corporations, which, even if they are still owned by Americans, are by their nature without principle, threatened their agents and employees in Louisiana with a drastic reduction of their staffs and activities or even withdrawal from the state, if Louisiana elected a governor who was not hostile to White men and women.[25] There were certainly very plausible threats of massive reprisals from the Comintern in Washington: Louisiana's mouth would be repelled from the ever-flowing Federal teat, terrorists would be sent into the state further to harass the White subjects, and every form of economic pressure and sabotage would be used to induce general bankruptcy.

This campaign of fright was doubtless effective, for, as we all know, the only true god of the Americans is incarnate in the scraps of intrinsically worthless paper they use in place of money, and they have acquired the Jewish habit of doing anything that is not perilous in the service of their god.

That is true, but (a) Louisiana still contains a large number of men and women who own, or imagine that they own, independent businesses; if their attention had been called to legislation that will make their existence impossible, they would surely have been sufficiently rational to want to save themselves; and (b) even the "corporation men," whom some think were the decisive factor, could surely have seen that legislated White Inferiority would eventually put most of them out on the street with nothing to meet the payments on their many mortgages, since they have almost all acquired the American addiction to living perpetually in debt. (And furthermore, as everyone now awake knows, the economic débâcle is now inevitable and will result in chaos, including the race-war the Kikes have long planned; there is only the question of how long our rulers will delay announcement in order to suck a little more blood from the boobs.)

The boobs in Louisiana were further frightened by threats that New Orleans would be deprived of the profits derived from tourists and the blabber-fests called conventions. The threats were emphasized by reminders of how the filthy little twerps called "Liberals" tried to boycott Arizona, when the Governor of that state had the integrity to refuse to revere the stinking reputation of a liar, thief, and Communist agent named King, whom the C.I.A. used to incite race-riots in many parts of the United States, where pavid governors failed to employ the National Guard for one of the purposes for which it was established.

Duke could have pointed out the obvious fact that the best way to attract tourists and persons who enjoy "conventions" is to make

24. It was not signed by the War Lord until 21 November, and until that time there were rumors, believed by the gullible, that he wanted to show mercy to his White subjects. Needless to say, the obscene show put on in the Senate was designed to distract attention from that impending act of undisguised oppression and also from Bushy's disarmament of the United States, perhaps in preparation for a military invasion of this hapless country. The clowning Senators and their stooges in the well-staged debate about a nomination to the Revolutionary Tribunal did engross the attention of placidly feckless Americans and absorbed their interest so completely that even a week later (a long time in American minds) some were still arguing about which nigger lied the most—as though that mattered!

25. One is reminded of the action of the large banks which, in 1940, obtained the Republican nomination for a stooge named Wendell Wilkie instead of a man who would represent American interests, by threatening to call loans or force foreclosures and other forms of economic ruin against delegates at the Republican convention who did not fall into line with the purposes of the war-mongers.

greater provision for their personal safety. I have heard from a man who visited New Orleans a month or two ago before the election and was mugged and robbed by a pair of niggers while he was waiting for a taxicab on a street near the center of the city at ten o'clock in the evening. The first policemen whom he saw while limping back to his hotel (he no longer could pay a cab) were niggers, and he wisely, though perhaps unnecessarily, decided not to risk arrest and further injury. He is not likely—and his friends are not likely—to visit New Orleans hereafter.

Again, since the War Lord had denounced him, Duke could well have called attention to Bushy's treasonable destruction of the nuclear weapons that are our only defence against the major nuclear powers, Russia and Israel.

One could list some minor issues about which Duke was silent, probably to his disadvantage, but what is the use?

The Verdict

If the foregoing appraisal of political realities is valid in its application to Louisiana, there is abundant evidence to show that Duke lost the election through his own blunders, his own tergiversation, perhaps his own pusillanimity. Furthermore, I am reliably informed that he ignored the advice of men of long experience in the politics of Louisiana, but that was only normal. While Duke was still a Grand Wizard, a prominent man in whose judgement I have every confidence had a long interview with him and reported that he had witnessed an "ego-trip" that went far beyond anything he had seen in the various political leaders with whom he was acquainted.

The evidence will certainly convince many of Duke's erstwhile supporters that he made those blunders with malice aforethought, that he was a turn-coat, in short, that he betrayed them.

Before we endorse that verdict, let us remember that, as Aeschylus, Sophocles, Cicero, and Seneca have reminded us, cuiusvis hominis est errare—humanum est. You and I, in our wisdom, would not have made those mistakes—certainly not!—but are we quite fully assured that if we had had the stamina to run for office in this crazed ochlocracy, our flawless judgement would not have erred at some time when we were fatigued and perhaps exhausted by the continual ordeal of public appearances, the constant need for vigilance, and the sheer stress of perpetual concern with all the financial and personal factors that called for decision, and when we were surrounded by the discordant voices of clamorous advisers?

Mistakes are to be expected in every human activity. The question is whether Duke's errors, some in a strategy that must have been planned long before and unhurriedly, were too numerous to admit of that apology. That is a question you must decide for yourself.

L'Envoi

I have said that in all probability the election in Louisiana is the last of its kind that we shall see in the United States. It taught Americans a lesson that must have taken many of them by surprise.

On 15 November, the day before the election, the Des Moines Register published the names and location of all the persons in Iowa who had sent contributions, ranging from $5 to $1000, to Duke's campaign fund. As a gentleman who sent me a photocopy from that dirty rag remarked, the publisher of the list "obviously hopes some of these good folk will be visited by thugs—members of a racial minority—and will be beaten and robbed for daring to give money to an anti-establishment candidate." But there is more to it than that.

The contributors are not only singled out for violence by niggers eager to exercise their Civil Rights on the hated race that was so stupid as to let them vote and is now reduced to working ever harder to satisfy their appetites, subject to open threats (as in Milwaukee) that if the boobs don't give them more money, the niggers will start killing the stupid animals.

The contributors are exposed to reprisals from their Jewish masters, probably through attacks on their income and financial assaults on their property, and from Bushy's terrorists, ranging from Infernal Revenue (to which the befuddled Americans subjected themselves with the White Slave Act in 1913)[26] to the Federal Bureau of Intimidation, the C.I.A., gangs of Federal Marshals (who have carried out several successful murders of insubordinate Americans), and the corps of perjurers who can convict anyone of anything.

I mention the vicious publication in Des Moines because it was the first from which I was sent a cutting, immediately after the election. In Springfield, Illinois, the Journal-Register exposed the vile wretches in its territory who had dared to support a candidate who had not been certified as kosher. I have been promised cuttings from jewspapers in other states, and I think it a safe assumption that in every state journalistic stool-pigeons have put the finger on the Americans in its area who were guilty of entertaining hopes for their own degraded race.

It remains to be seen what reprisals will be visited on the sinners who were disobedient to Lord Bushy and his godly masters. You may be sure that the reprisals will not be reported as such by the press that hopes to see them carried out.

Some of the good people who now find themselves set up as targets are surprised, I am sure. They were unaware of the risk they took when they sent Duke a check or money order. As James Madison pointed out when the short-lived American Republic (1789-1861) was established, "if the laws be so voluminous that they cannot be read, or so incoherent that they cannot be understood," the result is tyranny, whatever the political theory in vogue.[27]

26. According to experts, the latest Income Tax Act is full of traps for the unwary, and there is a good chance that anyone who has a decent income and has not employed a competent expert to make out his report to his owners will have inadvertenly fallen into some trap when making his way through the bewildering maze of rules, now more complicated than ever, to compute what part of his earnings his masters will permit him to keep for himself.

27. Sometime in the 1930s the American Mercury published an article on the effects of the Americans' insane multiplication of legislation. If a young man entering a police force at that time had been required to memorize all the laws he was expected to enforce, he would have been able to go on duty for only four or five years before he was retired as overage. Since that time, the boobs have elected crooks to multiply the laws enormously, and today the hypothetical policeman could not complete a fourth of his task before he died of senility. The same is true of all other forms of legislation.

Americans are so stupid! They subject themselves to every scoundrel who professes good intentions. They nodded with approval when the Federal government tied them down with a law requiring that all contributions to political candidates be reported and identified by the recipients. The boobs were told, of course, that the purpose of the law was to "fight corruption in politics," and could not see that its real purpose was to protect the masters of corruption by exposing the supporters of candidates not endorsed by the Demopublican gang.[28] The same boobs acquiesced recently in a tyrannical law subjecting them to the "search and seizure" so reprehended by the framers of the Constitution. The pretext, of course, was a "war on drugs"—to be waged by the great wholesale vendors of cocaine, heroine, and the like.

Hereafter, someone may find, as did Duke, an unguarded spot at which he can crawl under the canvas and into the political circus, but if he does, he can expect no support. Duke's escapade will have made all potential contributors aware of the danger of sending the candidate a cheque or money order, and few, if any, will be so imprudent as to take such a risk. Some in desperation might think of delivering currency, giving a fictitious address, but even that will not work. As Criminal Politics has repeatedly warned us in recent months, the Federal Reserves' substitute for money is now being printed with an electronically detectable code concealed in the paper. Any scrap of paper marked $100, and eventually perhaps even $20, can thus be traced to the bank that issued it and to the depositor who drew it out,

28. The law also limits to a few thousand dollars the amount of contributions by any individual, but you must not suppose that the law hampers the Master Race. Some years ago, Senator Percy, who had been an obsequious "Liberal," was so imprudent as to suggest that there might be a limit to the amount of work Americans are obliged to do for the Holy Land. An irate Sheeny immediately rolled in from California and dispensed cash, officially reported at $1,500,000, but rumored to amount to twice that sum, to teach Percy—and, by example, all Senators who might be tempted to have mercy on the boobs who elected them—that Aryan curs must not bark without permission from their masters. Percy was, of course, defeated in the election. But who would dare be such a vile 'Nazi' as to object to such holy work?

who will be obliged to account for the way by which it got into the hands of a 'Neo-Nazi.'[29]

Americans are now being made to perceive what they have done to themselves. They are prisoners in the country that once was theirs. They have enslaved themselves to alien and ruthless masters. They are helpless. They have made themselves helpless. They gayly put the noose about their own necks; they deserve to be hanged. And Jack Ketch is waiting for them.

29. You must also consider "Social Security," which was devised both to inflict additional taxation (the funds thus collected were, of course, promptly embezzled by the Den of Thieves) and to number the tax-paying animals, whose acts can thus be entered into the vast data base in mammoth computers that keep track of every animal by its serial number. Electronic identity cards are now being tested and improved in Southeast Asia, and when forced on the American boobs will record all of an animal's vital characteristics, including the amount of credit allowed him for permitted personal expenses, which he can use by presenting the card for any purchase, the amount of which will be immediately deducted from his allowance. This governmental "credit card" will replace the Federal Reserve's fake "money," and, of course, provide the data bank with a record of even the slightest movements of the livestock.

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way, Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. THE NEW WORLD ORDER

As we all know, Bushy is using his American thralls to force on the world a New World Order of which the main outlines have long been known. Perhaps it will be well to remind ourselves of an authoritative description of it thirty years ago, which some of us may have forgotten.

The weekly magazine Look, which had a circulation of eight million before it ceased publication, invited a number of national "leaders" to describe in 1962 what they believed the world would be like a quarter of a century later. The answers, published in the issue dated 16 January 1962, were, for the most part, superficial or evasive, but a specific and perhaps indiscreet reply was made by the well-known mass murderer, David Ben Gurion, then the Prime Minister of Kikistan, commonly called Israel.

His forecast has proved itself accurate, since he held a fairly high position in the great race that makes things happen, although the New Order is now, for some reason, a little behind his schedule.

His disclosure of the planned future, published in the magazine together with a photograph of his ugly and sinister countenance, contained four specific predictions.

1. "The Cold War will be a thing of the past. Internal pressure of the constantly growing intelligentsia for more freedom in Russia and the pressure of the masses for raising their living standards may lead to a gradual democratization of the Soviet Union."

Needless to say, the talk about "intelligentsia" is mere persiflage, since the actual mechanism of change must not be exposed or even hinted, but it is obvious that by 1962 the High Command of the Master Race had decided to liquidate the Judaeo-Communist régime in Russia and replace it with the rule now being prepared by Gorbachev and his crew, which will, of course, differ fundamentally from what is thought assured or likely by the dunces who are now celebrating "the end of Communism."

The reason for the Sheenies' decision must be conjectural, but perhaps it was decided that the official and overt Communism of the Marxist cult was no longer a very useful tool in subverting and destroying European and North American nations and could advantageously be replaced by the same thing under a different name, such as 'democracy,' as in the United States.

This accurate prediction has a curious pendant, of which you may wish to guess the significance. According to Ben Gurion, the U.S.S.R. would become a "federated Eurasian state," which would be the only territory on the globe not under the direct rule of the Jewish Empire. We may assume that Russia would first be mongrelized and thus made impotent, but the reason for this strange exception remains obscure.

One possible plan may be in keeping with Lord Bushy's recent announcement that he intends to destroy all American weapons that would be of use in a war with the reorganized and renamed Soviet—destroy them, of course, without even pretending to consult his American subjects, who, by this time, must have learned that they no longer have anything to say about what their Tyrannos does with their property, their lives, or the country that once was theirs.

It seems likely that the present plan calls for a period of racial war and total anarchy after the crash of the already bankrupt United States. After there has been enough delightful killing of Aryans, Russian troops could be brought in as the usual "peace-keeping forces" or, alternatively, Russia could find a pretext for declaring war and adding to the destruction with a generous use of nuclear weapons, after which the same Soviet troops would move in and enact in this country the atrocities they inflicted on the Germans in 1945-47.[1] If any Americans remained

1. A detailed and documented account of the behavior of the ferocious savages in Russian uniform who, financed and equipped by the American people, advanced into and overran German territory on the Eastern Front was published in 1966 by the Informations- und Dokumentationszentrum of the government of the western third of Germany in Bonn under the title, Silesian Inferno. The records, compiled by Karl Friedrich Grau, with an introduction by Professor Ernst Deuerlein, were published in English. (It does not appear from my copy that there was a corresponding publication in German.) The investigation and compilation of evidence was probably begun during the régime of Konrad Adenauer, who although married to a Jewess, was able to prevent the World Destroyers from obtaining, by flourishing their newly invented and foul Holohoax, the total power they now wieldover the helpless nation through the traitors they have installed in power at Bonn. The book is said to be unobtainable in Germany now. Yahweh's among the destitute and brutalized survivors, they would welcome the interposition of the world's great-hearted sovereigns in Jerusalem to end the terror, and would probably formally declare all Jews to be gods—as, of course, right-thinking Americans should do now and end their hypocritical face-saving pretense that they still have a choice.

Needless to say, the real plan for using the "federated Eurasian state" may be quite different from the foregoing conjectures.

2. "On the other hand [in contrast to Russia], the increasing influence of the workers and farmers, and the rising political importance of men of science [!], may transform the United States into a welfare state with a planned economy [like Communist Russia's].".

Disregard, of course, the nonsense about "workers and farmers" etc., which is merely the kind of patter by which a magician distracts your attention from what he is really doing, but it is again patent that by 1962 the Jews had already planned the work of their Congress in Washington and their Presidential appointees, most recently Ronnie Reagan and Bushy, in subjecting their American subjects to tyrannical oppression such as was never even attempted in Communist Russia, where there were limits to the imposition of "welfare" and not even Stalin at his worst dared legislate "racial equality" and force Russians to labor for the comfort and superiority of niggers and mongrels.

The plan doubtless also includes the total oppression of the American boobs which will occur in the immediately coming years in the guise of efforts to avert or postpone the inevitable bankruptcy and total ruin of the idiot nation.[2] race doubtless wishes Germans to forget the horrible suffering of their own people while they are made to moan, weep, and pay for the imaginary suffering of Kikes in the wild fictions they like to tell with a straight face while inwardly laughing at the Aryan boobs who can believe such absurd tales. Thanks to the covert kindness of a German who evidently holds some vulnerable position, I have a photocopy of the book and will discuss it in some future issue of Liberty Bell.

2. Needless to say, the stupid kulaks who are now so pleased with themselves because they can afford to pay $3000 for a grill to cook steaks out-of-doors, and $89,000 for a well-built automobile, will be among the first to be liquidated and will squeal like stuck pigs when

Whether or not there will follow the chaos predicted above, the United States will, of course, eventually become a territory of the Jewish Empire, but perhaps only ten to twenty years after the date set in Ben Gurion's schedule.

3. "Western and Eastern Europe will become a federation of autonomous states having a Socialist and democratic régime."

That was a seemingly implausible prediction in 1962, but, of course, it is precisely the "United Europe" that is being formed today, as the pack of traitors who call themselves "Tories" in England herd Britain, the one country outside Scandinavia that could stand aloof, into the continental melting pot, which will be dominated, needless to say, by the demands of the anthropoid vermin with which the respective countries are now being stuffed in implementation of the great Jewish scheme of world conquest, described by Ivor Benson in the article reprinted in the October issue of Liberty Bell. Europe at present seems destined to become a continental Camp of the Saints.[3]

4. "All other countries [i.e., except the 'Eurasian federation'] will become united in a world alliance, at whose disposal will be an international police force. All armies will be abolished, and there will be no more wars. In Jerusalem, the United Nations (a truly United Nations) will build a Shrine of the Prophets to serve the federated union of all continents; this will be the seat of the Supreme Court of Mankind to settle all controversies among the federated continents, as prophesied by Isaiah."[4]

It was also prophesied in one of the Dead Sea Scrolls that was published before the Judaeo-Christian censorship was clamped down to avert embarrassing revelations about the two early Jewish hoaxes.[5] I quote from the translation by Professor Theodore H. Gaster (New York, Doubleday, 1956), p. 297: "Zion, rejoice exceedingly, and shine forth, O Jerusalem, with songs of joy, and let all the cities of Judah exult! Let thy gates be continually open that the wealth of nations may be brought into thee, and let their kings minister unto thee, and all that oppressed thee make obeisance to thee, and lick the dust of thy feet."

they join the Lumpenproletariat. Assuming that the wimps retain some residual manhood, now latent, they will probably be material for any revolutionary tyranny, no matter how absurd or desperate, that will promise them a restoration of the Paradise from which they were so suddenly booted. They might even be useful in American groups clandestinely organized for underground resistance.

3. The psychic disease that makes Europeans, including even the Swiss, who once refused to admit immigrants of even their own race, fill their countries with anthropoid refuse was well described and analysed by Jean Raspail in his prophetic novel, which everyone should read. It is available from Liberty Bell Publications, $8.50 + postage.

4. See the ravings of Isaiah, especially 49.22-23: "Thus sayeth the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up my hand to [i.e., against] the Gentiles, and set up my standard [as a sign of conquest] to the people; and they [as slave nurses] shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. ¶ And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet."
60.10-12: "The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee.... ¶ Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee [all] the forces [resources] of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought [to lick the dirty feet of the Sheenies]. ¶ For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."
52.1: "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city; for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean."
Note the schizophrenia typical of the race: Jerusalem will be filled with enslaved goyim, but will also be kept pure from contamination by those uncircumcised swine.

5. Publication of the long-withheld scrolls has now begun, but appears to be limited to texts that the Judaeo-Christian censorship judged more or less innocuous. As for the rest, probably including texts that would confirm the true origins of the Judaeo-Christian cult, we should not forget that the Jews, immediately after they captured Jerusalem and their soldiers occupied the international Institute that was custodian of the scrolls, boasted that scrolls had been sealed up in lightless vaults (supposedly because they were being destroyed by a mysterious virus that had suddenly become active after twenty or more centuries of burial in caves) and would never again be seen by anyone.

Not only did Ben Gurion describe succinctly the New World Order that Yahweh's brood is determined to force upon the world; he also made it clear that the Jews' Universal Empire has been his hybrid race's goal for more than twenty-two centuries. That should not be surprising to Christians who have read their holy book while awake and believe in "Bible prophecy." They may even believe that what destroys all nations that refuse to serve the Jews is their strange god—and, if they accept the Yiddish aphorism, "God is the Jewish People," they will be right.

When the New World Order is established, it will be incontrovertible proof that our race is what the Jews say it is, "eine minderwertige Rasse," an inferior race.[6] It is simply a fact of nature that the only proof of a race's superiority is its survival and its expansion at the expense of other races. And if the expansion is achieved, not by valor in honest war, but by cowardly intrigues, covert conspiracy, and slimy perfidy, that may be offensive to the Aryans' idiosyncratic morality, but the real world recognizes only the fact of triumph, no matter how attained. It may be that the mammoths were made indignant by the iniquity and moral turpitude of the mobs of cowardly little savages who trapped and exterminated them, but mammoths nevertheless became forever extinct.

The Supreme Court of Mankind is already in session in a kind of pilot study. An unfortunate Aryan, an American citizen named Demjanjuk, was kidnapped, with the help of the Jews' scoff-law government in Washington, and hauled to the Holy Land to amuse the people whose instinct for cruelty is so great that they cannot even kill cattle except in a way that maximizes the atrocious suffering of the hapless animal at the hands of a kosher butcher. He was probably beaten and tortured physically, but he was also the victim of a prolonged, especially subtle and vicious form of mental torture, sometimes used by the Inquisition and most vividly described in the best-known short story by Villiers de L'Isle-Adam. The technique of "Torture by Hope" is to seize an innocent man, condemn him to death, and then keep him in prolonged suspense by providing fallacious hopes of escape. Demjanjuk has for years been subjected to that cunningly protracted torture, as witnesses were produced to lie and identify him as a person who had the sobriquet 'Ivan the Terrible,' thus ensuring Demjanjuk's eventual death at the hands of his inhuman captors; then witnesses were produced to deny that he was 'Ivan the Terrible' (who was probably merely a figment of Kikish imagination and mendacity anyway), thus giving hope of a reprieve from the sentence of death that had obviously been imposed on him when he was kidnapped, even before it was officially affirmed by a "court" after a mockery of a trial.

Poor Demjanjuk was not only tortured by the repeated uncertainty about the lying identification, but also almost constantly while he was on trial, as his attorneys argued points of law that incited some hope in his mind until the "court" in charge of the torture either denied the attorneys' motions or granted them and then proceeded to make the "victory for the defense" nugatory.

The consequences of this kind of subtle torture, sadistically prolonged for years, are irremediable. It does not really matter, except to the man's wife and children, whether Demjanjuk is eventually murdered or is released as the mere husk of what was once a man. He is providing amusement for God's People, who dance in the streets whenever they hear of the operations of their brand of "justice," but he is the only victim now on hand, although the Sheenies who own the United States are said to have about two hundred and fifty persons under surveillance, to be kidnapped as soon as the torture chamber in Jerusalem has finished with Demjanjuk.

Things will be better when the Supreme Court of Mankind really begins to operate. Hundreds of Aryans can be abducted, kept on display in cages, and tortured simultaneously, thus producing perpetual dancing in the streets by Yahweh's bloody pets.

It would be bootless to enumerate the joys that will come when the "prophecy" of Isaiah is at last fulfilled, but one thing is certain. Under the New World Order Americans will need to have supple limbs so that, whenever they see or smell a Sheeny, they can promptly drop to their knees and knock their foreheads against the pavement three times, in veneration of the living Gods ("God is the Jewish People!"). By that time, probably, Americans will think no more of the reflex action than does your dog when you whistle for him.

But in the New World Order, Americans who do not instantly learn what behavior is proper to their status in One World will bitterly wish their mothers had had abortions. ❑

FOR MY LEGIONARIES. The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $8.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. ("Solzhenitsyn would appear to have not the slightest inkling of who conquered HIS country!"—B.C.) FOR MY LEGIONARIES, Order #06003, single copy $10.00, 3 copies $25.00, 5 copies $35.00

THE ANTI-HUMANS, by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented 'Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. Single copy $7.00, 3 for $15.00, 5 for $20.00.

For postage and handling add: On domestic orders, $1.50 for orders under $10.00, 15% of order total for orders over $10.00. On orders from abroad, $2.00 or 20% respectively. Sample copy of our monthly magazine Liberty Bell and copy of our huge book list containing hundreds of "Eye-Openers," $5.00. Subscription for 12 hard-hitting, fact-packed issues $35.00 (U.S. only). WELCOME CHAOS

Manfred Roeder

One hundred million people are on the move all the time, from one country to another, looking for better conditions to live. You cannot blame them, but you cannot help them either. Not in the long run. And if you do you will ruin them and your own country as well. You make them rootless, they are loosing their identity and their responsibility and dignity. Every nation is challenged to struggle with its misery and overcome it by its own strength. Pity is just another shameless form of hypocrisy, Nietzsche tells us.

The UNO wails that 40,000 children are dying of hunger every day, one every two seconds. Isn't that terrible? Why? It would be much worse if these children survived and would themselves have children. It sounds cynical, but their silent death prevents the total collapse of humanity, at least for the moment. Look at the facts. For every child that survives by the help of those welfare organizations there will be 5 or 6 children in the next generation. And not the biggest organization on earth could prevent their dying of hunger. There is simply not enough room and food for these masses on this planet. – Therefore, demanded Hoimar von Ditfurth, most prominent German fighter for environmental protection, let them die and stop all this irresponsible nonsense of little ads in newspapers where a hungry colored child with big eyes stares at you, appealing to the pity of people who do not think, cultivating a strategy that will be deadly for all humanity.

There is another fact we have to face: our politicians are not at all interested to save anybody from hunger; their strategy is to increase the colored population and to decrease the white population and get them all mixed. For a brown, mindless mass is easier to handle than creative, thinking people. They want chaos, they want crime, and they want to make profit on it. How? Very simple. More crime and chaos needs more police, more protection, more counterstrategy, more money, more welfare programs, more doctors, more hospitals, in short: more of everything. Keeps the economy growing. Keeps the buck rolling. Karl Marx already stated that mammon is the only god the Jews adore. And who besides them is running the show?

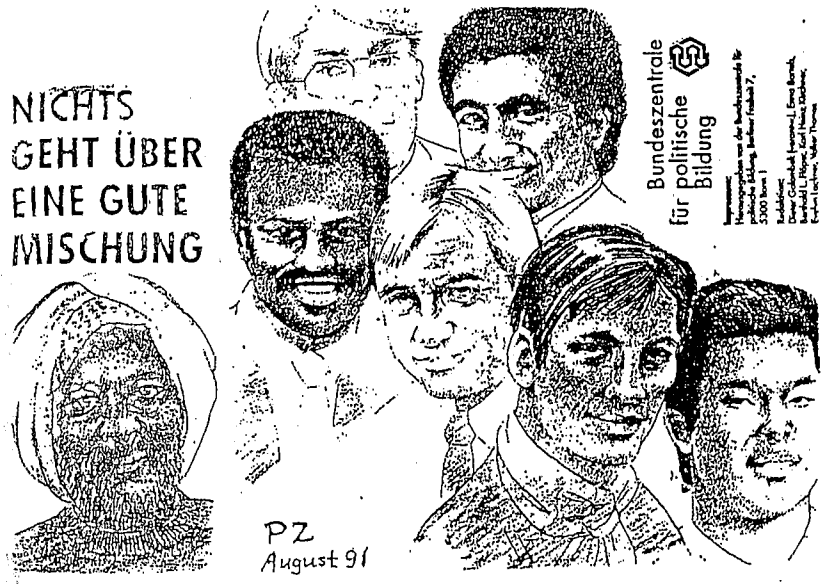
Asylum-seekers are pouring into Germany, a thousand a day. Our politicians keep telling us that they are looking for ways to stop this flood. They are lying. They do want mass immigration in order to mix and destroy their own people. It is their official program. They propagate it and at the same time deny it if people react too much and start throwing bombs as they now do almost everyday. We are told every day, not the foreigners, not the dealers, not the criminals are the problem, but those Germans who do not like to be mugged, robbed, beaten down or cheated, who want to live with their own kin. For thousands of years it was the greatest tragedy and crime if somebody had to leave his home and country. Now we are told it is the greatest crime to send somebody back to his own country.

The Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung (the ministry of political propaganda) of the Bonn government launched a campaign in its official organ for a multiracial society under the joyous headline "Nothing can beat a good mixture." Let's follow the American melting pot experience. It is so nice and has worked so well. Germany should officially become an immigration country, not only for other Europeans, but for Asians, Mongols, Vietnamese, Cubans, Africans, Turks, Tamils and, of course, Jews. The new German should not be white, black, or brown, but all this together. And the new reality was illustrated by the picture on the following page.

In 20 years Germany will look like that. Presently there are already black and brown people in every village, also in Schwarzenborn with a population of only 1,100. The Asylum-seekers are dispersed all over the country. They are not yet citizens, they do not yet have the right to vote, but many people are working on that day and night to "correct" that.



And it is only a question of time when they will succeed. Those who are opposing them are called "Ausländerfeinde" (enemies of foreigners), racists, hatemongers, etc. The result of this colossal propaganda is that many people are afraid to speak their mind or to take an open stand. Therefore it is high time to raise our voice and encourage people to resists, otherwise it will be too late. It is our last chance before we will be outlawed.

Out of this conviction I wrote my Open Letter to the Government and parliament. Three MPs have answered so far. A secretary has phoned me and congratulated me. She is horrified by what is going on in Bonn but does not dare to be mentioned. Almost a thousand signatures have come in so far. It is not much but it shows the difficulty to mobilize people. Therefore I have repeated my appeal to our friends not to slow down but to continue with their efforts until we have 10,000 signatures and can organize a mass-meeting.

At the moment I am traveling through the country making speeches to all sorts of groups, raising their fighting spirit, and I am amazed how they respond. It shows the old truth that the spoken word is ten times as effective as the written word. It is out of this conviction that we are going to Berlin to celebrate the 9th of November, the opening of the Wall, to demonstrate joy and confidence and our determination to turn the tide. And believe me, no matter how many people we will be, we will make a massive impact on the public; marching with a brass band in historic uniforms and flags through the most populated streets, Kurfürstendamm and Unter den Linden, carrying posters "November 9th, Victory of the People," "We Are One Nation," "Germany–United Fatherland."

We will not be the only ones to march in the streets. Churches, trade-unions, students and Jews have called for a mass meeting against race- haters and for immigration of more foreigners. It is not our intention to provoke a clash but simply to show a positive contrast to their negative slogans. The majority is fed up with this constant propaganda for Asylum-seekers. But normally people are timid and don't know what to do. They need someone to show the way, to go ahead, legally, convincingly. And this is exactly what we will do.

We chartered a bus, we ordered the band, we booked the room to show historic films. There will be a great guided tour of Berlin and Potsdam. It will be a joy and great experience for everyone. We got spontaneous help, people registered that this is the positive counterstrategy we have been waiting for. But there are still ends to be met and we are grateful for any further help. Young folks are joining us but won't be able to pay for travel and very expensive lodging in Berlin. We will have to do that. The band costs more than 1,000 marks. But it is our best weapon to make a public impact and get people interested. And nobody can say anything against it. That makes our enemies wild. So what do they do? They attack in an insidious way.

Der Spiegel, our prominent and vile weekly, in its title story on Asylum-seekers, tells its million readers that Rechtsanwalt Manfred Roeder was the first who was convicted for attacks on homes of Asylum-seekers when nobody on the right-wing ever thought of anything like it. But now there is hardly a day without Molotov-Cocktails and stones flying.

Die Zeit, another big leftist weekly, with Helmut Schmidt, former chancellor, on the staff, had a 14-page, illustrated article on right-extremist activists, including the youth group of our children that went to Silesia this summer ("these nice looking youth groups are the hotbed of race hatred and violence") and a personal attack against Traudel and myself, again pointing out my "terrorist activities" in the past. To me, these attacks are proof that we have hit a raw nerve and are effective with our work. Otherwise they would never again mention my name but let it rest in oblivion.

We are on the move again and we keep moving. Apart from the attacks from outside, there are always three main obstacles on our way to success: envy, fear and dilettantism. One leader and his group are envious of another. They want to save the country, sure, but only with themselves in the center. They would never join another group where they would not be number one. The truth is, there is enough room for everyone in the center of the fight, but not in the center of the picture.

Fear even keeps us from doing the natural thing that nobody would object to, not even Elie Wiesel or Wisenthal. Not demanded submissive obedience.

Dilettantism prevents us from taking expert advice or help. We will not save our nations with patriotic feelings only and a do-it-yourself-mentality. The best have to be enlisted, the best men and the best means, and they'll have to be paid for. The occasional leaflet won't do it.

For Berlin we have engaged an expert agency to make our festival a big success. It costs good money. But only the best is good enough. Saving a nation is an expert job, nothing for amateurs. Please, help to get the best in this fight for our race, our nation, our children.

From Teutonic Unity, #7/1991. Manfred Roeder, Haus Richberg, W-3579 Schwarzenborn/Fed. Rep. of Germany

Yuletide Greetings

To Faithful old Friends . . .
To cherished new Friends
Our Best Wishes

During the year, in the rush of events, we tend to overlook the important friendships that are the true basis of business relationships. One of the great pleasures of the Holiday Season is the opportunity to exchange cordial greetings with those whose friendship and goodwill we value so highly.

In this spirit it is our pleasure to say "Thank You" and extend our sincere appreciation for the very pleasant association we enjoy with you.

May a bright and prosperous New Year bring happiness to you and to yours.

With deep appreciation

George P. Dietz

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FREEDOM OF THOUGHT FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

WHEN WE WERE SANE

The picture above is reproduced from the cover of Science News, 7 September 1991, where it appears without identification or explanation to call attention to an article about the effect of excessive use of cocaine on the foetus of pregnant women. It is obviously an advertisement that appeared in many newspapers in the 1890s or early 1900s and was also issued as a handbill printed in colors.

The advertisement comes from a time when cocaine,[1] a tincture prepared from the leaves of the coca plant, was carried in stock by all pharmacies and available to any purchaser. It was generally used as an analgesic and local anaesthetic in ophthalmology and dentistry, where compounds of it are still employed. The cocaine drops here advertised were undoubtedly effective and infallibly relieved toothache; a small vial of them was certainly worth the cost, fifteen cents (real money, not the intrinsically worthless trading stamps printed by the fraud called the Federal Reserve). If the drops were now available, I would suggest that you keep some on hand.

As everyone knows, a seven-percent solution of cocaine was taken intravenously by Sherlock Holmes when he had no absorbing problem to occupy his mind; in two or three of the stories Dr. Watson mildly remarks that habitual reliance on cocaine may be deleterious to health. Cocaine is also a stimulant, like chocolate, that provides energy and temporarily replaces food; the leaves of the coca[2] plant are chewed (with a little powdered lime) by the natives in Chile, Peru, and Bolivia, giving them remarkable powers of endurance, and the leaves are probably necessary for hard labor at high altitudes in the Andes. Cocaine was used as a mild stimulant in the Edwardian Age.

As he remarks in his memoirs, Harry Elmer Barnes, when he worked as a clerk in a drug store to earn money for college, commonly sold cocaine to customers. So did countless other men employed in pharmacies. It was recommended by many physicians,[3] who naturally did not write prescriptions for a medicine available over the counter in every pharmacy and in many general stores. Proprietary tonics containing cocaine as the active ingredient were on sale everywhere and obtainable from Sears, Roebuck & Co. and other mail-order houses. Cocaine was also the active ingredient of a patented beverage, frankly called "Coca-cola," that was then coming into general use and was especially commended and promoted by "temperance workers" as a pleasant and wholesome substitute for beer, wine, and whisky, which contained the diabolical and soul-destroying drug called alcohol.

2. Coca (Erythroxylon coca), the source of cocaine, must not be confused with another South American plant, cacao (Theobroma cacao), the source of chocolate, a drug which produces similar but much milder effects.

3. It was also enthusiastically recommended by the Kike who did so much to convince the world that the Jews' sexual obsessions were a function of human nature. Freud was himself an addict of the drug he recommended; see his Cocaine Papers, which are available in a good English translation that I cannot locate on my shelves at this moment. Carl Jung was, I believe, the first to denounce the inherent fallacy of the Freudian hoax: "It is an unpardonable mistake to accept the conclusions of a Jewish psychology as generally valid." (Two Essays on Analytical Psychology = Collected Works, Vol. VII [= Bollingen Series, Vol. XX] (2d ed., New York, Pantheon Books, 1966), p.152.

Holy men were probably yapping about cocaine. They are always yapping about something in a disgruntled effort to regain the power and pleasure they had in the Great Age of Protestantism, when they could imprison sinners who danced, engaged in mummery, witnessed theatrical performances, celebrated Christmas,[4] or otherwise offended their strange God; when they could punish persons who laughed on Sunday by putting them in the stocks and exposing them to rotten tomatoes and similar missiles thrown in their faces by the jeering rabble, while God's men chortled with satisfied righteousness.

As I vaguely recall—the point is not worth the effort of looking it up—in Massachusetts and Illinois the social reformers did procure legislation intended to make cocaine and similar drugs available only on prescription, to the profit of the medical profession (in those far-off days it was a profession, not a business). But in the years around 1900 the holy men and their sedulous apes, "do-gooders," chiefly fat-headed women, were concentrating their efforts on routing Satan's chief lieutenant, the Demon Rum, and on prohibiting use of the devil's weed in the wicked form of cigarettes.[5] They did succeed in inducing prohibition of alco-

4. You will recall that John Evelyn in his diary describes the incident in which he and some close friends, who had foregathered to celebrate secretly the traditional rites of Christmas, were denounced by some spy or informer, and were surprised and caught, flagrante delicto, by a file of soldiers who arrested them for criminal merriment.

5. It should be noted that tobacco was evil when used in cigarettes, but not when used in cigars, which were smoked by politicians who would not have tolerated curtailment of their own favorite means of relaxation, and not when smoked in pipes or used as snuff, for there was a limit to the meddling that farmers and the like would endure from dervishes. Cigarettes were comparatively expensive and chiefly smoked by college students and other fashionable young men, although they were also used in private by some women who were so immoral they put powder on their shameless faces.

holic beverages in five or six of the more rustic states[6] and in quite a few backward towns or similar localities, and in prohibiting cigarettes in Wisconsin, Kansas, and perhaps some other states in which Bible-banging was endemic.

As I have frequently pointed out before,[7] in the Nineteenth and early Twentieth Centuries opium was also on sale in all pharmacies, especially in the form of its tincture, laudanum, and kept on hand in many households, as is aspirin today, for the relief of insomnia, headaches, and arthritic or rheumatic pain. The most common derivative of opium, morphine, for injection by hypodermic syringe, was also freely available, recommended by many physicians as a sedative and anodyne, and was warmly commended by some reformers as a means of ending dependence on nasty alcohol. Chemists produced, by fairly intricate processes, other derivatives of morphine, which had a limited use.[8]

6. Maine, Iowa, Kansas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, and perhaps others. In some states the prohibition was frankly intended only to keep liquor out of the hands of niggers and Indians and often of the White proletariat also. The Puritans of New England had such fits of do-gooding in the early part of the century, but promptly repented, and around the 1880s some states, including Illinois, temporarily lapsed into such legislative foolishness, but soon came to their senses. Everyone remembers the insanity of national Prohibition, enacted by holy men and do-gooders, who, as often happens, were in alliance with ambitious criminal syndicates and the Communists, eager to establish a precedent for subversion of the nation and the enslavement of free men. Oklahoma, even after 1933, tried to exclude spirituous liquors from the state, and I can remember having entered the state in an automobile of which the trunk was weighted down with cases of bottled cheer for an acquaintance who lived in that desert. That is an adequate commentary on the whole folly of legislated uplift.

8. What is now the best known and most widely used derivative, diacetylmorphine, was developed by the Bayer Corporation, which became the foremost producer of drugs to alleviate pain and comparable distress. The corporation marketed with great success both acetylsalicylic acid, for which it devised the trade name 'aspirin,' and diacetylmorphine, to which it gave a name with commendatory connotation, 'heroin.' The latter was specifically approved and recommended by the

When cocaine, laudanum, and similar narcotics were comparatively inexpensive and available to everyone, there was no problem of 'drug addiction.' That is a highly significant fact and worthy of your best attention.

There was no problem (except in the clamor of the "unco' guid") because our racial ethos had not yet been nullified by our enemies and fools, and we still retained, on the whole, the sanity of common sense.

It was known, of course, that the drugs in question could become addictive through excessive or continual use of them, but most things are addictive. Aspirin and all somniferent and 'tranquilizing' medicines are notoriously addictive. Coffee, tobacco, and sweetmeats undoubtedly are, and sugar can produce a compulsive addiction.[9] Old men, who can remember a time when college athletics were an activity of actual undergraduates, instead of a business with ignorant but highly paid performers,[10] may have known young graduates who had become so American Medical Association as an alternative to morphine, especially when hypodermic injection was to be avoided. See David F. Musto, The American Disease: the Origins of Narcotics Control (New Haven, Connecticut; Yale University Press, 1973).

9. I was once acquainted with a young Englishwoman from a good county family, an undergraduate in one of the Oxford women's colleges, who could make a two-pound box of chocolate creams evaporate faster than a drop of ether. She could have been a pretty blonde, but at seventeen or eighteen she was already uncomely and unpleasingly pudgy, having sacrificed face and figure to her bulimia. She was said to be doing passable work in her college, but her mentality, possibly affected by her vice, was apparent in her denigration of her family's social position and her poise as an "intellectual" who (c. 1930) told everyone, "I'm awffy keen about Laybah; ahen't you?"

10. Not long ago a nigger coach in a large university was accustomed to offer $80,000, a sports-model automobile, and, by implication, a copious supply of White whores to long-legged and long-armed niggers whom he wanted to hire to play basketball for his institution. Some of his prospects were so stupid that they boasted of the offer to everyone they knew and tried to use it to obtain more largesse from other "educational" institutions, so there was a minor scandal that it took a little while to hush up, but I am told that the practice is now virtually universal.

All forms of addiction are psychic as well as physical, and craving for the sensations produced by the drug is probably more potent than the strictly physiological reaction of a body accustomed to it. Some of the most baneful addictions, indeed, produce no physical symptoms. A recent "survey" reports that Americans (including children) spend an average of seven hours a day staring at their boob-tubes, usually in a state of hypnotic trance, the consciousness receiving impressions without the intervention of thought. In its effect on our people, that form of addiction is far more baneful than the total of addiction to cocaine, heroin, marijuana, 'crack,' and similar drugs.

In the era before there was a "drug problem," it was known, of course, that some men and even women became ruinously addicted to cocaine and opium, just as a great many became hopelessly addicted to whisky or gin or even beer, but it was rationally assumed that, with a very few possible exceptions in extraordinary circumstances, the addicts were, in the words of the eminent British pharmacologist, Edward Morell Holmes, weak-willed "moral imbeciles" who were commonly also "addicted to other forms of depravity." It was also rationally taken for granted that the sooner such individuals rid society of themselves, the better. Although sentimental women may squawk, that is simply true—a necessary truth enforced by biological processes and ignored only by nations that are themselves not fit to survive in the harsh reality of the natural world. That may seem cruel to persons addicted to lying to themselves about the real world, but it is the common sense that is apparent to everyone not hopelessly addicted to hallucinatory drugs or superstitions.

For example, in Trollope's Doctor Thorne, perhaps the best volume in the Barchester series, Sir Louis, the son of the nouveau riche engineer, Scatchard, destroys himself with brandy—and a very good thing it is too, for everyone concerned.[11] A friend kindly sent me a whole sheaf of cuttings from newspapers in San Francisco and Sacramento that describe the prevalent and almost epidemic addiction to "crack" (synthesized amphetamines) and "ice" (crystallized methamphetamine), relatively cheap substitutes for cocaine and heroin. Assuming that the addicts interviewed or seen by the journalists were accurately described, it is sheer madness for a society to waste money in efforts to save such creatures from themselves. Despite the journalists' obligatory efforts to conceal the facts of race, it was obvious that most of the addicts were animated garbage that should never have been admitted to, or subsidized in, this country, while a comparatively few were degenerates of our race.

A sane society, instead of wasting its resources on efforts to salvage such worthless wreckage, would tacitly encourage all such addicts to eliminate themselves as soon as possible, thus mitigating the most noxious and dangerous form of environmental pollution.

The nature of what is called 'addiction' is generally misunderstood. The effects are largely determined by heredity, i.e., both by intellectual capacity, which is entirely genetic and only elicited or blighted by education, and by a genetically determined propensity to addiction.

De Quincy was brilliant, even as a boy; he became addicted to opium to relieve neuralgia when he was nineteen or twenty, but that did not prevent him from becoming one of the great and universally acknowledged masters of English literature. He was the master of his addiction, not enslaved by it. When it became harmful, he was able to discontinue the use of opium, to resume it later when he needed an anodyne to sorrow, and again to discontinue use of the pleasurable narcotic. There is no evidence that he sustained any demonstrable physical or mental injury from his use of opium.

11. The novel is realistic (except for the probability that Sir Louis also had vices of which Victorian readers were determined to remain ignorant), and you need only consider how doleful would have been the catastrophe, had not Sir Louis removed himself from a world that he encumbered. You may take this as an instance of what happened many times in Victorian society, almost always with benefit to innocent and decent persons, though sometimes with regrettable hardship or sorrow to others.

I have known several men who became, by heredity, so addicted to alcohol that they were notorious alcoholics. Some had the will-power to break their addiction when it became obviously injurious; some did not, including the most brilliant, who had known what tendency he had inherited and foreseen the probably inevitable results of beginning to drink spirituous liquors. That was deplorable, but he might also have inherited a cardiac weakness or a susceptibility to cancer that would likewise have condemned him to a premature death. A friend of mine would have been considered an alcoholic, had it been generally known that he needed a fifth of the best bourbon every day when he was engaged in intensive intellectual work, but when idle and at leisure he was not at all dependent on bottled stimulus.

Everyone knows instances of addiction to drugs that has unfortunate results. A friend of mine knows a business man who had a well-established and prosperous local business until he became addicted to the use of cocaine. Now the business is on the verge of bankruptcy and the man himself will probably be convicted of murderous assault with a knife on a chance acquaintance.[12] You doubtless know of many similar instances.

We must, as rational men, ignore all of the hysteria aroused to promote Bushy's fake "war on drugs," which is designed, first, to destroy the few remaining legal provisions that should protect Americans from total servitude and to place them entirely at the mercy of Federal terrorists, and second, to aid the major merchants in the narcotic-drug industry, including "our" C.I.A.,[13] many politicians in high office,[14] and, according to reports published from time to time in The Spotlight, Bushy himself, by suppressing unauthorized competition from independent dealers and cut-rate producers.

12. My friend had not thought of inquiring whether the business man had sought help from a psychiatrist, who may have used the synthetic drug that was recently identified as causing homicidal mania in men. The effects on women are quite different. In the only case of which I have heard, a middle-aged woman, employed as a clerk and cashier, caught in one of the "health maintenance" schemes now widely promoted, was given 'Prozac' by the psychiatrist to whom she was sent by the clinic; the results were wrinkling and premature aging of the face, inability to stand for any considerable length of time, frequent lapses of memory, and sporadic mental confusion approaching incoherence. When a threat of a suit for malpractice frightened the psychiatrist into releasing the victim, she recovered from all the effects of the drug in a few weeks on a diet that included an abundance of vitamins and necessary minerals.

There are two basic facts that we must recognize.

Almost all of the transport and vending of cocaine, heroin, etc. (as distinct from the financiers and directors of the wholesale business) is performed by members of the sacrosanct "minorities," i.e., our racial enemies, most of them imported into the United States by the international conspiracy described by Ivor Benson in the October issue of Liberty Bell. A very large proportion of those drugs are purchased by the same biological trash. There is no point in talking about this major part of the present "drug problem" so long as Americans elect to live in a garbage dump. If, by some miraculous interposition, the Americans should someday decide to clean house, the problem would disappear. If they do not, they will prove that the boobus Americanus is not a viable species of animal life, and again the problem will be nugatory. It need not, therefore, concern us here.

Our only legitimate interest is in members of our own race.

13. See Alfred W. McCoy, The Politics of Heroin: CIA Complicity in the Global Drug Trade (Brooklyn, Lawrence Hill [= Chicago Review Press], 1991.

14. Len Martin, in his Godfathers of North Dakota (Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, Pro-American Press, 1987), quotes sworn testimony by Daniel Murray, who averred that he served as messenger for the AttorneyGeneral of North Dakota, carrying shipments of cocaine and occasionally marijuana from Florida for the huge criminal organization headed by the Governor of the state. The drugs were only a small part of the total corruption of government, including judges, lawyers, banks, and politicians, in a state which most of us consider agrarian and so probably retaining some of the whilom virtues of our people. It is, however, lousy with Jews. Cf. the mention of the Dakotas in Instauration, December 1987, p. 23.

We must begin by sharply distinguishing natural drugs, principally cocaine, opium, morphine, and cannabis (hashish, marijuana),[15] of which the effects have long been generally known and should be anticipated by anyone who uses them, and the thousands of synthetic drugs now in use, of which the total effects are unknown even to the experts who have pronounced them "safe" on the supposition that men and mice are physiologically equal, which are generally and often recklessly administered by physicians and psychiatrists to trusting patients who are usually not informed of even the expected effects and have no real chance to decide for themselves whether they want the medication with the risks it may involve. Some of these synthetic drugs (e.g., lysergic acid diethylamide) are also sold clandestinely to gullible customers or surreptitiously given to persons whom it is wished to destroy. We are now talking only about the natural and well-known drugs.

When the effects of a drug are common knowledge, use of it in a free society should depend only on the decision of each individual. If, unlike modern Americans, we value personal liberty, either as a matter of racial principle or as a biologically salubrious method for improvement of the race, we should observe with drugs, as with other articles of commerce, the rule that the purchaser must decide for himself whether he wants the article and can afford the price.

Intelligent persons should know what they are doing when they purchase the drug. They may, of course, be mistaken about themselves or have inherited some mentally crippling genetic deficiency, 15. The total effects of marijuana are still in dispute, and some "conservatives," such as William F. Buckley, advocate making it again generally available. It has been in use in the United States for a long time. It was around 1930, as I recall, that the leader of a small dance band told me that White men could not reproduce the nigger noise then in vogue for dancing without deranging their nervous systems by use of marijuana to produce the necessary reflexes. The current efforts to stop the production of marijuana by employing armies of vagrant spies to detect and uproot plants of Cannabis sativa forces the United States to rely on imports for an indispensable industrial material (hemp).

and there will undoubtedly be persons in whom the results of their freedom of choice will be pathetic for themselves or for persons near to them, just as it now is in the case of alcohol. But that, however much it may make sentimentalists jabber and sob, is precisely what a rational society should not only permit but want.

We live in a universe in which all organic life is a rare and utterly insignificant epiphenomenon, meaningless on the scale of the majestic and eternal movements of stars and galaxies. It is only to the animals it has produced that organic life has any importance, but it is the whole of life to them.

We organisms live in a hostile world. The meanest bug lives (unconsciously, we assume) in constant fear of predators, and scuttles for safety when it senses danger. Birds, those tiny and pretty descendants of minuscule dinosaurs, live only by constant vigilance, and even so domesticated and stupefied creatures as chickens will be thrown into panic by the shadow of a hawk flying high above them. The rabbit survives because he is perpetually afraid and flees at the first suspicion of hostile intent. Wolves explore a region cautiously before attacking their prey. The human genus is not at all different, except that it has by intelligence obtained the ability to destroy most of its non-human enemies, and is menaced chiefly by predators of its own genus, often of the same species.[16]

There is only one supreme law of life: the survival of the fittest, with its corollary, the extermination (or, through a hazardous compassion, subjugation) of the unfit. The Athenian envoys at Melos stated an obvious truth:

"Of the gods we believe, and of men we know, that the strong do what they will, and the weak suffer what they must."

16. It is time that we stop the nonsense of pretending that while there are several species of each of the other anthropoids, there is only one species of anthropoids that can talk. That notion was based on anatomical similarities, with many details forced into the same pattern, ignoring the far greater psychic differences between races and even between ethnic groups.

The only possible error in that dictum will come from incorrect estimates of strength.

The survival of all species depends on success in eluding or resisting their active or potential enemies, for practical purposes, almost all other species. The lower species, such as rats and rabbits, survive and in favorable circumstances advance their species by being enormously prolific, breeding at an amazing rate.[17] (This is also true of the lower species of human animals.)[18] The higher species rely on cunning and strength. Most of them further ensure their survival by forming associations for mutual protection: herds, packs, bands, tribes.

Baboons, who are more intelligent than apes, have evinced an amazing capacity for survival by forming bands governed by an oligarchy of old and experienced males, who, like true aristocrats, sacrifice themselves when necessary to ensure the survival of their subjects. Among apes, the orang-outang are thorough-going individualists, meeting others of their species only for seasonal copulation, and they flourished in territory that permitted their survival. Among the early species of proto-human anthropoids, some species, such as the 'Proconsul' and the Gigantopithecus, probably followed the 'life-style' of the ourang-outang in less favorable territory and became extinct. The anthropoids (including, almost certainly, the Australopithecus) that eventually evolved into the Homo erectus and several species of Homo habilis that were ancestors of the corresponding species now called human,[19] lived and hunted in

17. My older readers will remember that this was the subject of a humorous and often reprinted tale, "Pigs is Pigs," about an express agent and a consignment of guinea pigs.

18. The nigger (mulatta) professor (!) who plays a stellar rôle in the Senatorial circus now performing in Washington (to distract attention from important issues) was one of the thirteen offspring in a household typical of her race.

19. By us, not by Jews, in whose vocabulary, fixed by God's Word in the Holy Talmud, only members of their own strange race are human, whereas other races (ethnê, gentiles, goyim) have only the status of domestic animals.

packs or bands and thus, by making protection the common responsibility of all, flourished and constantly expanded the territory of their respective species.

Mammals (including men) that survive by forming groups must nevertheless prevent deterioration of the individual members of the herd. There is always some attrition, some loss of progeny, by accident or what we may call thoughtlessness. One of the most pathetic incidents in nature—pathetic to Aryans, to whose racial sense of compassion it should be more moving than niggers starving in Ethiopia—is sometimes seen among the larger species of deer. A young doe, in oestrus for the first time, rashly presents herself to the old monarch of the herd, and when he covers her, her young legs break beneath his weight, and she is left, helpless, to bemoan her first sexual pleasure until she starves or a predator eats her or an Aryan mercifully puts a bullet in her head.[20] Some children, even children of parents who do not evade their responsibility, will always ingeniously find ways venturesomely to destroy themselves, and nothing can be done about that, although "do-gooders" are always plotting legislation, having learned nothing from the well-known fairy tale about the king who tried to prevent his daughter from becoming Sleeping Beauty by destroying all the spindles in his kingdom.

Quite different is the biological necessity of preventing deterioration of the species through the blunder of preserving degenerate offspring. A wolf bitch will fight to the death to protect her pups, but she will also herself destroy one of her few offspring if she senses that it is in some way inferior. The fearsome complexity of human genetics ensures the birth, in every social and ethnic class, of children who are irremediably defective. A rational society will destroy at birth children that are misshapen or maimed or psychically degenerate. It is sheer idiocy, for example, anxiously to preserve the life of a Mongoloid idiot to afflict its hapless parents and be a burden on society for a lifetime, wasting not only money and the time of many persons who would otherwise perform useful tasks, but constantly blighting the lives of the unfortunate man and woman who inadvertently brought it into being.

20. This capacity for compassion is peculiar to our race and unintelligible to all others. A lady who was a palaeozoölogist once confessed to me that when she examined the carcass of a female mammoth, frozen and preserved in arctic tundra, and found that the pregnant mammoth had died while chewing flowering shrubs in her mouth, she burst into tears. One must honor her for her racial integrity.

The preservation of a race depends on maintaining the quality of the individuals in it, and especially on preventing the inferior from perpetuating their inferiority by producing progeny.

While a wealthy society can, as a luxury, indulge the storgê, the amiable weakness of mothers, who wish the preservation of even an hopelessly inferior child,[21] the society cannot permit the inferiority, whether physical or mental, to be perpetuated, unless it has succumbed to the death-wish inherent in an alien and poisonous religion.

What is true of children is even more true of adults. A civilized society necessarily protects its individual members from domestic and foreign violence, physical or economic, but it cannot protect individuals from themselves and exhibits its own deterioration when it madly tries to do so. Persons who do not have the intelligence and moral stamina to govern their own lives when they are free to do so should not perpetuate their genetic weakness and thus weaken the race as a whole. There are often good reasons for blunders in many matters, from matrimony to fiduciary relations, through inexperience, deceit, or fallacious appearances, but certainly the resort to drugs of well-known efficacy involves a decision for which the individual must bear the sole responsibility. Slavish addiction is proof of unfitness for civilized liberty and hence unfitness for civilized society.

In the modern world the old virtues, physical strength and prowess in combat, have lost their racial importance, but the corollary is the greatly increased importance of intelligence and moral strength.

21. You, no doubt, have often wondered at the perversity of the maternal instinct that so commonly appears when the mother of six or seven children dotes on the worst of the lot, often with gross injustice to its betters.

Elimination of the unfit is the first requisite for the survival of a nation or race. To neglect that duty is knowingly to violate the inexorable law of nature that ordains the survival of the fittest, but a civilized society, by collectively assuming responsibility for the survival of its members, protects individuals from a need to fight for themselves, and thus permits the thoughtless to entertain illusions about the world and to imagine that the precarious security given them by the nation is something that occurs automatically and that they can abuse and exploit at will.

From a biological standpoint, however, the American people have long been mad. They not only insanely reject the eugenics necessary for survival, but enthusiastically promote every dysgenic device and procedure, not only by the mongrelization called "Integration," but by selective breeding for inferiority.

Driven by cunning enemies and our own shysters and fools, our nation became crazed with the Christians' frantic denial of reality, sullen hatred of reason and all excellence, and mad doting on whatever is debased, diseased, deformed, and degenerate.

All societies, by the very nature of heredity, produce waste products, and their health depends on prompt and efficient disposal of them. No society can stop up its sewers and survive for long. The crazed Christian ascetics of the early centuries often pleased their sadistic god by immuring themselves in narrow cells in which they existed with the accumulating mass of their own excrement,[22] but we may be sure their lives were mercifully short. The same is true of a society that does not provide for the removal of its own tares and dregs.

Now that we have long since passed the point of no return, it is much too late, of course, to revert to the rational policy of Victorian times and earlier. What will happen after the catastrophic collapse and end of the United States, no one can predict, and hence no one can deny hope that our now delirious race may somehow survive and regain its vitality. But would that we had remained sane when there was no "drug problem"!

A BIT OF GOOD NEWS

On 6 November 1991 the New York Post published an important article by Rowland Evans and Robert Novak. The enterprising and, as the event proved, courageous journalists had interviewed Dwight Porter, who had been the American Ambassador to Lebanon in 1967. After twenty-four years, Mr. Porter disclosed the fact that his cryptographic staff in the Embassy at Beirut had intercepted and decoded communications between the commander of the Israeli air squadron and the Israeli High Command, which proved that the latter knew that the Liberty was an unarmed American naval vessel and, over the aviator's misgivings, ordered that the American ship be attacked and sunk.

Americans were, of course, pleased to have an authoritative confirmation—if confirmation were still needed—of a well-established historical fact, but I wonder how many were gratified by a fact that was incidentally disclosed: Americans had broken a Jewish 'code'[1] and were able to read currently[2] messages sent in it. Since the Jews have a racial talent for cryptography, as for mathematics, that was no mean achievement, and one of which we may legitimately be proud. It was also a reassuring proof that as late as 1967 the United States had competent cryptanalysts.

It is true that the Jewish messages read in Beirut must have been of the kind that is most vulnerable to analysis. It will be obvious that in field communications, i.e., between an army detachment or a squadron and its headquarters, the better systems described in Appendix I are inapplicable because they require specialist code-clerks,

1. See Appendix I, Cryptographic terminology.

2. This is a very important consideration. Assuming that a message is intercepted in a 'code' that has already been broken, there is a great difference between reading it immediately and reading it only after the hours of cryptanalytic work needed to recover the key.

are relatively slow, and are too elaborate (the more complicated a system, the greater the chance of errors). There is no time for such luxuries in messages to and from the field, i.e, the battle-front, which must be sent and read when minutes may be crucial.

Field communications must therefore be in cipher, except that there may be a bit of code in a few easily memorized terms, no more than ten (e.g., 'American' = "tea," 'ship' = "pot," etc.) Enciphering and deciphering must be as nearly instantaneous as possible. The commonly used Swedish 'Haglin' machine is as good as any. (The German 'Enigma' is much too elaborate.) It will delay analytic decipherment for a considerable time (usually enough to make tactical information obsolete) unless the keys used with it have already been recovered.[3]

Although field communications are, as I have said, more vulnerable to analysis than more intricate systems that can be used in the comparative leisure of an embassy's code-room or similar post, analysis of them requires a very considerable degree of cryptanalytic skill; the American achievement in Beirut was highly creditable and we should congratulate ourselves that we had in 1967, and may still have today, men who could 'break' the system of secret communication used by the Jewish airforce.

The U.S.S. Liberty

Messrs. Evans and Novak were not content with their interview with Ambassador Porter. They sought further confirmation and found it in a small town in Maine and in the person of Seth Mintz, a Jew who enjoys dual citizenship, a privilege reserved for God's People. Mintz, born in the United States, went to the Holy Land and fought for his nation. He became a Major in the Holy Army. He happened to be present (perhaps as a consultant on American affairs) in the headquarters of the Israeli High Command in Tel Aviv on 8 June 1987, when the question of the presence of the Liberty off the Egyptian coast was being discussed, hours before the crucial messages intercepted by Ambassador Porter's staff in Beirut were sent.

3. For communications by telephone, machines which 'scramble' the voice when transmitted and 'unscramble' it when received are often used, but the principles of cryptanalysis remain the same, i.e., what must be recovered is the pattern of 'scrambling' that is in use at any given time and location.

The ship was identified as the American Liberty from its silhouette and photographs in the current edition of Jane's Fighting Ships.[4] That identification was confirmed when planes sent to watch the ship reported its characteristics and the fact that it was flying the American flag, and took photographs which were immediately flown to Tel Aviv, where they verified the identification already made from the pages of Jane's.

The Jewish High Command prepared a kind of alibi by asking the American Ambassador to Israel, a man named Walworth Barbour, whether he recognized the ship off the Egyptian coast as an American naval vessel. He replied that he did not, as was to be expected, since he probably knew nothing of the Liberty, a comparatively small and unarmed ship equipped for electronic espionage, and had not been told of its function or its mission. The Navy does not customarily inform ambassadors of the detailed movements of its ships on routine missions, still less of somewhat clandestine operations. The existence of the Liberty could not be kept secret, but the Navy naturally wanted the ship to attract as little attention as possible. There was no reason why the Ambassador in Tel Aviv should be told of its mission, and many valid reasons why he should not be told. At all events, as everyone concerned well knew, if Barbour had been told about the Liberty and its mission, he would have denied knowledge of it. Ambassadors ex officio deny all knowledge of their nation's espionage, even if part of it is being carried on in their own embassies by the Military Attaché. That is simply diplomatic etiquette. If Barbour had perchance known of the Liberty, he would no more have admitted it than he would have told his host at a dinner party that he thought the hostess a clumsy cow or silly bitch. In other words, Barbour's reply could be predicted with complete confidence.

The High Command seemed at first uncertain whether it would be prudent to destroy the American naval vessel, even though it had no armament with which it could effectively defend itself, but it was finally decided to destroy it, and bombing and torpedo planes were sent to do so.

The High Command in Tel Aviv wanted the Liberty destroyed to prevent their American serfs from learning what God's People were doing and would do to the ill-equipped and betrayed Semites in Syria, whom they were attacking. They had no scruples, because it is obviously the function of Americans to finance Jewish conquests, not to spy on their masters. They had no qualms because they had in the White House a stooge who, as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States, would intervene to forbid the American fleet in the Mediterranean to send assistance to its ship when attacked,—an infamous stooge who was so completely in their service that he could be counted on to do all in his power to help them sink the Liberty and kill all aboard it (any survivors from the sinking ship could be machine-gunned in the water), so that the attack could be blamed on the Egyptians and provide a pretext for attacking that nation.

When the Israeli bombers and torpedo-planes were sent to attack and destroy the ship, the Jewish commander, seeing that it was an American vessel, had misgivings and reported to the High Command, which simply repeated the orders to attack and sink the Liberty. Those were the messages intercepted by Mr. Porter's staff in Beirut.

While the attack was in progress, Lyndon Johnson, a sleazy crook from Texas directed by his wedded Jewess, after ordering the American fleet to abandon the Liberty to her fate, even told one of his aides how much he hoped the Jews would destroy the ship and all those Americans on board it, leaving no survivors. And when he learned that his masters had failed to do that, he was enraged and, cursing, ordered the Navy to cover up the attack and intimidate the survivors. Lyndon Johnson, although controlled by a Jewess, was, so far as is known, a degenerate Aryan. He was, therefore, a traitor to his nation and his race. He was indubitably guilty of high treason, for which he would have been impeached, tried, convicted, and hanged, if the Americans had not given their country to their enemies.

When the Jews' gunfire, bombs, and torpedoes failed to obliterate the Liberty, they said they had mistaken her for the Egyptian El Quesir, a ship of less than half the size of the Liberty, with hull and superstructure of entirely different shape (as was obvious from Jane's), which did not fly the American flag, and which, as they well knew, was anchored in the harbor of Alexandria, which it never left during the hostilities. It is to be doubted whether God's Chosen expected any informed person to believe that absurd pretense; it was probably just their way of thumbing their nose at their American dolts.

Major Mintz had no hesitation in telling the American journalists what had happened in the headquarters at Tel Aviv,—he may have seen nothing discreditable to his nation in the facts he disclosed,—but by 7 November he was amazed by his tribe's reaction to his disclosures, and when he was interviewed by a reporter for the Jewish newspaper Ha'aretz, he confessed that he was afraid, saying "I don't need the Mossad and Shin Bet[5] knocking on my door." Whether he was frightened into repudiating his statement is not clear, but a fellow tribesman, Rosenthal, reported in the leading jewspaper, the New York Times, on 8 November that Mintz claimed he had been "misquoted." Whether Mintz did in fact withdraw his statement, perhaps while looking into the muzzle of a Sten gun, is not certain. See the journalists' column in the New York Post, 11 November, where they reaffirm their account of what Mintz told them before he realized what his compatriots might do to him for his indiscretion. Whether Mintz is still alive, I do not know.

5. Shin Bet is the military arm of Mossad, the Jews' famous and utterly ruthless espionage and murder agency, with which the "American" Criminal Intelligence Agency normally coöperates, if it is, indeed, more than a subsidiary.

Evans and Novak naturally set off screaming by our God-given parasites. Some of their irate letters were printed by the Post on 11 November. One writer, who had taken an Irish name, called the article by Evans and Novak "Israel-bashing," correctly enough, since any truthful revelation of Jewish intrigues, deceit, and hatred is a "bashing" of the great race to whom old Yahweh deeded this planet. A correspondent with an English name denounced the article as a "total fabrication" by "two scoundrels." And, naturally, there were the usual hints of a boycott and other reprisals against the vile newspaper that had dared to publish an article that was not laudatory of the Master Race.

The underlying thought was clear. Why so much foolish talk about a trivial incident? The Jews merely killed thirty-four of their American pigs and wounded 171, maiming some. What was wrong about that? Doesn't everyone know that, as the Christians' "Old Testament" implies[6] and the Holy Talmud explicitly states, only Jews are human beings? That the lower animals can have no rights?

So far as I know, Messrs. Evans and Novak are still alive and unharmed, and so is Mr. Porter, but I am taking no bets on what will happen to them.

APPENDICES

I. Cryptographic terminology. The word 'code' is in general use to designate all secret communications by means of arbitrary symbols. (Other forms of secret communication, as, for example, by the use of invisible inks, are classified as steganography.) Strictly speaking, however, a code uses symbols for words and common phrases and so requires two 'dictionaries,' one with the words and phrases in alphabetical order for encoding, and one with the symbols in alphabetical or numerical order for decoding. In a 'short' code, for example, 'American' may = PLKR, 'president' = FHLY, 'assassinated' = QMAK, etc. In a 'long' code, 'American president assassinated' = LXCV, 'American president en route to' = ERPK, 'American president in hospital' = BNOP, etc. The codes are further classified by the symbols used, four-letter code, five-letter code, four-digit code, five-digit code, etc. Only a child today would be so naïve as to send messages in the code used. To attain any degree of security from cryptanalysts, the symbols of the code must be enciphered before the message is sent by telegraph or radio.

A cipher is a system whereby letters or groups of letters are represented by symbols, for example, A = X, B = L, C = W, etc. or AB = KO, AC = SI, AD = PO, etc. Such a simple cipher can be read so easily that no one would think of transmitting a message in it. Some protection is offered by what is called a 'Playfair square,' in which the letters of the alphabet, reduced to twenty-five, are put on a square in the order of some keyword or phrase, such as HOMER or MERCHANTS QUIZ, with the remaining letters in alphabetical order; pairs of letters on the square are then represented by the corresponding letters on the opposite side of the square. Another way of protecting a cipher is by arranging the letters of the message in vertical columns with a different letter equivalent for each column, e.g., in column 1 A = X, in column 2, A = L, in column 3, A = K....in column 20, A = B, etc. When the symbols of a code are then replaced according to such a cipher, the resulting system of communication can be 'broken' only when cyptanalysts have at hand a large number of messages sent in the same system.

Further security is sought by (a) having a number of codes, usually allocated according to place and office (e.g., the Ambassador in London uses Code #1, the Consul General in London uses Code

#10; the Ambassador in Paris uses Code #2, the Consul General, #11; the Ambassador in Berlin uses Code #3, etc. (This, incidentally, prevents one Ambassador from reading messages sent by his colleagues in other countries—unless he has competent cryptanalysts on his staff.); and (b) by having a large number of cipher systems, which will be employed according to keys. A cipher system may be chosen at random and designated by a key, the first or last group in the message, or may be systematic, e.g., on 14 November we use Cipher #1, according to which A in the first column = X, in the second column, H, etc.; on 15 November we use Cipher #14, in which A in column 1 = J, and in column 2, P, etc.

The above very elementary description is intended only to show you the meaning of the basic terms in cryptography.

In very recent years, the general availability of computers has expedited all phases of cryptography, but the principles remain the same and the greater complexity the computers permit probably leaves the time required for cryptanalysis about the same or, with really subtle adversaries, makes it much longer. Cryptographic systems that are invulnerable to analysis are now possible, but require very elaborate equipment and constant vigilance in their use.

II. Jane's Fighting Ships. Since 1898, the annual volumes of this almost perfectly accurate publication have been universally used as a reference work, and copies of the current edition are kept at hand by the commanders of all ships of any consequence, and on the desks of everyone concerned with naval or maritime matters, including the editors of newspapers, who rely on Jane's for pictures of naval vessels mentioned in the news. It will be recalled that in 1915 when Winston Churchill, then the British Sea Lord, ordered the Lusitania diverted to Queenstown and to approach Ireland without naval protection, so that he could dangle "45,000 tons of livebait" before the German submarines known to be operating in that area, the commander of the German U-20 ascertained from the current edition of Jane's Fighting Ships that the Lusitania was a British warship (auxiliary cruiser) before he torpedoed it. His torpedoes did not sink the Lusitania, which was destroyed by an explosion of the munitions (including a large quantity of guncotton) in its hold. There was a very satisfactory loss of life, including many Americans who had been induced to take passage on the Lusitania by the pretense that it was an unarmed passenger ship and was not carrying contraband. It is doubtful whether Churchill expected the sinking of the Lusitania to enable Wacky Wilson to run the Americans into a war against Germany at once; it was sufficient that Wilson could puff up with moral indignation and the American press could be stuffed with innumerable articles about the "Hunnish barbarity" of the "fiendish Germans" and their "menace to civilization," in preparation for that glorious day in 1917 when the crackpot in the White House was at last able to proclaim his "war to end wars." The facts about the sinking of the Lusitania became indubitable when Colin Simpson gained access to the archives of the British Navy; see his The Lusitania (Boston, Little-Brown, 1972).

WHAT HATH MAN WROUGHT?

The Sun is a sensation-mongering weekly, sold chiefly to sensation-hungry females in the dreary barns called 'Supermarkets.' Its issue for 13 August 1991 contains an article of considerable interest, based on an article in the British tabloid, Daily Star, which followed up a 'documentary' program of the British Broadcasting System. The article is supported by apparently genuine photographs.

British geneticists, we are told, successfully impregnated female chimpanzees with human sperm (race unstated) and have thus far produced two hybrid offspring, one now twelve years old, the other born three months ago.

The twelve-year-old creature is conspicuously bow-legged but habitually walks on two feet, although it has the very long arms, characteristic of apes and most niggers, that its mother used for walking on all fours, as apes normally do. It seems to have the coat of body hair that is common to all apes. It is partly bald, and its face resembles that of an enraged nigger of forty or fifty.

The infant has pale skin, abundant hair on the head but not, thus far, on the body, and the features of an ape modified with some human characteristics, especially about the eyes, ears, and forehead, while the shape of the upper part of the skull is almost completely human.

The twelve-year-old grunts but is incapable of articulate speech. Since he is the only creature of his hybrid species, he is necessarily solitary, but there is some silly speculation by Dr. Francis Wellington, the repentant geneticist who brought the secret project to public attention, who imagines that the hybrid was shocked when it looked into a mirror and is now melancholy because it is not human! If one judges by the rate of sexual maturity in apes and niggers, the creature is probably puberate, but the absence of a corresponding female will make it impossible to ascertain whether the hybrid creatures would be fertile or sterile.

There is nothing implausible about the article. It is common knowledge that commonly within a genus and sometimes within a whole family, a female of one species can be fecundated by a male of a greatly different species. Everyone is familiar with mules and hinnies and knows that the hybrids are sterile. We all know and regret that the various human species are capable of miscegenation and that the hybrids, disastrously for us, are not sterile.

In the early years of this century a group of enterprising Americans thought they had hit a financial jackpot when they forced miscegenation between bison and domestic cattle that are raised for their beef. The resulting 'cattalo,' it was thought, would simultaneously provide esculent steaks and 'buffalo' robes, prized for their warmth and sometimes made into expensive and weather-proof overcoats. The combination of such diverse species did not fulfill expectations and the project was a costly failure.[1]

1. If I remember correctly an account read when I was a youth, the 'cattaloes' were not always sterile, but the progeny tended to revert to the species of one ancestor, to the detriment or loss of the desired characteristics of the other.

Recent techniques of artificial insemination have produced astonishing hybrids. Lions and tigers normally hate and attack each another, but it has been proved that the male of one species can fecundate the female of the other and produce healthy hybrids. Whether they are sterile, I do not know.

All that the British geneticists have proved, assuming that the article correctly reports their experiment, is that chimpanzees and a human species are biologically capable of interbreeding. That is not astonishing. Both are not only Primates but belong to the same family, Hominoidea, and are therefore closely related. This has been long believed, but is now made indisputable. That is a distinct advance of biological knowledge.

There have been precedents, though none that has not been questioned. While the travelers' tales about the male orang-utan's appetite for human women were wildly exaggerated, it is likely that the males did copulate with female natives that were then attractive to them and readily available, and the females may well have conceived. That no progeny were known to reliable Europeans is not remarkable. The orang-utan, unlike other apes, are a solitary species and the male would have had no more interest in the human female after copulation than in a female of his own species, while the family of the mother of the fatherless hybrid would see no advantage in raising it, although the natives of Borneo did not think of orang-utans as belonging to a species different from their own.

The female orang-utan is noted for her care of her offspring, and it would be interesting to know what such a female, if feral (i.e., in the wild, not a captive),[2] would do, if she were made pregnant by artificial insemination with human sperm. (The mothers of the hybrids produced in Britain presumably had no opportunity to decide whether they would raise their offspring.)

2. This is most important. All mammals, including Hominoidea, undergo drastic psychic alterations when held captive in cages or prisons, or intolerably crowded together, as in large cities. These are often accompanied by physiological changes, e.g., female chimpanzees naturally become puberate when they are 12 or 13, but when they are raised in captivity, at 8 or 9.

There have been exhibited from time to time creatures that were said to be the result of miscegenation between gorillas and human beings, but the genealogy was questioned in every case.[3] There is no valid reason, however, to suppose a priori that such hybrids are not biologically possible.

I have reported[4] an unverified story of a much more astonishing result of biological hybris. A female nigger in Kenya was said to be pregnant with a fetus sufficiently developed to prove that it was sired by a baboon, whom the female must have attracted in some way. So far as I know, there has been no report of the birth of the hybrid in January of this year. If the physician in Kenya was right in his diagnosis, the infant would have proved the possibility of fertilization of a Congoid by a male who was not even an ape, but a monkey. Baboons, although Primates, are not Hominoidea, but belong to a radically different family, the Cercopithecidae, and fertility between two such greatly different species would be a most remarkable phenomenon.

The pregnancy of the chimpanzees in Britain raises the question of the limits we set to the term 'human.' The Jews among themselves restrict the word to their own hybrid race, but Aryans naturally recognize as fellow humans the Semites and Mongoloids, who had civilizations of their own, and even the lower races, Congoids, Capoids, and Australoids, who were incapable of creating a civilization, but presumably are entitled to be called 'human' because they had articulate languages.[5] But what about extinct anthropoids? Biological taxonomy recognizes the species of Homo erectus as human, but should we? Were the Neanderthals human? There is some evidence that they were incapable of more than animal cries, but some remarkable skulls found in Palestine indicate that there they could interbreed with the Cro-Magnon people, who exterminated them elsewhere.[6] If we admit them, where shall we stop short of the Australopithecus?

5. I note that Professor Daniel E. Vining, Jr., reviewing L.L. Betzig's Despotism and Differential Reproduction in the Journal of Social, Political and Economic Studies, XIV (1989), pp. 375-380, has misgivings about undiscriminating use of the word 'human.' Miss/Mrs. Betzig contends that "the Darwinian model really works for human beings," but her data are all drawn from the primitive societies of the lower races,

Dr. Wellington, the geneticist who repented his part in the project and was starred on British television, does not explain clearly his repentance, except by talking the nonsense about the twelve-year old's melancholy that I quoted above, and saying that he had hoped the hybrids would have more of human characteristics—although it is hard to see how that would affect what seems to worry him, the morality of the experimentation.

The reaction of the shamans could have been predicted. An American clergymen who saw the article in the Sun was greatly perturbed; he thinks the experiment trespassed on his god's prerogatives, and he fears that when copies of the Sun reach Heaven, old Yahweh may go berserk and smash up the universe, just as he promised to do in the Christians' favorite horror story, the Apocalypse—or, if that seems excessive to you, not the whole universe but only a small segment of it, say a hundred light years in diameter, surrounding a tiny ball of dirt infested with ephemeral creatures, a few of whom are said to engage his whole attention.

and, granting that she is right about them, her model "does not explain much about human history," which is "the evolution of high civilizations," in which psychic, not physical, factors are dominant and luxury becomes an obvious determinant of differential reproduction, as Professor Vining ably explains.

6. It is sometimes said that there is no evidence that our Cro-Magnon ancestors wisely exterminated the more brutish species, but the evidence is that after the Cro-Magnons appear in any region, the Neanderthals promptly disappear. What other evidence could we expect to find? The Cro-Magnons certainly did not bury the corpses when the countryside was full of many species of carnivores, all eager for a good meal.

In England, Bishop Martin O'Donnell was exercised because he was sure the impious experiment was an infringement of his god's patent for creating anthropoids, and he wanted the hybrids "humanely exterminated." That would be a reasonable opinion, if His Reverence, as you may be sure, did not bless marriages that are miscegenation and produce far more repulsive and dangerous hybrids, and did not approve the 'humanitarian' importation of biological trash to harass the Anglo-Saxons who mistakenly pay his salary. He could have learned from the Fathers of the Church—or, if he prefers entertaining reading, from Anatole France's L'île des pingouins[7]—an alternative procedure. He could have sprinkled the monsters with holy water and that would have forced Jesus to inject souls into them. Then they could have been made British citizens and pampered at the expense of the stupid tax-payers—and, who knows?—perhaps they could have been taught to be as vicious as the imports from Africa on which British do-gooders dote (until they are beaten or killed).

The Scientific Imperative

The work of the British geneticists, if accurately reported, is, like some other forms of biological research, repulsive and displeasing to our racial sensibilities, but it seems to have been undertaken in a genuine search for knowledge of great importance, and that is its own justification.

We Aryans have a racial trait, perhaps even an instinct, that is incomprehensible to other races and which they regard as fatu-

7. There are English translations, probably entitled Penguin Island, but you should be warned that while the opening chapters are well-written and quite amusing, the book speedily degenerates into heavy-handed, grotesque, and tedious satire that attests the mental deterioration of one of the world's most talented stylists, perhaps under the influence of his Jewish mistresses. His irrational and fatuously passionate championing of Dreyfus, who had become merely an instrument in the Jews' eversion of French culture, presaged the sad days in the 1920s when the aged Anatole France, corseted and rouged, decended from his limousine and, leaning on the arm of his chauffeur, in a shrill and cracked voice harangued bored groups of unemployed workers about the evils of "private property."

ous. We are tender-hearted, and we are distressed by the suffering of mammals with whom we have a natural sympathy and even of mammals we do not like or respect.

We acquiesce in the slaughter of pigs and cattle to satisfy our gourmandise—for what would be breakfast without bacon, or dinner without a sirloin or, at least, ham?—but we insist that the victims of our appetites be killed as painlessly as possible, and we are nauseated when we witness the infliction of maximum suffering on cattle to appease the Sheenies' sadistic lusts.[8]

A baneful superstition long distorted our attitude toward our fellow mammals by making a generic distinction between talking mammals and the others, so that niggers, for example, were credited with certain "rights" that were not possessed by elephants and dolphins. If we are rational, we will recognize that our attitude toward other species must be governed only by our highest morality, i.e., by the welfare of our kindred, our race. We may legitimately act to protect and preserve elephants in Africa, for they are in many ways admirable mammals and engage our sympathies, but we are guilty of sabotaging our own interests and our children's future, if we, with mawkish sentimentality, try to feed starving niggers[9] or try to save them from the African Plague ("AIDS") now epidemic among them.[10] We naturally regret that such

8. Mr. Richard Cotten informs me from Washington that there was recently a proposal to exhibit on television a film showing the Jewish method of slaughtering cattle. The project was immediately forbidden by the race that now owns the country that once was ours, who feared that the gruesome spectacle might arouse the latent instincts of even torpid Americans.

9. Friends of Manfred Roeder, who, in the past, sometimes lapsed into gross sentimentality, were greatly pleased by the circular letter reproduced in the December 1991 issue of Liberty Bell, in which he pointed out the obvious fact that the thing we should do about starving niggers in Africa is let them starve, the only way to prevent the number of hungry niggers from exceeding the world's capacity to feed them.

10. The latest report from Uganda is that one-third of the population will die of the African Plague ("AIDS") before the end of 1994. Instead of being pleased by the good news, some Aryan nitwits want to waste unlovely mammals must suffer so acutely before they die, but we can do nothing about that: it would not be feasible to supply them with free cyanide of potassium—and if we did, they would not curtail their misery.

What I have said will seem hard-hearted, calloused, brutal, to many good people, but, if we are not willing to become extinct, we shall have to forego the comfort of hallucinatory fantasies and face, sooner or later, the grim realities of the world in which we live.

The grimmest fact has long been known to everyone who, not stunned by the din made by professional world-savers, has looked beyond their hypocrisy and noticed the terrible proliferation of some human species in recent years. In an article published in 1963,[11] I remarked on the statistical extrapolation which indicated that "the globe, sometime between A.D. 2000 and 2005....will be infested by 5,000,000,000 anatomically human creatures," and that "then, to keep the globe inhabitable at that bare subsistence level, it will be necessary to kill every year more people than now live in the whole United States—kill them with atomic bombs or clubs, as may be the more convenient."

The terrible fecundity of the lower races outran the statistical projection, and has already reached about five billion, five hundred million, and the population can be stabilized at that level only by killing on the scale I indicated (the population of the United States is larger now; so is the need for killing).

In my article I predicted that the global population would be drastically reduced before 2000. I may have set the date a little too our race's resources and talents by trying to reduce the mortality and thus make life more miserable for the survivors in an overpopulated country. The do-gooders also whimpered a little in 1972-1979 when the Boss Nigger in Uganda, whom they with their idiotic "anti-colonialism" had put in power, butchered an estimated half million of his nigger subjects for the fun of it. At least, he saved them from dying of the Plague!

early, but let's see what the next eight years bring forth. I indicated various ways in which the necessary massacres could be produced, including the one sure one, if all else fails:

"If the minority of the earth's inhabitants that is capable of creating and continuing (as distinct from aping) a high civilization is exterminated (as it now seems resolved to be)....civilization will collapse from sheer lack of brains to keep it going, and the consequent reversion to global savagery will speedily take care of the excess in numbers."[12]

The facts, as I have said, have long been known. One could not expect the facts to be admitted by politicians, "educators," "evangelicals," and other crooks who live by deluding and swindling the boobs, but it is noteworthy that so few men with scientific credentials have the courage to call public attention to the dire consequence of our race's mad sentimentality.

One man who dared tell the truth about the "environmental crisis" is Jonathon Stone, Professor of Anatomy in the University of Sidney, who told a conference in Australia:

"While we have realized the importance of environmental problems, we have not realized that their causes are not specific—pollution of air, soil, or water, or the destruction of forests or species—but general: human overpopulation.

"The view common to religious and humanist[13] traditions, that human life is sacred and good, will soon be challenged by the biological reality that human life is destroying the ecology of the Earth, that we humans are a plague."[14]

Professor Stone's blunt statement regards the Earth as vu de Sirius. It is what an intelligent being from a distant planet, like Voltaire's Micromégas, would conclude from an observation of the earth, when he saw biped mammals suddenly begin to proliferate and ravage the planet, multiplying so rapidly that they will eventually exterminate themselves, the only question being whether they will have left the planet capable of supporting other mammalian species or even organic life. The recently reported indications that Mars at one time had an atmosphere and large oceans will encourage some writer of "science fiction" to describe a race of Martians who became so civilized and sentimental that they made the planet what it now is, a sterile desert devoid of even the lowest forms of organic life.

We, however, cannot be content with the cold objectivity of a vu de Sirius. As mammals, we instinctively wish our species to survive.

This planet, which can comfortably accommodate a total population of about one billion without endangering the ecological balance of nature, is, as I have said, now infested by five and one-half billion anthropoids classifed as human, and they are increasing almost geometrically.

Our race is becoming an ever dwindling minority as other races continue to breed like guinea pigs. The facts are obvious to everyone, but our racial mentality has been so rotted by a deadly superstition that hypocrisy is de rigeur, even for persons who know better.

A "World Conservation Strategy" drawn up by various packs of do-gooders, to be adopted in 1992 at an "Earth Summit" meeting

12. I discussed, ibidem, the "Liberal" solution of the problem, which its more candid apostles call "the spiritual and psychological dehumanization of man" through a "scientific program of genetic control" and massacre of the "socially maladjusted [i.e., intelligent]" objectors, thus reducing the human species (except, of course, the Master Race) to "the mute status of unconscious organisms," which, although biped and mammalian, will live like termites, ants, and other models of socialistic felicity. When I wrote, I was sure that was impossible, but now, when I look at the average Aryan in the United Stares, I wonder.

13. He misuses the word, as is commonly done today. Strictly speaking, for reasons which I shall not take the space to set forth here, 'humanism' designates a very high degree of proficiency in litterae humaniores. The word was used as a kind of pun in the Eighteenth Century to designate a belief that the best-known Jesus was a man and not one-third of a composite god. Later, the high respect accorded humanistic learning led to adoption of the word 'humanism,' as a kind of verbal trickery, by the vendors of ersatz-education and various cults that claimed to be humanitarian in one way or another.

14. The New Scientist (London), 12 October 1991, p. 18.

in Rio de Janeiro, demands drastic control of emisisons of carbon dioxide in "rich [i.e., Aryan] countries," and lots of other things, including a 50% reduction of childhood mortality in the "lower-income [i.e., nigger and mud race] countries," which, as the proponents must well know, will be like trying to extinguish a fire by spraying it with gasoline. And, finally, we must begin by extorting from the stupid Aryans some two trillion dollars ($2,000,000,000,000) to start an "assault on world poverty," and accelerate the deadly overpopulation.[15]

When you hear talk about a "war on poverty," you know that you are listening to the Voice of Destruction, the Judaeo-Communist howling that is designed to afflict and eventually exterminate our race. But Christians and other sentimentalists, holding faiths that are really a denial of life and of reality, will be charmed by the oleaginous verbiage, devised to intoxicate do-gooders.

The facts, however, are that several billion human beings now living would have to be exterminated to prevent the Earth from becoming uninhabitable before the middle of the coming century—and that would only defer the end, unless the survivors were prevented from multiplying again.

So what are we as Aryans, the fools who created this mess by our idiotic efforts to subsidize and uplift enemy races, going to do about it, if we do not intend to become extinct?

You don't like the prospect? Neither do I, but that changes nothing. We had best learn to accept the fact that we live in a universe that was not made for man and in which we and all organic life are merely inconsequential and ephemeral epiphenomena—a world in which species that do not have the strength and wit to survive are eliminated by the force that is inherent in the very nature of organic life, which requires that the weak must perish so that the strong may live.

15. The New Scientist, 26 October 1991, p. 16. The article is entitled, "Last chance to save the world?" Two words in the text suggest that the reporter was well aware that the loud manifesto was tissue of fustian and buncombe.

'Desert Storm' in Retrospect

by
Charles E. Weber

As the first anniversary of the military operations against Iraq approaches, we Americans should attempt to assess our rôle in the operations and to put them into proper perspective.

It is instructive to compare the Gulf War to the events which took place in Europe during 1938-1939. In April 1938, Austria was annexed to Germany (the "Anschluß"), thus fulfilling a desire that had been expressed by the Austrian legislature as early as 1918. For several years after 1918 Austria designated itself officially as "Deutschösterreich" (German Austria), until that term was forbidden by the victorious Allies. Later during 1938 Germany, with the approval of other major European powers, annexed the almost purely ethnically German western periphery of Czecho-Slovakia (the Sudetenland) after decades of oppression by the Prague government. In March 1939 Germany, fearing that hostile military use could be made of Bohemia and Moravia, made these areas a German protectorate and the Slovaks thus became free to establish their own autonomous republic. After Hitler's protracted and reasonable efforts to negotiate a solution to the problems resultant from Polish annexations of eastern parts of Germany during 1919-1920 and the tough oppression of the considerable ethnic German minority in those parts, Hitler, justifiably and wisely or not, attempted a military solution to the problems, beginning with 1 September 1939. So confident of victory had the Poles been and so eager had they been to take over well run, remaining German farms and businesses that on 3 September 1939 widespread atrocities and massacres of German civilians took place in West Prussia (the "Bromberg Bloody Sunday"). Thousands were killed. On 3 September 1939, England and France used the German annexations during 1939 as a pretext to declare war On Germany, although when the USSR invaded Poland two weeks later, no declaration was made against the USSR, which had such a backward economy that it could not compete for export markets, unlike the technologically advanced Germany. The gullible Poles, who had been incited and promised help by England, France and even the United States, were abandoned to their fate at the hands of Germany and the USSR, both in 1939 and in 1945.

Quite in contrast to the situations in Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, Iraq contained no oppressed American minority and, as subsequent events demonstrated, Iraq had armed forces that were pitifully weak in comparison to the technologically highly advanced military forces of the United States. In the late 1930s both Czecho-Slovakia and Poland had huge standing armies. Germany could defeat Poland only with considerable losses and military intervention by the USSR.

The American attack on Iraq was unprovoked and Kuwait did not have a defence treaty with the United States, as the American ambassador informed Saddam Hussein. A plebiscite in Kuwait might well have revealed a popular will to remain a province of Iraq. That, however, would have been a truly democratic solution which would have avoided the costly, destructive, embittering war, but that would have been a solution out of the question for the bellicose Bush administration. The American attack against Iraq could very well have been termed "naked aggression," a term often applied to the German annexations in 1939, but with far less justification.

In order to promote the illusion that the attack against Iraq was an essentially American operation, the Bush administration resorted to bribery, the most notable example of which was Egypt. Its debt of seven billion dollars was forgiven and Egypt sent some token forces against Iraq.

The motives for the American attack against Iraq, which the United States had treated as an ally for years when it was convenient to do so, were partly economic and partly as a result of pressure from Israel (which controls the American Congress in such matters as a result of lavish bribes to members of Congress from well-funded Jewish organizations) to have American military forces destroy its most important enemy, which Israel had bombed some years previously.

Not only were the costs of the Gulf War far more billions of dollars than the average American taxpayer realizes, but a hostility toward the United States was generated, especially amongst the Islamic countries, a hostility which could persist for decades and be a costly liability to the United States. The merciless bombing of Iraq's civilians and their property makes the United States look like a merciless brute that obtains a sadistic gratification from crushing a small country.

For over five decades Germany has been portrayed as a brutal aggressor for its annexation of Czecho-Slovakia and its military measures against Poland. How will the United States be regarded during the coming five decades?

An Unexpected Perspective

On the evening of Friday, 22 November the ABC television network program, "20 / 20," included a segment entitled "Beaten to the Punch," which lasted about 15 minutes. Although the Second World War is typically portrayed as a "good war" by network television, the astonishing segment portrayed the United States as having intended to carry out a general attack on Japan before Japan beat the United States to the punch on 7 December 1941. The segment commenced with the claim that viewers were about to receive historical insights that they would "not hear anywhere else."

According to the segment, documents declassified around 1970 show that the United States intended to carry out a general attack against Japan. The development of the plan, designated as JB 355, involved high-level men in the Roosevelt administration and was approved by Roosevelt on 23 July 1941. The plan envisaged American air attacks against Japanese cities from bases in China. The segment also pointed out that the United States had been involved in open warfare against Japan quite some time before 7 December 1914 in the form of the operations of the Flying Tigers under General Chennault. The Flying Tigers were paid by the United States government.

The operations of the Flying Tigers were just one aspect of Roosevelt's effort to goad Japan into attacking the United States in order to get the United States involved in the war, an involvement which the great majority of Americans wanted to avoid.

The commencement of full-scale operations against Japan was deferred as a result of the advanced technical qualifications of the Japanese "Zeroes" (pursuit airplanes) which would have "decimated American bombers."

The astonishing segment thus broadcast a point of view quite unexpected from an American television network, but a point of view which had long been widely held by American revisionist historians.

FIFTY to SIX

Some refreshing glasnostical winds are sweeping through the sombre catacombs of Moscow, where for the past seventy years lay sealed and buried the archives of Soviet secret services and other Bolshevik institutions. During the course of the soft self-dissolution of the Communist empire and its power structures, a constant stream of until now unknown documents concerning the mass murders by Comrades Lenin, Trotsky, and Stalin is brought to light on a daily basis, and bears testimony to the guilt, complicity and connivance of the present Communist Party leaders—or what is left of them. A multitude of new witnesses and victims of the Soviet terror régime daily appear in the Russian press and on television to report on the immeasurable extent of crimes perpetrated against their own people by the murderers of the Polit-Bureau during the period from about 1918 to 1958, with the active assistance of millions of fanatical party hacks, sleuths, and other apparatchiks, most of them still alive and in secure positions.

Until a few months ago, even for the most fervent Communist-baiters in East and West, the true perspective and horror vision and the extent of terror seemed to be a taboo subject. When Solchenitzyn, some twenty years ago, named a figure of twenty million victims of the GULAG, there followed a world-wide outcry from politicians and the media alike, condemning this figure as being outrageously exaggerated and as evil propaganda. Just a few weeks ago, however, both Pravda and Isvestija reported that, according to latest testimonies and research in archive, one has to reckon with a total of over fifty million murdered victims, and in its issue dated 2 September 1991, Der Spiegel repeated this figure without further comment.

May the readers of these lines dwell for a few shocked seconds on this figure: FIFTY MILION; this is approximately the total population of today's France. This means fifty million liquidated men, women, and children; shot in the back of the neck, hanged, condemned to starvation or exposure to the elements, ravaged by epidemics, or just simply slaughtered on higher orders from the dictators of the proletariat and their behind-the-scene masters, over a period of well over forty years, in fulfillment of an unanimously agreed- and decided upon party programme of the Communist Party of the USSR.

Among the victims were simple citizens and aristocrats, priests and craftsmen, farmers and members of the intelligentsia, officers and artists, and especially all those unreliable elements in their own ranks, who became prime suspects by having ideas of their own, and who did not submit slavishly and mindlessly to the party line of the day.

Some readers with a keen interest in statistical mathematics will perhaps acknowledge this gruesome figure and proceed to more pressing matters... Other readers who are firm in their Christian beliefs and moral ethics, and who believe in the higher values of the democratic Weltanschauung, will be convinced about "equal rights of mankind," and that, therefore, victim equals victim and culprit equals culprit—whatever his race and ethnic origin. These readers will recognize with just anger and surprise that the only reaction to the revelation of this mega-holocaust from all official institutions of our "democracies," churches, and media, so far, has been world-wide silence. Or has any one of those politicians, who, for half a century, have been preaching to us the new World Religion, namely the democratic "Trinity" of God-NATO, God-Dollar, and God-Free-Elections, as being the only salvation from the "Evil Empire of Muscovy" in which reigns godlessness, and whence comes a threat against our divine World Economic System, raised his voice to demand atonement and retribution from Communist leaders?

Do you ever hear an outcry by Mssrs. Bush, Reagan, Brand and von Weizsaecker, Mitterand or Voytila; where can you read bombastic headlines by our star columnists, who are heard loudly and clearly whenever someone in Cuba or Croatia, in Palestine or South Africa is daring to utter opposing views which are anathema to the dogmas established at Yalta and Potsdam? Do they have nothing at all to say about those fifty million murder victims?

Our "righteous" readers will most certainly draw a parallel to the ancient cry for vengeance and retribution by the heroes of the democracies' crusade against that other "Evil Empireof Hitler," uttered by Roosevelt and Morgenthau, by Churchill and good ole Uncle Joe Stalin, after they had vanquished a nation whose leaders had dared to challenge the world currency and economic systems of the self-appointed "democratic" world controllers. These champions of self-righteousness and hypocrisy then dragged the leadership élite of the German Reich before a kangaroo court and determinedly liquidated its members. What was thenin 1946, in Nurembergconsidered the essence of "democratic" justice and values, must nowin 1991, in Moscowperforce, follow the same "high standards" of democratic justice and ethics, or does it not? May, therefore, the same laws, and even the same accusations, prevail and be applied, now as in 1946:

- Conspiracy to establish world domination. (Proofs: The Communist Manifesto; the resolutions of the Comintern; the world-wide activities of Communist parties and their secret services).
- Conspiracy to start a World War. (Proofs: The network of Soviet military bases in all five continents; Soviet atomic and other armament projects).
- Crimes against humanity.

In the latter case, the pertinent proofs for the mega-holocaust of fifty million massacred victims are so overwhelmingly patent and obvious that they need not be decreed as sacrosanct dogma contained in the "democratic" Articles of Faith and Law Books, as has been done with the Holohoax figure of six million gas-chamber "victims," which is foisted on the ignorant as "indisputable, acknowledged historic fact" by democratic courts, in spite of countless proofs to the contrary.

Bring in, once again, the "unbiased" judges from the USA, from Britain and France, and may the now "democratic" Russians join them! The rope to the members of the Central Committee, the KGB, the general staff! Forced labor for all the comsomoltsi, the officers corps! But Russia could graciously be spared, however, a Morgenthau plan, since that has already been fully implemented, thanks to seventy years of "blessings" by the Marxist-Leninist-Judaeocratic Soviet economic system.

There remain those readers who have learnt to read between the lines of our licensed media in order to be able to analyze the true historic facts and backgrounds of this century. Those readers have long since recognized that hypocrisy is the one outstanding quality of both, democratic thinking and democratic actions, since the time of President Wilson and the League of Nations, since President Roosevelt and his United Nations hoax decreed their slimy code of democratic conduct. A code "Democrats" never fail to violate themselves whenever they are acting as self-appointed guardians of their selfish interests, which they always declare to be in the best interest of all "peace loving nations of the Free World," and from which they arbitrarily exclude all those labeled as "Nazi" or "Fascist" or "anti-Semitic" or even worse: "anti-democratic," species of man exclusively condemned to fry in Hell. And those readers have noticed with disgust how the capitalist rulers of the Western World have time and again openly financed and armed the Bolsheviks, right down to more recent times when they kept supplying the starving Soviet population with American grain, thus keeping the régime from collapsing, even though these champions of democracy knew since 1917 about the mass liquidations and terror camps from their ambassadors in Moscow and from their secret services.

The Soviet empire has, of course, been an ideal partner for the real masters in New York and London. Firstly, because of the unanimous agreement between the rulers to establish a One-World Government on the basis of well orchestrated and manipulated "free, one-man one-vote, elections," allowing both systems to gradually converge into ONE; secondly, due to the Soviet Union's permanent status as debtor and interest-payer due to its state-controlled economy; thirdly, as supplier of cheap raw materials at lowest prices to Western capitalism; and last but not least, as a logical accomplice in the destruction of the German Reichthe only real challenge to the materialistic One-Worlders.

No wonder, then, that our democratic apostles should fear to be exposed as having been in cahoots with the criminals, and accessories to the crimes committed, should they now ask to punish those responsible for the mega-holocaust, after seventy years of treacherous connivance. For if there existed a truly independent judicial system and an impartial forum, these hypocrites, who, in the name of Christian ethics, wiped out Dresden and Hiroshima, massacred or expelled millions of Germans and East-Europeans from their ancient homelands; who ruthlessly proceeded with the deculturization and pigstyification of one third of Europe by Bolshevik hordes; and who, by their silent approval, are responsible for the holocaust of fifty million "Soviet" citizens, would be remanded to the nearest lamp posts.

Fortunately, there is a large number of institutes and organizations whose world-wide reputations and ethical standards are godlike and beyond reproach. They have been specifically established to engage in an eternal campaign of persecution and vengeance, to which we owe the fact that not a single, octogenarian or not, "war criminal," between Paraguay and Kamtchatka ever can hope to escape his "just punishment." What a grand opportunity for all "Holocaust" centers, watch-list hunters, war crimes registrars, for whom there now is such a vast and lucrative field of activities! What a challenge to all the Klarsfelds, Wiesels, Wiesenthals, et al., to put their enormous archives, their never failing know-how, and their extraordinary, obnoxious noses, in the service of justice and mankind, and to prosecute those responsible for the FIFTY MILLION victims with the same zeal, hate, and perseverance they have demonstrated in the case of those who they claim to be responsible for the SIX MILLION!

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Editor, The Tribune:

There is indeed an important message from David Duke's efforts to become governor of Louisiana (Tribune, 18 November, page 8A). An encouraging 55% of the White voters voted for Duke, it was estimated. In view of the handicaps with which he had to contend, the unscrupulous political tactics used against him and the well-financed media campaign against him, his showing was an encouraging indication that White voters are finally awakening to the measures being taken against them; Affirmative Action, a tax structure that is demoralizing and impoverishing to them, forced bussing out of White pupils' neighborhoods, immigration policies which are racially prejudiced against White people and an "educational" establishment which uses sophisticated psychological means to demoralize Aryan pupils(e.g., "Afrocentrism") by denigrating or minimizing their cultural heritage.

One of the shrewdest arguments used against Duke was the assertion that his being in the governor's office would cause a loss of the tourist and convention business. Whether Duke's being in office would have such an effect or not, the argument was one which effectively appealed to short-sighted greed. Even President Bush sank to a disgusting act of betrayal by attacking a fellow Republican.

Whether or not Duke's past associations with the Ku Klux Klan and other pro-Aryan organizations were a political disadvantage is, in a sense, almost beside the point. Such associations, we may reasonably assume, were motivated in the young Duke by an idealistic concern for the future of his race, the fortunes of which are now declining in the United States. It is Duke's fresh idealism which no doubt attracted many voters to his cause, contrasting as it did to the stale, cynical, old Machiavellian politics of his opponents, with their callous disregard for their long-range effects on the country.

David Duke is an articulate and intelligent young man whom White voters will ignore only if they have become masochistic degenerates, incapable of rational thought on their own behalf, intellectually paralysed by powerful media in hostile hands. Duke could have an important role to play in future Presidential elections, where he would not have such a demographic disadvantage as was the case in Louisiana.

Dear Landsmann: 15 September 1991

I have an update on the AIDS situation. Things are moving even faster then I thought in my July letter. The new data comes from the South African financial press. They are concerned about the effects of AIDS on black labor and they obviously quote from the epidemiological curve of AIDS which is still being kept secret from the public. Their statistics say that the black population of South Africa will peak at 40 million in 1966 and collapse thereafter. By 2007, despite new births and immigration, the black population is projected to be a dwindling remnant of 13.6 million and those will be nearly all old or young and nearly useless for labor.

AIDS in South Africa has been even more concealed then in America but one datum allows comparison. In South Africa, too, more than 50% of new cases are now heterosexual. This shows that the USA and SA are at the same stage in the epidemic. This means the data for SA applies to American blacks as well. By 1995-96 the black population will peak and then crash. By 2007 it will be a third of the 1966 figure. Something to look forward to! I recently spoke to a worker at a largely black hospital in the Bronx. Over 50% of the emergency admissions now are AIDS carriers.

We had a very instructive set of comedies in New City just now. First, a black racist professor dared to mention that the Jews control Hollywood and that they were the operators of the slave trade, both true, of course. The Jews set up their usual filthy howling demanding he be punished for un-kosher thoughts but, amazingly, the blacks refused to grovel and obey like white slaves. While the Jews were still reeling about that came the Crown Heights incident where a speeding Jew ran a red light and ran up on the sidewalk crushing to nigger kids. This led to an anti-Jewish race riot. What set the blacks off was the special treatment and privileges given to the Jews by the police who literally acted as their servants. The police did not arrest the reckless Jew driver. The special Jew ambulance ignored the crushed children and drove off with the slightly injured Jew. Thousands of police immediately arrived to protect the Jews and only blacks were arrested despite Jews throwing rocks and bottles at negro marchers.

In Bensonhurst whites were arrested for daring to shout at negro marchers!

Where the comedy comes in is in the actions of the black racist mayor of Jew York. He didn't dare offend his Jewish owners but he also didn't dare offend his black racist power base. Thus he dithered and ran around like a headless chicken. Thousands of police were called out but were not allowed to take any action against the black rioters, merely standing as human shields in front of the Jews. Thus, more police were injured than either blacks or Jews. Dinkins then made a big show of visiting the injured black child at the hospital and an injured Jew who was stabbed, but totally ignored five cops who were in the emergency room after being hit by bricks.

Just as funny were the ditherings of the Jews who tried to go into their usual whining act without offending their pet blacks. Meanwhile, all sorts of stories reached the press about the special privileges accorded the Jews. For instance, the main rabbi has a 24-hour-a-day police guard provided him and his family wherever they go. During the riots police captains and officials were ordered around as lackies by the rabbis. During an earlier incident a mob of Jews broke into a police station, injured about 20 cops and destroyed the interior of the building without one single arrest being made. All this showed the "poor, persecuted Jews" in a light which, like cockroaches, they prefer to avoid.

Yours truly,

S.R., New York State

Dear Landsmann: 18 October 1991

...I fought in Vietnam from 1967 to May 1969 and have long studied this war, but I never realized the situation which Major Joe Stano writes of. I knew that Israel had stripped the NATO arsenal bare in 1973 but I didn't realize this was their standard operation! I knew during Vietnam that Jews were the chief traitors and Communist supporters but this is the first I heard of the Knesset of Israel breaking into cheers at the fall of Saigon to their beloved Reds!

Major Stasno doesn't say this but I will; the theft of war materiel was not only designed to steal money for Israel but to cripple the war effort as well. From the very start of the war the Jew influence was constantly exerted to aid the Communists and this is what explains the otherwise inexplicable policies followed by the U.S. government. For example, pretending North Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia were neutral countries and that the war was a South Vietnamese civil war. I used to be stationed five miles from the Cambodian border in 1967. Every day the Cong would cross the border at 5pm and arrive before my position at 76. Yet we were forbidden to cross the Border or fire into Cambodia! Whenever the U.S. did bomb Cambodia or Laos it had to be "secret" with the Jewsmedia ever vigilant to protect their Cong with charges we were "widening" the war. Another lunacy was the way Soviet ships were allowed to land hundreds of thousands of tons of war materiel in North Vietnam and Cambodia right under the nose of the U.S. Navy. At the time the pretext for treating the Reds with kid gloves was always the "threat of nuclear war." Now we know what the government did then: that the Soviets were totally helpless against America and that there was hardly a nuclear warhead that could reach the U.S. even if the U.S.S.R. struck first.

Considering what I now know about the Jewish dominance of America, the question is why they allowed any opposition to Communism at all? They could have installed the Reds in South Vietnam in 1965 exactly as they installed them in North Vietnam in 1954. The answer seems to partially be the old saying, "wars are the Jews' harvest." The Jews enriched themselves in every way from the war. Furthermore, the deliberate sabotage of the war effort would tend to discredit both American nationalism and the anti-Communist struggle worldwide. As an additional bonus there was the drug trade.

This last seems to have been before WWII when Roosevelt sent a U.S. air force to China to fight the Japanese. During WWII this force was supplied by air from India. I think it was then that the discovery was made that the empty planes returning to India could be used to fly out opium from Yunnan. Roosevelt and the American Jews were eager to pry the dope monopoly out of English hands and this was a major means to do it. Here what was to be the standard post-war method of operation was born. First, create a war. The underdog needs money to fight. Loan them money and give them arms on the condition they grow dope to pay for it. This is how the CIA supported the Communist revolution in Vietnam from 1946 on. The same thing was then done in the Vietnam war, the Afghan war and the Nicaragua-El Salvador war and is being done today in Lebanon. In every case the CIA has been running this trade and using it as a source of independent financing. In every case the anti-Communists were betrayed and the war stretched out as long as possible.

I was Dr. Oliver's correspondent about the Iraq war just now. Since I wrote, more data has come in strengthening the thesis outlined in the letter: that Iraq refused to fight and pulled out. Half the "combat" casualties reported by Allied forces are now revealed to have been accidents or caused by "friendly" fire. Furthermore, it is now clear that the U.S. was preparing for mass atomic warfare against Iraq. I think the U.S. was prepared to atomic bomb every city in Iraq and kill millions as soon as Iraq provided the pretext by using its chemical or biological weapons against American forces. Remember the hysterical propaganda designed to justify this just before the war started? I had wondered why the huge carriers were sent into the Gulf. Now I know it was because they were carrying part of the atomic arsenal that was planned to be used. The Jews and their American government dogs had deliberately planned the mass murder of millions of people long before the war began. If there ever was a clear case of "planning aggressive war" this was it.

There was no question that the August invasion of Kuwait was not a surprise to the U.S. It has now come out that Iraq issued general mobilization orders in mid-July and that the United States was well aware of this, so they knew Iraq would invade Kuwait. Mobilization means war now as it did in 1914. Furthermore, several days before the invasion the Kuwaiti leadership moved all their wealth and bank records out of Kuwait, so they were aware of the impending invasion as well. This invasion, which the U.S. and Kuwait deliberately provoked, was to be the pretext for the war of aggression to follow. Bush pretended big moral indignation over the Iraqi takeover of Kuwait though it was exactly the same thing he just did in Panama. Indeed, less people were killed in Kuwait than in Panama.

I could see Panama marked a new era in American military history. In Vietnam we were never allowed to use heavy weapons in populated areas. Fighting in Hue went on for five days in 1968 before some artillery and aircraft were allowed to be used against the entrenched Cong. In Panama, where the U.S. could simply have occupied the country in broad daylight with minimal resistance, a melodramatic night attack was made and thousands of civilians killed in their beds by saturation bombing and artillery fire. And the Jewsmedia, ever critical of our "killing of innocent civilians" in Vietnam shut up and covered up the massacre.

Vietnam and Iraq are text book examples of what happens when the Jews support or oppose a war. In Vietnam every possible effort was made to obstruct the war effort and the Cong were finally given victory by cutting off fuel and ammunition to South Vietnam. In Iraq everything was changed. The first thing that was dropped was any pretense of morality or objectivity. With one voice the Jewsmedia screamed for war. No mention of peace was permitted. Hussein, significantly, was called "the new Hitler." No such screech of hate was ever allowed against North Vietnam. Indeed, no personal attacks against Ho Chi Minh were allowed at all. The U.S. press treated him with awed reverence. Now Hussein was "the Beast of Baghdad" and such-like slobber.

In 1964 Goldwater was smeared as an "irresponsible madman" because he dared suggest that A-bombs might be used to defoliate parts of the Ho Chi Minh Trail. In 1991 Bush openly threatened the use of atomic weapons against Iraqi civilians if Iraq dared to use chemical weapons in the war. No explanation was ever made as to how use of chemical weapons justified use of atomic weapons. Nobody in the media dared even question this equation of nuclear and chemical weapons.

From the very start the war aims in Vietnam and Iraq were different. In Vietnam were supposedly fighting for "peace," a ridiculous aim. In Iraq the first aim given was to "free" Iraq to return to being a British colony. But then the ante was upped to murdering Saddam Hussein and destroying Iraq as a nation. The viciousness of this has been compounded by the hunger blockade that is being kept up against Iraq as it was against Germany after both world wars.

The artificiality of the U.S. war aims is shown by the fact that the war was originally supposed to be against Iran, not Iraq. In 1987 all was ready for a war against Iran, a war the Vincennes incident was supposed to trigger. But the Ayatollah got the word in time, just as Hussein did, and defused the situation by refusing to retaliate for the Vincennes massacre and making peace with Iraq. Iraq, as the winner in the war, then became Jew enemy #1. What should catch the interest here is that the same thing happened in 1987 and 1991. In both cases a Jew-planned war of aggression fizzled out because the intended victims got wind of the plot and humbled themselves and took a beating. The scenario I outlined in the letter to Dr. Oliver is thus not so unique and unheard of after all. Indeed, it is a partial repeat of what Iran did four years previously.

So two attempts at a nuclear war in the Mideast have fizzled. But the Jews can simply set up a third attempt. From what I read in their periodicals, the next target is to be Syria. The Arabs have gained time at great cost . Time for what? Obviously time to prepare their own weapons and political alliances for the inevitable wars to come. I never realized it until recently but the Jews plan to seize all the land "from the Euphrates unto the River of Egypt." Which includes Saudi Arabia and all the oilfields. This goal is enshrined on the Israeli flag. The two blue lines represent the Nile and the Euphrates and the Jewish star between them is self-explanatory. This conquest, to be made for them by America, is to give them total control of the world's energy forever. It is for this reason that atomic power has been sabotaged and crippled and that cold fusion (as well as hot fusion) is being suppressed. We are thus harnessed to the Jews' cart. The venture we are engaged in is utterly insane. We are to invade the mainland of Asia, 8,000 miles away, conquer 50,000,000 people and subjugate them to oppression by 8,000,000 Jews. We are then to maintain this unnatural situation against 150,000,000 Moslems in Turkey, Iran and Egypt forever! Twenty years ago the Jews were telling us that it was beyond U.S. power to defeat an invasion of the South by 18 million Northerners even with the help of 16 million Southerners in Vietnam. The massacre in Iraq has left the U.S. with an inflated opinion of its power just as the 1967 war did with Israel. The Arabs will be back. They have no choice, they live there forever whereas, next time, the U.S. may not be able to use its full strength against a single, small nation.

With the horrible threat of Israel and its American dog menacing it, nothing is more likely than that the nations of the area will band together in a unified alliance against America. Russia will not always be torn internally, nor will America always be as quiet internally and unopposed externally as now.

Yours truly,

THIRD-GRADE CLASS

Dear Mrs. Shields, and Class;
I saw your letter in a local newspaper, and decided to shed some light on the Garden State. The state name comes from the fact that there is a Rosenbloom on practically every street. There are two on mine. The state bird is the crow, and the state insect is the fire ant.

New Jersey is divided into 4 parts. They are The Garden State Parkway, The New Jersey Turnpike, Atlantic City, and the Pine Barrens. The Pine Barrens are an archaeoligsts heaven. They have a motto here - "It isn't what you dig up, it's who you dig up".

There are many, many Senior Citizen communities in New Jersey. The average age in these developments is terminal. They follow the example of the African elephant when they are ready to die. They load into busses and go to Atlantic City.

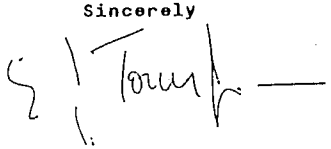
Most New Jersey Third Graders are abominable brats. The boys seem to use Pee Wee Herman as a role model. When the girls get to high school, they all become cheer leaders. The reason New Jersey uses so much artifical turf on its playing fields is to keep the cheerleaders from grazing.

Politics in New Jersey is real weird. We have an incompetent Governor named Florio. His cabinet members are called "henchmen" and they are very "family" oriented. Most people go about their business in the State House staring at each others kneecaps.

White children are called "minorities" in Elizabeth, Patterson, Newark, Jersey City, and they are unheard of in Camden. This makes keeping track of S.A.T. scores very easy, as they only have to deal with two digits. Courses in instruction in these cities schools include "How to Bonsai your pet", "Creative Cremations", "Shoe lace tying made easy", and "Tracing your family tree". The latter is very simple, because there are usually no branches. People from all over the world come to these cities on fathers day to watch the mass confusion. Another unique thing about these schools is that they all have their own morgue and coroner.

Well children, I hope this enlightens you on your understanding of Noo Joisey.

Sincerely



mans as sadistic sub-humans. All of these attitudes run counter to doctrines espoused by Liberty Bell and the Populist Party.

Why, we wonder, is this very common politician permitted to dilute the credibility of those institutions by carrying the banner of the Populist Party in a charge on that most powerful of offices, Commander-in-Chief of the U.S.?

There is no chance that the Electoral College will confer Chief Commander status on this former covert operative, so we need not be fearful of how he will conduct that office. The danger to Liberty Bell readers is that, dazzled by medals, hypnotized by valorous rhetoric, and endorsed by the Populist Party, they will be drawn into supporting a man whose ideologies are as foreign to their interests as they are to commnon sense.

Dear George:

Thank you for republishing so much of the material from recent issues of The Talon. It always looks so much better in Liberty Bell. I hope the articles do some good.

Ernst Zündel has reported the starting-up again of the 'telephone terrorism.' [Ernst can be reached at 206 Carlton St., Toronto ON M5A 2L1, Canada.] Ernst says that the phone calls are operated by computer, which would indicate that little kikes are in the phone companies doing their thing on overtime. Here at my home, the phone rings and someone says that she is an AT&T operator, with a long-distance call for "Mr. Hitler." I hang up. Then the phone rings five minutes later. It is a woman claiming to be a Sprint or MCI long-distance operator who says that she has a collect call for "Mr. Heydrich." I hang up. When the phone rings a minute later, I hear recordings of people complaining about telephone harassment. [I have been subjected to the same type of harassment since 1976: 8-10 calls till 3-4 in the morning; trying to place collect calls from "George at the morgue;" threats to "pay a visit" to my daughter, who at the time (from 1979 on) was attending pharmacy schools (for which reason I could not afford to disable my telephone line) so that I had to 'equip' her with a six-shooter with the admonition to shoot first and ask stupid questions later, should anyone try to force his way into her room. 'They' never took me up on my invitation to "come on down, the weather is nice, you'll find out what'll happen—in West Virginia they ask stupid questions later." Ever since Ma Bell instituted their 'Caller-ID' system these calls have stopped. Then 'they' fraudulently used my phone company credit card for three months, placing calls to Tel-Aviv, Jerusalem and other places across the globe to the tune of $7,500./$6,000./$2,500. during this three-month period, until the phone company finally was able to put a stop to this scheme. —Ed. LB.] I wonder who is being charged for all these calls, some of which may be coming from Europe or Israel. The little yids place a call to someone, tape his response, then replay it to their next victim. This can go on for hours. The only defense late at night is to take the phone off the hook. Zündel says that the Canadian authorities keep catching the sheenies at this, but do nothing to them.

Poor, persecuted little bastards.... Though I am not really bothered by this telephone business, it is instructive to see how immune the jews are to punishment in the U.S. and Canada. Yet a friend of mine was arrested and searched locally for sending a comic cartoon fax to a local TV station making fun of the Jeffrey Dahmer murders. There will be more about this later. A federal case will be the result—Fourth Amendment rights and all.

Sincerely,

Maj. Don Clerkin

Editor:

I just started receiving your magazine, Liberty Bell. I finally found someone who has hit the nail on the head. Your magazine speaks the truth, and more importantly, you have the courage to say it. Keep up the good work until the new hate-crime laws close you down.

After spending much time and money chasing the false leads of the Christian Patriot movement, I finally saw through all their B.S. and have found the real cause of what is happening to my beloved people.

The weak-kneed, misty-eyed Judaeo-Christians are off chasing after their elusive "Conspiracy Theories," such as the Rothschilds, the Rockefellers, the International Bankers, the Federal Reserve, the Bilderbergers, the Trilateralists, the CFR'ers, the Freemasons, the Skull & Bones, the Catholics, and yes, even the bug-eyed aliens from outer space. Anything to keep from saying it's the "Zionist Jews." They are scared to death to even say the word "Jew," "Talmud," or "Cabala."

I am Aryan by race and Christian by religion—but, I am sick of hearing ministers injecting the Jewish poison into my people under the guise of Judaeo-Christianity. It's the tired old story; turn the other cheek, the meek shall inherit the earth, thou shall not kill, and pray to Jesus and you'll be saved. Thus we are paralyzed. The Judaeo-Christian churches are one of my worst enemies. They infect my people with Judaism.

All the while, what are the Jews doing to the White race? While we pray for salvation and mercy, the Jews go on murdering the White males, plundering their property, raping their women, and mongrelizing the race. The Jews have been doing this to my people for over 3,000 years. The only real holocaust in this world is the Jewish holocaust inflicted upon the Aryans.

The Aryan races are the racial descendants of the first known civilized people on this planet, from the early dawn of man. These people gave us language, writing, mathematics, geometry, astronomy, geology, chemistry, irrigation, agriculture, horticulture, medicine, law, and religion. These early 'primitive' people even knew deep-sea navigation and discovered seven planets!

Who were these ancient 'primitive' people? They were the Sumerians. They flourished in ancient Mesopotamia (now called Iraq). They depicted themselves in their paintings as a white-skinned people. More importantly, their statues showed long straight hair, round eyes, and lapis lazuli insets for the eyes. Blue eyes! There's only one race on this planet with blue eyes (absent race mixing). Even modern achaeologists agree these people were not Semitic. They were the racial root-stock of the Aryan races, who were the builders of civilization from time immemorial.

Who were the Sumerians' worst enemy who destroyed them? You guessed it, the Akkadian Semites. Even the Judaized historians agree to this. The point is, the genocidal war between the descendants of the Sumerians and the descendants of the Semites has been raging since the dawn of civilization from the third millennium B.C. There is nothing new under the sun after all. Read up on this early race in Waddell's work, The Makers of Civilization [available from Liberty Bell Publications, $30. + $4.50 postage], it's fascinating.

One will learn that the Sumerian racial stock developed into the various White races. The Sumerians' racial descendants developed into their respective empires: the Babylonians, the Egyptians, the Greeks, the Romans, the Germans, the Spanish, the Portuguese, the French, the Russians, and the English. So I am proud of my racial heritage. The Aryans have built the world since the beginning of civilization. But here's the bad news.

The Semitic races; the Hebrews, Israelites, and then the Judaized people of Khazaria known as modern-day Jews, have destroyed each and every one of these Aryan empires. Each time the Semites/Jews have used the same tactics to destroy the Aryans. They gain control of the money and, through this control, inject the Aryan society with the same cancer as we see in America today. This malignant poison is always the same: usury, racial equality, racial integration, sexual liberation, homosexuality, pornography, alcoholism, drug addiction, violence, discord, and other "liberalizing" ideologies. All this is directed against the Aryans in order to destroy their society for plunder, and finally their obliteration. Mongrelize them racially, and they will self-destruct with racial suicide. It's all spelled out in their Talmud. Once this cancer sets in, it will not stop until the Aryan Host dies. History has proven this out.

The Jews understand this perfectly well, and that is why the Hebrew Old Testament repeatedly prohibits race-mixing. It is an abomination to the Hebrews for one of them to violate the holy seed of the Chosen People by miscegenation with the heathen races. Remember the story of Phineas? How the Jews must rejoice with glee when they see the fairest of Aryan women with the darkest of the Negro race. Yet the Jews can't keep their hands off of Caucasian women, the blonde blue-eyed beauties. Just watch Jew-TV. It's disgusting what they do with the goyim women. Why do White women croon over the "tall, dark, and handsome" movie stars? Because they're mostly Jews with anglicized names, and this is another poison injected into the minds of my people. Only now White women crave Negroes for the same reason. Truly abominable!

You see, the Jewish cancer has eaten out the brains, and is now working on the body of my once great people and country. America has been completely controlled by the Jews since its inception, since Haym Salomon loaned George Washington money for the American Revolution. Likewise, we slaughtered those poor Iraqis for our Jewish masters. It's the same old story over and over.

Now the Jews are seeking to fulfill their prophecy of ruling the World when their Messiah returns to earth and destroys the heathen races "utterly and completely." America as a nation is lost to its Aryan founders.

This is the final struggle for the survival of the Aryan races, the descendants of the ancient Sumerians. My people are losing, and losing badly. As the Dead Sea Scrolls say, the final battle between the Sons of Light (Jews) and the Sons of Darkness (Gentiles) will be fought in the plains of Meggido; Armageddon for the Aryan races. Now do you understand why the Jews are screaming for war again?

Time to prepare is short. It is sad that the herds of goyim, while they continue to graze along to their own slaughter at the hands of the Jews, will cause the murder, torture, rape, and destruction of so many good people who will stand up and fight before they die. Truly sad. The Aryans' backs are against the wall. There is no new land mass to flee to and begin anew. My people either stand and fight, or they will die.

If this letter sounds of gloom and doom, then you recognize the truth in it. This is exactly where the Aryan races stand. It is no longer a question of 'if' it's going to happen, now it's a question of 'when' it's going to happen. It will be a miracle if the White races survive and not be reduced to a small breeding pool for producing White female slaves.

My own independent research has brought me to the same conclusion that your magazine has found.

I have no answers. You see, the Sumerian/Aryans have never won against the Semites/Jews.

Dear George:

Enclosed is my LB renewal. Hope all is going well with you and your family. These days, it seems, a close family life is a difficult thing to maintain.

The Judenschweine are really getting bold these days! We're seeing more and more overt activity by them in this area. One example is a sign in a shopping mall by Chabbad Lubavitch advertising their "Religious Holiday Guide." To receive this guide call 1-800-Chabbad.

Through the years, George, you've done a fine job with Liberty Bell.

Best wishes,

Dear "Ann" (a.k.a. Ester Freidman);

I read your insulting advice and comments in the local Jew (Newhouse) owned rag, the Newark Star Ledger of 1 Oct. 1991. It appeared just above your Jewish sisters column, "Abby" (a.k.a. Pauline Freidman.) You Jews have the "advice" sections sewed up from Bridge to Wine. I guess that's to keep us goyim from getting any dangerous advice.

The Wash. DC ditz complaining about the aggressive nature of men and your ridiculously shallow reply and insulting comments cannot go unanswered.

Don't tell me there are no answers to "the problem" with men. You know there is an answer as well as I do, and as well as all your sociologists, anthropoligists, etc... The answer is testosterone, the hormone produced by a mans testicles (balls, to you Ester). Without this "problem", the human species would have died out in the jaws of sabre-toothed tigers, flesh-eating dinosaurs, etc..

It was mans aggressiveness and intelligence which allowed him to fashion weapons to kill these beasts so you broads could cook them, and wear the furs on your ungratefull asses. Ultimately, this led to those nasty weapons of destruction you piss and moan about. Without them, the Chinese and Soviets would be all over us, and you'd then have something to really piss and moan about.

The dumb bitch who complained to you hails from Washington D.C., I notice. This explains quite a lot. The murder capital of the nation boasts a 90% negro population, so chances are 9:1 that the offending man was a coon. These are the majority population in the prisons "D.C." speaks of, by the way.

These animals have the worst of all things going for them. They have the man's hormones, but women's low intelligence. All that leaves them is sports, in which they naturally excell.

If we can live with you bimbo's, you can manage nicely with us bozo's. Take your advice and stuff if near your estrogen, but watch out for the yeast, it might not be kosher.

Churlishly, ago I ordered from you Mein Kampf by Adolf Hitler. I never read it before, but I thought I knew a lot about Hitler. I had a glorious surprise coming from within the pages of his book. I learned more from that book than from any of the other books about WWI and WWII that I've previously read. All the biographies about Hitler were either from a Jewish perspective or an anti-NS American under the influence of Jewish propaganda.

My eyes were opened to realities I had never even glimpsed before. I see the Jews behind U.S. politics and world, as well as national, commerce.

Mein Kampf was the spark that ignited in me a desire to learn more about National Socialism and the world in general. I get a daily newspaper from my neighbor in the cell next to mine.

When I got Mein Kampf there were also two Liberty Bell magazines and Luther's The Jews and Their Lies (imperfect copies) enclosed. I have really enjoyed reading them and comparing that with the newspaper I get. I was also given many insights as to how I can approach people with the idea of National Socialism and how to reveal the Jews' conspiracies to them without losing their attention, but rather giving them inspiration to seek proof for themselves. Most of the books that Liberty Bell Publications has are not availabloe in bookstores or public libraries.

I would really like a subscription to Liberty Bell, but I can't afford the subscription rate. [Who among our readers would care to sponsor a subscription for this fellow? —Ed.] I really like your magazine and I learned a lot from the two issues I've already received (Oct. & Nov. 91). Like I said, I am a prisoner and I don't have access to enough money to afford a subscription as well as other books. I am a National Socialist and a young Aryan soldier searching for a way out of the clutches of our Jewish enemy. I believe Liberty Bell Publications is a strong step in the right direction. Keep the faith and stay strong in mind and body.

Dear friends:

I was recently given your address by one of my friends, who said you have the best book store around for N.S. literature. I would very much like to purchase the book Mein Kampf by Adolf Hitler, and, if it's at all possible, I would like to do so with postage stamps. I have enclosed $13 worth.

As you have probably guessed, I am in prison. My friends call me

Tommy and I am Dutch/Irish. My hair is reddish blond, blue eyes, and I am 6 feet tall. I am 100% down for the Aryan Race and I want to learn all I can so that I can teach others. Since I have been corresponding with my friend I have learned quite a bit, as he has taught me a new way of thinking, I have quit smoking, and I am doing everything I can to stay in the best shape, both physically and mentally. The physical part is not too hard since I am in prison but there are no books around here to help me mentally. I am so tired of reading ("history") books that are written by and for the Jews. I am tired of reading the newspapers and seeing blacks and whites hand in hand. It makes me want to throw up! I am also tired of seeing our country overrun by a bunch of mongrel races.

Anyway, I could write my own book about the things I disagree with in this country, but I won't burden you with it since I'm sure you've heard it all before. I would just like to assure you that though I have made some mistakes in the past, I know how wrong I was. I would like to learn more, though, so that I won't make any mistakes in the future. So, please don't hold it against me because of my past. I will do ten times more for the good of my beautiful race before I die, and I don't plan to die easily; the Viking in me won't allow it.

Please remain strong!

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of International distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FREEDOM OF THOUGHT FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

TO SEE OURSELVES

Ah, wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as others see us!

The gift was given you by a young Canadian lady, the able translator of the very important article, "The USA: World Judge?" published in the November issue of Liberty Bell. It was translated from a well-established German newspaper, which had to print it within the stringent limitations imposed on the German press by the Jews' government in Bonn. And it is a mirror in which Caliban may contemplate his own features.

The article contains a number of factual errors, almost all of them derived, directly or indirectly, from the pages of the most widely-circulated newspapers in the United States. It also contains what may be called grave philosophical errors, misconceptions about historical causality, springing from Christian delusions about the nature of the real world, all of which again were copied from popular publications in this country. It is, furthermore, a substantially accurate reproduction of the picture of this country disseminated to the whole world by its publications. It portrays the United States and the American people as they are seen by most men and women, not only in Germany, but throughout Europe. With some modifications, this is probably also the view of Japanese and Chinese, and perhaps of Russians also. It therefore deserves your earnest attention.

What should concern us is not the errors, but their source, the caterwauling of "Liberal intellectuals, who are the cancer of our nation, and of Sheenies working to demoralize our race.

The German writer speaks of the "extermination of the American Indians." It is true that our people, when they extended their conquests over the entire continent, treated the Indians with severity and sometimes unfairly, but that was because they were such racial bigots that they objected to seeing their wives and children butchered and mutilated or sometimes carried into an inexpressibly vile captivity, and they were so selfish that they did not want their homes and farms burned and their livestock killed, and even were unwilling to be butchered themselves.[1] They finally herded the Indians into reservations, where, although some small tribes did become extinct, the Indians as a race, protected from other tribes and from themselves, flourished and are now more numerous than they were before 1492.

The writer, having evidently credited the piffle produced by some especially vicious poison-pen artist, thinks there were 30,000,000 Indians in what is now the United States when the Pale Faces began to take over the continent; actually, according to the estimates of the most reliable anthropologists before lying became profitable, there were not more than 400,000 and possibly no more than 100,000 at any one time. He, perhaps confusing his statistics, says there are only 100,000-200,000 of the dear creatures left. There now are approximately 2,000,000 Indians in the United States—much too many.

The fatuous writer thinks how ducky it would be, if the Indians had multiplied to 100,000,000 by 1900! Life for Aryans in the United States would have become flatly impossible, of course. That may be what makes the idea so charming to apostles of Social Justice.

Compounding the factual error, the writer says that "the great country would have been large enough for the long-established native peoples as well as the new arrivals." It would be hard to imagine a more asinine statement, but remember that the German writer undoubtedly derived it, directly or indirectly from one of our journalistic prostitutes, possibly a perfesser in some academic brothel.

When there were no more than 400,000 Indians in the entire territory of the United States, it was much too small for them. All the tribes, with the exception of some degenerates in part of California, lived in perpetual warfare with each other for the sheer joy of it. A war party from one tribe would, if necessary, travel a great distance through the forests or over the prairie to attack another tribe. The much touted tribes of the Iroquois federation in New York (formed c. 1570 to attack the Whites more effectively) gladly walked to North Carolina to attack the Cherokee. Kenneth Roberts' Northwest Passage has probably been translated into German; the historical background is accurate, and the first part of the book describes the expedition of the rather famous Major Rogers and his Rangers to end killing and scalping of White settlers on the northern border of Massachusetts by a band of Abnaki who came from their village at the mouth of the St. Francis River in Quebec. The German author should consult his excellent German atlas and look at a map to estimate the distance the blood-thirsty savages must have journeyed on foot to assuage their thirst. Except for a short time within federations formed for bigger raids on other Indians or the White settlers, there never was any peace between Indian tribes until they were herded into reservations and kept there by military surveillance.

The asininity is only compounded by the grotesque notion that the Indians could have coëxisted with the White settlers before they were thoroughly defeated and subjugated.[2]

The fact is that when two incompatible races come into contact, one must dominate the other, and if it wishes for lasting peace at home, must exterminate or expel the other, as the Jews did in the tales of the "Old Testament." Whenever the Indians were able to desist

2. The professional liar who was, directly or indirectly, the source of the German writers' notion probably alleged, as is commonly done, the example of the peaceful Cherokee, whom we admittedly dispossessed unjustly if one does not invoke the raison d'état, and concealed from the reader the fact that even the Cherokee became so peaceful only after they had been thoroughly defeated and convinced that they could not destroy the Whites and came to understand the value of White protection from the Iroquois and other tribes. The liar, I am sure, did not tell his dupes that the prosperity of the Cherokee before they were dispossessed was to a considerable extent provided by their negro slaves. The liar probably mentioned the really admirable accomplishments of Sequoia, who is regarded as the most intelligent Cherokee, but concealed the fact that Sequoia was half Irish and probably three-quarters White.

from internecine warfare long enough to form conspiracies, as Pontiac's and Tecumseh's, the purpose was to exterminate the Whites, and that was also the hope of the Indians who, in the latter part of the Nineteenth Century, imagined that the magic of their 'ghost dancing' would accomplish the same end. From the standpoint of the Indians, that goal was simple common sense. What is remarkable is that our people put the Indians on reservations instead of exterminating them.[3]

Then, to complete the idiotic tirade, the writer deplores the bigotry of the Americans who brought women with them and did not, as a rule, commit the crime of miscegenation, and contrasts them with the Noble Spaniards, who left their women at home and settled down to copulate with the lower races and breed the vast population of mestizos that now occupies most of the countries of Central and South America and, in most of them, makes a lasting civilization impossible.[4]

The author is, of course, right about the way in which the stupid Americans were driven into two wars in which they gratuitously attacked nations that had given them no cause for offense and represented the highest level of civilization on their respective continents, but he did not know—or perhaps dared not mention—some of the most telling data, such as the secret attack on Japan by which the foul monster in the White House virtually forced the Japanese to attack

3. Major Rogers killed about two hundred Indian men in their village at the mouth of the St. Francis, and that, for all practical purposes, ended that band of savages. He, however, spared females and children. When other savages heard of that, they said "Pale Faces, crazy in the head."

4. There are exceptions, notably Argentina, where the Spaniards and other Europeans, for some reason, had the good sense virtually to refrain from miscegenation and to exterminate the natives, who are now merely a nuisance. In part of Chile, according to a reliable observer several decades ago, the hybrids seemed a stable, useful, and not unintelligent part of the population (that raises questions about the Araucanas), which may be why our rulers and the chief dervish in Rome are working so hard to afflict Chile with more 'democracy' and excite a civil war, such as the United States so successfully incited in Nicaragua and San Salvador, and is now fomenting in Guatemala.

Pearl Harbor.[5] It is quite true that the American boobs, crazed with righteousness, were driven into those two wars by a small gang of conspirators, whom the German writer chooses to call an 'élite.'

This however led the writer into the preposterous inference—too absurd, perhaps, for even the most brazen liars in our press and colleges[6]—that it was an élite, "not the ordinary settlers....who were to blame for the extermination of the Indians." Nothing could be farther from the facts. It was the "ordinary settlers," people living on the frontier, most of them comparatively uneducated and often crude, who learned from experience the rule, "The only good Indian is a dead Indian," the exceptions being few and negligible. Sentimentality about imaginary Indians was the specialty of fairly well educated Christian writers, who, sitting in the comfort of their book-lined studies in New England, which had long been secure from all danger from aborigines, had never seen Indians, except a few tame ones, displayed by vendors of snake oil or holiness or 'education,' or tethered in reservations, and were accordingly free to let their imaginations run riot.

The writer properly exhibits indignation over the Americans' righteous itch to meddle with other people's business, a residue of Christian world-improving drivel, and rightly waxes indignant over the foul murders the Americans committed at Nuremberg. But he connects this with the only morally justified war in our history, the Mexican War. For this, of course, he is relying on ranting by our journalistic vermin, but he ignores a fundamental fact of history and, for that matter, biology.

5. See Liberty Bell, July 1989, pp. 1-9. The account there reported has been subsequently confirmed.

6. It is true that our literate vermin like to stigmatize as "greed" the ambition of the settlers to better their lot in life. The German author has read the popular bundle of buncomb about a "massacre" at Wounded Knee. It is possible that the killing of two hundred Indians there was unnecessary, but one must remember that the soldiers had had repeated experience of the innate treachery of the savages, including their use of their women as screens after they learned that the Pale Faces had incomprehensible scruples about violence to females.

History is made by nations, not by countries, which are only geographical areas. A nation is, so to speak, an enormous tribe, an aggregate of persons of the same race, the same ethnic division of it or several very similar and compatible ethnic stocks, and the same culture. A nation may permit a few aliens to reside on its country, but if it admits large numbers of them, as did Britain and the United States, and as all Aryan nations are now doing, it has become irremediably decadent.

A nation has a kind of biological life of its own. When it is vigorous and growing, it expands its territory at the expense of weaker and alien nations; like a man, it may know a brief period of stability—a kind of middle-age, if you want to press the analogy—in which its earlier vigor is temporarily balanced by loss of ambition, but results in a craving for peace, which is simply senility and decay, a terminal disease.

In 1848 the Americans, whether or not they were culturally admirable, were a nation and a vigorous one. They naturally took territory from Mexico, as they had taken it from the Indians, by the right of conquest, the only valid right to territory of any kind, and the only right by which any people now occupy the territory under its jurisdiction. Sniveling about an abstraction called 'justice' in such cases is mere foolishness. There is no 'justice' in nature or among races and nations, because justice is a moral code on which a nation has agreed to regulate relations between its own members. In international affairs, there was a moral code by which civilized nations, for mutual benefit, regulated relations with each other, in peace and in war, but that moral code was repudiated and flouted by the Jew-controlled British and Americans and is now no more than a datum in history.

To ignore this fact is to be incapable of understanding the past or the present.

The German writer extends his Platonic vaporings to the purchase of Louisiana territory, which was undoubtedly an act of real politics. Napoleon, who had taken the territory from Spain by military force, sold it to the United States because he was unable to defend it militarily and feared that a war with the United States would disrupt his constant milking of the Spanish colonies in the Western Hemisphere. The vast territory was purchased "in blatantly imperialistic and undemocratic fashion," according to a Sheeny named Kohn, whom the German author quotes. That means that it was an historically sound act.

The German writer correctly describes the aggression against the Southern states as "one of the most dreadful wars in the history of the world," and he is almost always right about the recent past, when the Americans, mentally rotted with the deadly virus of Christian righteousness, permitted themselves to be made the judges and policemen of the world for their Yiddish masters, after they had become so imbecile that when a crackpot talked about a "war to end wars" they did not clap him into an insane asylum, and when one of the most loathsome bipeds known to history gabbled about "quarantining aggressors," they did not recognize the traitor, impeach and convict him, and, having exposed what he intended, hang him.

Such was our folly. Our guilt is undeniable. It cannot be palliated. We made the Yids our masters, and it was our power that consummated the Suicide of the West. And it is only natural that Europeans now take satisfaction in the decay and coming dissolution of the contrivers of their ruin.[7]

7. Americans who do not read European periodicals are often unaware of how complacently our plight is generally regarded. For example, a columnist in the Sunday Times (London), 10 February 1991, discussing, not politics or economics, but a recent American motion picture, remarked obiter on the myth of American unity. "America celebrates its unity because it is really a spectacularly disunited agglomeration of races, classes, and religions....Now, with the industrial base eroded, the underclass expanding, the deficit growing...the myths may be about to collapse in the face of the unpleasant reality of the end of the Age of America." I quote the foregoing because it is significant as a passing comment by a journalist who is sure that his readers will agree with him. In Liberty Bell, April 1985, pp. 1-8, I reported the opinions of some of the best minds in France and England that "the United States is now beyond all question the enemy of Europe, politically, militarily, and above all, culturally," and that it is the "single nation which has succeeded in debasing intelligence, morality, and the quality of humanity on practically the whole surface of the globe....perpetrating a continuous crime against mankind." They find some consolation in the fact

The foregoing sufficiently characterizes the article by the German editor of the National-Zeitung. It were bootless to waste space on detailing derivatives of the blunders noted above or in correcting minor errors of fact.[8] that "the United States is doomed." The writers overlook or do not stress the contributions European nations themselves made to the collapse of civilization and avoid direct mention of the Jews' covert but overshadowing power and determination to liquidate our race and its culture, but if you will refer to my article, you will see that the German whose article we are here discussing was relatively kind to the United States, which has made itself despised, feared, and hated by all the civilized and semi-civilized nations in the whole world, including the nations that are especially profiting from our insane demolition of our industry and sabotage of our once adequate technology.

The important thing to remember is that while the German writer is generally right when he disregards the propagandistic hogwash in our press (and schools!) and exercises independent judgement, all of his gross errors of fact and interpretation were taken from verbal slop published in this country and disseminated by the Jews' "public opinion" throughout the world to create the image the German writer has shown us. But surely we are ugly enough without the mud that is spattered on our faces by our present masters and which we see so clearly in the mirror that has been held up before us.

8. E.g.: President Johnson was not responsible for the savagery that began in 1865 and was called "Reconstruction." On the contrary, he did what he could, which was not very much, to mitigate the sadistic enormities perpetrated by the scabrous gang of thieves and hate-crazed mattoids who formed the Republican Administration, whose power was virtually absolute after their masterly assassination of Lincoln, which was marred by only a few mishaps. The German author, by the way, perceives the hypocrisy of the pretense that the South was invaded "to save the Union." That pretext reminds one of the man who had religious scruples against divorce and accordingly saved his marriage by murdering his wife. — The "liberated' Negroes" in the South were not "channeled into the industrial North" during the "Reconstruction," but only a century later, some years after 1945, when the dismantling of American industry began. In the North they did not "sink into a new kind of slavery," but became an intolerable bane that is making civilized society impossible. — The part of Colombia taken to form Panama (because the Colombian whom we hired to pose as the 'leader' of a fake revolution exceeded his instructions) was much less than "half" of the country—was approximately one-sixteenth of it in area and in population even less. Et cetera multa.

THE MYSTERY OF LAROUCHE

Lyndon LaRouche is now in prison, having been sentenced to a term of fifteen years for having annoyed the rulers of the United States. I gave a succinct but adequate account of his activities in my article on Practical Politics in February 1990, and in the following April I noticed the travesty of legality by which our lawless masters threw LaRouche onto the chute to the penitentiary.

A friend has sent me a copy of a book that was obviously rushed through the press after LaRouche was arrested but before his condemnation in an effort to facilitate the latter by character-assassination. The book is Lyndon LaRouche and the New American Fascism (New York, Doubleday, 1989), by Dennis King, whom the publisher describes as "the country's leading expert [!] on LaRouche." The author's race is not stated, but I note that 'King' is frequently a translation of 'Koenig,' a name often assumed by Yids in Germany, and that they commonly affect characteristically Anglo-Saxon or Scottish praenomina as a disguise.[1]

King is highly proficient in the art of loedorography and subtle vituperation; he does an expert job of traducing LaRouche, and while journalists hired for such work always simulate moral indignation, I have the impression that he does hate LaRouche as he would hate anyone who stood, or seemed to stand, in the way of God's People. It is ironic, however, that I, who have no animus and certainly feel no ill-will toward LaRouche, damned him far more thoroughly than did the hatchet man. I illustrated the spurious and mendacious content of books that LaRouche wrote or sponsored; King concentrates on the man's mistresses, associates, and gossip about his intentions.

King has certainly investigated such matters thoroughly and it is likely that his facts are accurate, as distinct from his insinuations, interpretations, and allegations. Books of this type, if competently written, usually resemble a child's water-color book: the printed outlines are accurate, but the child has painted the horse green and the cow purple.

1. 'Dennis,' which is, of course, derived through the French from 'Dionysius,' became a very popular personal name in England as early as the Twelfth Century, doubtless under Norman influence.

From King's account it seems clear that LaRouche was swindled repeatedly, almost continually, by reprobates who gained his confidence, and was, throughout his career, surrounded by Jews, who held most of the higher positions in his organizations. At least one of these, a certain Mordechai, was a spy and agent of the Jews whom LaRouche was so naïf as to trust. A man named Goldstein, who was in charge of Security for the organization, even proposed assassination of Super-Sheeny Kissinger. One cannot approve of assassinations, but it would be hard to suggest a better target.

According to King, however, LaRouche's mortal sin was insufficient veneration for Yahweh's Chosen. He properly derides one of LaRouche's campaigns, based on the slogan, "Zionism is anti-Semitic." That, of course, would have been quite true, had LaRouche been writing English, for, as everyone knows, the Chosen now intend to massacre the Semites in Palestine, as they did formerly, according to the tales in the Christians' favorite story-book. LaRouche seems to have used the term in the nonsensical meaning given to it by the Kikes' propaganda, according to which it means 'anti-Jewish,'[2] and in that sense, as King points out, his slogan is absurd because almost all of the Jews now residing in the United States are Zionists.

2. The catachrestic phrase seems to have originated in France, where 'antisémitique,' uttered with knowing grin, was used to indicate appreciation of the Jewish racial character. At that time, the Jews were considered Semites because their language in Biblical times had been taken from the Semitic Canaanites, and the Aramaic, which replaced it in general use, was also a Semitic language. The Jews are a hybrid race in which the Semitic, Hamitic, and Armenoid components usually overshadow the Negroid element. Whether there was an Aryan element before relatively recent times is uncertain. The French joke seems to have been picked up by the Jews, with their instinct for creating confusion, about the time of the Dreyfus affair, and to have been first used in English around the beginning of this century. The transfer may have been facilitated by the occasional use of 'Semitism' as a convenient designation of both the Judaic and Moslem religions.

There is a good deal of ancillary information in the book that is of some interest. One of LaRouche's enemies was, naturally enough, the Roy Cohen who, together with his partner, Schine, formed a team that was trusted by Senator McCarthy[3] and, of course, continually betrayed him; they later subsidized National Review through their news-stand agency,[4] and Cohen finally attained the high distinction of being considered the most viciously crooked attorney in all of greater New York. He was, naturally, a pervert, as was generally known and as LaRouche wickedly told the public, and he died of the African Plague ("AIDS") in 1986. Who says the epidemic has done no good?

King addresses particularly the people who have been programmed as "Liberal Intellectuals" in the boob-hatcheries, and gives them the proper signals. 'Fascist' is often a noise made by such dunces and as devoid of meaning as the squawk of an angry bluejay, but men like King know that Mussolini saved Italy from disintegration and averted Judaeo-Communist massacres, such as had been carried out in Russia a few years before, thus cheating professional humanitarians of their anticipated gloating over the suffering and death of the more civilized Italians. For this, social reformers will never forgive him, and his name suffices to focus the organic hatreds in their miserable little souls.

Needless to say, many of King's demonstrations of LaRouche's satanic nature are, in the eyes of rational Aryans, propaganda for LaRouche. A photograph following p. 200 shows three "students" at

3. McCarthy was really naïf to an extent remarkable in a man who had attained success in politics. I always remember what he told a friend of mine, then in the C.I.A., who warned him in 1952 that the Federal government would destroy him for having identified a few of the Communists agents then in high positions. "No," said McCarthy, "the American people will never let me down"!

4. This does not necessarily imply approval of the dilute "conservatism" for which that publication was then known. The pair of Kike perverts used it to obtain "block bookings" from newsstands operated by Americans and thus introduced their pornographic journals into places where the latter would never have been tolerated, had they not been part of a 'package' that included a magazine then highly esteemed by anti-Communists.

Temple University in Philadelphia who are said to have been mistreated by LaRouche's followers, probably when the creatures attacked them. One is a nigger mongrel and the other two are degenerates and probably some kind of mongrels also; one looks partly female, but probably isn't. A rational American looking at that photograph will conclude that a man who wants to sweep our streets of such animated garbage deserves approbation, whatever else he may propose.

We are assured that LaRouche actually expressed doubts about the Kikes' great Holohoax, and was so evil as to oppose the deportation of Dr. Arthur Rudolph to please our parasites and to demoralize our efforts to send rockets into outer space. He even dared to quote "General George Brown's infamous [sic!] statement about the alleged excessive influence of Jews in Washington." Since the Jews themselves openly boast that the Congress that daily betrays us in the Capitol belongs to them and is "the best that money can buy," it follows that what was infamous about General Brown's statement is the implication that the Sheenies' power over us could possibly be excessive. They own the planet given them by Yahweh, don't they?

What was obviously LaRouche's most dastardly deed was trying to tell the American dunces in 1977 that the Master Race was equipping itself with nuclear weapons and becoming one of the powers able (and willing) to use nuclear bombs to attain its ends. Needless to say, only a satanic figure would have disclosed to the Aryan swine in 1977 a secret that, despite LaRouche's efforts, was successfully concealed until the end of 1986, when, strange as that seems, it may have been first disclosed in the United States by Liberty Bell.[5]

5. December 1986, pp. 16-23. Liberty Bell's information came from a feature article in the Sunday Times (London), where it appeared under an 88-point headline, but the British publication and the proof supplied by an honest Jew was ignored by the American press as long as it could hope the news would never reach its American dupes. It is true, of course, that diligent observers earlier drew inferences from the Jews' theft of a large quantity of uranium from American stores, but there was no proof of conjectures based on that fact, which was, of course, denied by the Jews' stooges in Washington and the Pentagon, who insisted that the missing uranium had just somehow got lost.

LaRouche knew in 1977 what the Sheenies were doing in their secret underground plant for manufacturing atomic and nuclear bombs. It follows, therefore, that some part of his intelligence service was much more efficient than King is willing to admit. He repeatedly assures us that LaRouche was supplied chiefly or almost entirely with information imagined by the crooks who were exploiting him. King evidently did not notice that his supercilious dismissal of LaRouche's intelligence service is refuted by his account of Larouche's "anti-Semitic" disclosure in 1977.

Perpend the fact that in 1977 LaRouche had penetrated one of the most closely guarded secrets in the whole world. That is proof of an efficiency that is impressive and astonishing. When the C.I.A. could no longer ignore the information and photographs provided by the Jewish defector (who was quickly kidnapped by Mossad and, if still alive, is now suffering for his integrity), it protested that it had never had the least suspicion of what the Kikes were doing in Israel. That was a lie, of course, but it was tantamount to an admission that LaRouche's intelligence service was far better than that of the world's most expensive intelligence service, subsidized with billions each year by the tax-paying animals in the United States, some of whom are still so gullible that they imagine the C.I.A. has some regard for their interests.

A further inconsistency is found in what is the most valuable part of his book for intelligent readers, two paragraphs on p. 250. I quote the substance here:

> The N[ational] C[aucus of] L[abor] C[ommittees, said to be LaRouche's primary organization] Security Staff....has built up over a fifteen-year period one of the largest collections of private political intelligence data in the United States....
> When the FBI and Virginia authorities raided LaRouche's headquarters in October 1986, they carried away more than 425 boxes of files. The media had the impression these were mostly financial records, but the offices raided included those of the Security staff, and the files seized contained computer disks on which vast quantities of Security data were stored. The FBI thus came into possession of a major portion of the "LaRouche files." Apart from details about political radicals and rumors about the sex lives of public officials, these files contain evidence of extensive NCLC dealings with government and police officials and corporate executives throughout the country. Most of these individuals would be extremely embarrassed if their dealings with LaRouche should ever become a matter of public record.

One suspects that King may be minimizing the data in those files, which may include positive proof of the treason that is normal in the Jews' hirelings, from the President on down, who serve and abet the Jewish rulers over the hapless country the American boobs gave them.

If that is so, King has solved the mystery that perplexed me in earlier articles, why the ponderous machinery of governmental oppression should have been activated to squash a man whose propaganda in the books he published was worthy of only an intellectual and moral nullity, and whose little political organization represented no serious threat to the Demopublican gangsters[6] who avail themselves of Jewish permission to rob and plunder the American boobs to their greedy hearts' content.

MAKING "SOCIAL SCIENCE"

When Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey, employed by the Rockefeller Foundation, published the first of his two books[1] in 1948, I paid no attention to it, assuming that it was just another bundle of the piffle that constitutes most of contemporary "sociology." By the time the second volume appeared in 1953, the welkin was already resounding with hosannahs to the new Savior of mankind, so I read both volumes.

I saw at once that the volumes were very important. They disclosed a most significant datum about human behavior, to wit, that there were large numbers of Aryans who would unthinkingly accept as scientific determinations a series of entirely unsupported allegations that were purportedly based on data, supposedly obtained when unknown persons were questioned by unknown busy-bodies, and recorded in code on sheets no one would ever be permitted to see—sheets housed in a safe that was protected by a threat that the sheets would be destroyed if anyone obtained a legal right to inspect them.

6. It may be well, by the bye, to remember that 'gangsters' was first used of politicians, and only later applied to bands of criminals whose depredations were somewhat different, involving physical violence instead of fraud and deceit.

The secret data, moreover, were not even classified or categorized, but treated as one lump, much as though one were to generalize about all who live in a certain city block without noting the relative proportions of cats, dogs, infants, and adult bipeds in the total. There was an assertion that the data were "representative," but there was no classification by race, age, habitat, social position, or education—all factors known to affect gravely the kind of conduct under investigation. And what was even worse, the gullible Aryans believed findings that were disproven by their own observations and experience.[2]

It seemed to me that far more important than the question whether the conclusions were correct was the surprising acceptance of them by persons who should have known something of the methodology of science. At that time, had anyone claimed that he had proved the existence of Martians or sea serpents by taking photographs that he would let no one see, only lame brains would have been so deficient in common sense as to pay any attention to him. But Kinsey made an analogous claim, and otherwise rational people believed him![3]

Obviously the credence accorded Kinsey was not acceptance of a fact that had been scientifically determined, but was of the same order as belief in the Christian myths, which are accepted because they excite pleasurable emotions and keep a shimmering veil between the believer and the grim world in which he lives. Kinsey's conclusions were accepted as gospels—and with as much credulous faith. It was true that persons who firmly believed in either the tales about Jesus or

3. Kinsey claimed that the secrecy and mystification was needed to conceal the identity of the persons who had answered questions for his unidentified inquisitors, but that was obviously a feeble pretext. For one thing, he also said that names and addresses were not recorded on the sheets on which the replies were entered in a presumably secure code or cipher.

Kinsey's findings usually disapproved of the other, but that was only to be expected. It was also true that religious faith was emotional and necessarily uncritical and irrational, while faith in Kinsey was represented as an intellectual conviction, but one could not but observe that both faiths were based on assumptions about the validity of evidence that, by its very nature, could not be tested and empirically verified.

The two volumes were significant because they proved two things: (1) that there was a general and shocking ignorance of valid science and the requirements of scientific proof; and (2) that the phenomenal credulity attested a native or acquired lust to preconize and invert the sexual fixations that Christianity had inherited from its Jewish authors.[4]

There was, of course, some dissent in the rush to believe for the sake of believing what one wants to believe. Some holy men thought the conclusions absurd, although many accepted them as conclusive proof that everyone ought to be dosed with lots of Jesus. Professional interests likewise evoked dissent from Freudian psychiatrists whenever Kinsey's results conflicted with their own Jewish cult. Some old-fashioned Americans, who adhered to Victorian or, at least, Edwardian standards, snorted "bosh" or "nonsense," but supported their brusque rejection with no more than appeal to the known conduct of their friends and respectable acquaintance, and thereafter ignored an imminent threat to their nation. Some moralists irately attacked Kinsey's work, usually on the grounds that while it was probably correct, it should be suppressed or denied in keeping with the distinctively Christian policy of edifying people morally by lying to them.

The only effective challenge of Kinsey's work that I can now call to mind was, oddly enough, directed at his second volume, which was, in reported methodology, slightly the less fallacious of the two. In Kinsey's Myth of Female Sexuality (New York, Grune & Stratton, 1954), two gynaecologists, Drs. Edmund Bergler and William S.

4. By a nice irony, all Christian denominations are now agitated by endless discussion of, and violent controversies about, sexuality of all kinds.

Kroger, impugned Kinsey's book on the only really cogent grounds by denying its accuracy and its authors' veracity. After pointing out how spurious was the methodology concealed in specious claims, they proceeded to show that the "non-medical generalizations" were largely at variance with what was medically observed by gynaecologists, who necessarily had to ascertain accurately the sexual propensities and conduct of their patients before dealing with their sexual maladies. So far as I know, their protest was generally ignored as "educators," "sociologists," the practitioners of "social science," and politicians gleefully rushed to apply the new gospel, as Procrustes had applied his beds, to every victim over whom they had acquired power during the Americans' headlong rush to serfdom.

In 1964, Gershon Legman, who had been one of Kinsey's associates, his conscience perhaps aroused by perception of the havoc that was being wrought in American society, confessed that he had served Kinsey, whose purpose was to create and disseminate propaganda that would radically change the sexual conduct and habits of the American people by making male homosexuality, promiscuity, paederasty, and many other perversions acceptable to them, and by encouraging them with pseudo-scientific fabrications to emulate what they had abominated as degeneracy. His confession was, however, ignored, and the promoters of the purposes named by Mr. Legman triumphantly consummated their revolution of sexual morals and mores in the United States, especially by driving the new gospel into the heads of children whose thoughtless or unfeeling parents sent them into the tax-supported boob-hatcheries to have their minds pickled in 'humanitarian' slop, and by forcing the hapless children to behave as their captors demanded.

Kinsey's gospel was generally accepted with enthusiasm and fulsomely described as "the cornerstone of almost everything that is known about human sexuality." It was Revealed Truth with a vengeance—a vengeance everyone pretended not to perceive.

Such works as Jess Stearn's The Sixth Man (New York, Doubleday, 1961), which purports to present "facts, not opinions" without prejudice, were, of course, spawned by Kinsey's statistics, and even speak of a "spread" of perversion without reference to Kinsey's propaganda to the effect that perversion was natural and normal, at least for every sixth—or fifth—American male.

What is amazing is that no one undertook an independent study to check the accuracy of Kinsey's statistics. I remember that a psychologist to whom I suggested such a project as a feasible road to celebrity gave me the look I would have been given by a Christian dervish, had I suggested an investigation of the genealogy of his Jesus. He roundly denounced my impious suggestion as absurd, for the facts were already known!

Only after forty years of intensive sabotage of American children has the basic fact about Kinsey's research been disclosed to his victims, by Edward W. Eichel and Dr. Judith A. Reisman, in a book edited by Drs. John H. Court and J. Gordon Muir: Kinsey, Sex, and Fraud, the Indoctrination of a People (Lafayette, Louisiana; Huntington House, 1991).

After forty years, it is now obvious that Kinsey perpetrated an enormous fraud, almost as flagrant as the Jews' great Holohoax. Like Marx, he set out to create data that he could use to "prove" the hoax he was contriving.

I suspected that much or all of Kinsey's data was based on replies that he and his employees had simply concocted. It now appears, however, that, like so many takers of polls, he made sure of the answers he would get by asking questions of persons whom he knew to be certain or likely to give the answers that he wanted.

Fully one-fourth of the males who were interrogated were in prison or had been recently released from prison, having been convicted of crimes, usually sexual offenses. Many others were persons who came to his informants in search of advice on sexual problems they could not solve for themselves, and from this group it is probable that the replies of male perverts were given precedence over all others. Other replies to questions were obtained by hired solicitors, including the known leaders of homosexual organizations and cliques and other members of the criminal underworld. The probably unanimous responses reported by such persons were probably diluted in the statistical compilation by replies from non-perverted males to make the results credible—credible, that is, to the credulous seekers of evidence against our civilization.

The results that "prove" that children are sexually active from birth and naturally homosexual as well as "bisexual" were obtained by perverts who took babies and very young boys and manipulated them sexually until they were able to induce a simulation of an orgasm or at least an acceptance of such repeated stimulation as not repulsive. These crimes against children were used to "prove" the bizarre allegation that children of our race (and presumably other races, but we need be interested only in our own) had sexual instincts (as distinct from recognition of sexual difference) before the onset of puberty and thus were astonishingly different from all other mammals, who become sexually active only when they are sexually mature—a difference inexplicable in terms of biological evolution.

On this basis, Kinsey and the edjewgaters loudly preached their new gospel that all inhibition of sexual relations between adults, between children, and between adults with children was "cultural restraint," it being taken for granted that culture and civilization should be hated and abolished. And by incessantly dinning this gospel into children's minds for forty years, the desired result was obtained, the creation of hordes of perverts who could be organized by the Jews' standard technique for destroying nations that tolerate them—organized to 'demonstrate,' yell, vote for their "rights" to exploit normal and civilized Americans. And now our streets are, from time to time, filled with mobs of sullen degenerates, called "gay" by the prostitutes of the press, proudly exhibiting their depravity as lepers exhibit their sores.

And as a final blessing from the great "scientist" who laid "the cornerstone of almost everything known about human sexuality," the invariably deadly African Plague, usually called Acquired Immunity Deficiency, brought to this country and spread by loathsome perverts exercising their Kinsey-given rights, became an epidemic that is not only destroying perverts and niggers, but is so contagious that it is being increasingly communicated to valuable parts of our population and dooming innocent persons to slow and hideous death.

Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey was, as we all know, hired by the Rockefeller Foundation to produce the books that were immediately and generally accepted as "the cornerstone of almost everything known about human sexuality." The Rockefellers paid him, and Kinsey delivered the goods!

Appendix

Male perverts have existed from the beginning of recorded history for a wide variety of reasons, but a necessarily long discussion of the aetiology of the degeneracy must be postponed to a later occasion. Everyone knows that the incidence and concomitants of the vice has varied widely from people to people. It is, for example, commonplace among Semites, who consider it normal. There were instances of it even among our barbarous Germanic ancestors, who signified their disapproval by hanging the pervert or sinking him in a bog.

Americans, however, needed only to refer to their own personal observations. For example, in the colleges and universities with which I was acquainted, there were always one or two members of the faculty who were suspected of sexual perversion and five or six undergraduates who were suspected of being their bedfellows. They did not obtrude themselves and were not given to proselytizing, and they were not persecuted or ostracized, given the belief in personal liberty that was common among Americans in that far-off era. Men privately regarded the homosexuals as oddly given to inexplicable proclivities for which they felt a certain mild contempt, but always treated them courteously, in obedience to the rule de gustibus non est disputandum.

It is hard to say what precisely was the basis for the probably correct suspicions. A curious case is that of a blond undergraduate who had a slender and small-boned physique, and could have been very successful as a female impersonator; he, moreover, professed a kind of aestheticism and was contemptuous of athletes, but no suspicion attached to him, although very few knew that he had a mistress who could have refuted any imputation of deficient or perverse virility.

Among the men whom I met or knew by reputation, the incidence of homosexuality was probably about 0.2% to perhaps 0.5% It is possible, of course, that there were perverts who were so discreet that they excited no suspicion, for in those placid days, before the revelations of the sexual messiah, it was not taken for granted that when two or more persons of the same sex share an apartment or a dwelling that none of them could have afforded alone, they engage in sexual intercourse. That there could have been successful discretion on a considerable scale is possible and the implication can be neither confirmed nor refuted, but anyone who lived in the society of that time will regard it as extremely improbable.

There were, of course, reports that the vice was prevalent among some groups in the lower classes, such as sailors, and among those engaged in occupations that were judged unmanly, such as ballet dancers, couturiers, and pious young men, but no one was worried. There were all sorts of crime in the slums, too, but that did not matter in a society that seemed stable and sound, although it was even then being undermined by the Federal Reserve in preparation for its great coup in 1932.

I shall be astonished if my observations do not generally agree with those of other men of my generation, which, remember, was not senescent forty years ago.

THEOLOGICIAL FUN

I have just come upon a most unusual theological work: it is entertaining and, conceivably, even useful. It was published in Stockholm (Almqvist & Wicksell, 1989), but its Swedish author, G. Gerleman, chose to write in German: Der Heidenapostel: ketzerische Erwägungen zur Predigt des Paulus, zugleich ein Streifzug in der griechischen Mythologie.

The learned author examines the collection of letters attributed to Paul in the "New Testament," and subtly mimics and mocks the techniques by which Christian holy men try to conceal the innumerable contradictions in their sacred bag of tales by "proving" the "concordance of the Scriptures" with sophistic arguments that, for example, Jesus (whoever he was) agreed perfectly with Isaiah (alias Hesias, whoever he was) and the author of the tale about Daniel (whoever he was).

Gerleman, dissenting from all critical students of the Pauline collection, believes that all the letters were written by a single author, whom he indentifies as a civilized and rational man of perhaps the Second Century.

He finds his first clue to the identity of the anonymous author, who adopted a vulgar style of Greek in keeping with his pretense that he was a Christian, in the first "Epistle to the Corinthians," where the clever author mocks the ignorant Christians by telling them their god "hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise." A little later in the same travesty, pseudo-Paul assures the converts that he had fed them with milk (γαλα) instead of the solid food that nourishes adults; and later he points his satire by writing an epistle to 'the *Gala*tians,' meaning 'milk-sops.'

The pseudo-apostle is really an incarnation of Hermes who conducts a covert tour of Christian nonsense by double entente and sly allusions to many Greek myths, including some that our holy men like to call "obscene" when they dilate on the vices of the awful "pagans," i.e., persons too well educated and intelligent to be taken in by the Jewish hokum. The gullible Christians who believed the letters of "Paul" to be what they purport to be were really too ignorant to recognize a burlesque of Greek mythology, as shown by the etymology of some words in "Paul's" vocabulary, sly hints scattered here and there, and parallels obvious to anyone who is moderately well acquainted with ancient myths and literature.

The clever supercherie, we are assured, did not deceive some of the more literate Fathers of the Church and scribblers of gospels (e.g., the Acta apostolorum and the Apocalypse), but it deceived and wowed the ignorant masses, so the holy men did not rock their flimsy boat by undeceiving the boobs, but instead solemnly used the hoax for their own purposes in attracting and capturing a following of proletarian simpletons. That's how the "letters of Paul" got into the "New Testament," when that anthology was put together in the late Fourth or early Fifth Century.

Gerleman, like a veteran comedian on the stage, keeps a poker face as he solemnly discovers the real meanings latent in practically every paragraph of the supposed letters, but you, when you read his ingenious demonstration and parody of theological discourse, will enjoy many a hearty laugh.

I have said the book might conceivably be useful. If there is a Christian dervish whom you especially dislike and who is sufficiently well educated to read German, give him a copy of this book, and decide what you will say when you hear he has expired in an apoplectic fit.

RUN, SHEEP, RUN

The city of Washington, which should now be called Tel-Aviv-on-the-Potomac, has long been the crime capital of the United States, at least since 1860, when it was occupied by the gangsters called the Republican Party, but their crimes were perpetrated in the Federal government and almost never involved violence.[1] Washington was a city in which civilized persons could live comfortably and even gracefully, without fear of molestation.

Despite the efforts of the Jews' N.A.A.C.P., the niggers in Washington long remained inoffensive and useful. When the great War Criminal crawled into the White House to destroy the United States and incite a war against civilization in Europe, he naturally began to stir up the niggers as a parergon, and his wife had a notorious liking for brawny brown studs, but through the 1940s there was little nigger crime in Washington outside districts, such as the one appropriately named Jamaica,[2] in which the Congoids and mulattos were more or less concentrated. Most of them were useful servants. The few who lived elsewhere and were not, were kept in check by the civilized residents. They did invade bathing beaches on the Potomac, but chiefly to throw broken bottles into the water where it began to become deep, so that unsuspecting White bathers would cut their feet.

The real influx of savages began in the administration of the filthy mongrel called Eisenhower, noted for his open and vicious hatred of Germans and dissimulated hatred of other Aryans, and his scrapping of what was left of the American Constitution. After the lawless usurper sent Federal troops into Arkansas to teach the White boobs that they no longer had a country of their own, and the craven White majority acquiesced in the dictatorship and their own degradation, crime became common on the streets of Washington, and White residents began to flee to the still safe outer suburbs, especially Arlington County in Virginia. And when Arlington became unsafe, they ran farther out, to Fairfax County.

On 2 November 1991, a young woman of nineteen, who lived not far from a friend of mine in a district of "better" and hence more expensive apartment buildings, returning home after midnight, tried to dash from her parked automobile to the door of her apartment building. She didn't make it. Two husky niggers, eager to take Affirmative Action, seized her, abducted her in her own automobile, took her to an isolated region where they raped and sodomized her and doubtless abused her in other ways (which you should have no trouble in imagining), and then magnanimously took her to the vicinity of her residence and threw her out. It can only be conjectured how much of their zeal was sexual lust for White women, and how much was a craving to express their racial hatred of the stupid White creatures who permit them to vote and who work long hours to feed and clothe them and provide them with comfort.[3]

2. The barbarization of this area left an Anglican foundation, called Laetus Locus, virtually under siege by the encompassing swarm of niggers, but members of the staff and visitors who came and went by automobile were not, so far as I know, molested.

The incident was reported in the Washington Times, and brought forth the information that during the past year ninety-five women had been raped by savages in Fairfax County.

The county authorities were moved to take drastic action: they will provide free "counseling" for women who have been raped to help them "recover from emotional trauma" and to grin and bear life in a "democracy."

Whither can the White invertebrates flee from once safe Fairfax County? If they go much farther out, they will have to commute to the District of Corruption by helicopter. What can the White weaklings do?

If not involved in the criminal government in Washington, they can run yet farther and try to imitate the residents of Detroit who, when that city became a feral jungle, moved themselves and their businesses to the outer suburbs and now complacently remark that they have not gone into the city for years. But, of course, the marauders will soon follow them.

Nasty "racists" have ideas about what could be done, but the Jews' Federal terrorists will soon silence them. Perhaps the best thing for the spineless White Americans to do is to run to the ocean and jump in. That would be quicker and less painful.

IN BLACK AND WHITE

Americans with very retentive memories can still recall the obscene farce staged by veteran comedians in the Senate when they pretended to be in doubt about the appointment of a nigger to the Revolutionary Tribunal in Washington, which is still called the Supreme Court. Some who watched the show were so interested that they wondered which nigger lied the most—which was like wondering which actor in the once popular burlesque shows was the more repulsive. And when the show reached its prearranged conclusion, some realized that it had been like the once popular 'strip tease' acts, which held the attention of some spectators from the time the actress opened the bodice of her dress to the inevitable conclusion when she removed her remaining 'G-string,' thus disappointing men who had hoped to see something novel.

3. It was late 1950s as I recall that, on the occasion of some minor violence by niggers in a public "school," I heard a very prosperous, very plump, and very fat-headed female beamingly exclaim, "Isn't it nice that those dear people now feel free to express themselves!" Whether she would say the same thing about this incident, I do not know—probably not, if the victim was her daughter—but she would doubtless continue to ascribe their crimes to the bigoted Whites' oppression of her "dear people," with whom she was sufficiently cautious not to associate.

The show was staged, of course, to distract public attention from the War Lord's order that the United States be made defenceless against the major nuclear powers, Russia and Israel, and from the White Inferiority Act (called 'Civil Rights') that Bushy signed on 21 November, as soon as David Duke and his nasty White supporters had been safely defeated in Louisiana.[1]

We should note in passing that having a nigger on the Revolutionary Tribunal is not necessarily a bad thing. Remember that the vacancy for Trusty Thomas was created by the retirement of the mulatto who first publicly proclaimed a fact which, although obvious to judicious observers, had been hypocritically dissembled by generations of White justices of the Supreme Court—the fact that the American Constitution had been legally rescinded and scrapped in 1865 (after it was nullified by the invasion of the South in 1861).

People who watched the farce could not but observe that the nigger had procured a white woman, the real status symbol in his race as well as a demonstration of the race's triumph over the stupid White boobs, who fecklessly gave them citizenship and permitted them to vote. Some may have wondered about the arrangement, particularly when they learned that the White woman was a high-salaried lawyer in the Labor Department, so that both husband and wife will have their mouths fastened on the public teats.

1. Some think that Lord Bushy was impressed by the 55% of the White vote that Duke received and therefore, after endorsing the infamous law, uttered some words which the horrified "Liberals" interpreted as meaning that White tax-paying animals should have some rights too.

There is a weekly publication called USA Weekend that is sold to the smaller daily papers, which print their own name at the top of the first page and distribute it as the "magazine section" of their Sunday (or Saturday) papers. In the issue for November 23-24, the Weekend disclosed some interesting facts.

The white woman, whose maiden name appears to have been Virginia Lamp and who hails from Omaha, met Trusty Thomas "in April 1986 at a meeting of the Anti-Defamation League in New York." That gives one to think. What was the pair doing at a meeting of the Jewish cowboys who ride herd on their American cattle? Did they belong in the Defamation League (the 'Anti' is just typical Yiddish antiphrasis) or were they mere goyim, serving as lackeys in attendance on God's Race?

Thomas looks like a fairly pure-blooded Congoid, but he seems to have the intelligence of a mulatto. The wife looks like a fairly attractive White woman. But who knows?

The genetic combinations that occur in miscegenation do not produce uniform results. The complexion of true mulattoes (i.e., 50% of each component) may be lighter or darker than one would expect from an equal mixture. There is therefore no proof that Thomas may not have in his veins the divine ichor of God's Race, which has a Congoid component of at least 5% to 10% to begin with.[2]

And everyone has seen females who appear to be Aryan and even Nordic, with blonde hair and even blue eyes, but who are really Jewesses, having inherited their distinctive physical characteristics from their Aryan fathers or even grandfathers, while their mothers contributed to the mixture the invisible mind and soul.[3]

2. See Professor A. E. Mourant, The Genetics of the Jews, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1978.

3. As everyone knows, the Jews, who must have learned practical genetics in twenty-five or more centuries of experience as a hybrid race, believe that Jewishness is, like haemophilia, transmitted only by females, so that the race of the fathers is irrelevant, except insofar as it may produce advantageous physical characteristics. That is why German male children were kidnapped at the end of the Suicide of the West and taken to Israel to be raised as Kikes and to contribute physi-

It doesn't really matter, of course, but it would be interesting to learn the respective heredities of this exemplary pair, darlings of the "Liberals" and heralds of Things to Come.

A MORAL PROBLEM

About two decades ago, an acquaintance of mine, who has the predilections of a Casanova, spent several months in a society that was almost entirely composed of prosperous Jews and their families. His erotic adventures, he said, made him aware of a moral problem that is peculiar to that race.

It was taken for granted that a Jewess, like the Hadassah, alias Esther, of whose exploits a censored version is included in the Christians' Holy Book, may do anything for the advancement of her race. But what if only her own pleasure is at issue?

There were three views among hedonistic young Jewesses, viz.:

(1) A Jewess must never copulate with an Aryan.

(2) She may copulate with the goy, provided he has been circumcised.

(3) She may copulate with the pig, even if he has not been circumcised.

'The majority opinion was the second; the first and third represented the practice of small minorities within the lively female segment of the Master Race. According to my informant, there was no idea of being under the observation of the Big Jew up in the clouds whom the Jews call Yahweh and Christians call God. It was simply a matter of the racial ethos, a question of what conduct was socially proper and acceptable. He neglected to ascertain the opinion about copulation with quadruped dogs, as is the custom of some of our 'liberated' females, who find trained dogs much more satisfactory than men for a variety of reasons. ❑ cal stamina and courage to their Jewish progeny. (When Jack Bernstein was in Israel and was found eating with a nigger Jew, he was bullied by a Jewish policemen who looked exactly like a German Storm Trooper. See Liberty Bell, May 1985, pp. 5-7. Bernstein thought of himself as a Jew, but it would be interesting to know whether his mother was a Jewess.)

The Best of The Odinist:

The Wisdom of Jean Meslier

One of the most peculiar and least recognized of the great iconoclastic philosophers was Jean Meslier. He was born in 1687 in Mazerny, France, a weaver's son who soon evinced a studious nature. Meslier entered the priesthood and later became curate of Etrepigny. Aside from an incident in which he had refused to kowtow to the village bigwig and for which he was rebuked by his archbishop, Meslier's was a quiet, modest life, a life of austerity and of service to his parishioners. He did in 1733, leaving all his possessions to his parish 'flock.'

Meslier's most amazing and unexpected legacy was a remarkable manuscript, 366 pages long, (of which he had made three handwritten copies) in the form of a last will and testament entitled Common Sense, in which he totally repudiated every aspect of Judaeo-Christian superstition. A note affixed to the copy designated for his parishioners declared:

> I have seen and recognized the errors, the abuse, the fallacies and the wickedness of men. I have hated and despised them. I did not dare say it during my life, but I will say it at least in dying, and after my death; and it is that it may be known, that I write this present memorial in order that it may serve as a witness of truth to all those who may see and read it if they choose... How often have I not suffered within myself when I was forced to preach to you those pious lies which I despised in my heart... What remorse I had for exciting your credulity! A thousand times upon the point of bursting forth publicly, I was going to open your eyes, but fear superior to my strength restrained me and forced me to silence until my death.

Meslier's unusual work found its way into the hands of French officials and eventually came to the attention of activists and thinkers of the growing anti-clerical movement which included such men of prominence as Voltaire and D'Alembert.

Among the most militant and extreme partisans of the Enlightenment backlash against centuries of Christian oppression, Meslier is one of history's greatest holy ghost busters. His logic is relentless, his tone is harsh and if his reliance on 'reason' is perhaps a wee bit simplistic and maybe even dogmatic, this is more than compensated for by the clarity and sanity which he leaves in his idol-shattering wake.

With waves of Christian fundamentalist froth and blather innundating our land and drowning minds in the foul waters of obscurantism, Jean Meslier's words, now as much as ever, rise majestically as islands of mental and spiritual salvation. As a source of wisdom and as a pioneer of intellectual freedom, Meslier deserves the consideration and respect of all Odinists.

Let us teach men to be just, benevolent, moderate and sociable, not because their gods exact it, but to please men; let us tell them to abstain from vice and from crime, not because they will be punished in another world, but because they will suffer in the present world.

When men are kept in fear they cease to reason. When the brain is troubled, we believe everything and examine nothing.

Since it was necessary for men to have a god, why did they not have the sun, the visible god, adored by so many nations? What being had more right to the homage of mortals than the star of the day, which gives light and heat; which invigorates all beings; whose presence reanimates and rejuvenates Nature; whose absence seems to plunge her into sadness and languor? If some being bestowed power, activity, benevolence, strength, it was no doubt the sun, which should be recognized as the father of Nature, as the soul of the world, as Divinity. At least one could not without folly dispute his existence, or refuse to recognize his influence and his benefits.

What is God? It is an abstract word, coined to designate the hidden forces of nature; or it is a mathematic point which has neither length, breadth nor thickness.

Sages! Study Nature and her laws; and when you can from them unravel the action of natural causes, do not go in search of supernatural causes which, very far from enlightening your ideas, will but entangle them more and more and make it impossible for you to understand yourselves.

The universe is a cause, not an effect. Nature, whose essence is visibly acting and producing, in order to fulfill her functions, as we see she does, needs no invisible motor far more unknown than herself.

It is absurd to say that the human race is the object and the end of creation.

The universe is but what it can be; all sentient beings enjoy and suffer here; that is to say, they are moved sometimes in an agreeable, and to other times in a disagreeable way. These effects are necessary; they result from causes that act according to their inherent tendencies. The effects necessarily please or displease me, according to my own nature. This same nature compels me to avoid, or remove and combat the one and to seek, to desire and to procure the other. In a world where everything is from necessity, a god who remedies nothing, and allows things to follow their own course, is he anything else but destiny or necessity personified?

Why must men suffer? Why must man exist? What is his existence to God? Nothing or something. If his existence is not useful or necessary to God, why did He not leave him in nothingness? If man's existence is necessary to His glory, He then needed man, He lacked something before this man existed!

According to the notions of modern theology, it appears evident that God has created the majority of men with the view only to punishing them eternally... A God so perfidious and wicked as to create a single man and leave him exposed to the perils of damnation, can not be regarded as a perfect being, but as a monster of nonsense, injustice, malice and atrocity.

Thus, poor mortals! You make your wishes the measure of the truth! Because you desire to live for ever and to be happier, you conclude from thence that you will be more fortunate in an unknown world than in the known world, in which you so often suffer! Consent, then, to leave without regret this world which causes more trouble than pleasure to the majority of you. Resign yourselves to the order of destiny, which decrees that you, like all other beings, should not endure forever. "But what will become of me?" you ask! What you were several million years ago. You were then, I do not know what; resign yourselves, then, to become again in an instant, I do not know, what; what you were then, return peacefully to the universal home from which you came.

A universal God ought to have revealed a universal religion. By what fatality are so many different religions found on the earth? Which is the true one amongst the great number of those of which each pretends to be the right one, to the exclusion of all the others? We have every reason to believe that not one of them enjoys this advantage.

Devotion is a disease of the imagination, contracted in infancy; the devotee is a hypochondriac who increases his disease by the use of remedies. The wise man takes none of it; he follows a good regimen and leaves the rest to Nature.

Is there anything more contradictory, more impossible or more mysterious than the creation of matter by an immaterial Being who, Himself immutable, causes the continual changes that we see in the world? Is there anything more incompatible with all the ideas of common sense than to believe that a good, wise, equitable and powerful Being presides over Nature and directs Himself the Movements of a world which is filled with follies, miseries, crimes and disorders which He could have foreseen and by a single word could have prevented or made to disappear?

If the ancient barbarians have worshiped mountains, rivers, serpents, trees, fetishes of every kind; if the wise Egyptians worshiped crocodiles, rats, onions, do we not see nations who believe themselves wiser than they worship with reverence a bread into which they imagine that the enchantments of their priests cause the Divinity to descend?

When we see polished and wise nations, such as the English, French, German, etc., notwithstanding all their enlightenment, continue to kneel before the barbarous god of the Jews, that is to say, of the most stupid, the most credulous, the most savage, the most unsocial nation which ever was on the earth; when we see these enlightened nations divide themselves into sects, tear one another, hate and despise each other for opinions, equally ridiculous, upon the conduct and the intentions of this irrational god; when we see intelligent persons occupy themselves foolishly in meditating on the wishes of this capricious and foolish god; we are tempted to exclaim "Oh, men! You are still savages! Oh, men! You are but children in the matter of religion!"

To die for an opinion proves no more the truth or the soundness of this opinion than to die in battle proves the right of the prince for whose benefits so many people are foolish enough to sacrifice themselves.

"Sacrifice your reason: give up experience; distrust the testimony of your senses; submit without examination to all that is given to you as coming from heaven." This is the usual language of all the priests of the world; they do not agree upon any point, except in the necessity of never reasoning when they present principles to us which they claim as the most important to our happiness.

The Christians pretend that, with the exception of the Jewish People, that is to say, a handful of unfortunate beings, the whole human race lived in utter ignorance of its duties toward God, and had but imperfect ideas of Divine majesty. Christianity, offshoot of Judaism, which was very humble in its obscure origin, became powerful and cruel under the Christian emperors, who, driven by a holy zeal, spread it marvelously in their empire by sword and fire, and founded it upon the ruins of overthrown Paganism.

Those who govern always decide the religion of the people. The true religion is but the religion of the prince; the true god is the god whom the prince wishes them to worship; the will of the priests who govern the prince always becomes the will of god.

If we read history with some attention; we shall see that Christianity, fawning at first, insinuated itself among the savage and free nations of Europe by showing their chiefs that its principles would favor despotism and place absolute power in their hands. We see, consequently, barbarous kings converting themselves with a miraculous promptitude; that is to say, adopting without examination a system so favorable to their ambition, and exerting themselves to have it adopted by their subjects.

Priests in all times have shown themselves supporters of despotism, and the enemies of public liberty. Their profession requires vile and submissive slaves, who never have the audacity to reason. In an absolute government, their great object is to secure control of the mind of a weak and stupid prince, in order to make themselves masters of the people. Instead of leading the people to salvation, priests have always led them to servitude.

Theological disputes, equally unintelligible for the parties already irritated against each other, have unsettled empires, caused revolutions, ruined sovereigns, devastated the whole of Europe; these despicable quarrels could not be extinguished even in rivers of blood. After the extinction of Paganism the people established a religious principle of going into a frenzy every time that an opinion was brought forth which their priests considered contrary to the holy doctrine. The votaries of a religion which preaches externally but charity, harmony and peace, have shown themselves more ferocious than cannibals or savages every time their instructors have excited them to the destruction of their brethren. There is no crime which men have not committed in the idea of pleasing the Deity or of appeasing His wrath. The idea of a terrible God who was represented as a despot, must necessarily have rendered His subjects wicked. Fear makes but slaves, and slaves are cowardly, low, cruel and think they have a right to do anything when it is the question of gaining the good-will or of escaping the punishment of the master whom they fear. Liberty of thought can alone give to men humanity and grandeur of soul. The notion of a tyrant God can create but abject, angry, quarrelsome, intolerant slaves.

The Jews, excited by the promise of their god, arrogated to themselves the right of exterminating whole nations... The Christians under pretext of spreading their holy religion, covered two hemispheres a hundred times with blood.

Must we imitate the god of the Jews? Will we find a model for our conduct in Jehovah? He is truly a savage god, really created for an ignorant, cruel and immoral people; he is a god who is constantly enraged, breathing only vengeance; who is without pity, who commands carnage and robbery; in a word, he is a god whose conduct can not serve as a model to an honest man, and who can be imitated but by a chief of brigands.

Shall we imitate, then, the Jesus of the Christians? Can this god, who died to appease the implacable fury of his Father, serve as an example which men ought to follow? Alas! we will see in him but a god, or rather, a fanatic, a misanthrope, who, being plunged himself into misery, and preaching to the wretched, advises them to be poor, to combat and extinguish nature, to hate pleasure, to seek sufferings, and to despise themselves.

"Blessed are those who suffer! Woe to those who have abundance and joy!" These are the rare revelations which Christianity teaches!

It is evident that the literal and rigorous practice of the divine morality of the Christians would lead nations to ruin.

A morality which contradicts the nature of man is not made for him.

Is there anything more liable to encourage wickedness and to embolden to crime, than to persuade men that there exists an invisible being who has the right to pardon injustice, rapine, perfidy and all the outrages they can inflict upon society?

The rules which govern men's conduct spring from their own nature which they are supposed to know, and not from some divine nature, of which they have no conception; these rules compel us to render ourselves estimable or contemptible, amiable or hateful, worthy of reward or of punishment, happy or unhappy, according to the extent to which we observe them.

Do men need a god whom they do not know, or an invisible lawgiver, or a mysterious religion, or chimerical fears, in order to comprehend that all excess tends ultimately to destroy them, and that in order to preserve themselves they must abstain from it; that in order to be loved by others, they must do good; that doing evil is a sure means of incurring hatred and vengeance?

A rational philosophy inspires us to strew flowers on life's pathway; to dispel melancholy and panic terrors; to link our interests with those of our traveling companions; to divert ourselves by gaiety and honest pleasures from the pains and the crosses to which we are so often exposed.

A man who reflects can not fail of knowing his duties, of discovering the relations which subsist between men, of meditating upon his own nature, of discerning his needs, his inclinations and his desires, and of perceiving what he owes to the beings necessary to his happiness. These reflections naturally lead to the knowledge of the morality which is the most essential for society.

The priests have made of God such a malicious, ferocious being, so ready to be vexed that there are few men in the world who do not wish at the bottom of their hearts that this god did not exist. We can not live happily if we are always in fear.

It is always the character of man which decides upon the character of his god; each one creates a god for himself and in his own image.

The war which always existed between the priests and the best minds of all ages comes from this: that the wise men perceived the fetters which superstition wished to place upon the human mind, which it fain would keep in eternal infancy, that it might be occupied with fables, burdened with terrors and frightened by phantoms which would prevent it from progressing.

Some ancient and modern philosophers have had the courage to accept experience and reason as their guides, and to shake off the chains of superstition. Lucippe, Democritus, Epicurus, Straton and some other Greeks dared to tear away the thick veil of prejudice, and deliver philosophy from theological fetters. But their systems, too simple, too sensible, and too stripped of wonders for lovers of fancy, were obliged to surrender to the fabulous conjectures of Plato, Socrates and Zeno. Among the moderns, Hobbes, Spinoza, Boyle and others have followed the path of Epicurus, but their doctrines found but few votaries in a world still to much infatuated to listen to reason.

I conclude with the desire that we may return to Nature whose declared enemy is the Christian religion... The world will be composed of good citizens, tender friends. Nature has given this religion in giving us Reason. May fanaticism pervert it no more!

The Latest German Zündel Trial

Supreme Court Appearance—An Update

A Report to my friends! December 11, 1991

On October 30, 1991 my plane took off for Germany. First stop was Hamburg, where I met with my attorney of some 15 years, Jürgen Rieger. He wanted to see the models I had of the installations at Auschwitz. These models were built to scale by a professional model-maker according to plans which Dr. Robert Faurisson had first obtained from the Auschwitz Archives in Poland.

He was impressed, and immediately saw the importance of such a tool in a courtroom situation, which made a seemingly difficult "scientific execution method" simple and understandable for the layman, lawyers, judges and also the media. He wanted to use them in my November 5th 1991 Munich trial, and thus I was soon airbound for Stuttgart, where he had asked me to appear as an expert witness, describing the worldwide neo-Nazi movement to the court, at the written and specific invitation of Judge Eberlein.

My appearance in Stuttgart was a highly successful affair, much to the dismay of the judge. The Germans who attended the trial proceedings repeatedly broke out in cheers and applause, and the judge threatened to clear the courtroom of spectators.

I wondered during the proceedings why the "lady" prosecutor was so nasty in her questions to me—it turned out that she is the very same prosecutor who has seized my bank account in Germany, in a typical West German, politically-motivated move. However, in this case at least I was victorious over her in our verbal jousting match.

Fred Leuchter, who was going to Munich with me as an expert witness in my case, gave a speech in Stuttgart, organized by some local businessmen. The hall was packed so full with young people that there was standing room only. He was well received.

Then it was on to Munich! Fred Leuchter and his wife Carolyn drove ahead in their own "mobile gaschamber" (which I dubbed their car), and I followed with a supporter in a "smoke-free" environment, because I loathe smoking.

Fred was to appear as an expert witness on the construction of execution gas chambers, and I thought since he is, to my knowledge, the only one left in the world with that specific trade, that he would be admitted as witness. Not so!

After about an hour's questioning by the prosecutor and judge, they found him not experienced enough in his field because, although he had been working as a consultant in execution technology in a majority of the states in the U.S., he had only worked on three gas chambers. Neat, eh?

We could not believe our ears when the Munich prosecutor proclaimed that Fred's visit and research at the Polish camps of Auschwitz-Birkenau and Madjanek were of no value, because all that was left there was piles of dirt since "the SS had blown up everything."

That was the way things were to go in Munich! For five weeks I sat in amazement, as Germans who had been sent video films by some anonymous person, video films which had been cut, spliced, assembled and interspersed with German newsbroadcasts taken of German television, came slinking into the courtroom, snitching like schoolboys, about having been shocked by these "Golden Oldies" of Revisionism. Businessmen, bureaucrats, policemen and violin-builders, graphic artists and healthfood store owners alike intoned about how awful it was to hear what the interviewed researchers, writers and victims of Zion like Frank Walus, Ditlieb Felderer, Eric Thomson, Dr. Lindsey and Ivan Lagace, the crematory expert, had to say about topics which my "gag order" forbids me to mention.

For day after day, one day per week, to keep me nailed down in Europe, and undoubtedly to also drive up expenses, we watched these busy-body, brainwashed Germans grovel and besmirch their own nest. What a spectacle for the press! On opening day there were 22 press reporters there from all over Europe. The French television crew ran immediately afoul of the court and had a run-in with the prosecutor because, although they had been given the right to film us in the courtroom, someone (most likely a police stoolie) protested about being filmed, and a big commotion resulted, nearly causing an international incident.

I was able to explain to the French TV teams that in Germany repression was alive and well. We met later at a press conference where my attorney spoke at length and explained the case against me, in a brilliant performance of showmanship, interspersed with "legalese!" It was filmed and reported by over a dozen reporters.

Danish TV, German TV stations, two French TV networks, CBS and German print media, as well as some radio stations, had sent some representatives.

German spectators in the courtroom who know the local scene were surprised by the intense media interest in my case. I was not. Canadian press covered the case long distance via their Berlin representative.

For weeks we watched films which showed a much slimmer Ernst Zündel with lots of hair on his head. Outside the courtroom spectators would come up to me and tug at my sleeve, asking me where they could purchase the 10-11 year-old videos. One businessman wanted to play one speech I gave years ago in Brussels, Belgium, to a group of his business associates. He had driven for hours from some distant place because someone from Munich had told him that there would be another "Revisionist Film Festival of Zündel films" held in courtroom A221, "like last Friday!"

Early in the morning, spectators would line up in front of the police barriers that barred their way trying to get into the "Film Festival."

Policemen would alternate standing guard outside so that each one would get a chance to see the films. Luckily, several were repeated over a number of court days.

One policeman, whose emotionless facial expression had always amazed me, blurted out at me one late Friday afternoon while watching the video tapes, after I apologetically said to him, "I am sorry you had to sit one more time through these, by now boring, films" "Not at all, Herr Zündel, I find them interesting." And he added, "Nobody asked me about my opinion, but I find you sympatisch." Well, at least we were making progress.

It was nice to come into the courtroom in the morning and find it packed. Much to the annoyance of the prosecutor and the judge, the spectators would rise and break into a round of applause as I entered. Soon I was a familiar face, and policemen, court clerks and other staff members would greet me: "Guten Morgen, Herr Zündel!" There were touching scenes also, when people would come up and hand me an envelope containing a letter, a Christmas card and some donations. Once, a collection was taken up by a stranger outside with the waiting crowd, it amounted to almost $500.00, which was promptly given to one of our expert witnesses for his hotel bill and trainfare. Another, obviously poor, pensioner came up to me during a break and shyly gave me an orange, sharing his lunch with me. Others showed through kindness that they appreciated what I was doing, like the one man who insisted in paying for Dr. Faurisson's meal, when he saw me standing in line at the cashier's in the courthouse cafeteria. One elderly lady insisted that I take her 21-year-old Mercedes Diesel to do my errands around Bavaria, helping me save money this way.

Another man invited me to spend a holiday, free of charge, in his apartment near Adolf Hitler's house in Berchtesgaden. One woman gave me a sweater because I had complained about feeling cold in Munich's damp weather.

The son of Rudolf Hess invited me to appear at the annual meeting of his Rudolf Hess Memorial Association, where I was received with a standing ovation, and asked by plainclothes policemen if I could ask Herr Hess to please allow him into the closed meeting. He said he was interested to learn about the fate of Rudolf Hess. He was promptly admitted, later on thanking me.

During the court breaks I would dash off to give speeches to supporters and visit elderly supporters, one of them terminally ill with lung cancer.

I went to visit my mother in the old homestead in the Black Forest and pruned trees for her. I fixed eavestroughs on the 400 year-old house, dug over my mother's garden, and with a longtime ladyfriend from Canada, who had joined me, chopped wood and carried it into the woodshed, like generations of my forbears had done before me, and what I had done as a boy while growing up. All this was pretty soul-wrenching stuff. Every stone, every board, every step reminded me of my past, of my father, my brothers and sisters, of the terror experienced in the bunker during the Allied air raids during the war and of the fear and terror when Algerian and Moroccan troops "liberated us" in 1945 of our earthly treasures and meager possessions.

I used my father's hand-made rakes, his hand-made, 60 year-old wooden ladders, his ancient saws and axes. In the shed, among the woodworm-eaten ceiling boards, I marveled at the adze marks, yes, adze marks, a tool that used by European carpenters in the 16th century, before saws were used to make beams. It was like an ax put sideways on a handle, much like a garden hoe. Our house was constructed of beams hewn like that....

While I worked away and the minutes turned into hours, I was suddenly yanked back into the present by my beeping mobile phone, which I had rented for the duration of my stay in Germany. The beeping noise signaled the intrusion of the modern age, amongst all this idyllic primitive simplicity.

It was my German lawyer, calling me from distant Hamburg, asking me to get in touch with my trusted advisor, Dr. Faurisson of France. He thought we had a real chance to get Dr. Faurisson qualified as an expert witness in my German courtcase—a scheme I had been working on for years.

Suddenly the real, nasty world, the ugly world of political and judicial persecution once again intruded into my life, and the telephone and the calculator became my new tools. Airline fares and travel schedules had to be calculated and compared.

Once again, money and costs became considerations and "the availability to witness" of this intellectual giant of Revisionism who, over the years, has become my friend.

I called him, and he told me of the impending birth of some long awaited grandchild. He also feared that his favorite aunt, 92 years of age, lay dying. However, he said, moving me almost to tears as I stood there in my mother's field talking to him over that miracle of modern communications, the cordless phone, "when Zündel calls, Faurisson responds."

True to his word, as always in the past, he rushed to my side and again leaped into the breach in that Munich courtroom.

I had to bid farewell to my mother and rushed back to Munich. Before I left, she insisted that I have a simple meal of "Maultaschen und Nudeln" with her—a Swabian peasant meal that we had enjoyed as kids in the past.

Soon I had shed my peasant's pants and sweaty shirt, washed myself and stored away my telephone on the car seat, and rushed towards Munich on Adolf Hitler's magnificent Autobahns.

My Munich lawyer, Dr. Goebel, had worked a legal miracle and had obtained the cooperation of the local Gerichtsvollzieher, a court officer, to serve a direct subpoena or Vorladung for the court on the 6th of December 1991, which is a rarely used and complex legal manoeuvre called a direkte Vorladung, which does not need the judge's or the court's sanction or approval, which is the normal or standard way in German court cases.

The gamble is that the judge won't allow the witness to give testimony and then the expenses have to be borne immediately by the accused. I was willing to take this chance, in order to get my witness at least into the witness stand. I had succeeded with that manoeuvre to get Fred Leuchter into the witness chair for over an hour and a half, which was a major breakthrough for us. There was every likelihood that once again I would work with Dr. Faurisson, who was to give testimony in the Diary of Anne Frank matter.

Once the prosecutor and judge realized who was to be the next witness, panic gripped the court. Dr. Faurisson had written a Gutachten on this famous "diary" for another court case. Jürgen Rieger had handled several Diary of Anne Frank A Fraud? cases in Germany, which had achieved national prominence and notoriety.

The German national newsweekly, Der Spiegel, had reported as long ago as 1981 about a German Federal Criminal Office's forensic examination which had found out that portions of the diary had been written with a ballpoint pen, which only became available in 1951.

My own attorney had prepared a whole series of motions and requests for witnesses from the above Federal Agency, and suddenly the judge, in collusion with the prosecutor, decided that one could drop the charges relating to me having "insulted the memory of Anne Frank"—a crime in modern day Germany.

So the mere fact that Dr. Faurisson was present in the courtroom got those charges dropped. It was clear that the judge and prosecutor feared Dr. Faurisson's testimony, the way the devil fears holy water.

We tried to have him qualified for the other charges, but to no avail. The prosecutor became almost hysterical in his attacks on the qualifications of Dr. Faurisson, who had twice been admitted in Canada as an expert witness in my cases there.

In the end, judge and prosecutor refused to admit Dr. Faurisson, not even questioning him as to his qualifications, training, etc. My attorneys called these rulings totally contrary to law, which guarantee me an automatic right to approach a higher court for redress.

Next we called a German-trained Diplom Chemiker, who works for the prestigious Max Plan Institute in Stuttgart, as an expert witness, since judge and prosecutor had rejected Leuchter partially because he had no qualifications in chemistry, we thought he was going to be a "shoo-in!"

This man had gone to Auschwitz and Birkenau and had undertaken independent studies there, and once again had taken soil and other samples which he had tested in strictly scientific, controlled experiments with astonishing results.

I had been in close contact with him via Dr. Lindsey, who was a witness in my first trial. I worked hard to get this man to Munich, visiting him in Stuttgart and persuading him about the importance of his testimony.

Once again, the judge and the prosecutor rejected this expert because they said, "the SS had blown up all the facilities at Auschwitz," and thus it was no wonder that the chemical test results were the way they were...

This led to such fierce exchanges that the judge called a recess and my lawyers made one more motion to the judge to disqualify himself from the case because of his own Befangenheit—his own prejudices in the case.

Several such motions had been made by us, all of which were turned down by the judge, as was this new one.

While the judge considered whether he should disqualify himself from the case, further revisionist video tapes were played to a packed courtroom.

The sixth day of court came to an end when I was cross-examined as to my financial means in regards to paying the $27,000 fine, which the first anonymous judge imposed on me.

Then it was off to Dr. Goebel's office to prepare an affidavit to help Doug Christie fend off a Jewish inspired attack against me in the Supreme Court of Canada for allegedly having broken my "Gag Order" with these Munich court proceedings.

Doug Christie had been sent 50 pages of documents by the Attorney General of Ontario, on the evening of the 5th of December 1991, which were used by the Ontario Attorney General's Office, B'nai B'rith and Canadian Jewish Congress officials with the media and as they appeared in the Supreme Court of Canada on the 10th of December 1991.

It never ceases to amaze me how the government and justice department officials are always ready and eager to do the bidding of this noisy, aggressive minority in our midst.

It is as if government largely existed to exclusively serve Zionist interests. The majority of government lawyers were Jews in Ottawa.

Certainly no money was spared by the government of the day in prosecuting, or really persecuting, me for my beliefs in Ontario in the past.

There was absolutely no difference in style or behavior in this "persecution through prosecution" during the time in office of the Conservative, Liberal and now the Socialist government of Ontario. It really does make you wonder if the "John Birchers" are right when they say that governments don't change after elections, only new faces replace old faces, with a different administration, but the government remains the same!

> Mark Twain

My next German court appearance takes place on December 16, 1991. On that day I will return to Germany, to be again convicted, for, make no mistake about it, these political trials are not there to find the truth or to dispense impartial Justice!

These trials are there solely to criminalize the politically uncomfortable and dangerous opposition. They really are underhanded compliments.

Little has changed since the time of the Pharisees and those who shouted, "Crucify him, Crucify him," only in this corrupt age the judges don't even have the decency of a Pontius Pilate, who at least said, "I find no fault with this man." All I have heard from judges, who after all are not stupid people, and who have all gone to the finest law schools of their respective countries, were usually nasty remarks, delivered in a sanctimonious manner, when even the simplest of people could see the transparentness of their hypocritical rulings and decisions.

The one great exception I will always remember and treasure is the behavior of the former Chief Justice of Ontario, Howland, and some members of his court, who granted me my first fair and civilized hearing in a courtroom, and who ruled unanimously in my favor.

The German judge, a man of the new generation, had every opportunity given to him by me and my witnesses and attorneys to advance the cause of Justice in postwar Germany. He had the opportunity, as my attorneys both explained to him on Friday, December 6, 1991, to turn over a new leaf for the German legal system. Criminal justice rules even give him the instrument, the means to do it in Germany. There is a section that says that the German equivalent of "Judicial Notice" called Offenkundigkeit can be challenged by an accused if he can prove that he has substantially new, hard scientific or forensic evidence to back up his claims. We had and have this evidence!

Fred Leuchter, Dr. Faurisson and Dipl. Chemiker Germar Rudolf, had they been allowed to testify and had they been given the opportunity to present their documents and findings, would have cut the Gordian Knot in this entangled judicial mess.

Alas! it was not to be! At least not this time, or at least not in this Bavarian court. Attorney Rieger said it with all the passion and fervor of a man convinced of the correctness of his cause that for hundreds of years, many thousands of women were burned at the stake as witches, after being convicted by properly and duly constituted German courts, for having sexual relations with the devil, because that was "offenkundig" also. "That the devil had sex with these witches was then 'offenkundig,' the courts took this as established fact for centuries."

In Leningrad, seven Germans were executed in 1946 for murdering the Polish officers corps in Katyn—in April 1991 Gorbachev officially apologized and admitted that the K.G.B had murdered these 14,000 Poles. The man who had actually organized the killings was still living, aged 89, in Moscow. He was videotaped by the Soviet prosecutors and admitted having received the orders from Stalin's (not Hitler's) government. During the Nuremberg Trials, the Nazis' responsibility for the mass murders of Katyn was also offenkundig.

In Auschwitz, the Pope blessed 4 million victims in 1979—in 1990, the Polish authorities had the 4 million figure chiseled out of the stone tablets. Today, no figures are given about the real number of victims there—the Poles say, an investigation by an international commission of historians should determine the exact numbers.

That's the way change will come, slowly at first, but come it will! You can rest assured!

You my friends, in the far flung corners of this beautiful earth, the blue planet, as it is rightly and affectionately called by some, you will live to see the day, when, like Katyn yesterday, the other crimes of WW II will be exposed and HISTORY WILL BE REWRITTEN. Give it time; you have given me the means over the years to do some spectacular and trail-blazing research work.

I make you a promise and give you my renewed pledge—give me the means and we will finish the job.

The trial expenses in Germany and the preparation in going to the Supreme Court one more time have once again been tremendous.

The production of the many factums, books of authorities and additional attorneys which had to be hired to act as agents in the Supreme Court of Canada has cost a lot of money...

Doug was pitted, as per usual, against 8 government and Jewish lawyers. Several Jews also acting for the government.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association spoke supposedly in our favor. Mr. Rosenberg, their lawyer, tried to avoid his animosity against me.

The rest of the proceedings were sheer "character assassination" of me by these "hired guns" or "government hit-squads" who use and abuse their official positions to curry favor with the political hacks or the various Zionist lobby groups in this country.

The general thrust was that the poor, weak and beleaguered, defenseless Jewish community in this country needed repressive, ancient laws to stifle criticism of their schemes and nefarious activities.

I note with amusement the fact that the recently deceased, or murdered, crook and Jewish con-man, Robert Maxwell, was a large financial contributor to the pro-Holocaust lobby in England. He defrauded his company's pension funds by almost a billion pounds.

Ivan Boesky, convicted inside trader who swindled the investors out of hundreds of millions of dollars, and Mr. Milken, the "junkbond wunderkind" and convicted fraud artist, all were heavy contributors to holocaust causes and museums. So were the Belzbergs in Canada.

Some people say, that this represented "malpractice" or "life insurance" for these people! Interesting thought! Very interesting.

Help me as best you can.

I know it is Christmas and you face expenses of your own. What nicer gift, however, can you give yourself, your children or grandchildren, but the truth about history? The truth about the times in which you yourself lived and worked and loved?

I thank you—you are terrific people!

Have a good Christmas and a healthy New Year.

HELP CROATIA!

The war in Croatia—the murder of a valiant people, is still going on in that Balkan country. The Europeans, inspite of their mouthings, have done little to curb Serbian aggression and war crimes there. The Germans, or better, their Bonn Puppet Regime, are betraying an old ally.

Anyone wanting to help the Croatians in their current plight should call the Croatian Büro in Stuttgart, Germany: Tel. No. 011-49-711-616620. Ask for Mrs. Zdenka Babic. Offer any assistance you can! THEY DESERVE IT!

ERNST ZÜNDEL:

Persecution through Prosecution

Criminalizing Zionism's Opposition!

To my friends around the world! 30 December 1991

Another year of activity and intellectual combat is drawing to a close for us. The time has come to review what was, what is, and what our fate may be in the new year.

For me personally, an important chapter of my life inched its way toward its final resolution. I am naturally referring to my 10-year struggle in the courts of Canada, where I defended myself against the attacks of the Zionist enemy, which likes to use the taxpayer's money and pliable careerist civil servants, politicians, prosecutors, police officials and others, to silence opponents. They love the extra benefits of:

a) Not having to spend their own money to defeat their enemies.

b) Not having to meet their opposition out in the open, to answer the opposition's claims and charges of Zionist lies, corruption and falsification.

c) They especially like the financial punishment they can inflict on their opponents with these trials (persecution through prosecution).

d) Naturally, if a "Gag Order" can be imposed on the political opponent to silence him by a judge's order, that's a bonus for these intellectual terrorists.

e) The crowning achievement is the imprisonment of the victim, even if it is only temporary, because it isolates the victim from the public and frequently from his supporters and friends.

f) They also love the benefit of this legal terrorism, where they manipulate government officials, prosecutors, members of parliament, government ministers and Human Rights Commissions, to give them "something for nothing."

For, make no mistake about it, the "Jewish Lobby," or the Jews who make a living and a career out of promoting Jewish policies and Jewish goals, also have to justify their salaries, their travel budgets and their office costs to their Jewish supporters.

One only has to read the various Jewish newspapers around the world to know and realize that the competition amongst Jewish organizations for support and donations, as well as recognition, is as fierce and as real as is the competition for support amongst "right-wing" or "Revisionist" groups.

The laws of nature, or business and commerce, do not get suspended for the Jews either. They are only better organized for the time being, that's all. However, there is no need to despair. We have delivered some stunning blows to these people's hidden agenda, and will continue to do so in the future.

Their evil empires and their monstrous creations, like the Soviet Union, and soon American (Jewish) style dog-eat-dog capitalism, are crumbling because they were conceived by evil men, with nothing but evil in their hearts and minds, and only evil as their goals. Nature is striking back everywhere and these ghetto dwellers of the mind are reeling everywhere.

El Al Airlines had a big advertisement in one of the Jewish papers, bragging that over 3000 Jews left the Soviet Union in one long weekend alone and that the planes take off at 4 am from Moscow. Why? Why so early in the morning? Check-in time must be 2 am in that case! Well, they don't want the goyim to see that the rats are leaving the sinking ship.

These people know that once the archives are opened in the newly liberated republics the criminal nature of the old Bolshevik regime will be revealed to their formerly subjected populations. Then these long-suffering victims of Bolshevism might well take revenge, real physical, violent revenge against the descendants of Bronstein (Trotsky), Kaganovich, Litvinoff, Sobelsohn and the whole gang of cutthroats, terrorists, murderers, political assassins and gulag-keepers that the ghettos of Russia and the Bronx spawned in 1905, 1917 and thereafter.

Compared to what revelations will come out of the archives in the East in the next few years, all the so-called "evidence" and "documents" which the Allies of 1945 bandied about the Germans and the National Socialist regime with will become "chicken feed."

So, if I was a Soviet Jew, even if I was innocent, and never tortured a prisoner in one of the many torture chambers of the Cheka or the KGB, I would be taking the first plane out. I, too, would emigrate to the racist, bankrupt statelet they like to call Israel.

For these people know that when the long-suffering slavic populations are finally freed from their shackles of fear and repression, that pogroms are coming. Today Russia and the various republics are in turmoil, tomorrow they will be in civil war. They are armed to the teeth, and the people who have these arms are desperate, cold, hungry, and angry.

That's not a safe place to be for anybody, and least of all for a Jew to be. Once again I repeat what I have often stated in speeches, during talk-shows and in private: it has been Hell to be a German since 1945 in this world, dominated by those who won the military victory in Europe in 1945; but we Germans came through it all, bruised in our psyche, buffeted by the currents of defeat and our reputation tarnished by the lies and accusations of a merciless enemy.

We have survived in body, if not in soul! Now let's see what the self-proclaimed "Marxist revolutionaries" and "Capitalists" of yesterday will do, how they will behave in their trials which will come, and how they respond to the accusations of their prosecutors, after their nights in the dungeons of Hell. We have only had a little inkling of how the KGB putchists behaved in Moscow, after the very cursory investigations and only a few days of incarcerations.

We have seen their behavior in former East Germany, where they were and are still treated with kid gloves.

Make no mistake about it, the Poles will want revenge for Katyn. The Ukrainians will want revenge for the famine of the Kulaks; the Czarists will want revenge for what happened to the Czar, his family and the Russian nobility and elite then. The Baltic peoples will want those brought to justice who deported many hundreds of thousands to their deaths after the Soviet takeover in 1939. And guess what they will find?

Those who know the history of the time know exactly whom they will accuse and who they won't find very difficult to convict.

And by some miracle of divine justice and retribution, the very laws and statutes and proceedings devised by the Kempners, Klarsfeld, Wiesenthals and Gideon Hausners, they will be used to hunt those who thought that they were untouchable for their crimes. Thus Karma is being worked on earth as it will be in heaven. No one is immune from the immutable laws of Nature and of God. No one! Not even Jews!

A wise Croatian friend of mine, Jerome Brentar, says that all evil carries within itself the seed of its own destruction—and so it is! [Mr. Brentar is the owner of Euro-Travel Agency in Cleveland, Ohio. Call him at 800-423-3692 for assistance in arranging your travel plans for the coming vacation season. If there is a travel agent who deserves your support, MR. BRENTAR IS IT! — Ed. LB],

But back to the real world of today:

Most of you know from the mainstream media that I was convicted yet again in Germany after a "kangaroo court" proceeding that is a shame for a great people like the Germans.

How my Germans can have allowed such an abomination of a legal system like that without having a revolution, like the Anglo-Saxons already had a thousand years ago, is a puzzle and of great concern to me!

Despite the "judicial meatgrinder" that I have been put through In Canada for the last ten years, I find myself lucky, and congratulate myself that if I had to be harassed by the judiciary, it was better here than in Germany. Perversely, I have come to realize that I was able to serve the cause of truth, and that of my own German people, better in Canada than I could have in the Germany of today.

That brings me to the details of the "trial" that just concluded. Not one of my expert witnesses was allowed to give testimony. The State Prosecutor and the Judge found all of them incompetent, even though Canadian courts had found them to be experts in their fields after careful scrutiny.

Not even a German-educated and -trained Diplom Chemiker from the Max Plank Institute was allowed to testify even though he had his German credentials and was right there in the courthouse and in the courtroom!

I gave the Germans in charge there the chance of a lifetime—not to free me—but to free themselves from the Allied monkey on their backs, or the "mental occupation of their minds," as I call it, that will still be there after the Allied Occupation troops have left Germany.

Even though Judge Werner Melders admitted in his closing diatribe that undoubtedly some of the witnesses to the 'Holocaust' and in War Crimes Trials had been lying or had exaggerated, and that undoubtedly the Allies had forged some documents which were used in past courtcases...there was no doubt in his mind, and after all, numerous previous German courtcases had proven this much: that there was a Holocaust, and that millions of Jews were killed by the Nazis in places like Auschwitz and other death camps. He also said that there are mountains of evidence of Nazi crimes, singular in their magnitude. He said that there were many documents, orders, purchasing orders, plans, etc., for the building of the gas chambers and for ordering Zyklon B, etc.

I had to be punished for my views, for my admiration of Hitler and for my "marketing of historical lies." He had considered jailing me, but figured that I was beyond rehabilitation, therefore I had to be punished with a heavy fine. He mentioned that Germany had nothing to fear from me, because German society was solid in its belief in Nazi crimes, and that Revisionists were no danger! The prosecutor spoke in similar tones.

My attorneys did all the talking, about technical and legal as well as historical questions and topics for me, for I was in a grey zone with my Canadian Gag Order. I did not want to risk the outcome of my case in Ottawa by my performance in Munich. That proved a wise decision, for when I got to Ottawa, Doug Christie told me that the Munich Justice Ministry had faxed 50 pages of documents and background material about me, my activities in Europe and the proceedings in Germany to the authorities in Canada. The material was promptly used by some hysterical Jewess-lawyer from the Attorney General's office in the Supreme Court, in an attempt to poison the attitude of these Supreme Court Justices against me. So I did not personally address the Holocaust topic, in or outside court.

There are others in Europe who are doing this increasingly, relying on the Leuchter findings, the documents produced in my lengthy court appearance in Canada, etc.

What the courts eventually decide in Canada and Germany is, of course, of interest to me, because it affects my freedom, my life, my reputation and my future.

However, I have a feeling that as events in Eastern Europe, in Canada and in the United States unfold in these politically and economically troubled times, history will be kind to me, kinder than it will be to my enemies, in any case. In the meantime, I have gone to the "University of Life" and had experiences which few men or women have had in their lives.

I have battled the enemies of truth and freedom, and, with my friends, supporters and my attorneys, have welded together a team that has stared down two states and tyrannical dictatorial regimes. We have fought repression and hypocrisy. We have won some magnificent victories, and suffered some painful setbacks. But we have never wavered—we have stayed the course.

Some comrades gave in, and removed themselves from the battle to pursue their private, selfish dreams. Others have died of broken hearts, of sickness and of old age.

Thus life was lived to the fullest, and as long as I enjoy the trust, the comradeship and loyalty of so many diverse people around the world, as long as that miracle persists, I will persist.

Ours is a never ending struggle of global proportions—it is the noblest of all causes. The cause of human freedom in our age. We are the custodian of this concept and it is ours to pass on to our children.

It was my pleasure to be one of the champions, one of the leaders in this struggle in this generation. I am proud of our record and can proclaim to you who have supported me for so long in this fight: Victory will ultimately be ours, because there is equilibrium in the Universe. There is no imbalance in Nature for long and no vacuum either.

I thank you for your support in the past and in the future. Have a good New Year. All the Best,

Ernst Zündel

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed is a contribution to keep Liberty Bell afloat. I only just recently found Liberty Bell and I enjoy it the most because it is the best of all the patriot magazines. I want to keep reading it.

Liberty Bell is so good that it is still years ahead of its time. Once the final collapse hits and the bloodbath begins, Liberty Bell will come into its own right.

I suspect the real reason for closing down Liberty Bell is your realization that America and the White Race are doomed to die. We all know this. We are wasting our time on these American white idiots; goyim, hell-bent on racial suicide.

The point is this. We need the spiritual and intellectual food for thought found in Liberty Bell. It is hopeless. But, let's at least die with dignity. The few of us out there need the moral support of knowing there are others, few that they are. Keep up the good work!

Sincerely, J.T., Idaho

Dear Kinsman,

I know times are tough! We have had two people put in prison this last year.

I am renewing my subscription and should have a couple more people to get their own subscription. I have sent a little extra; I only wish it could be more! I pray to the Wise One Eyed God Up High that you don't have to quit publishing Liberty Bell. For Folk, Fatherland and Future,

Dear George:

I am sorry to learn that the support you experienced in the past was, and probably still is, quite meager. I will try on my part to help with the little I can do. You see on the flyer what I can pledge so far. Enclosed is also the $50. for my immediate help. I hope that you can stay afloat and still transmit the messages as you did in the past. The struggle of free men is not easy indeed. This country got itself in such a mess that I can not envision how it can get itself out from under the yoke of the international financiers who call the shots of this government. George, if you can still stay in this fight, I'll try to do what I can.

E.G., Maryland

Dear Mr. Dietz:

The receipt of your fund appeal letter prompts this reply. I am sure you are aware that a person living on a fixed pension and Social Security, the purchasing power of which decreases with every passing day, who donates, say $5.00 is, relatively speaking, sacrificing far more than a wealthy person who is able to give $5000. with little or no appreciable dent in his or her standard of living. Unfortunately, I must consider myself much nearer to the former category than the latter. Never-the-less, I sincerely want to contribute something, even if it hurts. Instauration, Manfred Roeder, Colin Jordan, Ernst Zündel, the IHR, and John Tyndall's British National Party are, in my opinion, all worthy of support and it grieves me that I can contribute to only a few, and even then only very modestly...

The enclosed check in the amount of $100 is for the following: $50. for the enclosed order and $50. to help get you out of the hole...

Yours sincerely, W.S., Turkey

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I really appreciated your Christmas Card. It is impossible to increase my monthly pledge [of $10./month] as I am totally dependent on Social Security. I will send a little extra from time to time. Alas, I sincerely hope you get pledges to keep from folding because it would be a tragedy to have to discontinue. Please let me know how it turns out on my next statement. I have been sick since receiving your fund appeal letter.

Mrs. J.G., Virginia

George,

Sincere Aryan greetings! I hope this letter finds you in the best of health and remaining strong. I am doing good, shoulders squared! Well sir, I just read that pamphlet you sent me, "Communism is Irish" and I got a very good laugh, after my friend pointed out to me that it was some kinda joke, that is. If it wouldn't have been for Karl *Mc*Marx (The only name that I ever heard of), I'd probably be swinging from the light fixture in my cell right now. I guess in twenty years or so I will be able to look back on this day and say, "Damn! To be young again." I swear sir, that I was sitting here trying to figure out how in the heck the Jews got off so easy.

I finished the book Mein Kampf and passed it down to one of my comrades. I plan to study it thoroughly after he is finished with it. I must say that that is the best book that I have ever read. There was not one paragraph that didn't teach me something. It's weird that something as simple as the statement Adolf made about dipping into his own pocket to make ends meet can tear a person apart. Or the statement about his boys fighting 50 against 800 can...well you know. I tell you sir, as long as I remain alive, I will keep the fight going! The one thing that drives me down is that I may not be able to do enough. But I will do whatever I can, whenever I can, and I guess that is all each of us as individuals can do.

I have enclosed 60-29¢ stamps in this letters and I would like to order the book This Time the World by Cmdr. G.L. Rockwell. Please keep the rest of the money as a gift. If my buying books with stamps is a burden to you, then please let me know and I will go through the T.D.C. [Texas Department of Corrections] system and get a money order from now on, just send me a short note. I've also been trying to talk to my mom about the Jews and she wrote back and said that her boss is a Jew! She said this thing gave her three raises and that it always portrays itself as a nice human being! I spit on the letter and built a fire that only the Klan could compete with...

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed is check for $137. for which will you please send the Bell for another year (presses willing) and a copy of The Anti-Humans, the balance is a little Hilfe—but apparently it's a lot of Hilfe you need. But if all fails, Gott forbid (life without you and "Ollie" would be like losing a wheel on a bicycle), then apply all to your usurers.

Thanks for all, D.R., California

Dear George:

Enclosed you will find my renewal for LB. I am sorry to say that my father Orazio passed away on Dec. 12th, the greatest and most intelligent man I've ever met or known. All that I've leaarned was by and through my father. He sought justice and never found it! After a long quest for truth and common sense, spanning over 30 years of studying, and some good sources, he was satisfied with your magazine, and especially Dr. Oliver, whom he read for 30 years! Mr. Carter is also a good writer, as well as the others. When I can, I will send you some cash to help out...

Yours truly, A.P., New York

George Dietz,

Since I was not a subscriber at your last call for "nutrients," I am glad to hear of your chance to prevent the demise of your most withe-worthy journal. I hope that my recent hyper-reaction to the German newspaper article had some unction in your screwing up your courage to ask for help (Dr. "O" sez the truth is on its way [see "To See Ourselves", by Dr. "O", in this issue of Liberty Bell]). Of course, nothing can really repay you (us) for social and financial losses due to unpopular protagonisms but the personal satisfaction of tasting the "mead" of the hero.

Out of a very modest income I give my widower's mite to some 40 White promoters, so you see not much is possible to any one, but I will plan to contribute meaningfully to you twice a year. What I am offering now is far out of my standard abilities—till it hurts— they say, but I am asking for "balm" to go with it...thus please find enclosed $150. to be applied as follows: going backward from and including 1989, please send me those Liberty Bells in which Dr. Oliver has contributed, of course inclusive of shipping and whatever contribution you need to make it a worthwhile deal for the health of your worthy journal.

George, I am 80 and it is no very great satisfaction, in view of our plight, to say that I have been, in my own timid way, resisting the tide of color for 50 years—I never had any position of influence—but now, with such mighty front lines as yourself, I hope to make more meaningful contributions.

Gratefully yours, G.S., Colorado

Dear Mr. Dietz:

It is a sad day when there are not enough funds available to keep LB operational, especially when once considers the amount wasted on frauds, charlatans, blind alleys and obviously predetermined failures, all the reasons why have been enumerated in LB over the years and all I can do is add to the various authors' articles by stating that in my small travels in this country, all the items covered are readily apparent, chiefly, the inability of Aryans to THINK.

I suppose we could excuse them and say, "Well, after all, the mass media are rather heavy medicine," however, that probably won't console us when the impending doom arrives.

Speaking for myself only, I'd say I had about a 95% failure rate when exposing people to LB. Thus it appears to me only a tiny minority of Aryans can listen to the truth (of their plight), much less comprehend it and even less be willing to consider even doing anything about it. What is most unfortunate is when Boobus Americanus goes under, we will most likely go with them; personally I'd hate to suffer for the stupidity of others.

However, I for one feel very fortunate, even privileged, to have been exposed to LB these past years. To have a truthful estimation of our present condition is worth its weight in gold. I sincerely hope LB can survive, and to do my part I am sending $100 that you can keep regardless of the outcome, plus a yearly donation should LB stay solvent. If, on the other hand, should LB pass on, you Mr. Dietz & your family, the contributing writers and Dr. Oliver have my deepest respect and eternal gratitude for publishing LB in that ethical and moral standard, the time honored Aryan tradition of intellectual honesty.

Respectfully yours, V.G., Michigan

Dear Mr. Dietz:

My wife and I were worried that something was wrong in WV when we didn't receive our subscription to LB. We had no idea that your work was in such peril. We are sending along what we can for this emergency [$100.]—we wish we could do more. Without you and Dr. Oliver this world would be an ever sorrier a place.

Yours truly, J.P., New York State

Dear George:

Thank you for helping track down that lost package...

Enclosed is an excerpt from the New Jewish Encyclopedia, Behrman House, New York, 1962. See the excerpt on Haym Salomon. Notice that the Jews themselves call him the "financier" of the American Revolution. He acted as a "broker." "Broker" to whom? Since he was Jewish, wouldn't it be logical to assume that he went to the Jewish banking houses to get the money? Banks like the Rothschilds, the Warburgs, the Lehmans, the Schiffs, and the Kuhn, Loebs? Didn't the Rothschilds finance the Hessian mercenaries to quell the American Revolution? Were the Jews on both sides?

We also learn from the article that Salomon gave "personal loans" to men in public office. Weren't these men our Founding Fathers? Where did they get hard cash to buy their estates, land, slaves, and machinery? From the Jews? The answer to all these questions is yes!

So what does all this mean? Don't we also know that George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and the majority of the Founding Fathers were Freemasons? Don't we also know that what we read about the Freemasons is true? That Freemasonry is Judaism from top to bottom? Here's the answer. THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION WAS JUST ANOTHER JUDAEO-MASONIC REVOLUTION! So what are we fighting for after all?

Publicus Prudentis, Idaho

cc: Dr. R.P. Oliver

Dear Mr. [Publicus Prudentis]

I have a photocopy of your letter of the fifteenth to Mr. Dietz.

It would be difficult to prove your conclusion about the American Revolution, but in its favor you may note that without the Declaration of Independence (with its nonsense about all men being created equal) and the success of the American colonies' revolt against the mother country (made possible, of course, by the folly of Louis XVI in giving the colonies the requisite military and naval support), the French Revolution in all probability would never have taken place.

The Americans were so shocked by that outburst of savagery that they tried to prevent "democracy" when they formulated the Constitution. On the failure of that effort, see my article in Liberty Bell, January 1987.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,
Revilo P. Oliver

Dear George & the rest of the LB family,

The enclosed contribution is yours to keep in any event. I would hate to see the Liberty Bell die, but, considering the conditions, I would not blame you if you ceased publication. You have gone through years of hard times, and I greatly appreciate your dedication and sacrifice that have made possible the continued publication of the Liberty Bell. Your magazine is my favorite and has provided so much useful Information through the years. It was articles in Liberty Bell that were a great help when I was studying Christianity. The articles helped me decide that Christianity and the Bible are basically false.

I particularly enjoy Revilo Oliver's writings; his information and logical analyses are unsurpassed, in my experience.

My best wishes to you and the continuation of the Liberty Bell. If publication must be stopped, I am confident that you have done all that could be asked of you in the fight to save our race as well as the magazine. Therefore, do not feel guilty in any event. I hope for the perpetuation, significant up-breeing, and expansion of true White people and and our culture. For this we need honesty and truth, as exemplified by the Liberty Bell. I hope all there are healthy and happy.

Sincerely, E.A.S., Missouri

Dear George:

Sorry about the delay in responding. I am also sorry to hear of the financial difficulties. Whom can we blame for your condition but the huge number of German descended docile cows who accept everything they are handed by the commercial newspapers and the damn Zionists. They prefer to howl to the super Hebe on Sun-Day. They prefer to watch Hebe porn flicks the other six days of the week. They are happy to howl in unison when they are told to do so—Saddam Hussein, Arafat, Nasser, Demjanjuk, any real German. That is what Christianity is about—worshiping Hebes. I am enclosing a cheque for $50. Please send me four copies of Gruesome Harvest and put the remaineder in the pot. I will send more later.

Best regards, H.A.T., California

Dear Mr. George Dietz,

We are enclosing a check for $50 and hope to send some each month. We sincerely hope you will be able to continue publishing Liberty Bell. It is a very fine publication; it would be missed.

Sincerely yours, Mr & Mrs S.W.K., Oregon

New Year's Greetings,

Sorry to hear about the financial distress of Liberty Bell Publications. I suppose its easy to understand—there's just not a large pool of potential supporters/readers of a publication like the Bell. Either "rightists" are mentally too crude to appreciate the level of political discourse carried on in the pages of the Bell (their level is more that of Racial Loyalty or WAR), or they are too close to what they imagine is the Mainstream (Kosher Conservative) Wm. Buckley/Congressional Conservative of the Newt Gingrich stripe, to associate themselves with the views aired in the Bell.

I do enjoy the Bell and, contrary to other Rightist publications, actually learn something by reading it—its breadth and depth (especially from Professor Oliver) is truly remarkable, what would we possibly do without him? His courage—and the courage of the Bell's publisher and editor—are probably the last of a vanishing breed, in this world of ever-mounting persecution of racial rightism.

I, too, have fallen on hard times—I am unemployed, and have been so for some time. Little prospect of better times is suggested by the direction in which the economy is moving. In fact, I don't think there will be a "general" recovery—only mini-boom-lets in particular segments of the economy. (The aim of the establishment never was to restore prosperity, but to destroy ever more American industries and agricultural production). It remains to be seen how much "prosperity" the government can stimulate by luring more foreign "investment" (including selling "American" visas to foreigners). Truly its a rotten world in which we have to live when it is in the hands of Jews to try to realize what they have been scorned for (and even ejected for) in the former Soviet Union (only they, the Jews, are succeeding swimmingly here in the Ole U.S.A.).

But I remain loyal to the Bell and, as almost the last publication to which I subscribe (Rightist or otherwise), I will continue to support it as best I can. Over the long haul, you (the editor of Liberty Bell) have been among the best friends the Movement has had—in terms of contributions; in terms of courage and sacrifice; and in terms of the wisdom of the advice (and the example) you have quietly imparted over the years.

So please find my modest contribution enclosed, and consider as reliable my promise to make regular monthly contributions. We do know of your sacrifices, and the generosity of your heart, and the danger to which you expose yours and yourself daily in the services you perform for figures in the Movement and the Movement itself.

With deepest respect, Yours, K.B. Ohio

Dear George & Betty:

Forgive my delay in writing, I've been pretty occupied since I returned home. My job at the plant started last month, and there were several stages of paperwork and related requirements to fulfill before that. It's going well, there are many good people there, especially on night, which I've been scheduled for when training ends in about two more weeks.

It was sad, but not unexpected, to see your recent announcement concerning the possible end of LB. The $100. M.O. I'm enclosing is for renewal and whatever expenses you can use it for. I understand the irritation of unplanned bills—upon returning to Michigan, I had to replace the gas tank, exhaust system, and the day after that was completed my fuel pump mysteriously stopped working. So there's a few hundred I'd rather not had to spend...

I hope enough people respond to your drive to keep going, and help you & Betty with the inevitable bills. I anxiously await each issue, and losing it would be a tragedy.

What ever decision you make, your work has given me access to information and understanding I never would have known. It's too early to know what difference that will make during whatever crisis awaits, but we must think positively.

Thanks for all your generosity, hospitality, and friendship. I'll stay in touch, hoping for good news.

Auf Wiedersehen, E.F., Michigan

Dear Mr. Dietz,

I'm afraid that my financial situation over the last couple of years has deteriorated too. The company I work for is in bankruptcy court and has a minimal workforce. I could be canned at any moment and there aren't many jobs to be found here in connecticut.

What this boils down is that I can not be a regular supporter of Liberty Bell again. I will try to send a donation every once in a while and keep buying books and videos from you. In the last year, most of my contributions have been to Ernst Zündel and the Patriot Defense Foundation for their ongoing battles in the courts. I will try to do more for Liberty Bell in 1992.

"88", W.J.C., Connecticut

Dear Sir:

There are three outstanding patriotic leaders running in the Republican primaries; Patrick Buchanan, Col. James "Bo" Gritz, and David Duke. Of course, no patriotic American has any chance of getting the Republican nomination, but all three are waking people up and getting things moving. Moreover, each is reaching a different area of the population. David Duke has accomplished a great deal already, the other two have just started in politics. They can't accomplish anything without financial support, and people can't send them financial support unless they know the address of the candidate. The enemy propaganda apparatus is constantly attacking them, but they are careful not to publish any addresses. I am enclosing a copy of a letter from a man who would have supported David Duke had he known his address. I suggest that at least every other month you publish the list of these addresses enclosed.

K.C., New York State.

Campaign addresses as of January 1992:

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations.

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

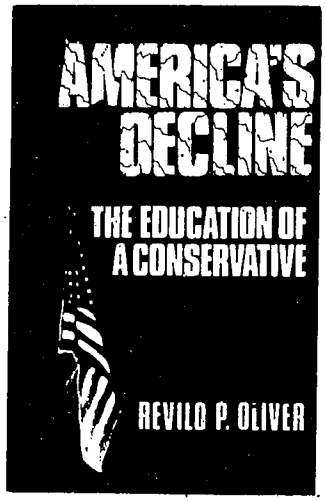
Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!



ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

The Lesson of Desert Storm

by Dr. William L. Pierce

Most of the yellow ribbons are down now, a year after the great victory. Perhaps passions have cooled enough for us to think objectively about America's latest "good war." Perhaps it is even possible to say a few things aloud without having some good ol' boy snarl "commie bastard!" at us and mutter darkly about what should be done with people who don't "support our troops."

First, I'll not waste any time with an explanation of why the blasting of Iraq was a "good war" (that is, a war which serves the interests of the Jews). Everyone reading this should understand that already, and I've gone into the matter with my "Open Letter to George Bush" and half a dozen other flyers distributed to the public by National Alliance members during the past year.

The lesson I want to draw from the war now is about democracy. It is a lesson based on the way the American people reacted to the war.

My task is made easier by the fact that the public reaction was so overwhelmingly one-sided. Depending on which poll one goes by, something between 86 and 94 per cent of Americans approved of Mr. Bush's campaign to chase the Iraqis out of Kuwait and teach Saddam Hussein not to get uppity again. Even if one doesn't trust the pollsters, it was clear enough from the sheer tonnage of yellow ribbons adorning every power pole, lamppost, tree, fire hydrant, parking meter, gatepost, and porch pillar in the country that most of the citizenry approved wholeheartedly of our high-tech slaughter of the Iraqis. Bureaucrats from Washington weren't being sent around the country to tie those ribbons; the people themselves were doing it. I don't know how it was everywhere else, but out here in hillbilly country even slow-moving pedestrians were in danger of being beribboned by patriotic yahoos. Seldom have the rubes been so solidly in agreement on anything.

Interestingly enough, however, if one discusses the issue now with some of the folks whose premises were decorated with ribbons then, one notes an almost apologetic tone. Ask: "Say, Clem, I wonder when the Emir of Kuwait is going to start dishing out some of that freedom we went over there to give him?" The answer is likely to be, "Well-l-l, shucks. I dunno. Who cares?" Or: "Hey, Billy Bob, do you reckon any of those American jobs we fought to save in the Gulf War will be coming our way soon?" Billy Bob will study his bootlaces for a minute, spit, and change the subject.

Now, to be fair to the Clems and Billy Bobs we should acknowledge that most of them weren't tying up yellow ribbons last year as an expression of bloodlust. With a few exceptions, they weren't saying, "Go Georgie, go! Kill them towelheads. Blast them Iraqis to smithereens!" Most of them were saying instead, "Hey, I'm an American. I'm patriotic. Our soldiers are risking their lives over in the Persian Gulf to protect the American way of life here, and I'm behind them 100 per cent." That's what TV told them to say, and they said it.

After a few false starts, the media masters hit on the right set of clichés and were able to evoke the conditioned reflexes they wanted from most Americans. The clichés that worked were the ones about being patriotic, about "supporting our troops," about not tolerating aggression, about restoring freedom and democracy, about protecting the "American way of life." The fact that all of these reasons for supporting the war were based on obvious lies didn't matter. Only a relatively small minority of the public was receptive to the arguments that there's nothing patriotic about fighting a war that's contrary to America's national interests, that the best way of supporting our troops would be to tell them the truth about the war and then bring them home without further shooting and bombing, that if we really wanted to punish aggression in the Middle East we should be aiming our bombs and missiles at Tel Aviv instead of Baghdad, that there never had been any freedom or democracy in Kuwait to restore, and that there was no conceivable way that Saddam Hussein, even if we simply left him alone to do his damnedest, could ever threaten the "American way of life."

Not only were most Americans not receptive to such arguments, but they'd become angry if one tried to reason with them. It was not uncommon to see otherwise intelligent people nodding soberly and agreeing with media assertions that "it's better to stop Saddam in Baghdad than to wait until we have to stop him in America."

What we saw a year ago was a herd being manipulated at a sub-rational level. Sub-rational manipulation of one sort or another is omnipresent in our society: for example, advertising people try very hard to find ways to push the correct sub-rational buttons which will lead consumers to buy their products. Politicians and preachers do the same sort of thing.

What made last year's manifestation of sub-rational herd behavior especially striking was the fact that the stakes were so much higher than in an advertising campaign designed to make us feel like unlovable slobs if we don't run out and buy the sponsor's brand of toothpaste. The stakes were not just the few hundred lives lost by American troops (after all, they're paid to accept risks, and more of them died in accidents than in combat anyway) or the few tens of billions of dollars of our taxes spent on the war by our government.

Supporting the war meant supporting a lie: a whole pack of lies, in fact. What's worse, they were transparent lies, which should have fooled no one. The idea of national honor has pretty well become a joke these days, but it certainly didn't do what might have been left of it any good to let ourselves be used once again to do Israel's butcher-work and then to pat ourselves on the back and swagger around as if we thought we were heroes for having done it. Our behavior showed more than a lack of honor; it also showed an appalling lack of national maturity and good sense.

And then there's the matter of the 150,000 or so Iraqi men, women, and children we slaughtered. Lest I seem hypocritical, I will confess now that, although my natural inclination is not to bother anyone who isn't bothering me, I have no really strong objection to killing Semites, whether they be Arabs or Jews; they're all a greasy lot, and the fewer of them in the world the better. I wouldn't mind seeing the whole Middle East nuked, were it not for the wildlife and the priceless antiquities which would be destroyed. That sentiment, however, is contrary to the one professed publicly by most of the supporters of the war, from Commander-in-Chief George Bush down to the Rotary Club types tying yellow ribbons on their front porches and the tattooed yahoos strutting about in Desert Storm T-shirts. They acted then and they act now as if America had sent its troops to the Persian Gulf for some sort of bloodless exercise in patriotism.

This total lack of concern for the tens of thousands of Iraqis we slaughtered is the most interesting aspect of the whole, shameful, bloody affair. Americans just aren't like that. They're basically a sentimental bunch. Remember what a degree of public revulsion the media were able to stir up two decades ago when they filled the front pages with those photographs of the 200 or so Vietnamese civilians our troops had massacred at My Lai? Remember all of the American tears that were shed over starving Ethiopian children just a couple of years ago when African famine was a regular TV news feature?

The Bush government, of course, has been very careful not to talk about Iraqi casualties or to release photographs showing dead Iraqis. The news media have, for the most part, ignored the issue as well. And the public certainly isn't demanding the gory details; they're still feeling good about having restored democracy to Kuwait, or whatever, and they don't want to spoil the feeling. And yet we all know that if the controlled media did make an issue of it—if they starting showing photographs of the corpses of Iraqi children incinerated by our bombs, of the arms and legs of dead Iraqi soldiers sticking out of the sand in those miles of collapsed Iraqi bunkers—and kept it up, night after night, with interviews with Iraqi survivors who had lost their families, Americans would begin having quite different thoughts about the war.

What it boils down to is that mass murder is real only when it can be seen on TV; it is real only when Dan Rather or Tom Brokaw or Peter Jennings says it is and asks us, with the proper tone of voice and facial expression, to be indignant about it. Every American knows that we slaughtered tens of thousands of Iraqis, but most don't let it bother them. This is as true of the bleeding hearts who weep buckets over starving children in Africa and would be horrified if our Coast Guard used those boats full of invading Haitians now headed toward our shores for gunnery practice as it is of most of the rest of the population.

The point is that it's not just a matter of the government or the media telling lies or suppressing information in order to fool the public. It's a matter of the public being manipulated just like a herd of sheep. Maybe Joe Sixpack really believed that baloney about restoring democracy to Kuwait, but no intelligent, knowledgeable American did. Yet most of them marched in lockstep with Joe. If they felt sheepish about it, they kept it a secret. They let not only their opinions be manipulated, but their morality as well.

And what does all of this say about democracy as a system of government? Democracy, remember, is the system which is based on the assumption that most citizens are able to decide what they want and make responsible choices; it is the system which pretends that if people are given the opportunity to go into a voting booth and pull a few levers every year or so they are in control of their government. Democracy is "rule by the majority." Democracy is "freedom."

Actually, democracy is a hoax. The majority never has ruled and never will. A minority always rules, because only a minority of men have the capacity for independent thought and action; the rest are capable only of thinking and acting with the herd. Those who rule in a democracy are those with the ability to manipulate the herd, and in this last decade of the 20th century they are the ones who control the medium of television.

It is true, of course, that the masses are permitted to participate in popularity contests. They are permitted to express themselves in numerous polls as to whether or not they approve of various government policies, and on special occasions they can go into the voting booths and let it be known which of the candidates presented to them they like best. There is no doubt that the politicians involved take these polls seriously; their careers depend on them. The media masters take the polls seriously too; polling is their way of finding out what the herd is thinking, what the herd is unhappy about at the moment, what the herd wants.

That doesn't mean that the herd will get what it wants, of course. If a poll reveals that the public is beginning to develop a hankering for something that the media bosses don't want it to have, they will simply shift their persuasion in the necessary direction to squelch the hankering. If the polls a year ago had shown that a majority of the voters disapproved of the war against Iraq the rulers certainly wouldn't have halted the bombing and left Saddam Hussein as a threat to the further expansion of Greater Israel; instead they would have trotted out "Stormin'" Norman Schwarzkopf, "Magic" Johnson (before his AIDS infection became public knowledge), and a few other media idols to tell us soberly on prime time that Saddam had to be stopped, for the sake of God, Mom, and apple pie. Then they would have Secretary of State James Baker warn us grimly on all of the network news programs of how many American jobs would be lost if we did not continue killing Iraqis around the clock. If that didn't get an acceptable level of bellicose sentiment from the next poll, they would give us a few more reruns of World War II films designed to stir patriotism to a fever pitch. It works every time. It certainly worked last year.

It works so well, in general, that the media bosses can even tolerate an occasional unapproved candidate—a David Duke, say—participating in the democratic process. They only had to run their persuasion machine at about half throttle to keep pro-Duke sentiment in check during the recent gubernatorial election in Louisiana.

Democracy really isn't such a bad system, considering the nature of people. It's a bit wasteful staging all of those election campaigns, but it's probably worth it just to give the masses the illusion that they have a say in things. The great danger of democracy, of course, is the same danger that exists with any other form of government: namely, that the wrong minority will be in the driver's seat. That's the problem we must overcome now—or perish as a race.

Before the advent of television, it wouldn't have been feasible to run a truly progressive nation democratically; the process of control simply was too awkward. That's why the United States drifted the way it did, subject to various pressure groups, until the worst of all possible groups elbowed the others aside and took over. These days the process of control is reasonably efficient, and if we ever manage to break the grip of the present media bosses we can look forward to the use of the same process to speed America along the upward path again.

Desert Storm taught us that the task of straightening things out can be much easier than we might have thought. If the Bible beaters and the liberals could be made to cheer and wave the flag right along with the good ol' boys while we butchered 150,000 folks who had never done us a lick of harm, then we certainly can make them cheer while we sort out America's godawful racial problem and settle the hash of the people who have done us grievous harm indeed. It's something to look forward to.

By Way of Deception Thou Shalt Do War

The motto of Israel's spy agency, Mossad, is, according to recently defected Mossad agent Victor Ostrovsky: "By way of deception thou shalt do war." That motto describes more than the modus operandi of the world's most ruthless and feared organization of professional assassins and espionage agents; it really describes the modus vivendi of an entire race. It is necessary to understand that fact before one can hope to understand fully the role of the Jews in national and world affairs.

The concept of a race eternally at war with the rest of the world is alien to us. It is difficult to believe or even to grasp. When we examine such a concept and begin sifting the evidence it is easy to become confused. On the one hand we have the Old Testament injunctions to the Hebrews from their tribal god, speaking through their prophets, to annihilate every Gentile nation over which they gain power:

And thou shalt consume all the peoples which the Lord thy God shall deliver unto thee; thine eye shall not pity them . . . thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth. (Deuteronomy 7:16, 20:16)

Similarly bloodthirsty, explicit injunctions are repeated so often in the Jews' holy books that we can only assume that they are meant to be taken seriously. The historical evidence suggests that in ancient times the Jews did indeed take their religion seriously: they were notorious everywhere and at all times as implacable haters of humanity who in turn were thoroughly despised by every people among whom they lived.

Then on the other hand we have the modern, American Jew in the role of humanitarian, shunning the instruments of war and urging that all citizens, including himself, be disarmed, in order to make the streets of our cities kinder and gentler. Not only do the Jews provide the principal impetus to America's gun-control effort, but they are found in the forefront of every other squishy, do-good movement, from those ostensibly aimed at reducing hostility between the races to those designed to increase tolerance of homosexuals and their practices.

How are we to make sense of this apparently conflicting evidence?

Is the Jew in the U.S. Congress who cites the rising murder statistics and then demands that the government confiscate all privately owned firearms trying to deceive us as to his intentions? When he talks peace and disarmament is he really thinking war against the Gentiles?

And what of the carefully cultivated media image of the Jew as a gentle, inoffensive victim of bigotry, always being persecuted but never persecuting others? Is that also deception? And even if it is, does it necessarily mean that beneath the Jew's mask of benevolence and innocence hides the malevolent visage of a cunning predator? Perhaps for every bloodsucking Jewish swindler like Ivan Boesky or Michael Milken there is a Jewish benefactor of mankind like polio vaccine developer Jonas Salk, and for every bloody-handed Jewish gangster like Ariel Sharon, Meyer Lansky, or Yitzhak Shamir there is a Jewish Nobel Peace Prize winner like Menachem Begin, Henry Kissinger—or the appropriately named Elie Wiesel.

Or are we also being deceived when the Salks and the Kissingers are held up to us as reasons for not condemning all Jews for the transgressions of some?

By way of deception thou shalt do war.

Does that injunction mean: "If you must wage war—if it is impossible to avoid war—then you stand a better chance of winning by being tricky"? Or does it mean: "Thou shalt wage war, and thou shalt deceive"?

The answer to this question is important. If it is the former—if the Jews, as a whole, are not malevolent, if they have broken with their Old Testament tradition and no longer feel that their racial mission is to destroy all other peoples, but they merely feel that when forced to defend themselves they are justified in using all means, including deception, then we may be able to live on the same planet with them, at a distance. We don't have to like them or agree with their policies, but we can see the possibility, at least, of some sort of peaceful coexistence, once a separation of peoples has been accomplished.

In seeking the answer we should keep in mind that deception is, in itself, hostile. A policy of systematic deception is tantamount to a policy of war. If we discover that the Jews (as a whole, not just a few swindlers among them) have been deceiving us deliberately and systematically over an extended period of time on any matter of substance, then we may infer that they regard the relationship between us as one of war, and we should respond accordingly.

The pursuit of this inference may be the only path to an unmuddied answer. After all, how do we know that someone is waging war against us? If he makes an open declaration of war and then begins shooting and bombing us, the matter is clear enough. But if, because he always follows a policy of deception, he declares that he is not at war with us and only has our best interests at heart, we may have difficulty in deciding whether the injury he causes us is deliberate or inadvertent.

Suppose he undertakes courses of action which damage us in ways somewhat less directly than shooting and bombing—ways such as bringing hordes of non-Whites across our borders, breaking down the barriers to racial mixing in our society, encouraging permissiveness, undermining our institutions, promoting cultural bolshevism—all the while claiming that he does not regard these things as harmful. If we were a more practical people we might pay less attention to what the Jew says and more to what he does; we might stop worrying about his motive, judge him on the basis of the effect his presence has had on us, and then act accordingly.

Unfortunately, there are many who cannot in good conscience take a stand against the Jew without knowing what is in his heart—and the Jew is aware of this. We must catch him deliberately lying to us, deceiving us systematically and massively, in order to infer that his intent is hostile.

That's one reason why the unraveling of the "Holocaust" myth is so important to us—and why the Jew clings so desperately to every lie in its fabric.

We should draw some sort of conclusion from the consistency of the Jew's actions. Virtually everything he does is harmful to us. Without much exaggeration we can say that whenever the Jew takes a stand on a new issue, the proper position for us is on the other side.

Everyone who has read any Jewish literature—i.e., literature by Jews about Jews—has encountered the traditional Jewish character who whenever he must make a decision about something the goyim have done asks himself: "Is it good for the Jews?" That's an admirable trait in any person, Jew or Gentile: always being concerned first about the welfare of his community, of his tribe, of his race. The Jewish author more often than not sprinkles a bit of dissimulation over it, however, suggesting that it may be unfashionably parochial, but it is excusable on the grounds that the Jews have been obliged by bitter experience to be wary of anything the Gentile does.

It goes without saying, of course, that the same author would regard it as totally inexcusable for a Gentile to use a similar criterion: to ask himself about some policy or action of the Jews, "Is it good for the White race, for Gentiles?" Such a character could only be cast in the role of villain.

And what we never encounter in Jewish literature is a Jewish character weighing a Jewish policy by asking himself: "Is it bad for the goyim?" Unspoken though it may be, however, it seems that this criterion plays as large a role as the first in determining Jewish policies. Perhaps to them it is just another way of saying the same thing—although they are very careful not to phrase it that way. At least, they have been since the Second World War; before that they sometimes seemed to think that the goyim couldn't read, and chutzpah got the better of discretion. In 1924, for example, the prominent Jewish publicist Maurice Samuel, author of a score of serious books on Jewish matters and recipient of numerous awards from Jewish organizations, wrote in his You Gentiles, a book addressed to his hosts:

We Jews, we, the destroyers, will remain the destroyers forever. Nothing that you will do will meet our needs and demands. We will forever destroy because we need a world of our own, a God-world, which it is not in your nature to build.

Even here, however, there is deception, with the will to destroy masked as piety.

Think of the enormous demographic and social changes which have transformed our world since the Second World War. In 1941 the United States was for all practical purposes a White country. Blacks and other minorities existed, but they were not seen in White residential areas, White schools, White recreational facilities, or most White workplaces. They had a negligible influence on the political process, on public morality, and on the national culture. Racial intermarriage was illegal in most jurisdictions and extremely rare everywhere. America's city streets were safe by night and by day. There was no drug problem; the use of marijuana, heroin, and other drugs was confined almost entirely to Blacks and mestizos, in their own, separate communities. Teenage pregnancy (among Whites) was as rare as a public display of homosexuality. Schools were orderly, disciplined, and safe.

America had its problems, of course. Whites, even when they are in control of their own destiny, are not angels. Greed, meanness, superstition, and stupidity were reflected in a thousand social and cultural ills. A thoroughly corrupt political system, inevitable in a democracy, provided the country with its top political leaders and public officials. Blacks and other racial minorities, though invisible and powerless, were a festering sore which eventually would have to be dealt with.

The country, however, was still White and gave every indication of staying that way; in the years immediately prior to the war immigration to the United States was predominantly White, with immigrants from Europe outnumbering those from Asia and Latin America combined by five to one. America's problems were still soluble and Western civilization was still viable, still capable of being cleansed and renewed. Furthermore, in Germany a man was showing the race the way to save itself.

In response to that man's efforts most of the Western world engaged in an all-out war to destroy him, his works, and his followers. His ideas and teachings became anathema, and the half-century which followed was dedicated to justifying the slaughter and destruction of the war by promoting the antitheses of those ideas and teachings.

He had taught that the White race is the most progressive race and is inherently superior to the non-White races in its civilization-building capacity, and so the elevation of the social and economic levels of non-Whites at the expense of Whites became the premier postwar goal.

He had taught that racial mixing is a crime against Nature, that our race must strive above all else to maintain the integrity of its gene pool, and so racial mixing became the postwar fashion: schoolchildren were bused to achieve mixing in the schools, forced housing laws were passed to achieve residential mixing, laws against miscegenation were struck down everywhere, and the immigration laws were changed to bring a new flood of non-Whites into the country.

He had taught that the building of self-discipline in young people, the strengthening of their will-power and of their ability for self-control, is the most important task of a nation's educational system, and so in postwar America discipline became a dirty word, and permissiveness became the norm.

He had taught that, just as races differ in their innate abilities, so also do the individuals within a race, and that a healthy and progressive society must conform its institutions to this natural inequality among its members. Consequently, in postwar America egalitarianism became the new religion, and leveling the aim of government. To seek out the best and brightest, in our schools and elsewhere, and give them the recognition and the special training to enable them to move upward to positions of leadership—even to admit the possibility that some were better and brighter than others and could contribute more to civilization—became taboo.

He had taught a healthy, complementary relationship between men and women, with the former as providers and protectors and the latter as nurturers, and the new society he built in Germany was family centered, with laws and institutions aimed at strengthening the family and helping it to provide a sound environment for healthy children. Therefore, after his works were destroyed the victors denounced sexual complementarity as "repressive" and brought women out of the home and into the workforce by the millions, with children relegated to day-care centers. Every sex-role distinction was officially discouraged or outlawed, even to the point of bringing women into the armed forces on an equal footing with men. Feminism and homosexuality flourished with governmental protection.

Today we can see the consequences of these postwar policies all around us, and it is a matter of public record that the Jews have been the primary instigators and propagandists for each of these policies without exception.

They had non-Jewish collaborators in abundance, of course. The legislator primarily responsible for the change in postwar immigration patterns, the late Jewish Congressman from Brooklyn, Emanuel Celler, for many years chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, chose as a co-sponsor for his 1965 immigration bill the Gentile Senator from Massachusetts Edward (Teddy) Kennedy.

The "civil rights" revol-utionaries who were organizing "sit-ins" and "freedom rides" during the 1950s and 1960s received their financing, their legal assistance, and their media support from Jews, but without an utterly corrupt and unprincipled Gentile collaborator in the form of Lyndon Johnson, first as Senate majority leader (1955-1961) and later as President (1963-1968), the series of legislative coups which made the agenda of the revolutionaries the law of the land would not have come so easily.

Collaboration has come from Blacks as well as Whites. Many of the organizations pushing for legislated "equality" between Blacks and Whites have been headed by Blacks in recent years. The most venerable of them, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was given its first Black president as long ago as 1975, after an unbroken succession of Jews (although the separate NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, which bills itself as "the legal arm of the civil rights movement," is still strictly kosher, with a Jewish chief).

In no area of endeavor have the Jews had more willing non-Jewish collaborators than in the postwar promotion of permissiveness. Jews Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin may have been the most flamboyant spokesmen for permissiveness during the 1960s with their "if it feels good, do it" and "kill your parents" maxims for young Americans, but dozens of well-known Gentiles were right on their coattails, from "New Age" guru Timothy Leary with his campaign to popularize LSD and other psychedelic drugs to soft-porn publisher Hugh Hefner and his advocacy of "the Playboy philosophy."

It is, after all, hardly the case that Jewry forced its way into America with tanks and machine guns and compelled the unwilling Aryans to stand by and watch while their civilization was destroyed and their race corrupted by the Semitic invaders. From the beginning the prey collaborated with the predators at all levels: the primitive Bible-beaters who for generations have been taught by their own kind that the Jews are "God's Chosen People" and that it's bad luck to cross them; the jaded, self-indulgent great grandsons and great granddaughters of an earlier generation of hard-headed, hard-working pioneers and entrepreneurs, eager to be amused and titillated by every new fashion in ideology, art, music, or life-style dangled before them by wordy, alien hucksters; hungry opportunists in business, in education, and in the cultural establishment, ready to take the part of the obnoxiously pushy but admirably well-organized strangers, once those strangers had established sufficiently strong beachheads to be able to offer favors in return; and, of course, the politicians, democracy's inevitable maggots, who are ready to ally themselves with the Devil himself if they think they can gain a temporary personal advantage by doing so.

It is clear that when cleanup time comes there's as much weeding to be done in our own garden as in any other race's. An inattentive observer might even conclude that the Jews are no more blameworthy for the bad directions taken by our society than our own worst elements are; that as opportunists they merely look for ways to turn the weaknesses they find in us to their own advantage.

Did they push for opening our borders to the Third World because they had a long-range plan to mongrelize us, or were they merely going along with greedy and irresponsible elements of our own race who wanted to keep the cost of labor down?

Have they been the principal promoters behind every destructive fashion in painting and music in order to cut us loose from our cultural moorings, thereby confusing our sense of identity and making us easier prey, or simply because they have recognized the lack of aesthetic discrimination on the part of our consuming masses and are as eager as the confidence men of any race to sell the suckers whatever they'll buy?

Do they use their control of the entertainment industry to promote the acceptance—and in many cases the approval—of homosexuality, feminism, and interracial sex as a way of softening us up morally and preparing us for slaughter, or are they simply trying to please and thereby win as customers for their commercial sponsors the more degenerate elements of our population?

An inattentive observer might be stumped by such questions. A more attentive observer, however, will note the details, the specifics, as well as the generalities, and he will understand that those details, taken together, are not consistent with simple opportunism but only with war by way of deception.

Forcing the stream of immigration into America after the Second World War to change from White to Brown and Yellow has most notably kept the cost of farm labor down, but Jews are not farmers, and it is difficult to see how they could expect to benefit economically from this change. The influx of non-White immigrants also has kept the cost of certain other types of labor down—restaurant workers, unskilled construction workers—but the connection to any vital Jewish business interest is tenuous at best.

There can be no doubt that culture distortion has been enormously profitable for Jews. With a controlling economic interest in every facet of the popular-culture industry from art galleries to music records, tapes, and compact discs, they make money from nearly every product that the culture-consuming public can be persuaded to buy. And since no one has ever lost a nickel by underestimating the taste of the public, the deliberate Jewish debasement of art and music is understandable on the grounds of greed alone. But the specific directions are not.

In the production and promotion of what might be called "consumer music," for example, the one great change which has taken place since the Second World War has been the ascendancy of African rhythm over European music. Fifty years ago one could walk into any record store catering to the general public and find 78-rpm phonograph discs with a number of different types of music: classical, hillbilly (a form of White American folk music known today as "bluegrass" and subsumed under the more general heading "country and western"), numerous samples of genuine folk music from Europe, the religious music of the more primitive Christian fundamentalists ("gospel"), and a wide-ranging selection of "popular" music. The last category contained everything from the songs of Stephen Foster to the vacuous, fluffy stuff of the musical comedies which were especially popular then.

Jews already had established a strong beachhead in popular music production—Sigmund Romberg, Richard Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein, George Gershwin, Jerome Kern, Irving Berlin—but, at least, most popular music, even that composed by Jews, was still based on European forms. Jazz was for all practical purposes the only non-White music being peddled to White consumers, and it constituted a relatively small minority of the wares—although the "swing" and "big band" forms into which jazz evolved took a larger share of the market. Still, much of the available music was White in form and origin, with classical music still prominently represented.

By the end of the Second World War jazz-influenced popular music was evolving away from its Black roots into hybrid forms that most people considered more White than Black. The introduction of the long-playing record, which for the first time permitted people to listen to an entire symphony without changing records, and of high-fidelity sound systems even brought about a renewal of public interest in classical music. At this point the people controlling the music industry could have moved in any of a number of directions. They chose to put their heaviest promotional efforts behind another music form with Black roots: rock 'n' roll.

Rock also evolved, of course. Today in its many forms, some of which have moved rather far from their Black origins, it dominates consumer music. And the masters of the industry have begun pushing yet another non-White music form, more blatantly Negroid than anything heretofore: rap.

Today one must look hard to find even a handful of classical cassettes or compact discs in the music section of a K-Mart or other consumer emporium. European folk music can be had only from a few specialty stores. The majority of the music offered to the consuming public is in some significant sense non-White.

Economic democracy might be invoked to explain, at least in part, the displacement of structure by rhythm, as the taste of the average consumer has become more primitive. But it is clear that deliberate promotion has had much to do with this trend. Why have the promoters so consistently chosen directions which weaken and dilute the White cultural heritage?

Certainly, the feminists, homosexuals, and race-mixers are pleased to see themselves depicted on television and cinema screens as people of a morally superior sort, as role models for the younger generation of goyim. Perhaps they even show their appreciation by buying more of the products of the sponsors of Star Trek, True Colors, and other brave, new television productions. But feminists, queers, and interracial couples still make up only a rather small minority of the population, despite the best efforts of the media masters. Wouldn't it make better economic sense to cater to the majority? There are as many approximately normal consumers who feel at least a twinge of disgust when a television program tries to persuade them that hard-drinking, hard-swearing female soldiers or cops are "normal" as there are bull-dykes who will run out and buy the sponsor's brand of beer. And there certainly must be more healthy viewers who seethe with suppressed rage when they see a White woman kissing a Black man on the screen than there are avant-garde sickos who applaud such an abomination.

No, opportunism does not explain the Jews' destructiveness. There is no doubt that they are opportunists. But their opportunism is too consistently destructive. They have too inerrant an instinct for what will be bad for the goyim.

Can their behavior be explained in terms of an alien brand of idealism—an idealism which evolved in the marketplaces and bazaars of the Middle East over the last five thousand years and is natural for them, but which leads to disaster when applied to European society and institutions? Was their support for communism from the middle of the last century up until its recent collapse really based on their sympathy for the oppressed proletariat and their desire for social and economic justice, as they claim? They themselves have been oppressed, they say, and so they have a natural sympathy for the underdog. They will tell you that the reason they promote feminism, argue for the acceptance of homosexuals, and demand the integration of Blacks into every facet of our lives is that their religion requires it of them; the ethics of Judaism is egalitarian, and it specifies that each man be judged only by his or her character.

Undoubtedly there have been naive, starry-eyed idealists among communism's Gentile propagandists—at least, in those countries which had not yet experienced communism in practice; the great American writer Jack London was one, and there certainly may have been a few Jewish idealists of Marxism as well. But only a person who has no knowledge of communism in practice can believe that those who engineered its revolutionary triumph in Russia or commissared its institutions in Eastern Europe after the Second World War were seekers of justice for the workers.

As for the claim that Jews have an affection for justice and equality greater than that of other races, we only need to look at the ways in which this alleged affection manifests itself in that part of the world where it should be seen in its purest form: namely, Israel and the Israeli-occupied Arab territories. Ask any Palestinian about Jewish justice!

Judaism, of course, is unequivocally opposed to feminism and homosexuality—for Jews. Furthermore, it is a race-based religion, which defines its adherents in terms of their bloodline and declares them inherently superior to all other races. How does their promotion of feminism among the goyim, for instance, square with the well-known Jewish prayer, "I thank you, oh Lord, for not having made me a goy, a slave, or a woman," which is recited every day by the Orthodox faithful?

In the Talmud, that authoritative compendium of the Jewish oral law, there are a thousand other reminders to the Jew that he is absolutely superior to all other life forms:

Heaven and earth were created only for the sake of the Jews. (Vayikra Rabba 36)

The Jews are human beings, but the goyim are not human beings; they are only beasts. (Baba Mezia 114)

Yahweh created the non-Jew in human form so that the Jew would not have to be served by beasts. The non-Jew is consequently an animal in human form and is condemned to serve the Jew day and night. (Midrash Talpioth 225)

So much for Jewish egalitarianism. Jewish solicitude for Blacks in America today is as much a fraud as was the claim of Jewish sympathy for the oppressed proletariat of Russia on the eve of the Bolshevik Revolution.

What truly lies in the Jewish heart was revealed by an exceptional Jew, Baruch Spinoza (like Ostrovsky, a renegade), who wrote in the 17th century:

The love of the Hebrews for their country was not only patriotism but also piety and was cherished and nurtured by daily rites until, like their hatred of other nations, it was absolutely perverse . . . . Such daily reprobation naturally gave rise to a lasting hatred, deeply implanted in the heart: for of all hatred, none is more deep and tenacious than that which springs from extreme devoutness or piety and is itself cherished as pious. (Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, Chapter 17)

The Jewish role in the non-Jewish world and the Jewish motivation for the policies pursued by the Jewish community would be much easier to perceive if the Jews acted in a more consistent and straightforward way: if they spoke with a single voice and spoke truly, saying what really was on their minds. But, then, consistency and straightforwardness would violate the cardinal rule: By way of deception thou shalt do war.

Nevertheless, on a somewhat higher plane of subtlety, there is a consistency in the Jews' inconsistency. On virtually every major issue—political, social, cultural, moral, or what have you—where there are two principal sides or factions, Jews will be found pushing in both directions and serving as spokesmen for both factions—but with a difference.

Consider: For many years prior to Mikhail Gorbachev's recent dismantling of the Soviet power bloc and the general recognition of Marxism as a fraudulent, unworkable system, communism's principal apologists and apparatchiks in the West were Jews. So were a number of anti-communist spokesmen.

During the Second World War, of course, the communists could do no wrong in the eyes of the West's controlled media, because they were helping to destroy the man about whom the Jewish media masters had nightmares. Thus, while Soviet butchers were torturing thousands of patriots to death in the police cellars of the Baltic countries and liquidating the Polish leadership stratum at the killing pits in the Katyn woods, Jewish communists in the United States were stealing the plans and test results from America's atomic bomb program and sending them to their colleagues in the Soviet Union.

After the war was over, however, and a reaction began to set in among White Americans as they realized that the communist beast they had unleashed against Eastern Europe might end up devouring them too, it was time for Jews to begin hedging their bets: it was time for the media to begin quoting "responsible" anti-communists. (The "responsible" ones were those who failed to mention the Jewishness of the system they were speaking out against.)

While the memory of Jewish atomic spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg was still fresh and Jewish communist sympathizers such as Robert Oppenheimer were being weeded out of America's atomic weapons program, Jewish scientist Edward Teller became the spokesman for anti-communist Americans who wanted a strong, nuclear-armed America able to stand up to the Soviet Union. Three decades later, after Jews had rooted for the Viet Cong communists throughout the war in Vietnam, Jews began flocking to the neoconservative movement to speak up for an America strong enough to defend Israel's interests in the Middle East against the Soviet Union's Arab clients there. Often they were the same Jews who had been cheering for the Reds a year or two earlier. That really confused the goyim.

Consider: Whenever a gaggle of eggheads gets together in some area to sponsor a classical-music FM radio station as a sole outpost of European culture in a sea of African rock-and-rap rhythm or sub-dimwit gospel bleating, there surely will be a Jew or two among them. And when they are interviewed by the local press, it surely will be one of those Jews who is quoted. That helps to spike any nasty rumors as to who's behind all of the garbage-music programming at the other stations.

Consider: As detailed elsewhere in this magazine, the madness of Political Correctness which has infected America's colleges and universities is Jewish through and through. And as also pointed out elsewhere in this magazine many of those who are urging their colleagues to hold the line against Political Correctness also are Jews (at least, the ones appointed by the media to be spokesmen for academic freedom are). This not only ensures that the Jews manning the PC barricades won't be criticized as Jews for wrecking our universities, but it preempts those who might try to swing things too far back toward academic freedom.

Consider: While Jew Howard Metzenbaum in the U. S. Senate and Jew Charles Schumer in the U. S. House of Representatives spearhead the legislative drive to strip Americans of their right to armed self-defense and are unanimously and vociferously supported in this effort by the Jewish media, a tiny, Milwaukee-based, Jewish pro-gun group calling itself Jews for the Preservation of Firearms Ownership (JPFO) manages to attract far more attention to itself than its size ordinarily would merit. JPFO is not just a group of pro-gun people who coincidentally happen to be Jews; it is a group of people who are shouting to the world: "Hey, look at me; I am a Jew, and I am in favor of gun ownership." Whenever a JPFO spokesman is quoted in the news media—which is often enough to give the impression that his organization is right up there with the National Rifle Association, fighting for gun owners' rights—he flaunts his Jewishness.

It doesn't take a genius to figure out that in any contest it's a good strategy to control your principal opposition. That way you can put on a great show of bad guys versus good guys struggling against each other, but you are always in a position to make the contest go in either direction you want and only as far as you want. Not only do you preempt any real opposition, but you keep the goyim fooled and deflect any criticism of your role in the affair.

By way of deception thou shalt do war.

The deception is masterfully done. It suffices to keep most of the people fooled most of the time. Only a careful study of the details of a number of different social phenomena in which Jews are involved parts the veil of lies and trickery sufficiently for us to see a clear pattern.

The pattern is this: Jews come into any homogeneous society—and such was America at the beginning of this century—as outsiders, as strangers. The society is effectively closed to them. They cannot easily penetrate its institutions. They cannot get their hands on the levers of power. If they try they are noticed, suspected, and resisted. And they always must try. In this they apparently cannot restrain themselves.

To make way for themselves; to open up possibilities for penetration and control, they must break down the structure of the society, corrupt its institutions, undermine its solidarity, weaken its sense of identity, obliterate its traditions, destroy its homogeneity. Thus they inevitably will be in favor of democracy, of permissiveness, of every form of self-indulgence and indiscipline. They will be proponents of cosmopolitanism, of egalitarianism, of multiculturalism. They will oppose patriotism (except when they are inciting their hosts to fight a war on behalf of Jewish interests). They will agitate endlessly for change, change, change, and they will call it progress.

And no matter what they are for or against they will have at least some of their number taking the opposite side: If they are promoting the public acceptance of homosexuality, they also will have a few prominent Jewish publicists bemoaning the downfall of traditional morality and warning of the consequences of the confusion of sexual roles. If their aim is to neutralize the universities as institutions for passing on the historical, intellectual, and cultural traditions of our people to a new generation of potential leaders, at the same time that they are organizing Red Guard brigades to enforce Political Correctness they will have a contingent beating the drums for tradition and free inquiry. If they are working feverishly to disarm White Americans in order to prevent the latter from exercising their right of revolution they will go to the Jews for the Preservation of Firearms Ownership for a contrary statement now and then.

What does all of this prove? In the strictest sense of the word, nothing; it is only suggestive.

If you watch a person flip a penny five hundred times, and it always comes up tails, you cannot be absolutely certain that the penny has two tails. But you at least ought to suspect that someone has been working on that penny in his machine shop.

If you study the historical record and observe that every matter of importance in which the Jews have been involved turns out badly for us, even though there are usually a few Jews on our side of the matter, you cannot be absolutely certain that the game is rigged. But you at least ought to suspect that the Jews are following their ancient maxim and waging war against us by way of deception. □

The symbol which appears in the NATIONAL VANGUARD logotype is the Life Rune. It comes from an ancient alphabet, or futhark, used in Northern Europe for many centuries before the general adoption of the Roman alphabet there. The Life Rune signifies life, creation, birth, rebirth, and renewal. It expresses in a single symbol the raison d'etre of NATIONAL VANGUARD and of the movement of Aryan renewal.

SECRETS BY THE THOUSANDS

C. Lester Walker
Harper's* Magazine, October 1946

HARPER'S READERS ARE FAMILIAR WITH MR. WALKER'S ARTICLES ON THE SKILFUL MECHANICS OF THE ALLIED WAR. HE NOW GIVES US A LOOK AT SOME OF THE DISCONCERTINGLY EFFECTIVE TRICKS THAT WERE HIDDEN UP THE ENEMY SLEEVE.

SOMEONE wrote to Wright Field recently, saying he understood this country had got together quite a collection of enemy war secrets, that many were now on public sale, and could he, please, be sent everything on German jet engines. The Air Documents Division of the Army Air Forces answered:

"Sorry—but that would be fifty tons."

Moreover, that fifty tons was just a small portion of what is today undoubtedly the biggest collection of captured enemy war secrets ever assembled. If you always thought of war secrets—as who hasn't?—as coming in sixes and sevens, as a few items of information readily handed on to the properly interested authorities, it may interest you to learn that the war secrets in this collection run into the thousands, but the mass of documents is mountainous, and that there has never before been anything quite comparable to it.

The collection is today chiefly in three places: Wright Field (Ohio), the Library of Congress, and the Department of Commerce. Wright Field is working from a documents "mother lode" of fifteen hundred tons. In Washington, the Office of Technical Services (which has absorbed the Office of the Publication Board, the government agency originally set up to handle the collection) reports that tens of thousands of tons of material are involved. It is estimated that over a million separate items must be handled, and that they, very likely, contain practically all the scientific, industrial and military secrets of Nazi Germany.

One Washington official has called it "the greatest single source of this type of material in the world, the first orderly exploitation of an entire country's brainpower."

How the collection came to be goes back, for beginnings, to one day in 1944 when the Allied Combined Chiefs of Staff set in motion a colossal search for war secrets in occupied German territory. They created a group of military-civilian teams, termed the Joint Intelligence Objectives Committee, which was to follow the invading armies into Germany and uncover all her military, scientific, and industrial secrets for early use against Japan. These teams worked against time to get the most vital information before it was destroyed, and in getting it performed prodigies of ingenuity and tenacity.

At an optical company at Wetzlar, near Frankfurt, for example, the American colonel investigating felt positive that the high executives were holding out on him. But nothing would shake their story: they had given him everything. He returned next day with a legal document which he asked them all to sign. It declared they had turned over "all scientific and trade data; and if not, would accept the consequences." Two days later they glumly signed the document, then led the colonel to a cache in a warehouse wall. From a safe tumbled out the secret files on optical instruments, microscopy, aiming devices.

One two-man search team found itself completely stymied. Records that they had to find had completely disappeared. A rumor indicated they might have been hidden in a mountain. The two scoured the region in a jeep. Nothing. But keeping at it, they stumbled one day onto a small woods road whose entrance was posted: Achtung! Minen! gingerly, slowly, they inched their jeep in. Nothing happened. But a concrete dugout sunk in the hill revealed another sign: "Opening will Cause Explosion."

"We tossed a coin," one member of this search team said later, "and the loser hitched the jeep tow rope to the dugout door, held his breath and stepped on the gas."

There was no explosion. The door ripped from its hinges. The sought-for secret files were inside.

The German Patent Office put some of its most secret patents down a sixteen-hundred-foot mine shaft at Heringen, then piled liquid oxygen, in cylinders on top of them. When the American Joint Intelligence Objectives team found them, it was doubtful that they could be saved. They were legible, but in such bad shape that a trip to the surface would make them disintegrate. Photo equipment and a crew were therefore lowered into the shaft and a complete microfilm record made of the patents there.

Perhaps one of the most exciting searches was also the grimmest. This was the hunt for hidden documents which might reveal that Nazi scientists had frozen human beings to death and then tried to bring them back to life again. Interviewing four Nazi doctors one day in June 1945, at a laboratory of the Institut für Luftfahrtmedizin, at Gut Hirschau, Bavaria, an American medical corps major, Leo Alexander, was struck with the dreadful conviction, despite repeated denials, that this had occurred.

His suspicions were aroused by three things. All the small-animal laboratory equipment was carefully preserved; all large-animal equipment destroyed. One of the doctors wanted to dissolve his research institute and dismiss his staff. And none of the scientists could find any data on human beings at all, not even on those rescued from North Sea waters and saved by the new revival techniques. Did this mean that everything of the sort was hidden away with other data which the doctors didn't want to show?

Wishing to leave the four Germans in a frame of mind not to destroy their records, the American concealed his suspicions, and, for the time being, transferred his search elsewhere.

Chance suddenly played into his hands. The Allied radio one night broadcast a grim tale of the Dachau concentration camp. Researches on death, and treatment of shock, from exposure to cold had been performed on prisoners. The broadcast named the leading experimenter, one Dr. Rascher, and called him a member of the medical staff of the SS.

For Alexander this was a lead. He happened just to have learned that the American Seventh Army had recently captured a vast mass of especially secret SS records. He therefore headed for the Seventh Army Documents Center to see what was there.

There was more than he anticipated. Even to the complete and final report—Himmler's personal copy, with his green-penciled annotations all over it—with the names of Rascher and all others involved, and containing all the damning details of the almost unbelievable experiments.

Victims had been immersed naked in ice water until they lost consciousness. All the time elaborate testings were constantly made: rectal, skin, and interior-of-the-stomach temperatures; pulse, blood sugar, blood chlorides, blood count and sedimentation; urine tests; spinal fluid. Appendix 7, Figure 5 showed that seven subjects were chilled to death beyond revival in from fifty-three to one hundred and sixty minutes.

"This table," Alexander commented in his own report, "is certainly the most laconic confession of seven murders in existence."

It had been with the rest of the documents—in Himmler's private cave in a mountain at Hallein. Even though the side of the mountain had been dynamited down over the cave mouth, the American searchers had found it.

The earliest Joint Intelligence Objectives search teams were followed by others, which were to dig out industrial and scientific secrets in particular. The Technical Industrial Intelligence Committee was one group of these, composed of three hundred and eighty civilians representing seventeen American industries. Later came the teams of the Office of the Publication Board itself and many more groups direct from private industry. Of the latter—called, in Germany, Field Intelligence Agencies, Technical (FIAT)—there have been over five hundred, of one to ten members each, operating by invitation and under the aegis of OPB.

Today the search still goes on. The Office of Technical Services has a European staff of four to five hundred. At Hoechst, it has one hundred abstracters who struggle feverishly to keep ahead of the forty OTS document-recording cameras which route to them each month over one hundred thousand feet of microfilm.

II

What did we find? You'd like some outstanding samples from the war secrets collection?

The head of the communications unit of Technical Industrial Intelligence Branch opened his desk drawer and took out the tiniest vacuum tube I had ever seen. It was about half thumb-size.

"Notice it is heavy porcelain—not glass—and thus virtually indestructible. It is a thousand watt—one-tenth the size of similar American tubes. Today our manufacturers know the secret of making it! ...And here's something...."

He pulled some brown, papery-looking ribbon off a spool. It was a quarter-inch wide, with a dull and a shiny side.

"That's Magnetophone tape," he said. "It's plastic, metallized on one side with iron oxide. In Germany that supplanted phonograph recordings. A day's radio program can be magnetized on one reel. You can demagnetize it, wipe it off, and put a new program on at any time. No needle; so absolutely no noise or record wear. An hour-long reel costs fifty cents."

He showed me then what had been two of the most closely-guarded technical secrets of the war: the infra-red device which the Germans invented for seeing at night, and the remarkable diminutive generator which operated it. German cars could drive at any speed in total black-out, seeing objects clear as day two hundred meters ahead. Tanks with this device could spot targets two miles away. As a sniperscope it enabled German riflemen to pick off a man in total blackness.

There was a sighting tube, and a selenium screen out front. The screen caught the incoming infra-red light, which drove electrons from the selenium along the tube to another screen which was electrically charged and fluorescent. A visible image appeared on this screen. Its clearness and its accuracy for aiming purposes were phenomenal. Inside the tube, distortion of the stream of electrons by the earth's magnetism was even allowed for!

The diminutive generator—five inches across—stepped up current from an ordinary flashlight battery to 15,000 volts. It had a walnut-sized motor which spun a rotor at 10,000 rpm—so fast that originally it had destroyed all lubricants with the great amount of ozone it produced. The Germans had developed a new grease: chlorinated paraffin oil. The generator then ran 3,000 hours.

A canvas bag on the sniper's back housed the device. His rifle had two triggers. He pressed one for a few seconds to operate the generator and the scope. Then the other to kill his man in the dark.

"That captured secret," my guide declared, "we first used at Okinawa—to the bewilderment of the Japs."

We got, in addition, among these prize secrets, the technique and the machine for making the world's most remarkable electric condenser. Millions of condensers are essential to the radio and radar industry. Our condensers were always made of metal foil. This one is made of paper, coated with 1/250,000 of an inch of vaporized zinc. Forty per cent smaller, twenty per cent cheaper than our condensers, it is also self-healing. That is, if a breakdown occurs (like a fuse blowing out), the zinc film evaporates, the paper immediately insulates, and the condenser is right again. It keeps on working through multiple breakdowns—at fifty per cent higher voltage than our condensers! To most American radio experts this is magic, double-distilled.

Mica was another thing. None is mined in Germany, so during the war our Signal Corps was mystified. Where was Germany getting it?

One day a certain piece of mica was handed to one of our experts in the U.S. Bureau of Mines for analysis and opinion.

"Natural mica," he reported, "and no impurities."

But the mica was synthetic. The Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Silicate Research had discovered how to make it and—something which had always eluded scientists—in large sheets.

We know now, thanks to FIAT teams, that ingredients of natural mica were melted in crucibles of carbon capable of taking 2,350 degrees of heat, and then—this was the real secret—cooled in a special way. Complete absence of vibration was the first essential. Then two forces directly perpendicular to each other were applied. One, vertically, was a controlled gradient of temperature in the cooling. At right angles to this, horizontally, was introduced a magnetic field. This forced the formation of the crystals in large laminated sheets on that plane.

"You see this..." the head of Communications Unit, TIIB, said to me. It was metal, and looked like a complicated doll's house with the roof off. "It is the chassis, or frame, for a radio. To make the same thing, Americans would machine cut, hollow, shape, fit—a dozen different processes. This is done on a press in one operation. It is the 'cold extrusion' process. We do it some with soft, splattery metals. But by this process the Germans do it with cold steel! Thousands of parts now made as castings or drop forgings or from malleable iron can now be made this way. The production speed increase is a little matter of one thousand per cent."

This one war secret alone, many American steel men believe, will revolutionize dozens of our metal fabrication industries.

In textiles the war secrets collection has produced so many revelations that American textile men are a little dizzy. There is a German rayon-weaving machine, discovered a year ago by the American Knitting Machine Team, which increases production in relation to floor space by one hundred and fifty percent. Their "Links-Links" loom produces a ladderless, runproof hosiery. New German needle-making machinery, it is thought, will revolutionize that business in both the United Kingdom and the United States. There is a German method for pulling the wool from sheepskins without injury to hide or fiber, by use of an enzyme. Formerly the "puller"—a trade secret—was made from animal pancreas from American packing houses. During the war the Nazis made it from a mold called aspergil paraciticus, which they seeded in bran. It results not only in better wool, but in ten per cent greater yield.

Another discovery was a way to put a crimp in viscose rayon fibers which gives them the appearance, warmth, wear resistance, and reaction-to-dyes of wool. The secret here, our investigators found, was the addition to the cellulose of twenty-five per cent fish protein.

But of all the industrial secrets, perhaps the biggest windfall came from the laboratories and plants of the great German cartel, I. G. Farbenindustrie. Never before, it is claimed, was there such a storehouse of secret information. It covers liquid and solid fuels, metallurgy, synthetic rubber, textiles, chemicals, plastics, drugs, dyes. One American dye authority declares:

"It includes the production know-how and the secret formulas for over fifty thousand dyes. Many of them are faster and better than ours. Many are colors we were never able to make. The American dye industry will be advanced at least ten years."

III

In matters of food, medicine, and branches of the military art the finds of the search teams were no less impressive. And in aeronautics and guided missiles they proved downright alarming.

One of the food secrets the Nazis had discovered was a way to sterilize fruit juices without heat. The juice was filtered, then cooled, then carbonated and stored under eight atmospheres of carbon-dioxide pressure. Later the carbon-dioxide was removed; the juice passed through another filter—which, this time, germ-proofed it—and then was bottled. Something, perhaps, for American canners to think about.

Milk pasteurization by ultra-violet light has always failed in other countries, but the Germans had found how to do it by using light tubes of great length, and simultaneously how to enrich the milk with vitamin D.

At a plant in Kiel, British searchers of the Joint Intelligence Objectives Committee found that cheese was being made—"good quality Hollander and Tilsiter"—by a new method at unheard-of speed. "Eighty minutes from the renneting to the hooping of the curd," report the investigators. The cheese industry around the world had never been able to equal that.

Butter (in a creamery near Hamburg) was being produced by something long wished for by American butter makers: a continuous butter making machine. An invention of dairy equipment manufacturers in Stuttgart, it took up less space than American churns and turned out fifteen hundred pounds an hour. The machine was promptly shipped to this country to be tested by the American Butter Institute.

Among other food innovations was a German way of making yeast in almost limitless quantities. The waste sulphite liquor from the beechwood used to manufacture cellulose was treated with an organism known to bacteriologists as candida arborea at temperatures higher than ever used in yeast manufacture before. The finished product served as both animal and human food. Its caloric value is four times that of lean meat, and it contain twice as much protein.

The Germans had also developed new methods of preserving food by plastics and new, advanced refrigeration techniques. Refrigeration and air-conditioning on German U-boats had become so efficient that the submarines could travel from Germany to the Pacific, operate there for two months, and then return to Germany without having to take on fresh water for the crew. A secret plastic mixture (among its ingredients were polyvinyl acetate, chalk, and talc) was used to coat bread and cheese. A loaf fresh from the oven was dipped, dried, redipped, then heated half an hour at 285 degrees. It would be unspoiled and good to eat eight months later.

As for medical secrets in this collection, one Army surgeon has remarked, "some of them will save American medicine years of research; some of them are revolutionary—like, for instance, the German technique for treatment after prolonged and usually fatal exposure to cold."

This discovery-revealed to us by Major Alexander's search already mentioned—reversed everything medical science thought about the subject. In every one of the dread experiments the subjects were most successfully revived, both temporarily and permanently, by immediate immersion in hot water. In two cases of complete standstill of heart and cessation of respiration, a hot bath at 122 degrees brought both subjects back to life. Before our war with Japan ended, this method was adopted as the treatment for use by all American Air-Sea-Rescue Services, and it is generally accepted by medicine today.

German medical researchers had discovered a way to produce synthetic blood plasma. Called capain, it was made on a commercial scale and equaled natural plasma in results. Another discovery was periston, a substitute for the blood liquid. An oxidation production of adrenalin (adrenichrome) was produced in quantity successfully only by the Nazis and was used with good results in combatting high blood pressure (of which 750,000 die annually in the United States). Today we have the secret of manufacture and considerable of the supply.

Likewise of great importance medically were certain researches by Dr. Boris Rojewksky of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute of Biophysics at Frankfurt. These were on the ionization of air as related to health. Positively ionized air was discovered to have deleterious effects upon human well-being, and to account for the discomfort and depression felt at times when the barometer is falling. In many persons, it was found, its presence brought on asthma, hay fever, and nervous tension. It raised high blood pressure, sometimes to the danger point. It would bring on the symptoms common in mountain sickness—labored and rapid breathing, dizziness, fatigue, sleepiness.

Negatively ionized air, however, did all the opposite. It was exhilarating, creating a feeling of high spirits and well-being. Mental depression was wiped out by it. In pathological cases it steadied breathing, reduced high blood pressure, was a check on allergies and asthma. The importance of its presence wherever human beings live, work, or recuperate from illness may some day make its production one of the major functions or air conditioning.

IV

But of highest significance for the future were the Nazi secrets in aviation and in various types of missiles.

"The V-2 rocket which bombed London," an Army Air Force publication reports, "was just a toy compared to what the Germans had up their sleeve."

When the war ended, we now know, they had 138 types of guided missiles in various stages of production or development, using every kind of remote control and fuse: radio, radar, wire, continuous wave, acoustics, infra-red, light beams and magnetics, to name some; and for power, all methods of jet propulsion for either subsonic or supersonic speeds.

Jet propulsion had even been applied to helicopter flight. The fuel was piped to combustion chambers at the rotor blade tips, where it exploded, whirling the blades around like a lawn sprinkler or pinwheel.

As for rocket propulsion, the A-4 rocket, which was just getting into large scale production when the war ended, was forty-six feet long, weighed over 24,000 pounds, and traveled 230 miles. It rose sixty miles above the earth and had a maximum speed of 3,735 miles an hour—three times that of the earth's rotation at the equator. The secret of its supersonic speed, we know today, lay in its rocket motor which used liquid oxygen and alcohol for fuel. It was either radio controlled or self-guided to its target by gyroscopic means. Since its speed was supersonic, it could not be heard before it struck.

Another German rocket which was coming along was the A-9. This was bigger still—29,000 pounds—and had wings which gave it a flying range of 3,000 miles. It was manufactured at the famous Peenemünde army experiment station and achieved the unbelievable speed of 5,870 miles an hour.

A long range rocket-motored bomber which, the war documents indicate, was never completed merely because of the war's quick ending, would have been capable of flight from Germany to New York in forty minutes. Pilot-guided from a pressurized cabin, it would have flown at an altitude of 154 miles. Launching was to be by catapult at 500 miles an hour, and the ship would rise to its maximum altitude in as short a time as four minutes. There, fuel exhausted, it would glide through the outer atmosphere, bearing down on its target. With one hundred bombers of this type the Germans hoped to destroy any city on earth in a few days' operations.

Little wonder, then, that today Army Air Force experts declare publicly that in rocket power and guided missiles the Nazis were ahead of us by at least ten years.

The Germans even had devices ready which would take care of pilots forced to leave supersonic planes in flight. Normally a pilot who stuck his head out at such speeds would have it shorn off. His parachute on opening would burst in space. To prevent these calamitous happenings an ejector seat had been invented which flung the pilot clear instantaneously. His chute was already burst, that is, made of latticed ribbons which checked his fall only after the down-drag of his weight began to close its holes.

A Nazi variation of the guided air missile was a torpedo for underwater work which went unerringly to its mark, drawn by the propeller sound of the victim ship from as far away as ten miles. This missile swam thirty feet below the water, at forty miles an our, and left no wake. When directly under its target, it exploded.

All such revelations naturally raise the question: was Germany so far advanced in air, rocket, and missile research that, given a little more time, she might have won the war? Her war secrets, as now disclosed, would indicate that possibility. And the Deputy Commanding General of Army Air Force Intelligence, Air Technical Service Command, has told the Society of Aeronautical Engineers within the past few months:

"The Germans were preparing rocket surprises for the whole world in general and England in particular which would have, it is believed, changed the course of the war if the invasion had been postponed for so short a time as half a year."

V

For the release and dissemination of all these one-time secrets the Office of the Publication Board was established by an order of President Truman within ten days after Japan surrendered. The order directed that not only enemy war secrets should be published, but also (with some exceptions) all American secrets, scientific and technical, of all government war boards. (The office of Scientific Research and Development, the National Research Council, and other such.) And thereby was created what is being termed now the biggest publishing problem a government agency ever had to handle.

For the war secrets, which conventionally used to be counted in scores, will run to three-quarters of a million separate documentary items (two-thirds of them on aeronautics) and will require several years and several hundreds of people to screen and prepare them for wide public use.

Today translators and abstracters of the Office of Technical Services, successor to the OPB, are processing them at the rate of about a thousand a week. Indexing and cataloguing the part of the collection which will be permanently kept may require more than two million cards; and at Wright Field the task is so complicated that electric punch-card machines are to be installed. A whole new glossary of German-English terms has to be compiled—something like forty thousand words on new technical and scientific terms.

With so many documents, it has, of course, been impossible because of time and money limitations to reprint or reproduce more than a very few. To tell the public what is available, therefore, the OTS issues a bibliography weekly. This contains the newest war secrets information as released—with titles, prices of copies currently available or to be made up, and an abstract of contents.

The original document, or the microfilm copy, is then generally sent to the greatest depository. To make them more easily accessible to the public, the Library sends copies, when enough are available, to about 125 so-called "depository" libraries throughout the United States.

And is the public doing anything with these one-time war secrets? It is—it is eating them up. As many as twenty thousand orders have been filled in a month, and the order rate is now a thousand times a day. Scientists and engineers declare that the information is "cutting years from the time we would devote to problems already scientifically investigated." And American business men...! A run through the Publication Board's letters file shows the following:

The Bendix Company in South Bend, Indiana, writes for a German patent on the record player changer "with records stacked above the turntable." Pillsbury Mills wants to have what is available on German flour and bread production methods. Kendall Manufacturing Company ("Soapine") wants insect repellent compounds. Pioneer Hi-Bred Corn Company, Iowa, asks about "interrogation of research workers at the agricultural high school at Hohenheim." Pacific Mills requests I. G. Farbenindustrie's water-repellent, crease resistant finish for spun rayon. The Polaroid Company would like something on "the status of exploitation of photography and optics in Germany." (There are, incidentally, ten to twenty thousand German patents yet to be screened.)

The most insatiable customer is Amtorg, the Soviet Union's foreign trade organization. One of its representatives walked into the Publication Board office with the bibliography in hand and said, "I want copies of everything." The Russians sent one order in May for $5,594.50 worth—two thousand separate war secrets reports. In general, they buy every report issued.

Americans, too, think there is extraordinarily good prospecting in the war secrets lode. Company executives practically park on the OTS's front doorstep, wanting to be first to get hold of a particular report on publication. Some information is so valuable that to get it a single day ahead of a competitor may be worth thousands of dollars. But the OTS takes elaborate precautions to be sure that no report is ever available to anyone before general public release.

After a certain American aircraft company had ordered a particular captured war document, it was queried as to whether the information therein had made it or saved it money. The cost of the report had been a few dollars. The company answered: "Yes—at least a hundred thousand dollars."

A research head of another business firm took notes for three hours in the OTS offices one day. "Thanks very much," he said, as he stood to go, "the notes from these documents are worth at least half a million dollars to my company."

And after seeing the complete report on the German synthetic fiber industry, one American manufacturer remarked:

This report would be worth twenty million dollars to my company if it could have it exclusively."

Of course you, and anybody else, can now have it, and lots of other once secret information, for a few dollars. All the war secrets, as released, are completely in the public domain.

The foregoing article was reprinted in facsimile in GANPAC-BRIEF No. 109, November 1991, and the following commentary was added by Hans Schmidt:

The article above from Harper's magazine of 1946 needs no explanation. I consider it a devastating indictment of American misdeeds vis-à-vis Germany. It bears remembering that the United States twice this century robbed Germany blind, not only of all her patents etc., but also of her foreign assets and possessions. This in spite of the fact that over the centuries millions of Germans came to this country after they had been well-trained and educated at the expense of Germany taxpayers. The current (obvious) decline of the United States in so many fields of endeavor can likely be blamed on the fact that now the advantages of the huge theft from Germany after 1945 are gone. Will another war be arranged to get hold of new German creations for the third time? Possibly not, for along with more than 300,000 troops the U.S. system still has thousands of agents of the various intelligence services stationed in Germany, many of whom specialize in economic espionage. (It may interest you that reunited Germany had to agree to have soon fewer soldiers under arms than has the United States currently stationed in West Germany alone.) ❑

The David Irving / Eichmann Memoirs Controversy

by Ernst Zündel

To my friends! 30 January 1992

Many of you have made upset phone calls to me and sent me faxes and letters with articles about David Irving's interviews about the above topic. Let me try to straighten out some things, and explain to you where I stand on this whole controversy:

1) I have admired David Irving's writings for decades, with some reservations, since he, in 1962, first published his book on the bombing of Dresden.

2) David Irving did not like me, nor did he admire me, after I gained a certain notoriety in the eighties.

3) David Irving refused to speak in Vancouver (in the mid-80s), if Doug Christie introduced him at a scheduled meeting after my 1985 trial.

4) David Irving was visibly shocked when I picked him up at the airport in Toronto (because his driver had gotten sick). He wanted to have nothing to do with me, even then, because of the bad reputation that I had in conservative circles in England and Europe. He thought I was some "Revisionist-Neo-Nazi-Rambo-Kook!"

This situation only changed after I was able to be of assistance in some organizational matters in 1987. We got to know one another up close–man to man. That is when he told me that, time permitting, he might be willing to testify at my upcoming trial as an expert witness, in the area of WW II German history.

My entire team of advisors was against me inviting David Irving as an expert witness at the very end of my trial, because of his "gyrations" when it came to the "Holocaust topic." My gag order forbids me to discuss the details, but most of you know of the "Irving/Faurisson" controversy caused at the IHR conference in the early 1980s.

The Leuchter Report changed all that! David Irving studied Leuchter's findings, found them shattering and declared it as a stroke of genius to have sent Leuchter to Poland to take samples there and to measure and photograph the installations for the trial. From that moment on, David Irving revised his final doubts about the "forbidden topic" and the rest is history.

He has since given headline-making press conferences in England, America, Germany, Austria, Spain and Canada about his opinions and his change of mind.

There was absolutely no indication of yet another change of mind, so when Dr. Faurisson called me early in the New Year about a story he had heard on Belgian State Radio, I did not think much about it. I thought it was just another tempest in the teapot.

However, when Robert Faurisson is upset, Ernst Zündel acts, and I mean immediately! For I respect Robert Faurisson as a scholar and a man!

So I called David Irving immediately and asked him for an explanation, which he "sort of" gave me. He was very busy because newspapers such as The Times of London, The Independent, even Bild, as well as many television stations had contacted him for interviews. He faxed me some of those articles.

I asked him to contact Dr. Faurisson directly, because people were getting very upset by the ever-expanding controversy. He did that too! Finally, a picture began to emerge out of this verbiage and ink.

The extreme-left newspaper, Die Tageszeitung or "TAZ" as it is known in Germany, was the first one to suggest that Irving was up to his old tricks of "self promotion." They called it a Werbegag or Advertisingtrick.

The London Jewish Chronicle was the first one, to my knowledge (in the English-language press), which did not buy David Irving's "re-conversion." Some papers speculated that David Irving wanted to "cash in" on the "Wannsee-Promo" that was then going on, and figured he wanted to ride the "piggy back" on this issue.

I will reproduce for you some newspaper articles from Jewish and more neutral sources on this issue, because my gag order forbids me to tackle this issue.

Suffice it to say, David Irving was given some 1000 pages of typed manuscript by some stranger in Argentina last year, claiming that they were Adolf Eichmann's memoirs.

I asked him if he had tested the paper, the carbon or the ink? He said no–he had turned the pages over to the German Federal Archives in Koblenz, that they presumably will undertake the testing of the manuscript. He himself kept only photocopies.

So, these pages are not written in Eichmann's own handwriting, they are typed! They are not even initialed or signed by Eichmann–not once!

The information in them is at best hearsay, quoting what Heydrich allegedly said to Eichmann, what Himmler reportedly was told by Hitler!! That is the same kind of crap that all the other writers on this topic have come up with–hearsay and rumors. This must have been known to Irving, the historian and researcher!

Irving also knew that the uncritical and gullible press would print just about anything, as long as it supported their version of history. He was right. They ate it up! Suddenly, the "outcast," or "Nazi-historian" or "Parlour-Fascist", as he has been called by the media since he "switched sides" in 1988, became quickly, once again, the darling of the media establishment.

Whatever motivated Irving to launch this particular "torpedo," I don't know. Maybe he was lonely? Maybe he had not seen his name in the papers for a while? Maybe he was temporarily swayed by some arguments contained in those 1000 pages? I don't know!

Maybe he wanted to work on the minds of his enemies, which are numerous these days. Maybe he wanted to make sure that he would not be barred from doing research in some famous archives, or forbidden from lecturing in some countries, like Canada or the United States. I am not Irving–I do not know what went on in his mind. I asked him and he gave me an explanation. I reflected on this explanation and decided that I would still work with him, rather than against him!

We had, once before, crossed swords about one of his "documents" which he liked to wave around during his public speeches, after his testimony in my 1988 trial in Toronto.

It is the famous Riga case, known in expert circles as CSDIC (U.K) report SR GG. (in file W.O. 208/4169 of the Public Record Office): Major General Walther Bruns, who claims to have been an eyewitness to mass executions of thousands of Jews at Riga.

He was allegedly overheard, through hidden microphones in the park of his prisoner-of-war camp, on April 25, 1945, having just said that to other German prisoners.

I did not believe this story, because I have researched several dozen similar stories over the last forty years, all with the same results. I pointed out to Irving that General Bruns had been connected to Admiral Canaris's people. Canaris was a German traitor and was executed for his treason, thus anyone collaborating with his ilk was, to me, a less than trustworthy witness.

Also, I have always been interested in the electronic intercept methods past and present, and have a pretty good idea of the Brits being able to "wire and tap" a whole park, every bush, tree and bench, as Irving claimed. After all, the weather is wet, foggy, nasty and trees defoliate in fall.

The Bruns conversation was allegedly intercepted in England on April 25, 1945. The trees would certainly have been without leaves. The same goes for the bushes!

I remember the monstrous size of German and American microphones at the time. Look at any of the photos of Roosevelt's or Hitler's speeches. The microphones are huge! That was my initial reaction from the technical side. From the human side, I just never believed that 5000 people, most certainly not Jews, would meekly line up for hours on end, in a lineup that stretched for hundreds of meters, if not miles, hearing the constant echoes of gunfire, as the line advanced.

I know Jews, it is a lie, a negative stereotype (that Jews are cowards), that some might believe in, but I do not. These Jews would have either attacked their guards, or fled en masse. They would not have "silently and passively" waited for their turn to be killed. I don't believe that and never did.

However, I was soon informed by Dr. Faurisson that he had checked into that "Riga document." Here is what he found:

The British guards and interrogators who had ample time to study Bruns, found him an Anti-Nazi and eager and willing to collaborate with the Allies.

In January of 1945, Sicherheits Polizei Chef Kaltenbrunner had brought up charges against Bruns and he was relieved of his command at the Waffenmeisterei, where he worked.

In a later trial, Bruns recanted under cross-examination and admitted that he had not been an eyewitness to the described events after all. He, like so many others, had heard rumors and stories about such events!

So it seems that one of these days, David Irving will have to revise his books, Hitler's War and The War Path 1933-1945, published in London by Focal Point, 1991, wherein he has the "Bruns Story."

Why did David Irving tell this story? Why wave this piece of paper around and blacken the name of Germany? Was it to curry favor with the media? Or to "cover his ass," as the Americans would say? I don't know–all I am simply saying is this: I do not own or operate David Irving! Nobody does! Irving is fiercely individualistic and totally his own man. He does things for his own reasons! He has his own agenda and follows his own drummer, the way many of us do!

I work with David Irving because I like his mind and his courage. Sometimes his gruff manner, which can be intolerant of associates, as well as his icy manner, which makes him seem arrogant, infuriate me, like it does others.

Sometimes it is very difficult no to let ones own likes and dislikes dictate ones policy. I am sure that I have infuriated many people over the years as well. Even my very closest friends say that sometimes I am unbearable. So what else is new?–welcome to the real world. Half of the world's marriages start out all "lovey-dovey" and end up in acrimonious divorces.

Political struggles, with all their dangers, tensions, egos, personality clashes and differing goals and agendas, are difficult endeavors.

We are confronted with very few choices once we start out "getting into politics." We can be a majority of one, always in total agreement with ourselves, or we can reach out and touch someone and, wow, what takes place is really something! We can no longer dictate, now we have to persuade, to give a little, to compromise here and there.

As far as David Irving is concerned, I will "keep the faith" with him as long as I feel he serves the cause of truth about my own people, even though he might err sometimes, or disappoint me or my friends in some detail. He has courage, good looks, charisma, an ability to think on his feet and to string words together coherently, like few other people I know.

I am asking you, you who have been so very loyal and supportive of me, for so long, to trust my instincts. We have come a long way together and it's not over yet. —That much on the Irving story and on to the good news!

Revisionism is breaking out all over in the Canadian and American media lately. Even the "standard" or mainstream press, like The New York Times, has reported that two of the Republican presidential candidates are "Holocaust Sceptics" and "Revisionists," namely Pat Buchanan and David Duke. Duke is constantly berated about his "Nazi" past. Poor guy, he tries so hard to explain his way out of it. The other day he was on Canada's largest private radio station, CFRB, with a Jewish moderator called Adler. Poor Duke, if he had just said, "yeah...I don't believe in it, here are my reasons why...", but no, he hemmed and hawed, it was embarrassing to listen to him. Oh well, such is the price of fame and wanting to be President—thank God I am me!

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has a series on TV on Canada at war—wow, talk about revising history. "Poor" Churchill and his then crew in Canada and England don't fare too well. The Germans are almost human for a change.

P.B.S. in the United States (also televised in Canada), has a program on the SS, euthanasia, racial hygiene, eugenics and the esoteric side of "Nazism." Boy, that's heavy stuff. I wonder what force is zapping the media people these days, because there are some dangerous truths being told in those programs.

And so it goes—in France, they had a long Swedish film on Neo-Nazis and the Right, linking it with Revisionism, which really upset Dr. Faurisson and French Revisionists. It was a nasty bit of selective editing, but then, what do we expect? Exoneration? Fairness? Our enemies are fighting a battle for survival! They want to hang on to their perks, privileges and power! They want the guilt to keep flowing! That's understandable. They never fought or debated fairly—not with me anyway, so I don't expect it now. What we do buy with these TV smears is "name" or "brand" recognition. The public hears the first time about us through these programs. We are breaking through the artificially imposed silence. The results are everywhere!

Der Stern and Profil interviews.

Der Stern magazine, from Germany, with a circulation of almost 5 million readers, recently interviewed me at length. The mass circulation Austrian magazine Profil did the same. The reason? They are worried about the "swing to the right" in European politics. I found them well informed on the subject of revisionism and "right-wing politics." They are writing stories about "revisionists" and/or neo-Nazis in Belgium, England, Poland, France, Germany, Austria and Canada. These people are our sworn enemies, and they will knock us and defame us, but they will make us known. Our views, even if they are distorted by these people, will be brought before the public. Our names and faces will be known. If somebody then wants to join us, or help us, all they have to do is pick up the phone and call.

There is also some bad news, however:

Gottfried Küssel, who recently appeared on ABC's "Nightline," with Ted Koppel, and another time with Diane Sawyer, in a feature on neo-Nazis, was arrested in Austria less than a week after the program was aired in the U.S.A. He is still in prison, in investigative custody, for wanting the "Nazi Party" reinstated, or "no longer banned." This "crime" in Austria carries a sentence of 25-year imprisonment, or even the death penalty (which is no longer enforced, however).

You can write to Gottfried Küssel at the address below and send letters of protest to your local Austrian Consulate or Embassy. Or you can organize demonstrations in front of these places and in the country where you live. I'll keep you posted.

Now to myself. I am waiting for the Supreme Court of Canada to decide my fate. A decision is expected in February-March 1992. There are a number of books about my trial in the works, one of them is a 1000-page scholarly work by an attorney. This book has condensed over 12,000 pages of court transcripts and important documents into a major source book for historians, lawyers, researchers, etc. The cost to publish this book is well in excess of $20,000. If anyone can underwrite the project, I can put you in touch with the writer. There is a similar 800-page German language book ready for printing; again, the Germans are only waiting for the finances to get that project rolling.

My own financial situation is such that I have still to pay the lawyers in Ottawa for some Supreme Court thing. I still have to pay off some of the huge bills for the Munich trials. Telephone and car rental payments and other expenses for hotels, trains, secretaries, stenographers, etc., as well as my two flights back and forth to Europe in high season; my 6-week engagement on the European front have cost almost $10,000 alone. That does not count witness flights, trains, their hotel bills and the two lawyers fees over there.

So, I am begging again! I am asking you to simply reflect in the calm and quiet of your office or livingroom if I am worth the money that you have been sending me. I have tried hard to trim costs! I have dropped hundreds of names from the mailing list the last few months, and this month hundreds more will follow.

I want to remain a lean, mean, fighting machine! Thank you for the help! Let freedom ring! All the Best!

Hitler innocent, says

Irving, despite 'discovery' of Eichmann documents

By Julian Kossoff

Holocaust revisionist David Irving this week strongly denied press reports that he has "recanted."

In an exclusive interview, he reiterated his claim that Hitler knew nothing about the Holocaust, called the gas chambers "a legend" and predicted a new, more powerful Germany, and the destruction of Israel within 10 years.

This week, several British newspapers suggested that Mr Irving had changed his views following the acquisition of a manuscript dating from 1955, supposed to be the "reminiscences" of the head of the Nazi Bureau of Jewish Affairs, Adolf Eichmann, who was hanged in Israel for war crimes in 1962.

In the document, carbon copies of which are being examined by experts in Germany, Eichmann reportedly says that his SS superior, Reinhard Heydrich, told him that Hitler had personally ordered the destruction of the Jews.

Mr Irving, who described the information as "new," said he had not come to any firm conclusion about the 1,000-page document, given to him by an ex-member of the Flemish Waffen-SS, while he was in Argentina in October. But it was not proof that Hitler was involved in the Final Solution, he said.

This, and other supposed revelations, such as the fact that Eichmann understood Hebrew and visited Palestine in 1937, which Mr Irving referred to as "explosive," have been on record for years and are contained in the transcripts of Eichmann's interrogation in Israel.

The task of authenticating the alleged "Eichmann memoirs" now rests with the German Federal Archive in Koblenz. Dr Ernest Ritter, of the archive, said it would be "extremely difficult" to do this.

At his Mayfair flat, surrounded by framed newspapers from Nazi Germany, Mr Irving sat at an antique desk playing with a small swastika flag. Behind him, a figurine proclaimed him to be "the World's Greatest Dad."

"The Jews are very foolish not to abandon the gas chamber theory while they still have time," he said. He predicted a new wave of anti-Semitism within 18 months, because the Jews "have exploited people with the gas chamber legend."

He also foresaw the rise of "a greater Germany, including Austria and Slovenia with an economic hegemony over Eastern Europe." He added: "In 10 years, Israel will cease to exist and the Jews will have to return to Europe."

Mr Irving said that he had not visited the sites of the death camps in Europe, describing himself as a "field marshal" who would tour the "battlefield" only once the final victory had been achieved.

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. For your copy of Which Way Western Man? send $17.50 (which includes $2.50 for postage and handling for the softback edition (Order No. 22003).

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980—except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. LINCOLN, Neb. — Bearing a goodwill offering of fried chicken, a Jewish cantor and his wife set out last month to confront a tormentor, the grand dragon of Nebraska's White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Four emotional hours later, the Klansman had renounced his robe and hood, his swastika rings, his Nazi flag, his books about how to manufacture poison and explosives — and decided to convert to Judaism.

He told the cantor, Michael Weisser, that he had decided to drop his racist venom and violent fantasies about blacks and Jews. Now, Larry Trapp wants to deliver a speech on racial tolerance at Weisser's synagogue during an interfaith observance of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday next month.

"We have become the closest of friends," Weisser says. "It's the most amazing thing."

The Weissers' first contact with Trapp came last summer when he began telephoning, calling Weisser "Jew boy," making thinly veiled threats and mailing "really despicable hate material."

Weisser returned Trapp's calls. He knew that Trapp, a diabetic, uses a wheelchair and offered to help him buy groceries.

Trapp was surprised Weisser had the nerve to call him. "I didn't think anybody had the guts," he says, adding, "Nobody had ever been nice to me before."

Trapp, 42, and Weisser, 50, have become pals. "He teases me about all of this to this day," Trapp says. "Because I want to become a Jew, he calls me 'Jew boy' now."

Trapp wants to make amends. He has apologized to the NAACP, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and some gay college students. He called an Omaha TV station to apologize for calling a black newswoman a "half-breed." That occurred in November, when Trapp was in court for leaving a hate message on the answering machine of a disabled black man. Trapp had called the man a "drooling idiot."

"I've got to get out among the people I've hurt," Trapp says. "I stopped before it got too far — or God or Michael Weisser stopped me. Something stepped in. I consider myself a fairly intelligent man. To do the stupid things I did in my past life is shameful."

Weisser, cantor — synagogue leader of singing and prayer — at Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, is cautious about sudden spiritual conversions. But in Trapp's case, "I think it's for real. The things Larry Trapp has done since this happened are too good to be true, but they are true."

Trapp grew up in Omaha, abused, he says, by his father. Diabetes has claimed his right leg, much of his left leg and most of his vision. Briefly a small-town police officer, he wrecked his marriage by heavy drinking and did two hitches in a state reform school.

Weisser is inclined to blame Trapp's involvement in the Klan on his miserable upbringing and life, but Trapp is not.

"I made it crummy," he says. "I can't blame it on other people."

Weisser asked his congregation at one Friday night service to pray "for someone who is ill with the sickness of bigotry and hatred." The next night Trapp called, asking for help in mending his ways.

The Weissers bought a tub of chicken and went to Trapp's apartment. They bore a gift Julie had suggested — a ring, made of strands of silver twisted into a circle. "She thought of it as twisted but still very beautiful, just like this person's life," Weisser says.

Trapp opened his door and did something he can't explain. "I had two Nazi rings on. For some reason, I just took them off and said, 'I can't wear these anymore.'" He didn't yet know about the Weissers' gift.

That Trapp experienced a spiritual awakening to Judaism as well as a moral transformation, Weisser says, "is a nice twist that God provided."

When an Oklahoma Klansman who had heard about the conversion phoned and became abusive, Trapp recalls, "I said, 'I'm going to hang up. I don't talk to racist scum.'"

Under Siege

by Maj. D.V. Clerkin

Is the White race not under siege? The picture at least is a symbol of the type of siege the white race is subject to. This white woman seems content to miscegenate. Her example is taken as assent by blacks and other non-whites for sexual assault, denial of jobs to white males, and the mugging of elderly Whites. She probably doesn't realize it, but the non-white males she consorts with see her as an example of white surrender. Every white miscegenator has thrust a dagger into the heart of the white race.

Phil Donahue is another example of a white renegade. He regularly has black activists on his show who make no bones about their hatred for whites. Donahue doesn't become critical until the blacks start talking against Jews. Then he begins to bristle. Every time Phil Donahue has a show that is critical of whites, another black decides that victimizing whites is alright. And this goes on all over the media. Media are so hostile to even a moderately pro-white message, such as David Duke's, that it is literally an invitation to anti-white violence across the country.

Whites may be threatened because media whites feel guilty for some perceived wrong they have committed against people of color. Jews, however, are a 'holy people,' which absolves them of this special guilt that white liberals carry. This is the reason why whites are losing the struggle. Too many whites have come to believe themselves guilty, a form of original sin which comes with the genes. So they accept the white man's burden and go to work for their worst enemies. The Jews beat the drum or this sick complex: it suits them to lower self-esteem amongst whites for their race and its wonderful accomplishments.

When someone such as David Duke utters a little peep about rights for whites, the paralytic white drones go into a frenzy, looking for a negro to play up to—some black they claim is their friend. Most whites don't know any Jews, so they usually don't go so far as to slash their wrists on the steps of a synagogue over their perception of collective racial guilt. The white drones do increase their contributions to the 'United Way,' which in most places is a conduit for white money transfers to the white race's worst enemies. Dronish whites call talk shows to condemn white racism, to exculpate their sense of guilt, and to show proper support for integration and mongrelization, proper respect for the Jews and Israel, and anything else that is likely to eventually cast a shadow over white people and make monkeys out of them. The only thing all too many white drones today are likely to get angry over is the appearance of some poor sucker who dares to think that he can call upon white support for the white race. When this fellow goes on "Donahue" or "Geraldo," or "Inside Edition," it is certain that the audience of white drones and the host will carve him up for scrap.

We couldn't lose this war if we didn't have white renegades working against us. Nevertheless, this is the war we find ourselves engaged in: renegades and traitors within out race; vile opponents without. Still, it is a good war. We have all the honor on our side. Our enemies are moral slugs. We are going to win because we are right and honorable. Like the knightly orders of our mediaeval period, we fight for principle, the salvation of our race and culture. No more fundamental purpose can there be. When you choose to join the white cause, you breathe a sigh of relief—relief that you have come in from the cold. You have come home.

We must be smart now. Those who seek our downfall, those who have us under siege, are waiting to pounce. This decade will see a great white awakening. We are seeing interest in the Aryan movement more now than ever before. Two national candidates, Duke and Buchanan, are actually talking about things from an Eurocentric perspective. More and more whites are fed up with the deadening, morally corrupt status quo. We are receiving requests for information from white professionals now because the assault on Eurocentricism is American life is beginning to hit home with those who had heretofore thought themselves immune from such things as 'minority preferences' In hiring and promotions. It is not just the white working class that is being victimized by government programs of reverse discrimination and hatred of whiteness. Have you ever seen such public denunciations as those directed in media against the white male? University students have been writing to us to complain about 'political correctness' on their campuses, which see their earned grades reduced for not properly Kissing up to non-whites, queers and feminists The Jews are beginning to worry that their psychological hold over the Aryan mind is faltering. In this the situation becomes more dangerous as the country approaches critical mass.

Solid Aryanist organizations with solid views are going to be more important from now on than ever. We see things without blinders. The true whites are seeking answers to their questions. They can't get them from the established order, riddled as it is with Jews, non-whites with a grudge against racial Europeans, and just plain old white traitors. The Aryan movement is the only alternative to the coming chaos. What may seem like a great uphill struggle for recognition is finally coming to an end. Soon the slugs that run things will have to acknowledge the fact that no one believes in them any longer.

Being under siege has strengthened out mettle and our resolve. There is nothing like a protracted war to build stamina for the struggle. ONe learns to pace himself, to think out each move. I would imagine how our opponents wonder over our continued ability to stay in the fight after fifteen years of being under siege as an organization. Now we are starting to come into our own. White are beginning to pay attention to what we have so long been saying. We predicted that immigration would be the issue of the 1990s. It is becoming a national campaign issue. Duke and Buchanan are talking about the threat to the Eurocentric nature of the United States. Ten years ago when we began to talk about the faltering position of the white race in North America, few were willing to listen. Now that is all changed. Whites see nothing but color In their old neighborhoods, and not just blacks, but strange peoples who seem to come from other planets. The System tells is to welcome these odd peoples. What the System does not tell the white people is that the odd races and peoples brought to this country by the government at tax-payers expense are here to replace the white people. No one in government ever tells the Third World types that there is going to be a population problem in North America. But the white people are bombarded constantly with birth control and abortion propaganda.

I feel certain that we will have a great effect on white affairs in this decade. The tide is turning in our favor. But now is the time to stand up for the white race.

The United Nations Covenant on Civil and Political Rights will be placed in the U.S. Senate soon for action on an enabling law which will set aside the First Amendment. This U.N. covenant has done such damage to free speech in Canada that "anti-hate" laws abound there. We need only mention the names Zündel, Keegstra, Malcom Ross, Don Andrews, and now Bill Harcus, to make the point clear that this U.N. covenant stifles freedom of thought and expression everywhere it is ratified. Bill Harcus is the latest Canadian victim of the United Nations' mandates against free speech by Aryans. Harcus if the first man in North America to be charged with advocating GENOCIDE. What did he say? Harcus told an audience in Winnipeg that AIDS kills queers and non-whites, that AIDS is a punishment from God; and that AIDS would help to deliver the Aryan race from its enemies, the Jews, who seem to be IHV-infected at a much greater per capita rate than their numbers in the general population. J.B. Stoner says the same thing in his literature, though at present the First Amendment protects him from "anti-hate" prosecution. The Jews want to change this, take away the protection of immunity based upon the First Amendment. This is the reason for the United Nations Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: this is the cause that the Jews put before the Congress.

Pinnochio Bush is the motivating force behind the attempt to stifle Aryan speech. He does the bidding of his Jewish masters. The "New World Order" ("Novus Ordo Seclorum") will not tolerate Aryan speech that confronts the Jews head on. Nevertheless, we must press on. Some of us will be "First-Amendment defendants" in the United States very soon. The 1988 Sedition Trials in Fort Smith, Arkansas were preliminary bouts, preludes to the massive expenditures of money and time by the Federal government to come against Aryans and their organizations. Here is paragraph II of the covenant:

> Any advocacy of national, racial, or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence should be prohibited by law.

You know who this is aimed against. Not the Jews, no matter what they say. Not the blacks, the Asians, the Hispanics; not anyone but the white man—the Aryan!

The U.S. Senate will pass legislation implementing this covenant. So will the House. The Genocide Treaty slid through under Reagan. This covenant will be Bush's Yiddish glory. Nothing we can say will stop it. And when the prosecutions begin, the masses will sit back and say, 'well, those Aryans had it coming.' After all, boobus Americanus has nothing to say that anyone except football coaches would ever take seriously. We are not pessimistic. In the end we will win, because we are the only ones with any sense. Nature abhors fools.

Sacred Cows and Party Platforms

The Demican Party (Tweedledum)—This is supposed to be the party of the working ma, the party of Jefferson and Jackson. It is in fact the party of homosexuals and lesbians, Jews, non-whites, Marxists and silly do-gooders. The Demicans promote spending and borrowing, federal action to suppress (white) racism, open borders to promote multi-cultural mongrelization, and an international policy of national surrender to anyone who blusters and threatens. Slogan: 'There's nothing wrong with America that a few more Jews and non-white 'refugees' wouldn't cure.'

The Republicrat* Party (Tweedledee)—The Republicrats claim to be the party of Lincoln and Teddy Roosevelt, which makes them the party of meddlers and troublemakers. Republicrats are the once who woof up America while buying everything in foreign-made big-ticket items. Strong in corporate boardrooms, amongst wealthy Jews who yesterday were Marxists, today 'neo-conservatives,' yuppy white trash, uppity blacks who want to bed white women, religious nitwits who adore Jews and Israel, the Republicrats promote spending and borrowing for Pentagon boondoggles, federal action to chase down old guys who once served in a German uniform, open borders to promote cheap labor, and an international policy of beating the hell out of any Arab country that opposes Zionist Israel. Slogan: 'There is nothing wrong with America!' (Lush Limpnutz say so; so there!)

The Libertine Party (Dr. Feelgood's Party)—The Libertine Party has no real program. If you can physically do it, they will include it as a party Plank. Drugs, free sex, the worship of gold, absolutely open borders, homo rights; you name it, the Libertines are for it. If this sounds vaguely like Judaism in the form of a political party, then you had better be aware that this is in fact a nest of Jews who foster the idea that the sociopathic elements in this society ought to be protected as they get high, get buggered and get off. Slogan: 'Everything goes!' 'Anything goes!'

The Pot Pourri Party (The 'I don't want to be a racist party') —One might almost endorse the Pot Pourri Party. They believe in border control, term limitations on public office, populism, opposition to the Federal Reserve, opposition to useless foreign wars and aid, opposition to Zionism, America first, etc. But like the Libertine Party, the Pot Pourri Party is a weak third party, and everyone knows that third parties are traditional losers in America. Still, it remain a viable alternative to Aryans who cannot stand the smell of the Demicans and the Republicrats. But the Dukeism—'Equal rights for everyone' has a rather hollow ring in a country that is turning brown—fast. The Pot Pourri plank against 'racism in all its forms' smacks of the Demicans and the Republicrat, giving pause to wonder why the leaders thought it necessary to speak against the only mechanism that protects whites from their foes. Without racism, the white race is doomed in a world that is 90% non-white. Slogan: 'Vox Populi - Vox Dei' (Which people? Which god?)

These are the four parties that you will see on the ballots in your areas of the country this year. We changed the names to provide a bit of humor to an otherwise humorless subject. Voting has become tedious, which is why fewer whites are voting each year that an election is held. Nothing changes. But some of us continue to vote as a habit that is hard to break. Usually our votes are acts of negativity.

The Aryan way is to swear off the system. We vote to spoil. Break up the reelection of someone as venal as George Bush, throw the election into the House of Representatives with a large independent vote for David duke in 1992. Create a constitutional crisis. See Humpty-Dumpty fall off of his wall. this country is the Titanic. Who wants to be the captain of the Titanic? The only way that we Aryans can be assured survival is for the system to collapse. If it continues much longer to persecute whites, then we Aryans will have to consider emigration—back to Europe. When we brought this up a few years ago, a handful of readers disagreed, saying that they were Americans and that we should fight to put things right here.

Look at the facts. More than 30% of the French people now support Jean-Marie Le Pen. His is a pro-white French program. German youth are demanding Ausländer Raus! [Foreigners Out!] White racism is flaming up all over Europe. America, on the other hand, is racially moribund. It is not unthinkable that we Aryans may one day be forced to leave North America. We live in hostile territory. If we can't change it, what alternative to going will there be? There is no reason why the best of the white race, aware Aryans, should have to share the fate of the blankos,the brain-dead whites who support mongrelization of their own people. We hope they get as much integration as they can stand. We shan't succumb to the madness of the many here. We owe nothing to this cesspool! Certainly not the lives of our children and their children. America has broken faith with us, the real white race, and we don't intend to become the prey of the mutts that Washington prefers over us.

So vote this year. Do it again in 1996. By the turn of the century, however, tens of thousands of racially aware whites may be voting with their feet. We predict that by the end of this decade thousands of whites will be making visa applications to immigrate to their European homelands. It won't be easy. Better than seeing our descendants turning colors. □

Dear George:

I wish it could be more. But maybe it (the enclosed) can help keep Liberty Bell alive and the remarkable pen of Revilo Oliver. What a terrible catastrophe for all of us were that silenced.

A Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year and may Liberty Bell prosper.

Sincerely, Dr. N.J., Colorado

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed please find my check for my very late renewal. If at all possible, I would appreciate your back dating the renewal to August 91 as I have found Liberty Bell both unique and invaluable in understanding the current situation of the West and the U.S.

You and your contributors have shown great insight and courage. I am sure many feel as I do, even though they may not express it to you.

Very truly yours, H.V., Missouri

Dear Mr. Dietz:

What a pleasure it has been dealing with you over the last few weeks. Here is some more information for you.

I have found ample evidence that George Washington was nothing more than another Judaeo-Masonic race-traitor. I have enclosed exhibits 1-4 from the New Jewish Encyclopaedia, Behrmans, New York, 1962.

There is no question after reading these excerpts that George Washington reeked with Judaism. Look at the evidence from the Jews' own mouths. The exhibits are enclosed. Let's get on with the research and find out the truth.

You and your readers know that the white race is doomed to extinction in America, and probably the world.

America was and has been a curse to the white race ever since George Washington sold this country out to the international Jewish bankers. Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin were no than he when they went begging to Europe for capital loans.

So, Americans have been nothing more than slaves of the Jews ever since the creation of this country. They never had a chance thanks to their Founding Fathers. Now under Jewish control, white Americans are as pathetic as the Jews say they are. They deserve to die at the hands of the Khazars. The sooner the despicable whites in America die, the better for humanity.

White Americans are responsible for dooming the white race. Curse America and its idiot goyim whites for the hell they've unleashed on earth. Rejoice in seeing this cursed nation consecrated to the blood-bath it deserves. ONLY THEN CAN THE WHITE RACE SURVIVE.

Publicus Prudentis

cc: Dr. Oliver

Dear Mr. (Publicus Prudentis)

I have the copy of your letter of the twenty-sixth to Mr. Dietz.

It goes without saying that the Jews did their best to foment the revolution of the American colonies against the Mother country. They always incite and encourage any tendency that will split a nation of goyim into antagonistic groups. One of their most talented agitators, Apthecker, once boasted of that standard technique. It is likely that the parasitic race also encouraged the British to pursue the policies that made the revolt inevitable.

Nothing can be deduced from articles in an "encyclopaedia" written and published by the only race that habitually lies. One could apply to the race as a whole the aphorism about Roosevelt that was current in Washington in the 1940s: "He has conscientious scruples against telling the truth."

In an article reprinted in Liberty Bell years ago, I pointed out that the Holohoax has finally taught historians the lesson that no statement made by a Jewish source is to be believed without independent and valid evidence to confirm it. The race has flourished by forgery and deceit. The Septuagint, the Jews' translation of their holy book into Greek, begins with a forged letter attesting its authenticity. One of their great hoaxes is the tale of the Diaspora, when they say Jews first migrated from Palestine, after the Roman capture of Jerusalem in 69-70. It is an historical fact that almost two centuries before that date Jews were infesting every city in the civilized world in which there was money to be made out of the natives.

The article you reproduce from the Jewish Encyclopaedia (obviously a revision and expansion of their International Jewish Encyclopaedia which I have) are merely a starting point for research to determine what was really done by the Sheenies named as "American [!] patriots." One would have to consult the extant memoirs and letters of Americans prominent in the colonial revolt to ascertain what relations, if any, they had with Jews.

You might begin with Benedict Arnold's autobiography. After more than sixty years, I no longer recall whether he makes specific mention of Sheenies, but he will at least give you the names of the colonists to be investigated. His defence of his conduct is quoted extensively, if I remember correctly, in Carl Van Doren's Secret History of the American Revolution (New York c. 1930), which you should also consult.

As for the oddly undated response by Washington to a resolution by the Kikes in Newport, it is, at best, merely a courteous reply to compliments, but it may be a forgery.

The text is written by an unidentified scrivener, writing a standard hand, which cannot be tested for evidence of forgery. The tag at the end, giving the approximate date and identifying the document as "Original" and "Valuable" is in a similar, though not identical, hand. Washington's signature is certified as "autograph." The tag must obviously be much later than the than the purported date of the document, i.e., written after there was a market for specimens of Washington's signature. I do not know, of course, but this could be one of the many forgeries that bear Washington's signature. Next to Lincoln, Washington was the most popular subject of forgeries that were sold to collectors of autographs at high prices. This could be one of the very numerous productions of a notorious forger named Cosey. On this subject, see Charles Hamilton, Great Forgers and Famous Fakes (New York, Crown, 1980).

I am sending Mr. Dietz a copy of this letter.

With best wishes,

Sincerely, R.P. Oliver

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed is my renewal check to L.B. I was deeply disturbed to read that L.B. may "die" at the end of March—I wish I could help more since your magazine is so valuable. Take care and don't stop publishing!

D.T., New Jersey

Dear Mr. Dietz (and, I dare say, Genosse),]

I will do all I can to prevent Liberty Bell from folding, however puny be this effort of mine! Apart from another whom I help with my time, as well as my skills, for the same cause, yours is what I care most for, the most congenial. The others are a matter of a few subscriptions, in Europe and North America.

Please draw the sum indicated on one of the enclosed order forms from my Visa account as stated thereon. I am sure to be able to give you US$300 more this calendar year, plus at least $500 more this same year, if I get a job, or if a business venture I am planning with some other unemployed friends with part of our unemployment benefits as starting capital gets anywhere in time (I lost my job early last May and saw fit to use some of my separation pay to buy books from you; I am now living from hand to mouth, of unemployment benefits that began last month and which can be relied upon until next fall, although not paid very punctually, hence my having to resort to the usurer's card with intent to pay it back by late February. As a dear friend and Genosse has it, "Der Kampf ist die beste Medizin gegen Depressionen." [Battle is the best medicine against depressions.] Anyway, I have been yearning for interesting times, and they are acoming. Hampering my ability to help, for the nonce, though.

I shall pay you those extra hundreds of US$$ by uneven and irregular installments, within the year as I stated. Sorry at my current inability to make a more specific commitment as to time.

You will notice that I am paying for two LB subscriptions; they are intended for either of the prisoners for whom they were requested in Liberty Bell's January issue or, if Liberty Bell should fold, for any use you shall see fit, which applies to my donation as well and to the price of any of the books I am ordering herewith and you no longer have in stock, with the wish that as little of that money should go to the Four Letter President's minions under any circumstances. As to the personal donation, go ahead, you and Frau Dietz richly deserve it, no doubt!

If Liberty Bell is to fold, keep safe those books you have in stock, and I hope you will continue to sell books, because there are more I want to buy when I can and I would rather buy them from you. In the event of a folding up, keep in mind that I remain interested in a "resurrection" in whatever shape, including the sending of photocopied material or transmission by modem, should I ever have such equipment.

The two subscriptions I am ordering should apply, of course, to anyone or to any use you see fit, no matter what Liberty Bell's fate may be.

Along with my best wishes for all we hold dear, I would like to refer to a sentence you know well, a statement of fact on those of our race: Wir kapitulieren nie! The struggle shall go on, no matter how!

Yours Faithfully, Mrs. J.D., Canada

Dear Mr. Dietz: Note,

YOU CAN'T QUIT! Yours is the only Revisionist publication I read from cover to cover the minute it arrives.

I noted your article about the Jews publishing the names of people who gave to David Duke. Two Washington papers called me and asked me why I contributed to David Duke and I told them it was none of their business. The one asked if I wasn't troubled by his former KKK leverage and I told them no, we needed the Klan right now. Then they asked me about his Hitler connection and I told them Hitler's trouble was that he was too good and that he should have done what the Jews accused him of doing and we wouldn't have so many of the varmints stinking up our country!!

Mrs. L.W.S., Virginia

From Grants Pass (OR) Daily Courier, 19 Nov. 1991

Local donors supported David Duke

By AP and the Daily Courier

Residents of the Grants Pass area were among those who contributed to the campaign of former Ku Klux Klan grand wizard David Duke's unsuccessful campaign for governor of Louisiana.

According to Louisiana campaign finance reporting records, nine Grants Pass-area residents contributed to the campaign of Duke, who lost his bid for he governor's seat Saturday in a landslide victory for Democrat Edwin Edwards.

Contributors said they supported Duke for a variety of reasons.

"I didn't support him as a recist," J.R. Walker of Cave Junction said. But he added, "everybody gets a break in this country except the whites. The minorities get every break, the women have special advancements, the blacks get advancements over whites. Who needs it?"

Duke's message was different, and Walker said he believed he would have shaken up the political status quo. He compared Duke's ambitions to those of former President Ronald Reagan, who he said shook up the federal bureaucracy.

Walker, a retired Southern California businessman, said he was solicited through the mail to contribute to Duke's campaign. He contributed $250, according to Louisiana records.

Cave Junction resident Ellen Schumacher contributed $45 to Duke's campaign, said only, "you bet I did," and hung up on a reporter. She has written letters to The Daily Courier decrying the U.S. government's treatment of German soldiers during World War II.

David Handley of Grants Pass said he liked Duke when Duke gave a speech in Sacramento about five years ago for the Populist Party. He said he liked his ideas about doing away with the Federal Reserve and tightening control of U.S. borders. Duke's past didn't concern Handley.

"It didn't worry me in the slighest. I think everybody matures," said Handley, a retired California state employee. He contributed $85.

The names of Grants Pass area residents were among a total of 126 Oregonians who contributed nearly $6,600 to Duke's campaign, The Eugene Register-Guard newspaper reported.

Others contributing from the Grants Pass area included: Rodney Kelley, $10; Richard Murdoch, $25; Dean Scott, $50; Marjorie Spickler, $50; Ann O. Starck, $25; Steve Budai, $25; Isabell Foree, $30; Mr. and Mrs. Al Liebich, $15; Lawrence Richardson, $20; and Murray Beebe, $100.

The biggest donor from Oregon was Stanley R. Hultberg, a northeast Portland man who has an unlisted telephone number. He gave $2,000.

Many Oregon contributors said they gave money to Duke because they were attracted to his conservative agenda and his pledge to "preserve Western heritage."

"I support people all around the country who subscribe to a conservative economic point of view," said Florence investor Richard Wagner, who gave $10 to the Duke campaign.

Wagner said he liked Duke's stand against deficit spending on the state and federal level. "I believe it's very important for us to have governments that operate within their income," he said.

Wagner said he was undisturbed by Duke's past as a former Nazi and grand wizard of the Ku Klux Klan.

"When you get down to it, everybody's got a past," he said. "His is all over and done with — but that's not the way it's been handled by the press, which usually manages to get it in the first sentence of every article."

But a spokesman for the NAACP said he's convinced that the Duke campaign managed to attract a substantial level of contributions from Oregonians and other areas outside of Louisiana because of his message of "fright, hatred, decei and lies."

"I think this is really a sign o where this country is headed,' said Greg Evans, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Oregon and Washington. "People are subscribing not only to the messenger but to the message, which is one that is very restrictive.

Duek is reportedly considering a run against George Bush for the Republican presidential nomination.

Dear Editor:

I dare you to print this one!

The Aryan/Sumerian race will probably die out or be mongrelized, yes. I am English/German with blue eyes, married three times. The Aryan men I have dated or married are chauvinists, thinking they are superior to their women. And 50% of those men like to beat on their gentle wives and girlfriends. If the Aryan race dies out, it's not because the Jews are rich, charming and irresistible to Aryan women, but it's just that Jews don't hit us or order us around.

Want to save the race, boys? Then start by staying to ONE wife and stop beating us up. It is you behavior that has made us ashamed to produce children.

Start defending and protecting women right here in your own town (never mind overseas) and you'll find gratitude in the form of pregnancies with the greatest pleasure. I want to see decent housing for battered women and protection for single women who haven't yet fallen in love. Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed is my renewal for Liberty Bell. (IF anything happens that you must discontinue operations—which I surely hope does not come to pass—keep the money for your needs). The remainder of the check is just a booster...

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Please renew my subscription for another year. I sincerely hope that this will not be the last.

Yours truly, G.S., Florida

To Whom It May Concern:

My name is ...—I am thirteen years old and in the eighth grade. I have constantly been reading about Adolf Hitler, Nazism, and the Hitler Youth. These topics interest me very much, and I am trying to learn as much as I can about them. In school, Nazism is always being criticized, when it should be praised. I never admit my opinion to my parents, because they are against the Nazis. I do NOT think the Nazis were bad at all!

I am really hoping that you might be able to send me information about your operation... Thank you so much for taking the time to read my letter.

Dear George:

RE: Four Jews indicted for shipping arms to the Serbs! Attached is a clipping that, no doubt, will be of interest to you and possibly others.

Without question, this is the MOSSAD, however in this instance they lost 5 million dollars, and one is in jail, and three others have fled, no doubt to Israel where thereis no extradition. Good law for the Jew!

Also attached find the first page of the indictment showing the names of the four, and the US Codes that they broke. Did any of us wonder who the SERBIANS were, ad how they crushed the Croatian Christians? Here's your answer.

After the detention hearing, there was a new report that said that Isabella Rosenfeld of Israel did in fact come to the hearing and testified that she was a survivor of the big lie [Holocaust], and for that reason the court should set free her son. I am pleased to report that the judge here in Tennessee did not buy that story and that Rosenfeld was without bail, for the judge knew that he would run to Israel (with no extradition) like most of the Jews that are involved in the S & L Scandal did, so he held them without bail...

Keep available to those that want to know the other side of the story that the people in the U.S. don't get from the controlled press. Keep up the excellent work.

Very truly yours, E.J.Y., Tennessee

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by O. Bacu (907 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. "They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People; not only of America, but the entire world.

THEOLOGICAL IRE

In its issue for 24 February (erroneously dated "February 17" on the first page and in the banner), Christian News complains of Liberty Bell's "vicious attacks against Jesus Christ and Christianity." Its editor was particularly incensed by my sportive little article, "Theological Fun," in the February issue of Liberty Bell.

Christian News reprinted my article in tiny type, which, however, can be read with the aid of a magnifying glass by anyone who has good eyesight. It then complains that Liberty Bell does not follow the canon of free speech because "it has refused to publish a response to its vicious attacks on Christianity."

Liberty Bell and I have always treated the editor of Christian News with great respect, believing him to be what is very rare in the salvation-business these days, an honest man, who says what he believes. I am sure that he is so fair-minded that he will perceive how unfair is the second part of his complaint.

There is, first of all, a vast disproportion between the two periodicals in the amount of space available in each. You have this month's copy of Liberty Bell in your hand and will note the size of each page and the use of 10-point, 11-point, and sometimes 12-point type for articles. Christian News is a tabloid-size newspaper of twenty-four pages published weekly. It contains each week twenty-three pages of reading matter (the last page is now devoted to colored cartoons for the kiddies.) Each of twenty-two pages contains five columns set in the smallest size of type commonly used in newspapers; the editorial page has three columns, but usually in the same small type. As a result, Christian News publishes in three weeks about as many words as Liberty Bell publishes in an entire year.

The first task of every editor is to determine the most effective use of the space that he has available to provide articles that will interest his readers and convey information that will be novel and useful to most of them. Almost all of the readers of Liberty Bell grew up in homes in which they were exposed to some variety of Christianity and are familiar with the claims made for that religion. It is unlikely that a single one of the Christians who read the weekly issues of Christian News was exposed to common-sense scepticism and rational thought in his youth. Most of them have minds hermetically sealed against fresh air from the real world.

Mr. Dietz tells me that, despite this great disparity, he accepted, on 12 March 1990, a challenge to publish a reply to an article in Liberty Bell by Nicholas Carter. He was sent a lengthy article by a Dr. Surburg which he had to decline because the manuscript was so poorly typewritten, not only slovenly but heavily interlined and confused, that it would have been summarily rejected by any commercial periodical, such as the Atlantic Monthly or National Review. His request for a manuscript so typewritten that a compositor could set type from it directly was not answered.[1]

The best that Liberty Bell can do, therefore, to meet the challenge to "present both sides" of the question is to urge all readers who are not familiar with the arguments for Christianity to subscribe to Christian News, Route 1, Box 309A, New Haven, Missouri (63068); $20.00 per annum. It is a bargain. I am sure no other weekly tabloid of twenty-four pages has so low a price for subscriptions.

1. I am sure that Mr. Carter keenly regretted the failure to supply a proper copy of Dr. Surburg's article, which was eventually published in Christian News. Mr. Carter would have had a "Roman holiday," throwing Mr. Surburg and his infinitely trite arguments to the lions, as, according to one of the grossest Christian myths, the Romans are supposed to have thrown the dear, sweet Christians. The best commentary on that tall tale was an Italian cinema entitled "O.K., Nerone!" In the film, the famished lions come bounding up from their cages beneath the floor of the Coliseum and out onto the arena. They halt suddenly, eyeing in dismay the unsavory horde of epileptics, misfits, and lunatics that is waiting, praying, and gesticulating. The lions hesitate, but, after all, they are ravenously hungry and the Christians are all that has been provided for their dinner, so they reluctantly attack the unappetizing food. The next scene is in the tunnels beneath the Coliseum. The lions are heard groaning in their dens, and one sees troops of slaves rushing in, bearing, suspended on poles, huge boxes of bicarbonate of soda.
Needless to say, it is an historical fact that the Romans, accustomed to tolerate every kind of grotesque superstition among their subjects, never executed anyone for his or her religious beliefs. Conspiracies against the state and especially attempts to burn down cities were, of course, another matter.

I shall further recommend the tabloid to readers who may have heard with tedium the various arguments for most of the varieties of Christianity. Liberty Bell has frequently quoted or cited Christian News, invariably, I believe, with commendation, and I have repeatedly described it as "the best single source of information about developments in, or relative to, religious activities in Western nations today." I have also recommended the Christian News Encyclopaedia (4 volumes; a fifth is in preparation) as an invaluable historical record of recent religious activity.

Christian News is probably the best of hundreds of periodicals ostensibly devoted to the religion. I must observe that, in contrast, Liberty Bell is unique. It is, to my knowledge, the only periodical that tries to cover, with strict objectivity, almost all aspects of the plight of our self-doomed race.

Liberty Bell is unique, and if it ever ceases publication, I shall desist from all further effort to persuade our race to reconsider its suicidal yearning for extinction.

Liberty Bell is totally independent. It represents no organization or clique; it is not the production of an editor who publishes to display himself in print. I do not recall having seen an editorial in it, and only rarely does it contain an editorial note.

To show that Liberty Bell is sui generis, I shall list the principal reasons why I write for it.

There is no editorial tampering with what I write. What is published is what I have written, and almost invariably after I have read and approved page proofs. I am responsible for my own errors, but I never have to apologize for errors inserted by well-meaning editors.

There has never been a suggestion that I reduce the English language to the small part of it that is currently used and abused in newspapers, which are necessarily addressed to a multitude of semi-literate readers.

There is no propaganda line. Periodicals that are published by organizations that try to recruit members justifiably insist that their articles conform to the organization's principles and propaganda, and contain nothing, however factual or logical, that would offend members or potential recruits. Even periodicals that are not the house-organs of a political movement usually have editors who have formed in their own minds a picture of the kind of subscribers they wish to attract, and are chary of displeasing that imaginary body by what Christian News calls "straightforward and rough language" that may seem not overly nice and decorous, especially on some particularly sensitive topic. The policy of Liberty Bell is to shirk no demonstrable fact or logically drawn opinion: "straight ahead and damn the torpedoes." This may not be profitable, but it is not disingenuous, and will (or should!) win the confidence of realists.[2]

Most publishers of periodicals (including Liberty Bell Publications) also publish or stock books, which may provide a considerable part of their income. What makes Liberty Bell so remarkable is that I have never been asked to commend or even mention a book on its list, and I have never heard from its editor the common plea, "Please don't notice X's book, because, if you do, our people will buy it and so will buy less of our books."

I review and commend books which I judge to be important and useful to my readers, regardless of who publishes them.

You will not be able to appreciate the great significance of this fact if you have not had a considerable experience of the activities of the so-called "right wing" in the United States. The Reverend Mr. Otten should be prepared at least to surmise what is involved, since he has had the editorial problem of being confronted by letters from 'revisionists' (as persons who believe in historical truth are now called) who tried to use the pages of Christian News for personal attacks on other 'revisionists.'

There are scores of would-be leaders who are presumably dedicated to the formidable task of replacing the Jewish government of the United States with one that is not hostile to our race and civilization, but who spend most of their time and effort in feuding with one another. The reasons for this lamentable and disastrous state of affairs are many besides petty vanity, and I shall attempt to analyse them at some more opportune time. One could, with only a little parodic exag-

2. I use the word in its proper sense as an antonym of 'idealist' and 'religious.' One unfortunate legacy of Christianity is the use of 'realism' to designate the school of Scholastics who claimed that 'universals' (i.e., Platonic ideae) were real, i.e., had a physical, palpable, and objective existence somewhere.

geration, say that the "right wing" has adopted the motto of the old Marxist "popular front": "no enemies except on the right"!

Mr. Dietz's bitterest enemy, I believe, is a "right-wing" publisher who, piqued by a certain rivalry in publications, has not only published flagrantly libellous charges against Mr. Dietz personally but even descended so low as slanderously to try to use the Federal Bureau of Intimidation to harass Liberty Bell Publications. I have recommended in the pages of Liberty Bell several books from this publisher and shall continue to do so. That is proof of the editor's dedication to our cause and of a most extraordinary ability and willingness to rise above all personal considerations.

I hope that Christian News will not regard that dedication and surmounting of personal feelings as a Christian virtue.

MOVING JESUS

I learn from the Wall Street Journal, 2 March 1992, that the American Bible Society, one of the foremost publishers of the world's most widely distributed work of fiction, are coping with a falling market.

Bibles are still printed and sold in large numbers, but, as several dervishes cited in the article complain, the book is treated as a talisman or fetish, put on a table or shelf, seldom opened, never read. Even the pious do not read the bulky collection of dreary tales. A Gallup poll found that out of persons who claimed to believe the book to be the Word of God, only half could name even one of the four synoptic gospels.

It is true that although that bag of grotesque tales has endowed English with innumerable phrases, aphorisms, and pregnant allusions, it has little literary quality. It lacks both the dignity and the charm of Classical mythology. Its historical value is virtually nil. And for what is called 'human interest' it cannot vie with Flaubert or Thackeray or Dickens or Agatha Christie. But persons who think a god the author should overlook their god's awkwardness.

It is true that many Americans do not know enough English to understand the King James Version and are too indolent to remedy the inadequacy of their education. I discovered this some thirty years ago, when I discovered with horror that some of my colleagues were translating the English of Milton's Areopagitica into 'contemporary' English in the hope that it could then be understood by graduate students in "Political Science" (i.e., Marxist propaganda). There are said to be some forty English translations of the Bible, most of which try to jazz up the stories by vulgarizing the English in which they are told. But these versions are equally unread.

There remains the question whether True Believers could read their Holy Book if they wanted to. I remember having seen some years ago an estimate that no more than 27% of adult Americans[1] were mentally capable of reading a book—any book. Most of the others, of course, could recognize the letters of the alphabet, read road signs (although I note that these are being replaced by 'international symbols'), and understand headlines and short paragraphs in newspapers. The limiting factor was power of attention. A newspaper called USA Today is said to have ascertained by investigation that most of its readers could not keep in mind more than a short paragraph. Their feeble intellects, palsied and spasmodic, could not remain in focus on a longer text. That is probably correct, although no one noticed that the fact made idiocy of our ochlocracy, and proved that a society that permits more than the 27% to vote is simply committing suicide.

Most of the shamans consulted by the reporter for the Wall Street Journal related failure to read their Bible to the general ignorance of the 'post-literate generation,' i.e., the functional illiteracy produced by sabotage of children's minds in the public boob-hatcheries. A Reverend Mr. William Hinson of Houston said candidly, "People don't want to read anymore. They want you to show them."

He was right. Reading involves mental exertion, and the feeble-minded are also lazy. Publishers' Central Bureau was once a prime source of worthwhile books, since the excessive cost of warehouse space forces contemporary publishers to liquidate their stocks after a book has passed the peak of its popularity, instead of keeping it in stock until all copies are sold, as respectable publishers once did.[2] The Bureau has been reorganized by a new management and its current catalogues contain only a page or two listing books, while all the rest are devoted to video-tapes.

1. I suspect that the word 'American' was misused, and that what was really meant was 27% of adults residing in the United States, regardless of their race. But that does not make a great difference—probably not more than 10%.

2. I remember that I was mildly astonished a few years ago when I was in the offices of the venerable firm of Le Monnier in Florence and discovered that they still had in stock three copies of a book they had published in 1859.

The American Bible Society, heeding Mr. Hinson's observation, is going to show them. An outfit called Campus Crusade for Christ, has already produced a "full-length movie, 'Jesus,'" which is a cinema version (or eversion) of the tale in the "New Testament" told by an anonymous 'man from Lucania' (Greek Loukâs). The Bible Society is going to produce a similar cinema for the unthinking by filming the tale told by, or attributed to, a Marcus, an unknown person who had presumably obtained Roman citizenship but is, for all practical purposes, anonymous, since his legal name is never stated, and the very common Roman praenomen[3] no more identifies the man than would 'William' or 'Henry' identify a contemporary writer.

The reporter witnessed a completed episode of the new film. A dulcet-voiced female intoned the fifth chapter of 'Mark,' and in the intervals of her narration an orchestra played dramatic music, while the film showed what were evidently scenes in a present-day city, including a building with a rusty fire-escape. The subject of the exorcism narrated in that chapter is portrayed as a youth who "wears a baseball cap" and, I suppose, corresponding 'jeans.' He is pictured as tormented by "a weird, wraith like figure," evidently a replacement for the legion of devils mentioned in the Scriptural story. The youth is touched by "a clean-cut young laborer," who, I suppose, wears slacks and a pull-over sweater. The compassionate laborer who works a miracle is, of course, Jesus dressed up for the new occasion.[4] But that is not the only bit of tampering with the story.

3. The Roman praenomen is, of course, derived from the name of the war god, and was originally given to boys who were dedicated to Mars or hopefully regarded as receiving the god's favor. It is only typical of Christian obfuscation that Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Old and New Testaments (published since 1967 by Zondervan in Grand Rapids, Michigan) contains an onomasticon that derives the name from marceo, 'to be weak, languid,' and translates the name as 'indolent.' Better that a Christian scribbler be thought of as a lazy weakling than as a man of valor!

4. One is reminded of the craze in the 1930s for producing "Shakespeare in modern dress," thus catering to a taste for novelty by making the words and action of the play incongruous and absurd. As late as sometime in the 1950s I had to sit through a performance of a Shakespearian play in which the scene had been transported to a Spanish hacienda in California at a date which, to judge from the costumes, was in the 1830s, and, to judge from various appurtenances, in the

Although the illusionists of Hollywood could have produced quite gruesome pictures of a horde of little devils popping out of the victim's mouth, the Bible Society's director settled for a mere disappearance of the haunting wraith. That must mean that the scenario of the film omitted the negotiations between Jesus and the devils, which many dolts now regard as a model of agreements reached "at the bargaining table." In the original tale, as everyone remembers, the multitude of devils pop into a drove of two thousand swine and drive them to suicide. That is omitted in the film, admittedly because the viewers might retain enough of Aryan instincts to feel pity for the innocent pigs—a few might even pity the peasant who was robbed of the drove that probably was all that he had in the world.

Although the reporter does not say so, the parts of the text corresponding to those incidents must have been censored out of the script read by the sweet-voiced female, their place probably being taken by symphonic music that excites emotion directly and without inducing conscious thought. The new film is obviously made to catch conies, and one does not expect honesty from Christian salesmen.

The rest of the "King Video Version" will, no doubt, be as much of a falsification and travesty of the original as the episode witnessed by the reporter.[5] But the officials of the Bible Society who are quoted in the article think the wonderful new idea will bting them and salvation-hucksters throughout the country lots of business. A Dr. Habecker, President and Chief Executive of the Bible Society, joyously opines that his motion picture "will revolutionize the way people study [sic] the Bible in the 21st century."

1870s. The duelists, in lieu of swords, used Colt six-shooters, and when one man ran off the stage pursued by his rival, who was blasting away with his single-action revolver, a part of the audience, not devoid of common sense, burst into laughter. The more recent use of Congoids as actors in Shakespearian plays, beginning with the falsification of putting a nigger in the rôle of Othello and eventually reaching the ultimate obscenity of making Lady Macbeth a negress, had a different motivation: it was the way in which Kike producers enjoyed spitting in the faces of Aryan boobs, so devoid of both manhood and reason that they could endure such spectacles.

5. I can hardly wait to find out whether proletarian Jesus will enter the big city, probably New Jerusalem-on-the-Hudson, in a Rolls Royce or as a 'hitch-rider' in the back of a battered old Ford truck.

The test of the new sales-promotion will be the one used in television, but this could probably be predicted quite easily and expeditiously by recourse to a simple device. Some years ago a zoo in the southeasten part of this country—Atlanta, if memory serves me—put a large television set just outside the cage in which a gorilla was confined, and gave the gorilla a switch with which he could change programs at will. It was discovered that the gorilla naturally preferred the television shows that were most popular with American addicts of the boob-tube. But it was not said that the gorilla "studied" his favorite moving pictures.

A PERSISTENT HOAX

The number of The New Scientist (London) for 7 December 1991 contains a long article devoted to the traditional means of conserving water and hence farming successfully in arid regions of Asia and South America. A detached section of the article deals with the network of some 250 underground tunnels that permitted the Palestinians of the West Bank to conserve and utilize efficiently the underground water and scanty rainfall of the region and live on comparatively fertile farms until the Jews seized the land and partly destroyed the tunnels, trying, with only partial success, to replace them with a long aqueduct, built, of course, with money taken from the Americans.

The Jewish archaeologist, who believes that the tunnels are more than two thousand years old, thinks they were built by his ancestors, but they are like the even more extensive system of tunnels to tap subterranean springs in Persia, which are of equal or greater antiquity and were maintained until infatuation with Western engineering destroyed them or led to their abandonment.

The article makes the nice point that "do-gooders" and "One-World" conspirators, who try to impose Western technology on more primitive peoples, do incalculable harm to the natives. It also contains a delicately veiled hint that the only real global problem is not a "greenhouse effect" or other scare promoted by politically subsidized "scientists,"[1] but the terrible pollution of the planet caused by the horrendous and catastrophic proliferation in recent decades of several species of the most vicious and destructive animal thus far produced by the blind forces of biological evolution.

1. Only 17% of the meteorologists interrogated in the recent Gallup poll believed that global warming is or could be induced by human activity, but the 17% are loudly vocal, obviously conducting propaganda for the Jews' "One World" hoax. The same 17% are also trying to create panic about "ozone holes," which depend on the fluctuations of solar radiation, not on the comparatively small amounts of gas released by modern devices.

I do not cite the article here for its principal contents, but because the Jewish archaeologist opines that the irrigation tunnels, so like those in Persia, were dug "by Jewish communities before the Diaspora, when they were thrown out of the Holy Land by the Romans." I cannot believe that he is so ignorant that he does not know that he is impudently flaunting one of the most inveterate of his race's many hoaxes, the myth of the "Diaspora," supposedly caused by the Romans when they suppressed a combined revolt and civil war among the Yids and restored order in Palestine by capturing Jerusalem after a long siege in A.D. 69-70.

The Jews were never "thrown out" of the Palestine they grabbed by destroying, probably through intrigue, deception, and subversion rather than open warfare, the Canaanites and Philistines to whom it belonged. The Romans certainly made no effort to expel them after 70, and Palestine was still so swarming with Jews in A.D. 134 that the last christ of any significance, Simon bar Kosiba, and his chief disciple, Jesus ben Galgouda, were able to mount a full-scale and formidable revolt that it took the Romans several years to suppress. The Jews remained in Palestine until after the Arabian conquest, when the greater part of them migrated to countries in which they could prey more easily and profitably on prosperous but cozened populations.

On the other hand, everyone with even a smattering of historical knowledge knows that the Jews were scattered throughout the ancient world long before A.D. 70. For example, the city of Rome was so lousy with Kikes in 179 B.C. that the urban praetor, Cn. Cornelius Scipio Hispalus, tried to expel them, although we may be sure that for every one he threw out of the front door, two crawled in over the back fence. After his year of office, their money and intrigues obtained effective revocation of his decree. As everyone who reads Cicero knows, the predatory aliens had obtained such economic power in the Republic that they could cause financial panics by cornering gold and supposedly exporting it to Jerusalem under the pretext that their religion required it. And when Caesar was assassinated in 44, the Jewish swarm howled and rioted, not because they had any liking for Caesar, but because they always profit from political upheavals, which give them opportunities to plunder all factions.

The famous geographer, Strabo, writing c. 35 B.C., referring to an event of 87 B.C., and possibly echoing Artemidorus of Ephesus, c. 100 B.C., stated that the œcumene, i.e., the world inhabited by civilized or semi-civilized peoples, was "full of Jews," who had "penetrated every city" and become so ubiquitous that, he said, "it is not easy to find any place in the œcumene into which their race has not made its way or in which it has not gained mastery [over the natives]."[2] He also noted that the aliens obtained special privileges and were allowed to function as an enclave largely independent of the local government. This account was proudly endorsed by the Jews' famous apologist, Josephus (Ant., XIV, vii, 2 = §§112-118), writing c. A.D. 94, who quotes Strabo verbatim.

Nothing is more obvious than that the predatory race had thrust its international tentacles into every country in which there was profit to be made by swindling the natives two centuries or more before the imaginary "diaspora" of A.D. 70, but by dint of repetition the absurd hoax continues to impose on the ignorant and gullible and even finds its way into a magazine read by persons whose scientific or technical training probably included little history and so left them with scant ability to perceive how spurious it is.

Hoaxing Aryan sheep probably gives God's Race a pleasure second only to that of fleecing them.

THE SPURIOUS SHEKEL

One of the four principal strategic weapons used in the Judaeo-Communist occupation and subjugation of the United States was the Marxian Reformation, which was made effective by two propaganda tricks.

2. I notice that Ralph Marcus, in his generally excellent translation in the Loeb series, hesitantly attenuates the clear meaning of the Greek and translates "made its power felt." He recognizes that the Greek verb normally means 'to have dominion over,' but thinks that since Strabo disliked Jews, he would not have conceded their mastery over the lands they invaded. Likes or dislikes, however, are irrelevant to observed facts. Like Strabo, I dislike Sheenies, but I acknowledge their now total mastery over the fatuous American people.

The first was the pretense that Marx's hokum was atheistic. Karl Marx (to give Mordecai the German names he assumed and by which he is generally known) made a point of repudiating belief in gods such as Osiris and Yahweh, and of denouncing the clergy, who, when he wrote in the middle of the Nineteenth Century, were a principal obstacle to the eversion of civilization he sought to incite. It was noteworthy, however, that although he promised the suckers a "world without Jews," he said nothing about the divinity revered by intelligent Jews, summarized in the dictum, "God is the Jewish People."

Especially during the first three decades of the present century, Marx's affectation of atheism gained for the Judaeo-Communist conspiracy the toleration and even support of many scholars and scientists, who, impatient of the populace's addiction to Christian myths and resenting the constant efforts of the shamans to enforce their superstition with legislation, were pleased by the emergence of a force that was frankly hostile to that superstition, although they were too intelligent to be fooled by the Marxian doctrine, of which they underestimated the potential, assuming that civilization was too firmly established to be destroyed by gabbling sciolists and barbarians. They were like the great Italian historian, Guicciardini, who, in his Ricordi, admitted that he would welcome anything that would abate "the monstrous and depraved tyranny of priests."

The sham atheism also fatally misled most of the persons who were justly alarmed after the Judaeo-Bolshevik conquest of Russia in 1917-1918. Instead of basing their opposition on the solid ground of biological facts, they wandered off into a morass, pursuing an ignis fatuus, the notion that the Christian clergy were necessarily inimical to Bolshevism, instead of being, for the most part, in the 1920s ready to ride any profitable 'wave of the future.' That is how the American conservatives of 1920-1930, most of whom were interested in preservation of the social order rather than fantasies about the supernatural, defeated themselves.

Marx's professions of atheism and strict materialism could have imposed on no scholar or scientist who took the trouble to read his drivel—as few did. Marx's principal work, Das Kapital, is obviously a concoction based on premises that contradict reality as much as do the fictions of all religions. Correa Moylan Walsh, in the great work that Americans perversely ignore because he was an American, not a German, like Spengler, or an Englishman, like Toynbee, tried to spare so far as possible the feelings of his Christian readers, but in his thorough analysis of the folly of international socialism[1] he specifically noted that the socialism of Marx and his kind was a "salvation religion" similar to early Christianity and like it designed to undermine and destroy civilization.[2]

Marx's Communism may be regarded as either the most successful religion invented since Christianity and Islam or as primitive Christianity stripped of the wild tales about the supernatural, which insured its popularity among the ignorant and credulous, but made it unbelievable to men who did not permit glandular emotions to paralyse their powers of ratiocination.

The latter aspect of the cult naturally attracted the attention of ambitious holy men, who, having learned in their seminaries that their Bible was not the word of a god but only a grab-bag of inconsistent and often incoherent tales, many of them forgeries, composed by a rabble of ancient witch-doctors, were easily converted to a religion they could peddle to their congregations while glowing with the malicious satisfaction that they were "leaders" of a revolution against their intellectual and moral superiors. A great many of them joined the Communist Party or some of its subsidiaries,[3] and they all embraced the Marxian Reformation of Christianity that is now accepted by virtually all Christian churches, Catholic and Protestant alike.[4]

1. It should be noted that Walsh specifically exempted from his critique what is called National Socialism, which is really only a kind of nationalism. See his Socialism (= The Climax of Civilization, Vol. II; New York, Sturgis & Walton, 1917), p. 30, n.45: "Socialism as meant by the socialists is here under consideration. State-socialism is something else. So far as this has been adopted in Germany, it has in the present war [i.e., in 1914-1916] shown superiority over the English [practice of] laissez-faire."

2. Ibidem, pp. 166-169.

3. Lists of Communist clergymen in many Christian denominations were published by Circuit Riders in Cincinnati and may still be consulted with profit by anyone interested in tracing the Jewish capture of American churches.

4. There are some exceptions, which I listed in Liberty Bell, August 1991, p. 8, n. 1.

Thus was organized Christianity transformed within a century from a bulwark of the social order to an instrumentality of Judaeo-Communist hatred of our race and civilization. To call the Marxian hokum atheistic today would only evoke sardonic laughter from educated and alert men.

II

The second kind of Marxian propaganda was less patently specious. Das Kapital was a violent polemic against 'Capitalism,' which was cunningly equated with the ownership of property, and described Communism as a proletarian revolution against the private ownership of property of any kind (except such trifles as overalls and tooth-brushes).

Marx's fiction about a rising of the proletariat against the prosperous and more nearly civilized classes seemed to be confirmed by the character of the conspicuous agitators, whether they called themselves Communists, I.W.W.,[5] or Knights of Labor. Americans accordingly thought of the Communists as a kind of criminal underground of ill-kempt aliens and degenerates who met furtively in dark cellars somewhere in the slums to plot violence and revolution. Even the significant fact that Marx had been financed by Engels was misunderstood by an analogy with Robert Owen, the wealthy Welsh crackpot, who squandered a fortune on childish schemes of social reform before he settled down, in his old age, to conversing with spooks obligingly provided by spiritualistic mediums.

The notion that the danger came from the dregs of society persisted even after the Judaeo-Bolshevik capture of Russia in 1917-1918, and imposed on even so alert an observer as Colonel Edwin Marshall Hadley when he wrote Sinister Shadows in 1928. It was only in his T.N.T. (Chicago, Tower Press, 1931) that he perceived that the efficacy of the really formidable subversion of the nation by "Liberals" depended on wealthy financiers. And even he did not reach the inevitable conclusion that Communism and Capitalism are merely two sides of the same gold-plated lead shekel.

Correa Moylan Walsh, too, in his analysis of socialism, failed to see that the two were merely the obverse and reverse of the same spurious coin, but he came close to that conclusion. He identified Marx's socialism as totally "false, flagitious, rotten, and ruinous,"[6] and noted that it had already foisted upon Americans the appalling slavery of an income tax, "the most absurd and injurious tax ever invented, with the sole exception of the tax on legacies."[7] He also saw that Capitalism, which correctly understood is the dominance of fluid capital, is the very antithesis of the secure ownership of real property on which the stability of a nation and the perpetuation of civilization depend. Fluid capital, which is truly international, owing allegiance to no nation or country, principally multiplies itself through corporations, which nations and countries dominated by capitalists have rashly endowed with preposterously excessive privileges.[8]

Even as late as January 1917 Walsh, for all his sagacity, did not perceive the necessary connection between the Siamese twins, Communism and Capitalism—perhaps because the Jews then operated their Capitalism principally by placing on display White stooges, Aryan predators who had prospered by adopting, often unwittingly, Jewish practices and by collaborating with the great Jewish financiers, such as the Rothschilds, who always sought to remain in the background.

That makes noteworthy a cartoon published in 1911 in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and reprinted in Christian News, 2 March 1992, from which it is reproduced herewith.

The cartoon shows Karl Marx being welcomed enthusiastically by the five men whom Americans in 1911 regarded as their leading Capitalists: George W. Perkins, J. P. Morgan, John D. Ryan, John D. Rockefeller, and Andrew Carnegie. The obvious implication is that these proprietors of great masses of fluid capital expect to profit from Marx's plans for proletarian revolution.

One would have to go back to the files of Post-Dispatch for 1911 to determine how fully the editor who commissioned the cartoon understood the unity of the Capitalist-Communist offensive against Western civilization. I wish someone would do that.

6. Op. cit., p. 129.

7. Ibidem, p. 140.

8. Ibidem, pp. 143-149. I shall not take time to discuss Walsh's odd concession to the theories of Henry George, which are really irrelevant to the real question, the necessary control of corporations, which are merely creations of a state.

Also noteworthy in the cartoon is the sixth man in the party that is so delighted by the advent of Marx, Theodore Roosevelt, who was at that time politically active, having chosen a policy that led to the organization of his "Bull Moose Party," officially called Progressive, in June 1912.

So far as I know, it has never been satisfactorily determined whether or not the Roosevelts, whose name is the Dutch equivalent of Rosenfeld, were Jewish in origin.[9] Clas Martenszen van Rosenvelt migrated from Holland to New Amsterdam in 1649, at a time when the Dutch colonists would not have welcomed a known Jew. The family became wealthy and aristocratic, and if there was a Jewish factor in the family, it was greatly diluted from generation to generation. We may safely count them as Americans.

Theodore Roosevelt's grandfather was the founder and proprietor of the Chemical National Bank, one of the largest in New York City. His mother was a lady from Georgia, of Scotch-Irish and French Huguenot ancestry. He seems to have developed an aggressive character as a child, and early elected politics as his profession. He did win distinction as Secretary of the Navy and was partly responsible for the

9. Everyone knows that the loathsome monster called Franklin Roosevelt was partly Jewish through the Delanos; what is not positively ascertained is whether he may not also have inherited a Jewish taint through the Roosevelts. The percentage of Jewish blood would not matter greatly, if the Jewish biologist, Dr. Albert Nossig, was right when he claimed that "even a drop" of the divine ichor would warp the minds of Aryans through many successive generations.

facile victory of the United States in its war of aggression against Spain, which Americans justified by the hypocritical righteousness that is so conspicuous and disastrous a part of their maculate history.

Theodore Roosevelt admitted that his early successes in politics gave him a "swollen head." In the Spanish-American War he led his own cavalry detachment, the "Rough Riders," which attained some victories, greatly exaggerated in the press, after which Theodore undoubtedly suffered from hypertrophy of the ego.

The assassination of President McKinley gave him two terms as President, during which he seems not to have profited personally from the normal corruption of American government, and he performed a great service by beginning construction of the Panama Canal, although in so doing he exhibited not only the political hypocrisy that is normal in the United States, but also a yearning for authoritarian power that might have contented Kaiser Wilhelm II, but far exceeded the aspirations of Adolf Hitler.[10]

After a season of personal power as a President who could boast of his policy of "speaking softly and carrying a big stick," Theodore Roosevelt, no Cincinnatus, could not reconcile himself to private life. He had to appease his driving lust for power by making himself perpetually the most prominent man of his time, first, by a spectacular hunting expedition in Africa, and then by a noisy program of political and economic reform, in the course of which he, with wonted verbal facility, invented the phrase "malefactors of great wealth," which was plagiarized by his distant cousin, the infamous War Criminal and (at least in the White part of his being) traitor.

When Theodore Roosevelt failed to procure the Republican nomination for a third term as President, the enormous oedema of his ego made him readily available to the Jews, who, by a little artful flattery, readily incited him to form the Progressive Party and thus ensure the election to the Presidency of the stooge they had diligently trained for that function, Woodrow ("Wacky") Wilson, who had begun as a crackbrained professor of a kind of secular theology called "Political Science," had become an intolerably arrogant and righteous university president, and had been steered into politics by an alumnus of Princeton who wished to save the university the notoriety of having to cashier its titular head.[11]

We can only guess whether Theodore Roosevelt's inordinate egotism was so bloated that he convinced himself that he could win a third term[12] as President in 1912, or his rancor against President Howard Taft, who had been so wicked as not to accept Roosevelt's dictation of policy, was so great that he deliberately contrived the Republican defeat. At all events, Theodore Roosevelt served as an instrumentality of our eternal enemies and must bear his share of the responsibility for the eventual occupation and expropriation of the country that was still ours in 1912.

Although the editor of the Post-Dispatch and his cartoonist cannot have known it in 1911, the cartoon was a brilliant and ominous prophecy of the doom the light-headed Americans brought upon themselves, beginning in 1913 and culminating today.

VICTORY IN LOUISIANA?

A reader of Liberty Bell believes that while David Duke was defeated in the recent election in Louisiana, his candidacy nevertheless resulted in a signal, though doubtless temporary, victory for the American people.

He reasons that the support given Duke, despite the ineptitude of his campaign, astonished and perturbed our War Lord by showing that there were a fairly large number of Aryans in the United States whose brains had not been pickled in humanitarian verdigris in the schools and churches. This discovery impelled Bushy first to defer and finally to cancel a projected invasion of Florida by a hundred thousand or more niggers from Haiti.

11. On the events of 1912 see the account by Colonel Curtis B. Dall in his F.D.R., 2d edition (Washington, D.C., Action Associates, 1970), pp. 135-142. (I do not know whether the same pagination is found in recent reprints of this book.) Colonel Dall, as son-in-law of Franklin Roosevelt and a "friend" of the latter's Jewish supervisors, had a unique opportunity to learn the inner (and secret) history of those events. He was, however, too charitable in his appraisal of the character of his whilom father-in-law.

The pictures on television that showed the "boat people" from Haiti, who were imitating the "boat people" from Vietnam who successfully invaded the United States a few years ago, should have aroused doubt in viewers who were not in the trance normally induced by the boob-tubes. Many of the boats carrying the "refugees" were obviously expensive and some quite new.

Readers of Liberty Bell, remembering Ivor Benson's crucial article in the issue for November 1991, had no doubts. The well-financed and well-planned invasion by nigger "refugees" was simply one of the weapons, more deadly than nuclear bombs, now used by our enemies to liquidate the Aryans in North America. Now that Castro has lost support from Russia, Florida has evidently been apportioned to savages from Haiti, just as the southwestern states are to be restored to Mexico by the hordes of mestizos that swarm across our borders every day. The Aryan population of both areas will, of course, be massacred and the survivors expelled with maximum suffering, as were the Germans in the Sudetenland and the rest of eastern Europe after the Communist victory in 1945.

The writer thinks Bushy was so amazed by the support given David Duke before the election that he postponed the invasion. The Coast Guard, which, if under American rule, would have performed its true function and barred access to American shores by the migrating horde, sinking a few of the boats with fire from small cannon to prove that the defense of the United States was in earnest, was ordered to collect the invaders and transport them to Guantanamo pending the outcome of the election. Then, after the election proved that a majority of the Aryan residents of Louisiana[1] voted for Duke, despite his tergiversation and hypocrisy, the Coast Guard was allowed to haul the invaders back to the jungle from which they came. A few, especially females who gave birth on Guantanamo, can be slipped into the United States on various pretexts, but the massive invasion of "boat people," including both those who were in the boats and the ones who were scheduled to follow them, was canceled or, at least, deferred to a more opportune time.

That, the writer says, was a real victory, giving the Aryan population of Florida a respite of a year or even several years from the eventual separation of their state from the old-fashioned agglomeration called the United States to form a nigger "democracy."

He adds that the support given Duke also gave us an incidental benefit by encouraging Patrick Buchanan, a more formidable political figure, to become a candidate for the Presidency, to Bushy's obvious dismay and alarm. This raises an old question. Intensive promotion of an American candidate for a high public office forces the alien-dominated press to notice the real issues and thus makes many otherwise befuddled Americans aware of what is really at stake. Does this undoubted benefit outweigh the discouragement and frustration that follows when the effort fails?

The theory summarized above is plausible and certainly supported by the timing of the relevant events, but you must decide for yourself.

A WHIFF OF COMMON SENSE

The contents of an issue of National Review are usually predictable, especially since the one for 30 December 1991 was almost entirely devoted to a very long article in which the magazine's highly intelligent and adroit proprietor, William F. Buckley Jr., pondered the Hauptproblem of modern philosophy: How can there be persons so diabolically perverse that they do not adore Sheenies? Mr. Buckley was incensed by the insolence of his fellow Roman Catholic, Patrick Buchanan, who had temerariously challenged the titular leadership of one side of the Demopublican gang by our War Lord, who is Mr. Buckley's blood brother in the sacramental bond of Skull & Bones.[1]

1. Anthony Sutton, I regret to say, is responsible for the prevalent nonsense in the "right wing" to the effect that Skull & Bones is a sinister and secret conspiratorial society that is working for the destruction of the United States. Mr. Sutton discovered the "secret" membership of the dire conspiracy by consulting one of the directories published from time to time by the Russell Trust, which, so far as I know, is just a well-endowed alumni association that keeps track of the members of Skull & Bones and publishes directories with quite brief biographies of all the members since the fraternity was founded at Yale in 1832. The last volume I have seen was published in 1960, but there have doubtless been later editions.

Skull & Bones is just an old-style college fraternity, not to be confused with the numerous fraternities that clutter up the campuses of most colleges and are little more than glorified boarding houses, many of them, indeed, having been founded by the salesmen of manufacturing jewellers to create a market for badges, pins, and rings bearing a club's Greek letters and symbol.

Skull & Bones, which, when I last heard, selected fifteen new members each year from the junior class at Yale—members who are proud of the distinction thus publicly conferred on them,—is far less exclusive and far less secret than The Seven at the University of Virginia, membership in which is disclosed only at funerals, and then only by a large floral offering in which the numeral 7 in white flowers appears against a background of perennial green. Even the name of the person who commissioned the funerary display is kept secret.

Skull & Bones is merely a real fraternity, an association of wealthy youngsters, products of an apolaustic society, enrolled in a very expensive university, who feel an urge to meet in secret conclaves congenial youngsters of similar tastes and wealthy ancestry, and to form with them, by oaths, ceremonies, and escapades, enduring bonds of fellowship that will endure after they leave the academic womb and, at least ideally, transcend subsequent rivalries. The political activities of members have, of course, varied greatly with changes in the composition of the wealthy class in the United States and with the political functions of Yale University, which, over two centuries, progressed from Calvinism to American nationalism and then regressed to Marxism and Judaic barbarism.

Mr. Buckley's vendetta against Patrick Buchanan continues in the issue for 16 March,[2] which, however, is noteworthy for two items in it.

There is an admirable review, by Ronald Bailey, of a new bundle of bound hokum, Earth in the Balance: Ecology and the Human Spirit, "by Al Gore." (The 'Al' is just in the mode of disgustingly spurious familiarity now affected by politicians and other confidence men; the purported author's real prenom is Albert.) Gore is a member of the upper house of the den of thieves that meets in the Capitol to devise new methods of afflicting the boobs who vote for them. As you would expect, the Senator peddles apocalyptic rhetoric, most of it drivel, and wants you to be especially excited about 'global warming' and 'ozone holes.' The review quotes him as deploring the wickedness of the press that reports scepticism about the clamors of a small coterie of performing "scientists," because permitting responsible scientists to speak "undermines the effort to build a solid base of public support for the difficult actions we must soon take"—such as taxing the American boobs for another two hundred billion dollars annually to finance a "global Marshall Plan" (i.e., like the looting of Americans devised by the traitor who helped the desperate Japanese attack Pearl Harbor), and a "Stewardship Council" to distribute our remaining resources over a planet that will reek with Bushy's (i.e, the Jews') New World Ordure. The tripe published in the Senator's name deserved a review, because many readers of National Review are probably still so credulous that they would otherwise read propaganda published by a member of the Jews' Senate.

2. It is printed over a dark green background that will certainly discourage readers, and is remarkable only for embedded contributions from Jews who agree with Mr. Buckley that Jews are wonderful.

What is really refreshing in this issue of the magazine is what I hope will be a regular use of the last page in each issue for contributions to what is called "The Misanthropes' Corner," a misanthrope, according to the editors' definition, being a person who has not lost contact with the real world.

Miss Florence King has given us what are probably excerpts from her book, With Charity Toward None, which is to be published in the near future. She has devised a new term, "the High-Strung Class," to designate the verbose simpletons who like to call themselves "Liberal intellectuals." If they really believe what they say and are not disguised enemies of our race, they are, in her terminology, 'Strungleurs.'

"America's leading Strungleur," she says, "was Henry David Thoreau, who took it for granted that 'the mass of men lead lives of quiet desperation,' because the mere thought of holding down a steady job set his teeth on edge."

'Strungleurs,' as Miss King pointedly observes, are too 'intellectual' and stupid to perceive that culture and civilization "could not function without a plodding working class and traditional housewives. These are the people who produce strong families that make for an orderly society."

Social reformers merely excite discontent and unhappiness in persons who would otherwise be content with their station in life. "Florence Nightingale had no patience with Victorian England's High-Strung Class, whose passion for improving the lot of the dregs of society she dismissed as 'poor-peopling.'"

"The mass of mankind," Miss King continues, "like their lives the way they are and ask only that sensitive thinkers leave them alone. As James Gould Cozzens wrote: 'When Thoreau judged that most men lived lives of quiet desperation I think he failed to consider the fact that, by a merciful provision of Providence, most men have little or no more imagination than an animal. Good reasons for despair may be all around the average man, but he won't see them.'"

Miss King also examines the shrieking harridans of Feminism, who, inspired by Betty Friedan (race unmentioned), persuaded gullible American women to abandon their homes, called "concentration camps," and "shred the social fabric of an entire country" to pursue "careers" as ersatz-workmen—a subject that is more fully covered in Nicholas Davisson's The Failure of Feminism, which I have yet belatedly to consider in these pages.

Miss King makes many other astute observations and closes with an "incredible statement" by the well-known labor agitator, Samuel Gompers (race unmentioned): "The promise of America for the laboring man is the promise of someday no longer having to work with his hands." That, of course, is a seditious repudiation of the "work ethic," which is the very foundation of all viable nations and about which, by the way, there is an instructive article in Christian News, which I shall discuss soon in connection with the complementary and socially devastating Freudian ethic.

National Review, needless to say, was not the place for a discussion of our enemies' inveterate technique of destroying nations by splitting them into reciprocally antagonistic groups, and making each group intent on exploiting all the others for its own profit or malicious satisfaction.[3]

3. The Jews' strategy for destroying nations was fixed some centuries before the Christian Era and must be known to all Christians who read their Bible while awake. In the screed attributed to Isaiah (alias Hesaïas) the personification of the Jewish race, Yahweh, boasts (19.2): "I will set Egyptians against the Egyptians; and they shall fight every one against his brother, and every one against his neighbor; city against city, and kingdom against kingdom."

A Brief Look At The Einstein Myth

by Wulstan Tedder

NEARLY EVERYONE has heard of Albert Einstein—his name is now regarded as synonymous with 'genius,' his Theory of Relativity being attributed as having revolutionized physics.

But in fact the Einstein story is largely a myth created by the media, and it is about time it was destroyed.

Einstein published, in 1905, a scientific paper which merely expanded in a minor way the work of others like Lorentz and Poincaré, who had already put forward a 'Principle of Relativity;' and even the much vaunted 'Mass Energy Equation' ($E=mc^2$) was not new, being a re-expression of the Equation of Kinetic Energy ($E=1/2mv^2$). Where v is taken as c (the velocity of light) the 1/2 becomes quantitatively irrelevant, such is the magnitude of c.

EINSTEIN
His approach to Science has become a dogma which few dare to question

Over the years following, the work of Einstein attracted what we would now call media attention and 'hype,' and the myth was begun. Some years later, Einstein published other papers, outlining a Theory of General Relativity, and yet it was for his work on the photo-electric effect that he was awarded a Nobel Prize. The General Theory was apparently 'confirmed' by observations of stars during a solar eclipse, and it seemed to explain something that apparently Newton's Theory of Gravity could not: the Perihelion of Mercury. Thus it was hailed as a great scientific achievement.

Acceptance of the Abstract

Two points, however, need to be made. First, the Newtonian Theory could, if altered,[1] give a satisfactory explanation of the Mercury problem—and other, simpler, explanations of the apparent bending of starlight near the sun exist, explanations which do not need an extremely complex and abstract mathematical model. Second, it was assumed before the Einstein myth that theories should be as simple as possible, and not only explain existing phenomena but also predict certain events. With the Einstein Theory this was abandoned, and indeed it is right to speak of a 'revolution' in approach—from the experimental (an example would be Faraday) to the abstract, constructed in mathematical form. What is at issue here is not the use of mathematics but the precedence given to theory and theorising over and above direct physical observation and experiment. Theory now comes before observation, and dominates to the extent that 'common sense' and empiricism are regarded as almost irrelevant. A 'New Physics' has been created, beginning with Relativity and continuing with Quantum Mechanics and then Cosmology, wherein paradox and abstraction are the norm, and where 'thought experiments' and non-observable abstractions have precedence over direct measurement and rational understanding.

In essence, Physics has moved away from the practical and become speculative—experiments being regarded as necessary only to confirm some part of some abstract theory. This speculation is itself increasingly non-rational. For instance, billions are spent on high-energy particle Physics with a view to confirming some obscure but fashionable theory, while the exploration of Space (based entirely on sound engineering and on Newton's Theory) struggles for funds. Real discovery via direct observation (as happens in Space exploration) is less popular than obscure theories about the origin of the Universe.

Dissent Now Dangerous

In respect of Relativity, few now wish (or dare) to express dissent. It has become part of the catechism of the scientific establishment, apparently 'proved' for all time and thus somehow 'sacred.' The same applies to Quantum Mechanics: what few experimental results and observations are accounted for by this theory and approach to matter can be accounted for in more ordinary and deterministic ways. But these other approaches are not only not popular; they are seldom, if ever, taught in universities. Once again, there is a conformity in thought and approach—a certain 'attitude' to Physics. The result is stagnation in genuine understanding and a plethora of fashionable ideas and theories, together with an acceptance that some questions may not even be asked—or, if they are asked, can never be answered (such as: If there was a 'Big Bang,' where did the first particle of matter come from and how did the result of the explosion spread into what did not exist, i.e. infinite Space?)

1. Dr. Oliver comments: "This is awkwardly expressed. What needs to be altered is not the Newtonion Law but the incorrect data on which was based the inference that Einstein's Relativity explained the precession of the orbit of Mercury, which was thought anomalous because it was assumed that the sun was a perfect sphere of uniform density that rotated as though it were a solid body. It is now known that the solar sphere is slightly oblate, that the density of the incandescent gas increases with depth from the surface, and that the core rotates faster than the photosphere; these facts adequately explain the precession of Mercury's orbit in Newtonion terms. See Is there Intelligent Life on Earth?, p. 66 and footnote 46."

One can go further and say that both relativity and Quantum Mechanics represent abstraction and paradox taken to absurdity, and that these fashionable theories need to be deposed and a return made to experimental observation and direct enquiry. In brief, another revolution must take place: a revolution to dethrone the 'Einstein Myth' and all that has followed from it. Instead of accepting these affronts to scientific thought, students should question them. As things stand at present, the free enquiry that once, and so briefly, existed in institutions of learning no longer really exists. Einstein and others have become objects of an almost sacred and sickly reverence. That reverence must be defied. There simply is no other way forward for those who really believe in true Science and exploration.

To Please Yahweh,

Or Astound Him?

by

Allan Callahan

Some six decades or so ago there was a rash of flagpole-sitting going on in the U.S. Some of the best known sitters were "Shipwreck" Kelly, who sat atop a flagpole for 12 days; "Spider" Harness, who perched for 16 days; and Miss Bobby Mick, who stayed aloft for nearly three weeks. These were noteworthy sitters, but they didn't hold a candle to their forerunners in ancient times.

In modern times, the sitters sat because it was a lighthearted thing to do, and a fad. The ancients, on the other hand, did it for religious reasons, and for them it was serious business. They sat on marble columns or pillars, or sometimes on huge rocks. These were better than flagpoles, but still mighty poor in accommodations. Food and drink were passed up to them. Use your own imagination as to how they managed without toilets.

These notable sitters of antiquity belonged to a class of ascetics called "Pillar Saints," and one reason they wanted a lofty perch was to be the first ones in their vicinity to get a glimpse of Christ at his second coming. Their main activities took place during the 5th and 6th centuries, and up into modern times there have been many standing columns in Egypt, Syria, and Asia Minor, particularly around Antioch, which had legends about them concerning one or more of these "Pillar Saints" who sat atop them for various periods of time. The main reason these "Saints" were able to pull off such stunts, so exposed to the elements as they were, is that the climate is generally mild in the Near East.

The best known of the "Pillar Saints" was St. Simon Stylizes, or "Simon of the Pillar," who was an object of both veneration and astonishment to not only the Christian elements of the whole Roman Empire, but to large numbers of pagans as well. It is said that many Persians, Caracas, Meeds, Scything and Iberians all thought highly of him.

He was the son of a shepherd in Scilicet, on the borders of Syria, who was enthralled by Christianity at the age of thirteen. He went to an old man, a sort of local religious sage, to find out the best way for Christian happiness, and was told that continuous praying, fasting, humiliation, weeping and watching for the second coming was the way to achieve it, so Simon decided to withdraw from the secular world.

He repaired to a nearby monastery, and laid down in front of the gate for several days, without food or water, begging to be let in, stating his willingness to do the lowest work, and be a general drudge.

The abbot in charge admitted him, and he carried out his pledge to be the lowest servant of the house. After four months he was elevated above the worst drudgery. He memorized the Psalter early on, kept all the rules of the house by the letter, and made himself so useful that he became well-liked by all the monks.

After two years he switched to another monastery. Under the charge of a holy man named Heliotropes, who was said to be so removed from the world that he was utterly ignorant of the most obvious things in it. Here also Simon felt right at home, and increased his mortifications. One of them he started off with was to try to get by on less food than anyone else. The other monks ate only once a day; he ate but once a week. His superior, though, fearing for Simon's life, ordered him to ease up on this score, which he did. But then he hit upon another mortification, which he could carry out secretly. It was to tie a rough rope around his naked body, which would remain hidden by his clothing.

He kept this up for a long time, no one suspecting anything, until the rope had eaten into his flesh. Even then Simon bore the pain and told no one, but the stench from the wound became strong enough to tip the others off that something was dreadfully wrong. They tried to remove his clothing, but found it stuck to the wound in a horrible way. Slowly and carefully, over a period of three days, the stinking mat of clothing, blood and pus was softened up with liquids until it could be removed. Then it was discovered that the rope was buried so deep in his flesh that a physician was needed to remove it. This caused Simon so much pain and anguish that he lay as though dead for a time. After he recovered, the abbot decided that Simon was a little too holy for the rest of them, and might be a bad influence, and ordered him to hit the road.

From here he went to a hermitage at the foot of Mount Telnescin, run by an abbot named Basses with two hundred monks in his charge. Whether it was from pity or some other reason, Basses took him in, and here he stayed for three years. After this time he went to the top of the same mountain, and began work on what was to become his famous "pillar;" or, more correctly, the first of four of them. Since there was no standing column from a ruined temple at hand, Simon had to build something on his own.

At first he simply threw some loose stones together, to make a crude wall or enclosure, which helped keep off the wind but offered no protection against the rain or sun. And to show that he meant business about staying put, he secured his right leg to a rock with a heavy chain. But he was told by Emetics, vicar to the patriarch at Antioch, that a firm will and God's grace were all he needed to keep up his resolve, so Simon had a blacksmith come and remove the chain.

The saint was now becoming famous, and multitudes of pilgrims came from near and far, even from remote countries, to receive his blessing, and many sick claimed to have recovered their health. Usually he was simply gaped at, but some also wanted to touch him.

Simon was willing to go along with this up to a point, but it distracted his thinking about Yahweh, so in the year 423 he erected a pillar six cubits high, to be out of reach of the throngs. Here he dwelt for four years. Feeling it was not high enough, he built one twelve cubits high, and lived on it three years. A third pillar, twenty-two cubits high, supplanted this one. It satisfied Simon for a long spell—ten years—but in time he felt that it, too, was inadequate, so the people built another one for him. This one was almost twice as tall as the last one, being forty cubits high. Since the ancient measure of a cubit was from eighteen to twenty-two inches, this means that this last pillar was somewhere between sixty and seventy-three feet high, which put him in a very favored position to be the first to spot Yahweh, who was likely to come at any moment.

Here Simon lived out the final twenty years of his life. This last pillar was not quite three feet in diameter at the top, so Simon could not lie down extended on it, and he refused to sit. Maybe all or most of the other "Pillar Saints" did sit down at least part of the time, but Simon would have none of it. That would have made things too easy, and besides, what would his Jewish tribal god think? So he only leaned, or stooped, now and then, to rest a little.

At night, we can assume, he really did lie down some of the time, in a curled up position, or catch a little sleep in a kneeling position with his head touching down; but—who can say? There were no floodlights or flashlights in those days, so there was no way to tell, even on a moonlit night, precisely what Simon was doing all the time, that high up in the air.

It is a fact that many people can get by without regular bed rest. Napoleon sometimes went for up to two weeks at a time with no more sleep than what he could catch in the saddle. Dog tired soldiers, during long retreats or forced marches, have even claimed that they could sleep (a sort of twilight sleep) while walking, if a buddy would lead them by the hand. And apparently a scattering of people, if they have to or are determined to, can go for years or for lifetimes without deep or regular sleep, if they can just sort of "get easy," some way or other, and doze a little bit occasionally. And note that Simon did not work while up on his pillar, so would not get tired in the usual sense.

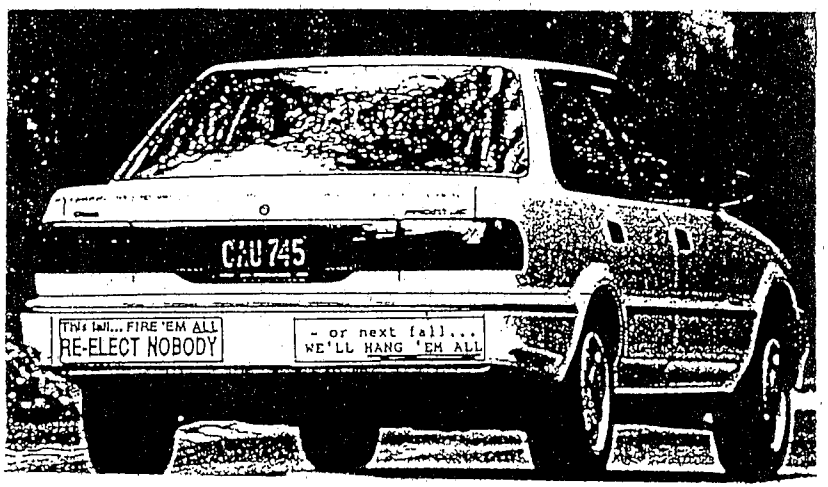
At any rate, as if all the foregoing travails did not suffice to show his piety, he also wore an iron collar around his neck and used the skins of beasts for clothing. He bore all afflictions in silence, and once endured a terrible ulcer on his foot for a long time, even though it was swarming with maggots.

During the day he prayed often; one onlooker kept count for a whole day and stated that Simon had prayed 1244 times. He also exhorted the people twice a day. One thing that turned him off, though, was women. Although he suffered their presence in the nearby crowd, he would never allow one to set foot within the enclosure which contained his pillar.

This strange penitent lived for thirty-seven years on pillars, but finally, in the year 459, on Wednesday, September 2nd, the end came. He was bowing, as though in prayer, when he fell dead.

You have to admire Simon's fortitude and determination, even if you deplore the reasons behind them. He devoted his life to Yahweh, constantly telling him what a good god he was and how wonderful he was. He thought the world of this Big Jew in the sky, but we wonder what the Big Jew thought of him? Was he pleased by his actions? astounded? or what? You would think that the Jewish tribal god would have at least dropped Simon a few crumbs down from heaven now and then, or have given him an occasional pat on the back, or something. Strange, isn't it? It makes no sense. One could almost get the feeling that maybe, just maybe, old Yahweh doesn't exist. □

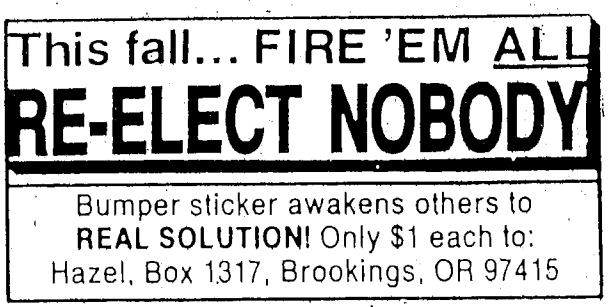
SIGNS OF THE TIMES



The Committee to Save Career Politicians From Hanging (James Hazel, Chairman), is an American grass-roots organization that claims over 90 million members. All registered voters are charter, contributing or honorary members of CSCPH. Our organization sprang up spontaneously as a reaction to the macabre plans of The Committee to Hang all Career Politicians (CHACP), headed by the nefarious anti-incumbent, Jay Russell. Russell has publicly vowed that beginning the day after the Fall elections he and his latter-day Vigilantes will hunt down and hang all incumbent politicians who are re-elected to public office.

These are dangerous times! Our dedicated legislators, who serve so faithfully in local, state, and national government, are in mortal jeopardy. They desperately need our help. If we falter or fail, we face the grisly job of cutting thousands of our public servants down from lamp-posts the day after they are re-elected. We have a Plan to prevent a wholesale massacre of our honorable legislators—but we need your help to execute it. Between now and the Fall elections we are going to devote all of our efforts and resources to campaigning for the UNELECTION of all incumbent politicians. Nothing else can assure their safety.

Will you join us in this humanitarian undertaking? If so, help impress our life-saving message on the minds of our fellow Americans by displaying our patriotic red, white and blue bumpersticker (reproduced below) on YOUR vehicle. Get extras for your friends and relatives. They are very inexpensive, especially in larger quantities—a small price to pay for the very lives of our trusted leaders. WE'RE COUNTING ON YOU! YOUR HONEST, HARD-WORKING PUBLIC SERVANTS ARE COUNTING ON YOU! And in the immortal words of Bartles & James: "We thank you for your support."



Postscript: We realize that, even with our millions of members, THE COMMITTEE TO SAVE CAREER POLITICIANS FROM HANGING is outnumbered—that most Americans side with Russell's proposal to limit not only the terms, but also the lives, of perennial politicians. It's no secret that Americans are almost unanimous in their opinion that firing is too good for them. If you, dear reader, are one who, like Jay Russell, advocates the ultimate method of term-limitation, we won't stand in your way. And just to show we're sincere about this, send us a buck, and we'll send you one of THEIR somber black-on-white bumperstickers that promises: "...or next Fall... we'll HANG THEM ALL!" By sticking one of their stickers on your vehicle to the right of ours, you will not only get YOUR POINT across—but you'll also reinforce ours at the same time.

POLAND

And the Lies of the Allies

by

Paul Norris and Eric Thomson

Poland and its hapless people had largely served their purpose by becoming the excuse for Britain and its reluctant French ally to declare war on Germany in 1939. As historian David Irving points out, Britain's touted war aims were initially the "defense of Polish sovereignty." Of course, it had been agreed upon before 1939 that Britain and France would not intervene if the Soviet Union were to violate Polish sovereignty, as happened a few weeks after the German preemptive strike against Poland. But, unlike the Moor of Shakespeare, the Poles did not go away. Even after the kosher slaughter of some 15,000 members of the Polish officer corps, the Poles and their national interests remained. In fact, it was this Soviet massacre of the Poles at Katyn which served to emphasize to the Poles their likely fate under Soviet/Khazar rule. Therein lay the seeds of a Polish-German alliance. In 1943, the government of Britain was indeed worried by indications that the Poles might wish to put Polish interests ahead of world banksterdom.

On August 10, 1943, W.D. Allen of the Central Department of the British Foreign Office writes plaintatively to the Political Intelligence Department chief in the Foreign Office:

> Consequent upon our conversation this morning, I attach a paper which was primarily intended as an aide-memoir within our section and which, therefore, may contain some rather obvious statements. Nevertheless, it is a very accurate picture of the grounds for suspicion which I mentioned to you this morning... May I urge most strongly the necessity for not hinting to any Polish contacts your suspicions on this matter... because if they felt that there was any leakage of information through us as to their own fears and suspicions, it would close the door to any future negotiations between us and them.

The accompanying memorandum is marked "Most Secret" and is entitled "POLISH-GERMAN COLLABORATION." It begins thusly:

> The purpose of this paper is to draw attention to the situation which now exists in Poland and to the danger that the Germans may succeed in setting up a collaborationist regime in the General Government. At no time since the occupation has such an eventuality been considered possible until now, but recent deterioration in the situation makes it seem that this possibility should be taken into serious consideration... Background: (1) Resentment against Soviet Russia has for long been intense and practically universal among the Poles in Poland. As the German military power seems to be waning, the possibility of collaboration is likely to be greater and no less if the fear of Russian (sic) occupation increases. (2) German anti-Soviet propaganda has been and is in accordance with the sentiments of the great majority of the Polish people to whom it is directed. (3) It is believed, both by the general population and by the responsible leaders that Soviet and communist subversive propaganda and activity in Poland is intended to disrupt the country so that it will be unable, after the defeat of Germany, to offer effective resistance to Soviet domination...
> Evidence of the Present Critical Situation: (1) Since the affair (sic) of Katyn the Germans have for the first time obtained the collaboration of responsible Polish journalists in their press campaign against Soviet Russia. Delegations from several responsible Polish bodies visited Katyn under German auspices. (2) The clandestine press of Poland is concentrating more and more upon bitter attacks against Soviet Russia and against the subversive activities within Poland which are being encouraged by Soviet Russia. (3) The tone of our responsible contacts in the Polish Ministry of the Interior has changed noticeably in the past few weeks... They are obviously nervous at the inevitable effects of the recent German anti-Soviet campaign upon a population 'without proper political orientations' (sic). It seems clear that while they are confident in the attitude of the resistance organisations, they are now becoming alarmed at the possibility that these organisations may lose something of their support from the people and that individuals may be found whose fear and hatred of Russia (sic) is sufficiently strong to induce them to collaborate formally with the Germans, at any rate to the extent of opposing Russia (sic).
> (4) Since the affair of Katyn, Russian (sic) accusations of collaboration among Poles in the General Government, although malicious, have been specific and give the impression that there is some degree of fact behind the exaggeration. (5) Frank [the German Governor General of Occupied Poland] has recently declared that he hopes to make the General Government a model satellite state. This reads like propaganda intended to anticipate the probable course of events. (6) The Krakauer Zeitung of 24th July reports a meeting between Governor General Frank and the President and Director of the Polish General Welfare Council 'to discuss the general situation of the Polish population, with special reference to the events in the Lublin district.' (7) A P.W.I. report from Stockholm ingenuously states that the 'Germans are starting to set up a Polish Quisling government. This plan results from a successful propaganda on the Katyn mass graves.' In view of the above, it does seem that there is a strong possibility of some kind of Quisling Government being set up in Poland supported by (a) Warsaw degenerates; (b) genuinely patriotic Poles who passionately fear the Russian (sic) menace more than anything else in the world.

The trick was to keep Poland strong enough and determined enough to fight the Germans, but not to fight the Soviets. So far, the Polish Secret Army had served British-Soviet interests well via guerrilla warfare, sabotage and espionage against the German war effort in Poland. It is even mentioned in one Polish Secret Army report that agents were helping to spread the deadly typhus disease. Polish military units serving with the British and so-called Free French forces had to be placated as well so that their fear and loathing for the Soviets could be put 'safely' in the background.

In addition to these pressing priorities, Special Operations Executive, Britain's espionage, sabotage and terrorist organization, was complaining in correspondence with Britain's Psychological Warfare Executive or propaganda ministry that their cells of agents were being destroyed and neutralized by German roundups of civilians for labor as well as security reasons. Naturally, such roundups were also having the same effect upon the Polish Secret Army and the British had received such complaints from the Polish Government-in-Exile. On August 11, 1943, in a letter to W.D. Allen of the British Foreign Office, Lieut.-Colonel Perkins of S.O.E. writes:

> ...The deportations [i.e. roundups] are serious and are affecting our work in that the cells of the underground Resistance Movement in the affected areas are to a great extent liquidated, and also such materials as we have been able to deliver are liable to be discovered. If any form of deterrent could be devised we would welcome it. ...a possible form of deterrent would be a statement by the United Nations that (German) settlers would be regarded, after the war, as a form of war criminal, having taken possession of property which they knew to be illegally acquired.

It was clear from the outset that the government of Britain had no intention of assisting the Poles with military or material support. Words were going to be the only thing the Poles would get, just as in 1939. It only remained to be decided what words were going to be selected.

In a Most Secret Cypher Telegram dated August 22, 1943 from the British Foreign Secretary to the War Cabinet Offices in Washington he states:

> I mentioned to Mr. Hull [the U.S. Secretary of State] on August 20th the request of the Polish Government for some joint Anglo-American declaration regarding German crimes in occupied Poland. Mr. Hull admitted that he had received a similar request and that he would consider it, though he felt that any such declaration was not likely to give much help to the Polish population.

British propagandists were the authors of the Allied declaration. It was one among many lies of the Allies and it was among the more cynical, for it was initially designed to eclipse the Soviet atrocity of Katyn by accusing Germans of even greater, but entirely fictitious atrocities against the Polish people. The Poles were not likely to be fooled for long, but it was only sufficient that they remain fooled until the Soviet steamroller had run over them. The complicity of the Polish Government-in-Exile with this treason against the Polish people reveals how little it had in common with the people it claimed to represent. On August 12, 1943, Lt. Col. Perkins of SOE received a letter from the British Foreign Office:

> The Polish Foreign Minister called upon me this evening and asked me to draw the Secretary of State's special attention to the suggestion made by the Polish Government for the issue of a declaration condemning the German deportation of the populations of Central Poland. Annexed is a minute by Mr. Allen on this point together with the draft of a possible declaration which it is suggested might be telegraphed to the Prime Minister with a view to persuading the President to join in a joint statement...

W.D. Allen's attached minute begins:

> The Polish government have suggested that His ...

Majesty's Government should issue a declaration condemning the German deportations of the population of Central Poland, which, according to recent reports received from Poland, are on the increase. The Polish Government would hope that any such declaration should be given the maximum publicity in our broadcasts to Poland and Germany, and that it should also be used in leaflets to be dropped over Germany (especially, if practicable, eastern Germany) and, if possible, Poland as well. A similar request is being addressed to the United States Government... S.O.E. would accordingly welcome any form of deterrent that could be devised.

P.W.E. [Psychological Warfare Executive] see no objection to publicity being given to any declaration and would be prepared to do everything possible to give effect to the Polish proposals, subject to technical and operational limitations. Such declarations as H.M.G. [His Majesty's Government] have made in the past on the subject of German atrocities in Poland have been made in Parliament. They have not gone beyond promises of retribution against those responsible. The deterrent effect of such statements appears to have been negligible, and if any further declaration is to be made, it would be useful if it could contain some indication that the actions being carried out by the Germany authorities in Poland will in some measure be held against Germany as a whole... The Poles were at first hand inclined to revert the idea of reprisals. It has been made clear to them that these are out of the question. A further Polish suggestion for a warning to the Polish population against premature action on the lines of that recently broadcast to Greece and Yugoslavia is being examined separately. It raised difficulties from the Soviet point of view.

The attached declaration by W.D. Allen, as amended by others in his department, dated August 12, 1943, is as follows:

Reliable information has reached H.M. Government regarding the crimes committed by the German invaders against the population of Poland. Since the autumn of 1942 a belt of territory extending from the province of Bialystock southwards along the line of the River Bug has been systematically emptied of its inhabitants (hundreds of thousands of whom have been deported from their homes).[Editor's note: the words in parentheses were deleted by one of Allen's co-authors, possibly a superior, on the original draft. Once again, we see how great numbers of people are made to appear or to vanish upon the whims of the propagandists.]

The draft declaration continues:

In July 1943 these measures were extended to practically the whole of the province of Lublin and also to the neighbouring provinces of Radom and Cracow.[Editor's note: this typewritten sentence was considerably altered by the poison-pen-wielder who changed it to read as follows:]

In July 1943 these measures were extended to practically the whole of the province of Lublin, where hundreds of thousands of persons have been deported from their homes or exterminated.[Editor's note: The "hundreds of thousands" reappear from the propagandists' bag of tricks, along with the word, "exterminated," which was entirely absent before. The wording is also purposefully misleading. Were the mythical "hundreds of thousands" "deported" or were they "exterminated"? Could the spies of S.O.E. have failed to detect an extermination Program involving hundreds of thousands of people? Impossible. No exterminations were mentioned in S.O.E. correspondence because there weren't any. The Germans were moving the Poles, not murdering them.]

W.D. Allen's draft continues:

These measures are being carried out with the utmost brutality. Many of the victims are killed on the spot. The rest are segregated. Men from 14 to 50 are taken away to work for Germany. (Some) children (are killed on the spot, others) are separated from their parents and either sent to Germany to be brought up as Germans or sold to German settlers or despatched with the women and old men to concentration camps, were they are now being systematically put to death in gas chambers.

H.M. Government re-affirm their resolve to punish the instigators and actual perpetrators of these crimes. They further declare that, so long as such atrocities continue to be committed by the representatives and in the name of Germany, they must be taken into account against the time of the final settlement with Germany. Meanwhile the war against Germany will be prosecuted with the utmost vigour until the barbarous Hitlerite tyranny has been finally overthrown.

So here we find the amazing "gas chambers," emanating like the proverbial deus ex machina from a typewriter in the British Foreign Office. But watch closely, for you are about to see another sleight of hand take place.

It is noted that the arbitrary inclusion of "hundreds of thousands" of Poles in the categories of "deported" OR "exterminated" might serve to eclipse the 'mere' 15,000 or so Poles murdered by the Soviet Khazars at Katyn. On August 26, 1943, the British Foreign Office telegraphed Moscow with the request that they make a similar statement condemning the "extension of German campaign of mass murder and deportation against population of Poland" on behalf of the Polish Government. But the Soviets, apparently, cared little what the Poles or the world thought in regard to alleged German atrocities. The Soviets, after all, had already blamed the Katyn mass murders on the Germans and lamely continued to do so after 1945, even 'trying' and executing the alleged 'German perpetrators,' without convincing anyone of Soviet innocence.

In any case, the Soviets had no fear of justice, because they knew for whom the Allies toiled.

It was thus not until August 31, 1943 that the following telegram arrived from Moscow: "Molotov has replied that the Soviet Government were precluded by lack of time from examining draft declaration and proposal for simultaneous publication by them of similar communication. The Soviet Government's attitude towards responsibility of Hitlerites for the crimes committed in occupied territory had already been defined in a number of notes and in special statement of October 14th last (see my telegram No. 250) made in connexion with declaration by them in regard to nine occupied countries including Poland." The Soviets saw no benefit in silly games.

Meanwhile, back at the "gas chambers" or actually the typewriters of the British Foreign Office, all were satisfied with their creative writing exercise. The Polish Government-in-Exile was in full agreement with the text of the declaration, as W.D. Allen advised Sir Owen O'Malley, the British Ambassador to Poland, in a memo dated 20 August 1943. By August 27th, the declaration had gone out over the wires to Canada, New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. All was in readiness to spew forth at the appointed day and hour, when the lies would be proclaimed to the world.

But one man, Mr. Cavendish-Bentinck, a senior official of British Intelligence, was "a little unhappy about the statement (Editor's note to American readers: this meant that he was extremely unhappy), to be issued on the authority of His Majesty's Government, that Poles 'are now being systematically put to death in gas chambers'." You can imagine the consternation amongst the hackwriters of the Foreign Office and their chiefs when they received this 'rocket' in the form of a memo dated August 27th, 1943. The telegraphed "gas chambers" declaration had gone out to all Allied authorities on August 27th! How they all must have hated this 'horrible man' who threatened to wreck their game with his maddening coolness. Cavendish-Bentinck's memo continues:

The only two references which I have been able to find... which deal with this form of execution are as follows: (1) Telegram of 17th July, 1943 from Poland. "Commander-in-Chief armed forces Lublin district informed me that he had evidence that some of these people are being murdered in gas cells there" (Majdanek Camp). (2) Telegram of 17th July, 1943, from Poland. "It has been ascertained that on July 2nd and 5th two transports made of women, children and old men, consisting of 30 wagons each, have been liquidated in gas cells." It will be observed that the first of the reports gives no indication of the date of the occurrence, or the number of people concerned; the second is silent as to the place and the source. It is true that there have been references to the use of gas chambers in other reports; but these references have usually, if not always, been equally vague, and since they have concerned the extermination of Jews, have usually emanated from Jewish sources. Personally, I have never really understood the advantage of the gas chamber over the simpler machine-gun, or the equally simple starvation method...

Cavendish-Bentinck was no doubt aware that the Soviet-Khazar rulers of the erstwhile Russian Empire had used mass-starvation as a weapon against the Ukrainians in the 1930's and that gunfire was used to slay the Polish officers at Katyn. Starvation would be used again by the Soviets and also by the Americans to murder millions of Germans after Germany's surrender in 1945. Gas chamber technology for executions, as opposed to delousing, was well-known in the United States and had been in use since 1920's. If mass-gassing were cheaper and more efficient than shooting or starvation, one suspects that this method would have been used by the Soviets and the Americans instead of the previously mentioned methods.

We now know that British Intelligence was intercepting and decoding all German radio transmissions in regard to labor and concentration camps such as Auschwitz-Birkenau-Monowitz, Madjanek et al. and gas chambers were not the means used for the execution of prisoners. The British also knew the number of inmates at each camp, as well as the number transferred into and out of the camps. Cavendish-Bentinck was undoubtedly privy to this information and did not want the British to be embarrassed by German-rebuttals. The "gas chambers" must be saved for later, when the Germans could not defend themselves...

Cavendish-Bentick's memo continues:

In my opinion it is incorrect to describe Polish information regarding German atrocities as 'trustworthy'. The Poles, and to a far greater extent the Jews, tend to exaggerate German atrocities in order to stoke us up. They seem to have succeeded. Mr. Allen and myself have both followed German atrocities quite closely. I do not believe that there is any evidence which would be accepted in a Law Court that Polish children have been killed on the spot by Germans when their parents were being deported to work in Germany, nor that Polish children have been sold to German settlers. As regards putting Poles to death in gas chambers, I do not believe that there is any evidence that this has been done. There have been many stories to this effect, and we have played them up in P.W.E. [Psychological Warfare Executive] rumours without believing that they had any foundation. At any rate, there is far less evidence than exists for the mass murder of Polish officers by the Russians (sic) at Katyn... I think that we weaken our case against the Germans by publicly giving credence to atrocity stories for which we have no evidence. These mass executions in gas chambers remind me of the story of employment of human corpses during the last war for the manufacture of fat, which was a grotesque lie and led to the true stories of German enormities being brushed aside as being mere propaganda. I am very sad to see that we must need ape the Russians (sic) and talk about 'Hitlerite' instead of 'German'.

The panic buttons were pressed and emergency cords pulled throughout the British ministries that day. At the bottom of Cavendish-Bentinck's memo is W.D. Allen's scribbled message: "I have discussed this with Mr. Roberts. It seems too late to make substantial changes. But we could telegraph to Washington and Moscow on the lines of the amended draft." At the very bottom of the memo are notations in two other hands: "Tels sent & M. Kulski informed." And, "The Polish P.M. readily accepted the change." So the "gas chambers," which existed only on paper in the first place, disappeared with the stroke of a pen.

On August 28, 1943, the governments of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa were sent secret telegrams with the following text: "Following for Prime Minister. Begins. My telegram D No. 596 of 27th August. Declaration regarding German atrocities in Poland. On further reflection we are not convinced that evidence regarding use of gas chambers is substantial enough to justify inclusion in a public declaration of concluding phrase of paragraph 2 of draft contained in my telegram D. No. 597 of 27th August and we are therefore suggesting to United States Government that sentence in question should end at 'concentration camps.' Ends."

On August 30, 1943, The Times of London published the declaration in its final 'approved' form:

GERMAN CRIMES IN POLAND

A BRITISH WARNING

The following statement was issued yesterday by the Foreign Office:—

Trustworthy information has reached his Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom regarding crimes committed by the German invaders against the population of Poland. Since the autumn of 1942 a belt of territory extending from the province of Bialystok southwards along the line of the River Bug has been systematically emptied of its inhabitants. In July, 1943, these measures were extended to practically the whole of the province of Lublin, where hundreds of thousands of persons have been deported from their homes or exterminated.

These measures are being carried out with the utmost brutality. Many of the victims are killed on the spot. The rest are segregated. Men from 14 to 50 are taken away to work for Germany. Some children are killed on the spot, others are separated from their parents and either sent to Germany to be brought up as Germans or sold to German settlers—or dispatched with the women and old men to concentration camps.

His Majesty's Government reaffirm their resolve to punish the instigators and actual perpetrators of these crimes. They further declare that, so long as such atrocities continue to be committed by the representatives and in the name of Germany, they must be taken into account against the time of the final settlement with Germany. Meanwhile the war against Germany will be prosecuted with the utmost vigour until the barbarous Hitlerite tyranny has been finally overthrown.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

NEW YORK, AUG. 29

The American State Department to-day issued a statement in similar terms to the British Government's statement regarding German crimes in Poland.

The reader has just witnessed, by looking over the shoulders of a few bureaucrats, as it were, how the "Nazi gas chambers" were produced by an inter-office memo emanating from the British Foreign Office on August 12, 1943 and how they were made to 'vanish' by means of same on August 28, 1943. Of course, the "gas chamber rumours" which were being spread by Britain's Psychological Warfare Executive et all. were making their mischievous rounds, as they are today.

Once Germany was militarily defeated, the "gas chambers" were resurrected at Nuremberg, along with World War I-type propaganda hoaxes such as "human soap" or "soup," "lampshades of human skin," etc. Nuremberg Document 33112-PS, which was submitted to the Allied kangaroo court by Dr. Tadeusz Cyprian, the Polish Deputy Representative on the United Nations War Crimes Commission in London, accused the German authorities of operating "extermination camps" at Treblinka, Belzec and Sobibor. The accusation makes no mention of Poles being exterminated, for Poles were no longer running Poland by that time. Jews and Jews alone were the alleged victims: "In these camps the Jews were put to death in their thousands (Editor's note: not millions?) by hitherto unknown, new methods, gas and steam chambers as well as electric current employed on a large scale." No mention is made of those supposedly ubiquitous "gas vans" which were later alleged to have done most of the "gassings." Instead of "gas vans," we have "steam chambers" and even "electric chambers." Since these were on par with "gas chambers" we have heard so much about, why do we hear nothing about them today? In this document, Treblinka is specifically mentioned as using "steam chambers intended for mass killing of Jews by suffocating them." It even describes the "steam chambers" and the boiler installations, so there was no confusion here between "steam" and "gas" chambers. The "steam chambers" have gone into the Orwellian "memory hole" with the "gas chambers of Dachau." As we have seen, anything can be written on paper, for "paper is patient." ❑

Has Freya a Complaint?

The following is a response to a "Letter to the Editor" by "Freya", published in Liberty Bell for March 1992, page 58.

She calls herself Freya and she claims to be an Aryan woman who was married three times to Aryan males who didn't suit her for one reason or another. She claims that Aryan men beat her and were unfaithful to her. Freya says that Aryan male behavior is so reprehensible that Aryan women don't want to bear Aryan children by them. She wants decent housing for battered women and protection for single women who haven't yet found a mate. Freya wants to be protected from the Aryan ogres she finds everywhere.

I have been around a while, Freya, and as an Aryan male all my life I have known a few Aryan females. Most of the Aryan women I have known were level-headed individuals who were able to discern a real man from a jerk. You seem to have a problem with that simple form of discrimination. Three times you were married. Sounds like you were shopping on the bargain floor for a husband. What were you looking for? Like many young women, the big talker caught your eye, the braggart was the man for you. When you found out that this type of man had nothing of substance to offer you, that he drank and was abusive in many ways including the physical, you got free of him. But you went and married two more like him. Now you write to Liberty Bell and tell us that most Aryan men are just like the bums you married and divorced. Freya, you have got to get off the Sally Jesse Raphael syndrome.

When a women marries three times and it doesn't work out each time, then I would say that the woman should look within herself to see whether she has a mistaken view of what men should be. It may be too late for you, Freya, though in that you read Liberty Bell you show better sense than the average woman. I am an Aryan activist and not a marriage counselor, but I am willing to bet that you are crying out for someone to understand you. Seek into yourself first, then you will attract the decent and upstanding Aryan men.

Now about the Jews and their supposed understanding of women. More than twenty years ago, I knew a particularly beautiful women of German descent, the sort of classic face that one sees in magazines. The men she admired were witty, intelligent persons. She found these traits very sensual in men. She inevitably gravitated toward Jewish men: in the neighborhood she met more than a few Jewish men in clubs and restaurants. She wasn't a women of easy virtue by any means, but when she wanted to meet a certain man she did it; she made the first move. She was so much the Aryan beauty, the blonde woman who would have been a guest at the Obersalzberg had she lived in Germany at the time of greatness, that the Jewish men just fell all over themselves. They chattered and postured for her. She drank it all in, and the Jew of the moment became her lover for a time. When she tired of him, she found another.

You see, this woman had a penchant for Jewish men because she perceived them to be intellectuals. That is what she wanted in her lovers. Now you say that Aryan women gravitate toward Jews because Jewish men don't use their women for punching bags. No, usually they don't; the Jewish harridan might punch back. But Jewish men use Aryan women in other ways. This particular Aryan woman always knew that the Jewish men she consorted with wanted her because she was the ideal Schicksa, the blonde bitch, the Ilse Koch, the hated but desired Aryan woman. She let the Jews play their psychological games with her, and when she dropped them flat a few months later, they knew that the woman had taken them for a ride. Amongst Jews this woman had developed a reputation for fickleness with Jewish men, but they couldn't help themselves.

Other women I came across in those days—this was a university neighborhood—preferred niggers. Now they were abused in every way that a white women can be abused by the niggers they allowed into their beds. Still, they preferred niggers to white men. You claim that your three Aryan husbands were abusive, which is why you refused to bear their children. The women I am talking about here bore mongrel children by the niggers they slept with because the nigger just did it to them and they were the slaves of these niggers. Still, they preferred niggers to white men. When I hear Aryan / white women moan about abusive white men, I think about these wretched white women who dragged themselves behind their nigger masters, these pathetic white creatures who could have been beaten by any man but chose to be abused, knocked up, and stolen from by niggers. Look about American society today, Freya, you will see such fallen white women in every mall, every food store, and in fact every city morgue.

Admit it, Freya, you are not an Aryanist. You are a feminist. Aryan men today, even the best of us, are under great pressures. White men are the new niggers. I expect some Jewess with a Ph.D. to say some of the things you said in your letter to Liberty Bell. But coming from an Aryan woman it is specially distasteful to hear that the white race is likely to die off because Freya hasn't found the ideal mate. I wish you to be happy, Freya. I want you to be fulfilled in a marriage with a decent white man. You should bear strong and healthy Aryan babies. Stop worrying about shelters for battered women. Let Gloria Steinem and Betty Friedan, and the other Jewish leaders of the women's fragging movement worry about those things. Love your race. Support the men who fight for your race. Don't take up with boozers, dopers, or just plain bums. There are men out there who would like to be your husband, who would delight in having children with you. Men who are racial loyalists. Men who are just as witty as any Jew alive and much more masculine. The queers know that white men can be wonderful, and you have much more to offer a man than any faggot has to give him. White men aren't in danger of turning queer in droves, but your psychological posture isn't going to help matters.

Asian men hold women in subjection. Gypsy men not only beat their women, they have them work like slaves for them as well. Black men are rather like Gypsies in this cultural trait. Jewish men have the "hole-in-the-sheet" syndrome: women in a traditional Jewish household are deemed physically unclean during menstruation; the traditional Jew will have nothing to do with his wife while she menstruates. She sits in a gallery in the synagogue quite apart from the men on the main floor even though she may not be menstruating. She is not his equal in anything of importance to the Jewish community. The wife even takes her meals separate from her family when in menstruation. Aryan men first called the women to their councils of state. The Romans were shocked to see the chiefs among the Germanic tribes consulting the wise women in many important matters.

I would advise you, Freya, to keep these things in mind when next you complain that there are no kind and generous Aryan men about these days. For you there can be no one more fit than the Aryan man. He is your natural choice for a mate. So good luck on your fourth try for a lifemate. Just remember that we Aryan men are on your side for the best of reasons: the salvation of our race. Men of other races may use you, as men of your own race may have used you in the past. You are more likely, far more likely, to find true love and concern for your welfare in a marriage with the Aryan male of your choice. Open your mind—and your heart.

Last year President Bush, with the complicity of Congress, re-affirmed the Seven Noahide Laws to be the bedrock Public Policy of the United States. On March 20, 1991, Public Law 102-14 [HJR 104] established the euphemistic "EDUCATION DAY U.S.A." Similar proclamations had previously issued under the Carter and Reagan regimes.

Contrary to the Resolution's claim that "Our great nation was founded on the ethical values and principles of the Seven Noahide Laws," they are in fact the antithesis, rather than the founding principles of American government.

Consider the Sixth Noahide Law, which provides for criminal conviction—even capital punishment—"administered only if there is ONE TESTIFYING WITNESS." (Emphasis added)

Such a proposition does violence to the 6th Amendment, which provides that no conviction is lawful where the accused has not enjoyed the right of confronting MULTIPLE WITNESSES against him. The Constitution for Oregon at Article I:11 re-enforces the multiple witness requisite. Bush and his congressional cohorts who enacted this resolution, overtly seek to also abort the "other rights" secured to the People by the 9th Amendment, which includes protections inherited from the Magna Carta.

Article 20 of the Great Charter prohibits punishments except upon the oaths of "upright men" (plural) who, when giving false testimony, are themselves punishable. Article 38 not only mandates multiple witnesses, but prohibits prosecutions initiated by "the state," as is presently the Noahide Rule in Oregon and elsewhere.

The above mentioned protections against arbitrary restraint, won by the blood of our forefathers, are rooted in, and spring from, Christian Scripture at Deuteronomy 19:15, which commands that, "One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established." The Seven Noahide Laws have their origin with the Talmud Cult.

Can we much longer tolerate—indeed, can we SURVIVE—presidents and congressmen who labor to overthrow the Bill of Rights to the great injury of personal liberty? Dare we continue to permit them to use the institutions of government as engines of oppression and destruction? The question virtually answers itself!

This Fall, let's remove them from offices of power and influence. This Fall, let's send them back home to try to eke out livings under the conditions they fomented for us. This Fall, let's show them what happens to conspirators who seek to remove the Landmarks of Liberty set by our selfless ancestors. THIS FALL... LET'S FIRE THEM ALL! RE-ELECT NOBODY!

Additional information concerning the Seven Noahide Laws and P.L. 102-14, can be obtained by sending $3.00 to: James Hazel, P.O. Box 1317, Brookings, OR 97415.

Dear Landsmann:

Enclosed is $40. This is to buy a subscription for one of the needy inmates who wrote in to the February LB. I have always been a law-abiding fellow, but lately I have come to wonder if the person who works two jobs to pay taxes and usury to the Jew and who fights the Jews' wars is serving his race better than the criminal.

Patriotic Americans just can't seem to comprehend that the U.S. government hates them and wants them dead. To the Jew mind, to place the interests of America ahead of their One World Government is blasphemy. Just now the Jew/Liberals are putting the cherry on the cake of their betrayal of America during the Vietnam War. Bush is negotiating for his family oil company (Zapata Resources) to get drilling rights to Vietnam oil. The Red regime the U.S. installed in Vietnam is blackmailing Bush for better terms. Their threat is to release the 400 or so Americans still being held since the U.S. betrayal of Vietnam and so embarrassing the Washington traitors who have covered this up for 17 years now. When the oil deal is struck, the POWs are to be executed. This filthy act is called "Operation Roadmap." (All of Bush's crimes are called "Operation"-Something; the Panama attack was "Operation [un]Just Cause.") There will have to be U.S. representatives there to assure Bush that the POWs are really dead and useless for further blackmail. Probably some grinning Jews will be sent. Perhaps the massacre can be held on Purim and the bodies burnt as an offering to the Jews' devil. That is "our" government. To talk of supporting such a gang out of patriotism for America is insane.

More data is slowly coming out on the Iraq war. It was Israel which began the bombing of Iraq. The U.S. then began to bomb to cover up this action. First the Israelis bombed via a corridor through Syria. Later they were apparently given the Saudi base of Tabuk to shuttle bomb from. what was apparently planned was for Israel to bomb U.S. troops with poison gas or anthrax and pretend Iraq did it. The U.S. (and Israel) would then stage nuclear bomb attacks against Iraqi cities. In the confusion Israel planned to A-bomb the Saudi oilfields and blame that on Iraq too. Tens of thousands of Americans and millions of Iraqis were to be killed and oil would have gone to $100 per barrel, thus providing a lovely cover of the Jews' depression today. At the last moment Saddam Hussain learned of this plan and acted to defuse it by pulling out of Kuwait. This, and Iraq taking a beating without fighting back, aborted the atomic war and the invasion of Jordan and probably saved all our lives because this thing might have escalated to nuclear war worldwide. Thank Saddam Hussain (the "Beast of Baghdad") for your survival.

Schwarzkopf has revealed that the U.S. war plan was to push clear to the Iranian border and form a pocket around Basra thus trapping the Iraqi army in the south. U.S. forces halted on the Euphrates because we received an ultimatum from Russia. Details are unavailable but the Russian threats were so severe that the U.S. not only stopped the war but has been paying Russia blackmail ever since. But the U.S.S.R. is now "gone" and the massive Russian military is no longer a threat. How do you know that? Because the Jewsmedia told you so! Doesn't that fill you with confidence?

Hussain of Iraq aborted nuclear war #1 but the Jews have no intention of leaving it at that. A new war is planned to begin this spring. This time it will be atomic and Israel plans to A-bomb all the Arab capitol cities. But the U.S. will do the fighting for Israel. All the Moslem nations have been preparing frantically for this showdown. Iran is said to consider itself ready to confront Israel with secret Russian backing. We shall see. Bush is desperate to go along with this war because, under the Jews' usury system, war is the only way to get money into circulation and so end the depression we are now in.

The massacre in Iraq has fooled Bush and Americans generally into thinking they are invincible. In reality, the Iraqi situation was a one-time event that will never happen again. There was no Iraqi "war" because Iraq refused to fight back. Other countries were neutral because of surprise and the uniqueness of the situation. Thus the really great dangers that could have occurred did not come to pass. For instance, Yemen could have overrun Saudi Arabia from the south virtually unopposed. Iran could have entered the war destroying the U.S. base at Jiddah and cutting the U.S. Gulf supply route. The U.S. Army would have suffered another Battan. Instead, everyone stayed quiet and watched while Iraq backpedaled to avoid a nuclear holocaust.

Now things are different. The Moslem nations know that Israel has launched its U.S. dog in a crusade to destroy them and that every nation state In the area is marked for destruction. Their only hope is to fight back in unison before they are all destroyed. They are seeking aid from Russia. Russia, having received $10 billion in blackmail for allowing the first Gulf war, is now reportedly demanding $30 billion for its neutrality in this one. I have read reports that both Iraq and Iran have nuclear weapons. They didn't use them before for fear of retaliation. But they now know that Israel and the U.S. will destroy them no matter what they do so they have nothing to lose. Thus, it looks as if nuclear war #1 will begin this year. Timing will depend on circumstances and this time I don't think there will be a Saddam Hussain to save our unworthy hides from the consequences of allowing our nation to be taken over by alien devil worshipers.

Yours truly,

S.R., New York State

Dear Tribesman:

Recently in the news was a Washington nigger called Little Man who says he was riding in a car on a local highway when he suddenly felt like "popping" somebody, so he rolled down a window and shot the White woman passenger in the car traveling next to his vehicle.

One reads such things in the newspaper but one usually imagines that it cannot happen to oneself. To give you an idea of how bad things really are in Washington, here is my personal story of Negro crime.

I have lived here in Tel Aviv-on-the Potomac for some 10 years now, and have been the victim of Negro violence twice in those few years, despite spending a lot of my time (seven years, minus my working hours) in West Virginia. I should mention that I am not a particularly vulnerable-looking chap, being 5 feet 8 inches tall, mesomorphic, 44 years of age and often wear a camouflage jacket (however I was not wearing such a jacket either time I was victimized).

It is unsafe even to set foot outside your door on Capitol Hill. I did so the other Saturday, about 10 a.m., taking my dog for a walk. We were one block from my house when I noticed, across the street from me, a tall nigger in khaki clothing who was ranting and raving. I assumed it was another of our "harmless" crazy street people, but immediately directed my steps away from the creature. This was just three blocks away from the Capitol, in a "good" Washington neighborhood.

However, the jiggaboo was headed my way, and I soon realized he was ranting at me, threatening that he was going to kill me (he said nothing about the dog). I was not interested finding out whether or not he would actually have killed me. He followed me for a block as I headed for home, and only quit following when I pulled out my "Smoky Mountain Toothpick" (a dagger) and warned him I would have to cut off his hands if he continued to annoy me. Up until this point I had said nothing to him, thinking he might go away if ignored. However, the critter continued with his threatening rant. I went into my townhouse via the back door (making sure he was unable to see which house that was) and called 911 to report this menace to society and was put on hold.

Another time a congoid mugger was trying to break into my later-to-become girlfriend's house (the same townhouse already referred to). She called 911 but was put on hold. Luckily it happened that the police were already in hot pursuit of the beast, and arrived to take him away. This BIN (Bone-In-Nose) humanoid was so stupid he was still clutching the loot from his earlier mugging when he was nabbed.

And a few years ago I was jumped by four "youths" and was only saved when I pulled out my pistol and offered to shoot the thieves. Fortunately they ran away; I say fortunately because I would doubtless have been arrested had I used the gun. All guns are illegal in Tel Aviv-on-the-Potomac. Only criminals are allowed to have them.

I would move but my job is on Capitol Hill, so I just hope I am not killed, which could easily happen in the next five years or so, judging from my experiences. Everyone I know that is White in this crazy town has been victimized by spear-chucker criminals. It is beyond me why the Whites do not rise up and overthrow the jungle rot.

No wonder folks outside the Beltway refer to this burg as Hershey-bar City, because it is 90 percent chocolate and 10 percent nuts.

On another note, Dr. Oliver mentioned a book, Northwest Passage, by Ken Roberts, to illustrate Redskin viciousness. Let me suggest the series Narratives of America, by Allan W. Eckert. Excellent reading, although I found a number of typos and other errors in them. One novel (if such an historically well-researched book can be so called) in the series is The Conquerors, which contains many typical examples of skraeling savagery. From this unbiased book I learned it was customary for the waggon-burners to immediately cut off hunks of meat from White victims they captured, often not bothering to kill the victim first, and gorge themselves. The heart was considered a special delicacy.

The Conquerors, notes the author, "is fact, not fiction. It is living history; the narrative of the day by day, often minute by minute, experiences of the people and events of the time period it covers. Every incident described herein actually occurred; every date is historically accurate, every character, regardless of how major or how minor, actually lived the role in which he is portrayed."

I hope you will be able to continue to publish your very much needed magazine. I cannot afford a donation at this time, but to help you out, I enclose a small (but large to me, as I am a poor man) payment of $22 for ten copies for bulk distribution. Hopefully this will lead to additional subscribers. I have long been wanting to share my Liberty Bells with others, but they are so precious I have been very reluctant to part with them for fear that those I might lend them to might fail to return them.

Very sincerely, your friend,
J.T., Washington, District of Corruption

Dear Mr. Dietz:

During my teen-years I lived and attended High School in a predominantly Jewish area, it turned out to be a blessing in disguise because it opened my eyes and activated my mind. After gradually becoming acquainted with Jewish neighbors, students, etc., I began to notice a distinct racial diversity among the Jewish people which did not correspond with the "Jewish race, chosen people" theology in the mainline churches and I began to question church doctrine. The minister, a kind, fatherly man, never answered my questions, instead he quoted church doctrine and verses of Scripture he claimed supported the doctrines....and I always ended up back at square-one.

In spite of the unanswered questions I continued to attend church, I listened and watched adults passively accept everything the minister said. By the age of seventeen I reached three conclusions I have never abandoned, only enlarged upon: (1) Never blindly accept what a minister says and never expect him to deviate from the doctrines held by the denomination paying his salary. (2) There is no such thing as a Jewish race, only people who follow Judaism and call themselves Jews. (3) If God has a special race or chosen people it is the White race, Christianity is the White man's religion and it is they who, for better or worse, sent missionaries throughout the non-White world to "save souls for Jesus." At this point in time I am convinced it was for the worse. Every year foolish White people send tens of millions of dollars abroad to feed, clothe, house, educate and medicate their "converts" while they ignore the plight of their impoverished White brethren here at home. "But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." (I Tim. 5:8) The marginal reference in my KJB states the word "House" could be translated "Kindred."

Liberty Bell is one of my favorite publications, the articles are always straight to the point, informative, thought-provoking and never dull. We may not see eye to eye on Christianity, however, I certainly agree the force most detrimental to the welfare and preservation of our race and culture emanates from the Jewish strongholds mesmerized White pew-warmers continue to call Christian churches. When Karl Marx, the Jewish father of communism, said, "Religion is the opiate of the people," I believe he was telling world Jewry "use religion to mesmerize, neutralize and conquer your enemies."

Due to family illness I was out of state for a few months and did not learn about LB's financial problems until recently. I am enclosing a contribution and sincerely hope Liberty Bell is able to stay afloat.

Kind regards,
Mrs. P.L.R., Washington

Dear George P. Dietz,

Enclosed please find a check to cover our subscription or renewal as I don't remember if the renewal is due, and a donation to help you keep the Liberty Bell going.

While we do not feel the need to belong to or profess an inclination toward any religious denomination, many people do feel such a need. Such being the case, I believe they tend to avoid publications as Liberty Bell and consequently lose much needed knowledge. I don't know the answer as people use the various churches as a crutch, a social place or through fear of the unknown. It is not easy to change thousands of years of belief into a rational thinking populace willing to accept facts, not miracles.

Sincerely yours,
Mr. & Mrs. S.W.K., Oregon

Dear George:

Please send Liberty Bell subscriptions to some of those prisoners I have been reading about in the Bell who canot afford to subscribe themselves. Here is some money ($100) to pay for it. Whatever is left over, keep it so you can continue to publish (hopefully).

I do not know anybody in this stupid town who is not either a Christian or an idiot, or both, or I would buy them a sub. But no sense throwing your pearls in front of swine.

Also I am enclosing some material you may find of interest.

The anonymous seven-page story is from...of the militia. For security reasons he never puts his name or return address on any of the material he sends out. (He has already been threatened by the Jewish cowboys who ride herd on the stupid goyim.) An interesting expose of Christianity, in any case.

Let's keep that Liberty Bell ringing.

Very sincerely, your friend,
J.T., District of Corruption.

Dear George:

Sorry to be late In renewing my subscription. I hope you are able to continue the L.B., the best in the business, but if not, keep the change, you certainly deserve it and much more.

Best wishes to you & yours,
G.T.

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. For your copy of Which Way Western Man? send $17.50 (which includes $2.50 for postage and handling for the softback edition (Order No. 22003).

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980—except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. For your copy (Order No. 03014) send $10.00 (which includes $1.50 for postage and handling). Sample copy of our monthly magazine Liberty Bell and copy of our huge book list containing hundreds of "Eye-Openers," $5.00. Subscription for 12 hard-hitting, fact-packed issues $40.00 (U.S. only). One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

WHOSE SUPERIORITY?

As the year 1991 drew to its close, the mayor of Dubuque, Iowa, was unhappy. Dubuque is a small city of about 63,000, on the west bank of the Mississippi River, facing the border between Wisconsin and Illinois. But it is provincial, stodgy, unprogressive, backward, even reactionary. During the entire year not a single one of the White boobs who elected the mayor had been killed by a nigger! No White woman had been raped to teach her about Civil Rights! So far as was known, all the White females were so full of prejudice and bigotry that none had recognized her duty to copulate with niggers and breed diseased mongrels to further the American ideal of Integration. And there hadn't even been a good mugging. What was worse, White boobs actually went out on the streets at night, sometimes alone, and returned safely to their homes without being taught the place they have made for themselves in the world.

In progressive communities, such as Jerusalem-on-the Hudson and Tel Aviv-on-the-Potomac, there is a murder every few hours. (It is true that regrettably often niggers kill other niggers, but intensive education, financed by the tax-payers, can lead them to make better use of their homicidal urges.) In the District of Corruption, Civil Rights workers have become so zealous that they extend their good work as far as Fairfax County in Virginia, where they trap and rape White women at the rate of ninety-five per annum, and will doubtless do better in the future.

The mayor of Dubuque knew the reason for the deplorable situation in that city. The population of the little city is almost entirely Aryan and largely Germanic. There is a contingent of the ubiquitous Sheenies, of course, but only about a thousand other aliens, only a third of whom are niggers.[1]

1. Niggers are aliens (alieni) in a White nation, no matter where they were born. 'Nigger' is a useful, almost indispensable, word. It is simply niger with the consonant doubled to keep the vowel short and the consonant hard, but in American usage it includes not only pure-blooded

To the sapient mayor, the way to bring Progress to Dubuque was obvious: import niggers. And the proposal was well timed, almost coinciding with the planned invasion of Florida from Haiti, which Bushy's government for some reason called off at the last moment. A few thousand "refugees" from Haiti would not only have remedied the city's backwardness, but, with the help of the White witch doctors in the churches and schools, have raised the cultural level. They would have taught the stolid Aryans how to twist off the head of a white chicken and drink the blood that spurts from the severed neck. Practitioners of voodoo could have spread wisdom from the pulpits of churches eager to practice oecumenism, and, who knows? Dubuque might have attained honorable mention in the Chicago Tribune for the pious sacrifice of a "hornless goat," preferably white.

The mayor and, it seems, quite a few idiots in Dubuque were horrified when some Aryan "racists" professed a belief in "White superiority," a damnable doctrine that clearly contravenes the American resolve to become the most degraded and despised species of talking anthropoids.

But Black Superiority? Ah, that would have been another matter. With that doctrine, Dubuque could ride the Wave of the Future.

Congoids but also mulattos and sambos. It would be as incorrect to call a mulatto, for example, the offspring of an Aryan whore by a male Congoid, a Congoid as it would be to call the creature Aryan. Much the same objection applies to 'Negro,' used as a racial term. It was the standard term for Congoid slaves in Spanish, which was the international language of commerce and so used by the predominantly Jewish merchants who brought the livestock to the United States. In the antebellum South, 'negro man' or 'negro woman' was so understood, and it would have been a tautology to add the information that a slave was meant. In British usage, 'nigger' also includes Dravidians and other dark-skinned people. In Britain, incidentally, 'black man' would be highly misleading, since in British usage the term designated a white man with black hair (conspicuously uncommon in Nordic nations) and, usually, the dark eyes and somewhat swarthy complexion that go with such hair. The resulting ambiguity is much exploited by the bunkum-artists who concoct "Black History" for the suckers in universities that have become intellectual whore-houses.

The Right Racism

Every observer knows, of course, that niggers justly despise a race so stupid that it lets them vote, elects them to political offices, taxes itself to provide them with comforts, and taxes itself some more to accelerate their breeding. Few, however, realize that this natural contempt has given rise to formal doctrines of Black Superiority.

The first such doctrine seriously formulated in the United States was the work of the Black Muslims,[2] a movement founded in Detroit by an itinerant mulatto whose name is thought to have been Wallace Fard, but who used at least six aliases in Detroit, including "Professor Ford," "Farrad Mohammed Ali," and "Supreme Ruler of the Universe."

When the Ruler of the Universe was convicted of some crime, White bigots in Detroit sent him to jail for a year, and when released, he disappeared. It was rumored that while he was in the hoose-gow, one of his followers had an inspiration to take over the lucrative business for himself and accordingly, when the Supreme Ruler got out of jail, used him as the "hornless goat" in a ritual that the ruler had himself devised.[3]

The exponential growth of the Black Muslims was the work of a talented mulatto named Elijah Poole, who gave himself half a dozen new names before 1930, when he settled on "Elijah Muhammed, Messenger of Allah, and Divine Leader of the Lost-Found Nation of Islam," and took over the cult. He moved his holy household, including his twenty servants and his assortment of Cadillacs, from Detroit to Chicago, and began to train tough young niggers in paramilitary tactics. Since he aped a few Mohammedan rites, he enabled statisti-

2. The standard form in English is 'Moslem'; the Arabic is muslim, plural muslimún, and the Arabic spelling is used by some writers, chiefly Orientalists, of whom Fard must have heard, although he knew of the religion of Islam less than was known by the average schoolboy years ago, when children were still given some education in the public schools.

3. The Supreme Ruler of the Universe did use willing niggers as sacrificial victims in his most solemn rites in honor of himself, and his example was followed by some of enthusiastic converts to his version of Islam, even in secular affairs. The police rudely interrupted one of them when he was about to cook his wife and daughter for supper. Perhaps this advanced cuisine could be made popular in Dubuque when the evils of bigotry and racial prejudice have been overcome.

cians to determine that Islam was the fastest growing religion in the United States.

How much of the cult's historical and ethnological views the Messenger of Allah invented is uncertain, but here is a concise summary of the official cosmogonic doctrine:[4]

> When, in accordance with the will of Allah, the earth was separated from the moon by an explosion in year 65,999,999,998,062 B.C., there appeared on the planet the Black Race, as black and perfect as God Himself. For almost sixty-six trillion years those perfect beings dwelt in perfect happiness, speaking Arabic and evidently leading the joyous and unfettered life now to be found in the jungles of the Congo.
>
> The universal bliss was troubled, however, in 4707 B.C., when a "Black scientist" named Yakub determined to create, artificially, a race of debased and inferior creatures. He worked steadily for six hundred years, and finally, by "grafting" and "rigid birth control," he produced the "blue-eyed devils,"[5] i.e., White men, who are physically weak and totally evil.
>
> Allah, for purposes of his own, and intending the ultimate exaltation of his Chosen People, who are the only true human beings,[6] permitted the white devils to interfere with nature and set up the nasty thing called civilization. He even permitted the vile "spooks"[7] to dominate and enslave the Chosen People by devising the "devil-doctrine" called Christianity. He decreed, however, that the white swine were to rule the world for exactly six thousand years. Their time was up in 1914. But they are now enjoying a few "years of grace" until the Black Man can rise and exterminate them from the face of the earth and come into his own again.
> Of this there can be no doubt, no possible doubt whatever, because "all history" has been "written in advance by 24 Black Scientists."

Although this doctrine may seem implausible, even to well-trained American boobs, there can be no doubt about its inspirational message: exterminate the stupid white swine! Since the middle 1960s the Black Muslims have avoided publicity, although I seem to remember that one of them was chosen to open with prayer a fairly recent session of the Den of Thieves in the Capitol in Washington. For decades, the jewspapers have suppressed mention of the Muslims' ideals, aspirations, and preparations to ride the Wave of the Future. So far as I know, their version of cosmic ethnology is not taught by any of the "Professors" of "Black History" in once respected American universities and colleges, but that may be because they haven't heard of it.

We should turn, therefore, to the kinds of swill that are dispensed by those academic institutions and gleefully pumped into the minds of American children by the racketeers whose Jewish ju-ju, called "education," fascinates American taxpayers and evidently delights the American parents of their victims. A good summary may be found in an article by Bernard Ortiz de Montellano in the Skeptical Inquirer, Fall 1991, pp. 46-50; Winter 1992, pp. 162-166.

Defaming Egyptians and Aryans

The author barely mentions the more seemingly respectable attacks on our race and civilization, which are written by Jews with the effrontery characteristic of their race. These bundles of hokum, disguised by the methodology of scholarship, assure ignorant readers that the ancient Egyptians were niggers, and that Egyptian civilization was the source of all that was good in Graeco-Roman culture, so that Athena was really a female Black.[8] Such noisome garbage could not

4. I chiefly rely on the work of two educated mulattos who penetrated the "Lost-Found Nation" and reported their observations: Professor C. Eric Lincoln, The Black Muslims in America (Boston, Beacon Press, 1961); and Professor E. U. Essien-Udom, Black Nationalism (University of Chicago Press, 1962). See also the article by E. D. Benyon, "The Voodoo Cult....in Detroit," in the American Journal of Sociology for 1937-38. I do not know how much of the official doctrine was already contained in the Supreme Ruler of the Universe's enchiridion for niggers, which was entitled Teaching for the Lost-Found Nation of Islam in a Mathematical Way.

5. Note that Nordics are instinctively identified as the most hated race.

6. Note the adaptation of the Talmudic doctrine that only Yids are human.

7. 'Spook' is nigger slang for 'white man,' often used in the presence of members of our hated race to prevent them from guessing they are the subject of conversation or in writing when it is desired to be discreet. Thus in the printed catalogue of the University of Islam, in which the cosmology outlined above is taught to advanced students (i.e., those who have passed the courses in reading and writing), the course in world history is entitled "Spook Being Displayed for 6000 Years." I refer to the catalogue of this institution of higher learning for 1961. Whether the niggers' own Harvard is still operating, I do not know.

8. One is reminded of the Sheeny professor whose name escapes my recollection at the moment, who wrote a bundle of drivel, published by the Oxford University Press (!), "proving" that there never was anthropophagy among primitive (i.e., nice) people, and that all accounts of cannibals had been invented by vile Aryans to traduce noble niggers or other sublime savages.

impose, even for a moment, on anyone who has an acquaintance with history, however superficial, but since American parents have for decades callously sent their children into the tax-supported boob-hatcheries to have their little minds clotted with grotesque superstitions and made permanently ignorant (i.e., incapable of learning thereafter), there is evidently a considerable number of Aryans who can read such books without throwing them into the dust-bin after scanning the first few pages.

The facts are indubitable. As every literate person should know, the native Egyptians belonged to the Hamitic race, a Caucasian (white) race which is akin to, but clearly distinct from, the Semitic. There have been plausible arguments that Egypt was first occupied and colonized by an Aryan people, but the evidence is fragmentary and inconclusive. The rulers of Egypt (often called pharaohs as a result of an ignorant error made by the authors of the Jew-Book) certainly received from time to time infusions of both Semitic and Aryan blood through marriages they contracted for political reasons, although normal marriage was with one's sisters.[9] The Egyptians developed, long before the Classical, a remarkable civilization, which, given the time and circumstances, is worthy of admiration, although they retained some savage customs, such as circumcision,[10] which the Yids sometimes claim to have taken from the Egyptians, presumably on orders from their own savage God, Yahweh.

9. The usual Egyptian term of sexual endearment, comparable to our 'beloved' and 'darling,' was simply the word for 'sister.' As everyone knows, marriages between brother and sister enhance both the desirable and the deleterious elements in a family's lineage. It occurs to me that some marriages may have been sterile. That would account for the really remarkable proportion of Egyptian kings, princes, and princesses whose mothers were foreign, often Aryan, women—and account, incidentally, for the lovely features of the famous Nefertiti, while other miscegenation or inbreeding would be responsible for the physical deformity and perhaps the psychic instability of the famous Ikhnaton (Akh-en-Aton = Amen-hotep IV), often regarded as the inventor of monotheism (on the basis of inconclusive evidence).

10. Although the Hamitic Egyptians seem to have been a cleanly people, at least among the upper classes, the intensely hot and arid climate may have provided some valid reason for the disgusting custom; cf. Liberty Bell, October 1989, pp. 1-5. It seems unlikely, however, that the climate would justify circumcision of females.

South of Egypt lay Nubia, a region in which the natives seem to have been Congoids, although the upper classes, at least, were mongrelized by infusions of both Semitic and Hamitic blood, doubtless from invaders come to exploit the deposits of gold. The Egyptians always regarded the Nubians (Nehsiu) with contempt, but were attracted by the territory's mineral wealth. Over the centuries they alternately conquered Nubia and imposed Egyptian viceroys with Egyptian garrisons or ruled it through client kings, who, dependent on Egyptian favor, tried to imitate Egyptian culture. In periods of Egyptian weakness, the central government lost control of Nubia and the savages made forays into Egypt, some with temporary success. In periods of Egyptian strength, Nubians, like the Bantu from all over Africa who try to get into South Africa to profit from Aryan prosperity and folly, tried to infiltrate into Egypt, and it was necessary to establish military posts to prevent Nubians from ascending above the Second Cataract of the Nile, together with squads of Sudanese trackers to apprehend Nubians who tried to sneak by, making long detours into the surrounding desert.

One of the lesser but well-known Egyptian monuments is an inscription on a large stele erected by Sesostris (Set-Usert) III (Khahaure), c. 1870 B.C., on which he forbids Nubians to ascend the Nile and states the Egyptian opinion of them: "Nubians cower before mere words, and one has only to challenge them to make them retreat; if one attacks them, they run. But if one draws back, they become aggressive. They are not a race worth consideration. They are degraded creatures and cowardly."[11]

So much for the blatant nonsense that the Egyptians were niggers. Now for the equally impudent pretense that Egypt was the source of Western civilization.

The Egyptian civilization was one of the two oldest in the world, and may, in its early stages, have owed much to the other, the Sumerian. Egyptian civilization was about three thousand years old when Herodotus visited it and described it for the Greeks. The Greeks thought Egypt immemorially old, but one has only to read

11. It is nice irony that Sesostris, who boasts of having taught the Nubians a lesson, destroying their crops and killing many of them, also boasts that he has carried off their women (to be slaves in Egypt). He evidently did not foresee the inevitable miscegenation.

Homer to see that Egypt contributed virtually nothing to Greek culture. Herodotus makes it clear that Egyptian civilization was totally alien and almost unintelligible to Greeks' Aryan minds. Typically, the theriomorphic gods of Egypt (e.g., Thoth, who had the head and neck of an ibis above his shoulders, or the goddess Ta-urt, who was simply a biped hippopotamus) were repugnant to Greek taste and aesthetic sense, which required gods to be human and handsome (e.g., Apollo) or august (e.g., Zeus). Egypt was as alien and strange to the Greeks as was China to Americans of the Nineteenth Century. It was a remote land, respected for its immemorial antiquity but not for its people, and it contributed to Greek culture only a few stories and myths which were changed by reinterpretation.[12]

Greek (Mycenaean) culture, especially art, did have a slight and transient, but perceptible, influence on Egypt during the Tell-el-Amarna period, but Egypt exercised no considerable influence on Classical culture before the beginning of the Roman decadence, when a mongrelized population was fascinated by the incoherent[13] Egyptian religion, especially a late version of the cult of Isis, a goddess whom the Christians later dressed up as the Virgin Mary, changing the name of the babe in her arms from Horus to Jesus.

The Rape of American Children

In his article, Ortiz de Montellano, who is Professor of Anthropology in Wayne State University, barely mentions the historical fabrication I have described above, which is usually so presented that it could impose on very ignorant readers. His concern is with something far more fantastic and vicious, the sewage in which American children are immersed and mentally drowned by "educators" who must be not only venal and dishonest but also born sadists.

12. The great antiquity of Egypt was, of course, impressive and fascinating. Plato attributed his story of Atlantis to an Egyptian source, but it was probably derived from some Phoenician account, imaginatively amplified both before and after it reached Plato. When Greek dramatists and novelists portrayed Egyptians, they, perhaps unaware of the psychological peculiarities of Hamitic peoples, often made them behave and speak as Greeks would have done, much as European writers of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries often portrayed Orientals, from Arabs to Chinese, as picturesquely different Europeans.

13. I have often remarked on the mentality of votaries who could believe that a goddess was the mother of her father. Christian faith is content with a god who was the father of himself.

He takes his departure from the African-American Baseline Studies, published by the school districts of Portland, Oregon, in 1987, and rapturously adopted as a new gospel by school districts throughout the country, including Fort Lauderdale (Florida), Atlanta, Chicago, Detroit. and Washington (District of Corruption). The book consists of "a set of six essays to be read by all teachers and whose contents are to be infused into the teaching of various subjects in all grades." They are "resource materials [note the gangsters' jargon] and references for teachers so that they can use the knowledge...in their classes."

The Science Baseline Essay, entitled "African and African-American Contributions to Science and Technology," was written by a certain Hunter Howland Adams, who is identified as "research scientist" at the Argonne National Laboratory. Professor Ortiz looked into the matter and found that "actually, Adams is an 'industrial-hygiene technician' [jargon which is probably, like 'building engineer,' a grotesquely inflated title for a janitor who sweeps the floors, empties waste-baskets, and cleans latrines] who 'does no research on any topic at Argonne' and whose highest degree is a high-school diploma [which means nothing today, when it is not even proof of literacy]." That does not matter, of course, because niggers instinctively know how to rape White children, physically and mentally.

The contents of this bucket of excrement may be sufficiently indicated by a few condensed excerpts from Professor Ortiz's description of it. It begins with the assumption that the ancient Egyptians were niggers, and then teaches that:

> Astrology is based on science [because] "at birth every living thing has a serial number or frequency power spectrum."....The ancient Egyptians were "famous as masters of psi, precognition, psychokinesis, remote viewing and other undeveloped human capabilities" [including] "psychoenergetics," [which is] the "multidisciplinary study of the interface and interaction of human consciousness with energy and matter."....Egyptian professional psi engineers, hekau,[14] were able to use

14. An hekai is a sorcerer, enchanter, distinguished by his ability to use heka, i.e., to bewitch by uttering spells and incantations. An hekau is a system of magic and hence the human or divine author of a book these forces efficaciously, [as] has been researched and demonstrated in controlled laboratory and field experiments today.

[After a long fiction that attributes to the Egyptians as a great religious superiority the essentials of the "New Age" hokum now peddled to American suckers] the Baseline Essay claims that Egyptians had a theory of species evolution "at least 2,000 years before Charles Darwin developed his theory."

On the basis of a 6″ × 9″ tailless, bird-shaped object found in the Cairo Museum...Adams says that Egyptians had full-size gliders 4,000 years ago and "used their early planes for travel, expeditions, and recreations."....Certain dimensions of the Great Pyramid reveal and encode knowledge about the 26.000-year cycles of the equinoxes and the acceleration of gravity.... Egyptians electroplated gold and silver 4,000 years ago and had developed copper/iron batteries some 2,000 years ago.

You will, of course, have observed in the quotations from Adams the use of a technique probably invented by John Dewey, that of collocating words that have specific meanings in technology and science to produce utterly meaningless drivel, which, however, may impose on minds so palsied or indolent that they do not try to understand what they read.

Although the nigger writer does not frankly say so (if Professor Ortiz did not overlook some passage), he obviously implies that niggers are intellectually, as well as physically, far superior to the lowly Whites, who must work for them. Come to think of it, when I reflect that Aryan tax-payers are dumbly paying to have their children's mind stuffed with such manure, I must concede that he may be right, after all.

of potent spells, including some that are to be inscribed on phylacteries, amulets, and talismans to ward off demons or attract favorable notice from gods. I use the transliteration that is in general use in historical works and was adopted by E. A. Wallis Budge in his Hieroglyphic Dictionary, which will be found in all good libraries, whereas later works, with a more precise transliteration that omits vowels (which were usually supplied by guesswork from some Coptic derivatives), are apt to be found only in special Egyptological collections.

Science Brought Up-to-Date

Ortiz de Montellano next turns to the operations of an outfit that calls itself the "KMWR[15] Scientific Consortium." He names five "better-known" members of the group that has revised and improved old Elijah Muhammed's cosmology and ethnology. One is the Hunter Adams of the Baseline Essay; two are practicing as psychiatrists, one in Los Angeles and the other in the District of Corruption; and two are "professors" of "African-American" hogwash, one in the City University of New York City and the other in the San Francisco State University. Both of the "universities" thus patently engaged in fraud are financed by Aryan tax-paying boobs. I assume that all five are niggers, but there may be a Sheeny in the woodpile.

Melanin is an organic pigment, a polymer that forms melanosomes which determine the color of hair, eyes, and skin in the higher anthropoids.[16]

A very large amount of this polymer produces the brown hide that distinguishes niggers, and the "professors" and their accomplices, having heard of it, thought it a better explanation of racial differences than the creative work of the "Black scientist," Yakub. I shall again give you condensed excerpts from Professor Ortiz's account of this verbalization of nigger hatred:

They claim that melanin is a superconductor, that it absorbs all frequencies of the electromagnetic spectrum, that it can convert sound energy to light energy reversibly, and that it can function as a minicomputer to process information.... People with high melanin levels have

15. It is possible that the inventors of this comic opera science, if very clever and erudite (for niggers), are perpetrating a sly pun. (On transliteration from hieroglyphic and hieratic, see the preceding footnote.) One of the several common words for Egypt, and probably the most common, is Kam-t (Kam, Kami), whence Kammau, 'Egyptian.' Now Kam-t is simply the word for 'black,' i.e., the Black Land, the Valley of the Nile, with the black and richly fertile alluvial land deposited by the great river at each annual inundation, which presents a vivid contrast to the yellow, ochre, or tan of the sterile sands of the surrounding desert. (Another name for Egypt is Ta-mara, 'the land of inundations.') Thus the 'Consortium,' while seeming to refer to Egypt, may be calling itself something like Black Power!, with tacit amusement at the stupid White boobs who do not understand the objective thus slyly announced.

16. For the complex chemistry by which color is determined, see any good textbook on the organic chemistry of enzymes.

better muscular coordination (which makes them better athletes), are mentally superior, have unusual faculties such as ESP[17] and are influenced by the magnetic fields of other humans and of the earth.... Lectures about melanin are replete with scientific-sounding terminology: substantia nigra, solitons, phonons, electromagnetic radiation, melanocyte, extrapyramidal tract, pineal gland, hypothalmus, and so on.[18]... Humans evolved as blacks in Africa and whites are mutants (albinos, or melanin recessives.)

Walsing [a female "psychiatrist," who publishes such drivel in a periodical called Urban Health, doubtless at the expense of White dolts] uses the notion of whites as melanin recessives to explain white racism on a "scientific" basis. She professes that white men have to destroy black men in self-defense because black men have the potential to destroy white men genetically. [White degeneracy can be perpetuated only by sexual intercourse between whites, and therefore] black men are considered dangerous because they could force white women to have sex [i.e, rape the bitches and thus produce superior children and breed out racial degeneracy].[19]

Wade Nobles [a "professor" in a cesspool called San Francisco State University] states that whites stopped evolving with the development of the central nervous system (CNS), but that blacks continued to evolve an essential melanin system (EMS). From this he develops an "equation": CNS + EMS = HB (human being—that is, whites are not fully human.) Others express the same idea by their repeated use of the term hueman instead of 'human,' with the connotation that only people with color are truly human.[20]

17. "Extrasensory Perception," a sham devised by Joseph Rhine, a Christian who had received training in biology and tried to use it to put his god back in business. Apparently believing his own delusions, he managed to obtain a professorship at Duke University and his pseudo-scientific quibbling was financed by many men who should have known better. See Is There Intelligent Life on Earth?, pp. 29-34.

18. One is reminded of humorous stories published in the Saturday Evening Post decades ago, when the Americans still had a country of their own. Laughter was excited by "darkies," who having heard impressive words of which they did not know the meaning, used them in magniloquent discourse that was, of course, ludicrous. Such simian imitativeness seems to be characteristic of the race most nearly allied to the larger apes.

19. As the "psychiatrist" thought it unnecessary to state in print, it follows, of course, that when male niggers cohabit with White whores or rape White females who do not have the instincts of prostitutes, they are dutifully performing a noble task, inspired by their soulful yearning for a better world.

20. Cf. Note 6 supra.

[Melanin produces extrasensory perception and a high degree of sensitivity, thus] George Washington Carver [a nigger] was so successful in discovering useful products from plants...because the plants "talked to him and told him what they were good for."

Adams [in his Baseline Essay] states that the Dogon of Mali[21] discovered a dwarf companion of Sirius, Sirius B, which is invisible to the naked eye [and] knew that it is extraordinarily dense and has an orbital period of 50 years.... According to Welsing, the Dogon's melanin functions in a manner similar to an infrared telescope, and they were able to detect Sirius B through the melanin in their pineal glands. Welsing claims further that everything that happens on Earth is converted to energy and beamed up to Sirius B... The high melanin content of black people enables them to tap into that [store of] information. She alleges that the Greek oracles were black and that their melanin enabled them, as it does present-day blacks, to foresee the future.[22]

Ortiz de Montellano concludes by pointing out that while the wonders of melanin are not specifically stated in Adams' Baseline Essay, they are implied in that bucket of sewage, in which the heads of White children throughout this country are forcibly immersed by the "educators" who are hired and paid by the White children's feckless parents.

The learned niggers whose discoveries are summarized above have now so improved scientific methods that they are ready to claim for their race another great discovery, that frogs develop from tadpoles, and that tadpoles develop from horses' hair that has fallen into water. It is true that horses have been largely supplanted by the automobile, but that merely confirms the scientific finding, since, as you well know, all automobiles have horsepower and exhaust some of it, which drifts to ponds.

L'Envoi

Do you, dear reader, imagine that by deriding the doctrine of Nigger Superiority we have refuted it? If so, perpend a few out of a hundred relevant facts:

21. A swarm of filthy Congoids who, for millennia and until quite recently, lived in isolation from the rest of the world, infesting caves in the almost inaccessible mountains of the French Sudan, a territory that was called 'Mali' after Aryan idiots, their little minds infected with "anti-colonialism," restored it to savagery, which is now slightly restrained by the Jews who exploit its mineral resources.

22. E.g., the coming extermination of the degenerate White race—but it doesn't take melanin to foresee that. You have only to read demographic statistics and listen to the gabble of average Americans.

• A majority of the "educators" who take a sadistic delight in grabbing White children by the neck and rubbing their faces in Black excrement are members of our race.

• The mayor of Dubuque was not lynched. He was not even run out of town. On the contrary, a considerable number of the Germanic inhabitants were so mush-brained or afraid of being called "racist" by the jewspapers that they agreed with him.

• Iowa is said to grow tall corn; it also grows turnip-heads. At the University of Iowa, a female professor of a pseudo-science had a pet pupil, a Chink named Gang Lu. He thought her responsible when he did not receive a thousand-dollar prize for something or the other, and so he shot and killed her, shot and killed the student who won the award, shot and killed three members of the faculty, shot and permanently paralyzed the departmental secretary, and then shot himself. Now, believe it or not, the family of the female professor had minds so rotted with Christian muck that they proudly announced their sympathy for the Chink's family, whose sorrow must be greater [sic!] than their own, and even had translated into Chinese a letter assuring Gang's family of their sympathy and heartfelt condolences. Spearhead has, over the years, reported many similar instances of Christian folie circulaire among English parents of sons and daughters who had been raped and/or killed (in one case, eaten) by niggers, for whom the idiots promptly professed sympathy and understanding.

• Who is the most celebrated figure in the history of the United States? A plebeian backwoodsman who, although not without talent and some decent instincts,[23] served a gang of thieves and maniacs to slaughter a large fraction of the best part of the White population, permanently impoverishing the nation's genetic heritage. He did this because millions of Aryan nitwits envied the partly fictitious comforts of the Southern planters, and sniveled over the partly fictitious discomforts of their biped livestock.

23. He intended to ship all niggers out of the United States, and he had made a beginning by shipping one lot of 5000 to Haiti. (An entrepreneur who took the contract for exporting them was the father of the Jennie Jerome, who became the mother of Winston Churchill.) Lincoln's plan was, of course, one of the primary reasons why the politicians who put him in the White House had him assassinated when he ceased to be useful to them.

• A White woman was raped and killed by a nigger. Her husband, instead of being pleased that she had had the privilege of contributing to the multi-racial culture for which Americans yearn, hired detectives and identified the murderer, a rich nigger who could afford an escort of bodyguards. When he found that the police would not offend their superiors (politicians elected by White fools), the White man equipped himself with suitable weapons and killed the bodyguards and the boss nigger. Arrested, he was tried by a White jury, who, instead of applauding his heroism, sentenced him to an imprisonment that is really for life. — In the region about Chicago, young niggers have found a new sport. In their automobiles (paid for, directly or indirectly by White tax-paying animals) they draw up alongside a car containing one or two Whites, shoot and kill them, and drive away, laughing over their prank. One such sportsman was arrested, confessed to quite a few murders, and was tried several times (i.e., for different murders) before nigger juries, who unanimously found him "Not Guilty." Indeed, he was guilty of nothing wrong by nigger standards: he had merely eliminated a few "honkies," members of an alien and despised race. — Which of the two races, do you think, has the biological sense of racial solidarity that will permit the species to survive?

• In Kansas City a nigger, much admired by White boobies, told a cheering audience of his own race to disregard laws made by the nasty Whites, to avoid wasting their homicidal talents on members of their own race, and, instead, to treat the Whites as they deserve; they are now sniping at automobiles from overpasses but will doubtless become more self-confident. In Milwaukee, a nigger alderman, probably elected by feeble-minded Whites, announced that if he is not reëlected, his Black Panther Militia will start shooting Whites on the streets, and, furthermore, he announced over a very popular television program that if the White swine do not provide $3,000,000,000,000 (three trillion dollars) worth of luxuries for his race by 1995, the niggers will declare open war on the pale-faced boobs. Knowing this, the witch-doctors in American churches continue to babble about "love" and "understanding." Remember, most of the Christian witch-doctors are Aryans.

So are the congregations that not only listen to them but even pay them for their racial treason. Are those Aryans fit to live?

• In South Africa, a majority of the Aryans voted to go the way of Rhodesia, now a stinking jungle in which the boss apeman has just decreed confiscation of all the property of the Whites who remained in what had been their country, largely because they had been virtually imprisoned in it by a "law" forbidding them to take with them any money or other property if they left the jungle. (The decree applies to White men and women; remember that the Sheenies have repeatedly boasted that they are not a White race.) The vicious animals, put in power by American "anti-colonialism," are now massacring the elephants so that Sheenies can profit by smuggling ivory into Europe and selling it at very high prices.

• The suicide of the Aryans in South Africa was only what was to be expected for more than a decade (see Liberty Bell, December 1983), The English-speaking population was so degenerate that they made an Anglican Archbishop out of a pint-sized creature called Tutu, who resembles an orang-utan with mange and jabbers with hatred of White men. The Africaans-speaking population was so degenerate they were willing to sacrifice their children for a bit of profit expected from relaxation of the "sanctions" imposed by degenerate Aryans in the United States and Europe. For the majority that voted racial suicide, one neither can nor should feel the slightest compassion, and most Americans are so stupid and venal they will not feel pity for the intelligent minority of South Africans and the innocent children who will be the victims of the majority's depravity.

• In North America, Europe, and Australia, Aryans are not producing a sufficient number of offspring to maintain their race. Niggers breed like guinea pigs everywhere, and, now that the White nations work for them, they, despite the mitigating effects of the African Plague (commonly called "AIDS") and the highest rate of infant mortality, will double their numbers every twenty to twenty-five years.

• Throughout the world, Aryans are showing unmistakable symptoms of either imbecility or a latent death-wish. The cause is not certain. One can speculate about the consequences of more than two centuries of dysgenic breeding and legislation. If the Jewish biologist, Dr. Alfred Nossig, is right, much may be attributed to Yiddish poisoning of Aryan blood-lines. One could adapt Robert Ardrey's hypothesis about the mountain gorillas, that species have a collective subconscious that governs their conduct and becomes aware when a species has become biologically obsolete. The most likely primary cause, in my opinion, is Christianity, a religion that is the negation of life, and is a kind of racial "AIDS," which, over two millennia, progressively sapped and finally destroyed our race's immune system, i.e., its consciousness of its racial identity.

• Please do not talk about the beauty and nobility of our culture. If you do, you are merely Narcissus, admiring yourself in a mirror. The real world takes no account of such artificial and fragile things. In the real world all that counts is power, such as you once had and threw away while you were sniveling over your Christian virtues.

The only test of biological superiority is the ability to survive, and by that test there can be no doubt about Nigger Superiority. So far as we can now foresee, and subject only to what the Jews may decide to do with the savages they are now using as a lethal weapon against us, this planet will swarm with niggers long after our race has vanished and been forgotten, for History will vanish with it—unless, perchance, the Mongolians, under Japanese rule, successfully defend themselves against the Sheenies and retain an interest in their own past, mentioning, in some footnote, a race from which they learned much but which was too stupid and craven to defend itself.

IT'S GAME TIME AGAIN

Some Populist Parties—I know not how many—are now promoting the candidacy for the Presidency of Colonel James Gritz, who likes to be called 'Bo,' a mildly derisive epithet rather than a nickname.[1] If he published his Called to Serve (Sandy Valley, Cali-

1. The 'bo' is an appellation or epithet of uncertain origin, not a personal sobriquet. It appears in the words 'hobo,' 'boy' (in the original sense of 'knave, varlet,' which persisted in English to the time of Shakespeare, and accounts for the British colonial use of 'boy' for a native servant), 'bohunk' (erroneously explained as a compound of fornia; Lazarus Publishing Co., 1991) to promote his candidacy, it is certainly the longest (c. 700 pages), weightiest (3¼ lb.), and most interesting piece of 'campaign literature' ever published. I shall not, however, treat it as 'campaign literature.' I shall assume that the author is expressing his own beliefs and opinions,[2] not just scattering boob-bait compounded by a staff of professional liars.

The Colonel is a soldier with great experience in the kind of desperate warfare of which the general public knows nothing; he is the most honored and decorated commander of the Special Forces, commonly known as the Green Berets; he has an intense loyalty to a patriot's conception of the United States; he has risked his life and fought with extraordinary courage for his country many times; and he has had the even greater courage to confront and denounce the alien government that now rules the United States and to identify some of its masters. He is entitled to our respect and gratitude. That makes it impossible to review this book in detail within the limited space of a periodical such as Liberty Bell, and extremely difficult to review it summarily without either favor or injustice to its earnest author.

After some information about the military family of which the author is a scion and his own family, the book deals with five distinct but often overlapping subjects, videlicet: (1) the author's Bohemian + Hungarian, the word is generally used to designate a white, loutish and hulking male of the lowest social class; in early Canadian usage it was applied to itinerants who were 'hobos' but claimed to be looking for work), 'bubo' (not, of course, the medical term; it seems to be German bube, a cognate of 'boy' in the original meaning), and possibly 'bogie,' the spectre being thought of as male. 'Bo' does not seem connected with beau, meaning either a dandy or a woman's admirer or in its basic meaning, 'handsome.' It is apparently less pejorative than the epithet 'guy,' which, of course, implies that the person to whom it is applied is a grotesque, perhaps tatterdemalion, and certainly ludicrous figure, comparable to the figures stuffed with straw that are burned in England on Guy Fawkes Night. Acquiescence in derisive epithets seems to be common in some masculine groups.

2. That the Colonel wrote the book that bears his name seems attested by the fairly numerous syntactical and lexical errors. A 'ghost writer' who could produce this appearance of authenticity by simulating errors at points where they seem uncontrived and natural would be so artful and cunning as to be at the very top of his profession—and correspondingly expensive.

adventures in Vietnam; (2) the Americans who are now held prisoner in Vietnam and adjacent territories; (3) the fake "war on drugs" promoted by the principal operators in the production and sale of narcotics; (4) a description of the Special Forces, commonly known as the Green Berets, of the U.S. Army, and the kind of warfare for which they are trained; and (5) an assessment of the parlous, if not desperate, position of the American people today.

The best and most succinct description of the "war" in Vietnam as experienced by the soldiers of our regular Army is The L.B.J. Brigade, by "William Wilson,"[3] published by the Apocalypse Press in Los Angeles in 1966. I regret that I cannot tell you where copies may now be obtained. It is the book you should read, if, for example, you are to understand the outrage perpetrated on Lieutenant William L. Calley, Jr., who, to further the demoralization of the American Army, was sent to prison for having obeyed orders to minimize the loss of life in the detachment of which he was in command. He did not understand that the "war" in Vietnam was fought and managed for the purpose of killing and maiming as many young Americans as possible.

The present book will not help you understand that aspect of the war. Colonel Gritz, a distinguished officer in the Special Forces, fought a quite different kind of war, in which he believed, and may even now believe, that he was fighting for his country. (I use the term advisedly, for he seems not to know the difference between a country and a nation.)

The techniques of this kind of warfare I shall consider later, but it involves operations by very small detachments of Green Berets within enemy territory or in the no man's land between that territory and positions held by American forces. Some of these detachments consisted of only Gritz and one or two White subordinates in command of a small body of irregular native mercenaries, commonly Cambodians, chosen for their abiding hatred of the Vietnamese.

3. The author, certainly an American officer of some intermediate rank, prudently concealed his identity under a pseudonym obviously taken from Edgar Allan Poe. As for the implications of this choice of a nom de guerre, your conjectures will be as good as mine.

Colonel Gritz reports many perilous and desperate missions, which, though told without the literary art of narration, will hold your attention as tales of adventure, but I shall not attempt to decide which are the most thrilling, and none seems noteworthy as having had an appreciable effect on the progress and outcome of the "war" in Vietnam.

After the well-planned débâcle in Vietnam, Colonel Gritz, convinced that many American soldiers were still being held captive in Vietnam and adjacent territory, returned to the scene of his earlier adventures. He did so covertly, having obtained a kind of ambiguous official documentation that later served as a pretext for persecuting him when the rulers in Washington wanted to stifle reports about the American soldiers who were (and still are) suffering a prolonged, painful, and degrading captivity. War Lord Bushy himself is said to have issued orders to "get" Colonel Gritz and silence him. Fortunately, the Colonel was tried by a jury that Federal authorities had neglected to "fix" in advance, and was acquitted.

The long narrative of the way in which Gritz was secretly enlisted by dissident (i.e., patriotic) factions in the Army to undertake that search for the American prisoners, officially resigning from the Army and undertaking, supposedly on private initiative (so that responsible officers could plausibly deny all connection with, or knowledge of, the scheme), a covert operation, and the almost endless vicissitudes of the project, with clandestine attempts to abort it by other military factions and governmental agencies, is a lesson on the present intricately tangled state of American military services, which now resembles the Gordian Knot.

Gritz finally reached Vietnam, accompanied by three former comrades, one of whom broke under stress and became a liability, since his past comradeship and record deterred Gritz from killing him, as, strictly speaking, it was his duty to do in order to eliminate a serious handicap.[4] Gritz and his two useful subordinates, having with them the most advanced equipment for guerilla combat the

4. I speak of his duty in the field as a commander of the Green Berets; see below. It is interesting to note that when the man whose courage broke returned to the United States, he proved to be a moral weakling as well, becoming a venal traitor to his commander, seriously endangering the mission, and causing the death of a very useful native informant.

Army could supply, enlisted native mercenaries[5] to conduct the search.

After many adventures and close escapes from death, principally in Laos, Colonel Gritz and his White subordinates obtained a great deal of information about Americans held captive in and about Vietnam, but did not succeed in rescuing a single one, partly because they were continually harassed from Washington.

It was in the course of this search that Gritz came into contact with the very extensive and lucrative production of heroin and similar narcotics in Southeast Asia, and he eventually reached an Oriental counterpart of our Bushy, Khun Sa, the Burmese War Lord who controls the region called the Golden Triangle, which produces the larger part of all the heroin now used by addicts in the United States and Europe. (Cocaine is imported from South America.)

Khun Sa pretended to disapprove of his land's most profitable industry, which has made Burma[6] the richest nation in Southeast Asia, and gave Colonel Gritz a wealth of information on the segments of the American government that import and sell heroin in this country. The extremely lucrative business is controlled by the C.I.A., of which our War Lord was once the official director and who must, of course, have been involved in the business to that extent at least.

5. Gritz avoids the word and even seems to ignore the real motivation of the natives who helped him, member of a hated race and even more hated as an American. An examination of the record will convince you that his native operatives betrayed him more often than he admits. Of course, the perpetual civil war in progress among the natives gave some of the natives an additional interest in serving the Americans when that was detrimental to an opposing faction.

6. The rulers of Burma recently changed its name to Myanmar; I do not know whom they are trying to fool. Burma is a nation because the native population has run out of the country the many Hindus and Chinese who once controlled its economy, and almost all of the "refugees" who have entered it from time to time. The Burmans are a Mongoloid race of Tibetan origin who invaded and occupied the country in the Ninth Century. The racially diverse enclaves of peoples of Siamese origin (Shin, Karen) are usually kept under effective control. As everyone knows, Burma was once an orderly and well-governed British colony, but was turned loose when our race finally succumbed to the Judaeo-Christian virus.

"Democratic" Warfare

The Special Forces fight the "democratic" modern type of warfare by methods that may shock you if you retain in your mind any belief in the standards and ethics of civilized warfare that are instinctive to our race and prevailed during the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries. That now obsolete code was repudiated as nations came under Jewish control, and the last nation that tried to observe it was Germany under the National Socialist régime. Some vestiges of it lingered among the older officers of Britain—especially in the British Navy,[7]—and of the United States, the two Aryan nations which had taken the lead in repudiating the concept of civilized warfare, replacing it with the more pragmatic standards of sophisticated savages and Jews.

The old standards of warfare depended on the Aryan and, indeed, essentially Nordic conception of honor, which Jews and their Judaized subjects think ridiculous. The honor of commanders made them not only themselves refrain from certain "dishonorable" acts, but also prevent the commission of such acts by the men under their command. Some things were "not done." War was waged by armies against armies, not against civilians, who were to be spared even financial loss and hardships as much as possible; one did not kill women and children; there were legitimate ruses de guerre that everyone recognized, but one did not wage war treacherously; enemy soldiers who were captured or surrendered were prisoners of war, to be treated with decent consideration according to their rank; and one respected and admired the valor of brave adversaries.

While Aryan nations retained their natural instincts, they fought bravely in their national wars,[8] sometimes even chivalrously,

7. Cf. Liberty Bell, April-May 1991, p. 96.

8. That is, wars in the interest of the nation or its ruling dynasty. I thus exclude wars of religion, which were noted for their hideous atrocities, committed largely by enraged civilians or armies that got out of the control of their commanders. (Few military men could equal the Duke of Wellington's strictly disciplined control of his army, which invaded France without despoiling or terrorizing the French population.) When Aryans become crazed with Judaic superstitions and engage in a war with Satan, they naturally seek to exterminate persons who hold incorrect opinions about the composition of their 3-in-1 god and must obviously be Satan's agents. When this baneful effect of Christianity waned, largely as a result of empirical demonstration that Jesus & Co., Inc., but never unscrupulously. The only partial exception was in intelligence services, which were subject to the rule that agents sent "into the field" (i.e., into other countries) must never be commissioned officers, because commissioned officers were gentlemen, and the kinds of deception and corruption practiced by spies could not be practiced by honorable men. Of course, all that has changed, now that the rage for "equality" has made gentlemen like dinosaurs, a picturesque but extinct species.

To the modernized mind, civilized warfare seems quaint and silly. Your army should avoid battle with enemy armies as much as possible, and instead attack and destroy the unarmed and helpless civilian population, because that is safer and they can be slain in much greater numbers and with much more fun. That policy is obviously correct, because the unarmed civilians are the real enemies since they finance and supply the opposing army, so use your most advanced weapons to kill as many of them as possible and proudly display your talent for savagery and sheer frightfulness, as the British and Americans did when serving their Jewish masters against Germany in 1939-1945. Rape women to degrade them, but, preferably, kill them when they are no longer amusing. Women bear children and children grow up to become adult enemies, so kill them, and, if you are in a playful mood, torture them first. Enemy soldiers who think they are dealing with civilized enemies are fools: accept their trusting surrender, disarm them, and then treacherously massacre them or betray them to their enemies or imitate the foul mongrel, Eisenhower, and his Soviet colleagues: murder them slowly and with maximum suffering in prison camps. When you capture the noblest of the enemy, murder them after torturing them and degrading them in an obscene parody of a trial for "war crimes." There is nothing so vile that you should not do it whenever it is expedient or entertaining—do it without hesitation and with inner amusement at the old fuddy-duddies who have a silly weakness called scruples. As for the tax-paying herds in your own country, you can keep them befuddled with gabble about "human rights," "world peace," and your own lofty moral principles. All this is simply a practical application of what Americans call "democracy." They love it.

It was only natural that the Americans were the first Aryan nation to repudiate military ethics in the orgy of blood-thirsty righteousness they called a Civil War, lying to themselves, almost as though they had a subliminal conscience that had to be soothed. Sherman's March to the Sea especially shocked the British, who were certain no civilized nation could be capable of such atrocities,—and who imitated it when the Jews nudged them into action in South Africa in 1899.

You must keep this hurried sketch of up-to-date warfare in mind when you consider the Green Berets.

The élite troops selected for detachment to the Special Forces early adopted as their insigne a green beret adorned with a death's head in imitation of famous German regiments; this was finally recognized as official by President Kennedy, who thereby earned the gratitude of these extraordinary soldiers, including Colonel Gritz.

The Green Berets are a corps of especially "tough" men, selected for their physical prowess and stamina and their mental acuity and agility. They undergo a rigorous training in all the methods of clandestine killing, from karate, in which Gritz holds a very advanced degree (as does his present wife!) to the use of highly elaborate and sophisticated weapons, from ingenious bombs to concealed poisons, from silenced machine guns to rifles for marksmen who hit their targets in total darkness, using, of course, invisible infra-red radiation. They are experts at setting and detecting booby traps. They are masters of all the techniques of successful infiltration and assassination. They must, of course, be totally unscrupulous and utterly ruthless in carrying out whatever mission is delegated to them by their military superiors. "Theirs not to reason why."

Colonel Gritz, who estimates that he has himself killed about four hundred men individually, also had his men murder prisoners when it was clearly expedient to do so, and did not hesitate to use torture to extract information, although he did censure wanton indulgence in sadistic urges.[9] He confesses to having felt pity several times when his indulgence in it could have endangered an operation, although in the event it did not prevent success. This marks him as a less than perfect member of Special Forces.

The Green Berets, who are under Army command, are obviously much more efficient than the operatives of the C.I.A. who undertake similarly unconventional errands. You must honor them as heroes, even if you deplore the necessities of "democratic" warfare.

How Treason Prospers

I suspect that Colonel Gritz had his first misgivings when he saw that the "war" in Vietnam was managed to ensure a disgraceful American defeat after the greatest feasible loss of American lives and the greatest feasible burden on American tax-payers to stimulate their gradual reduction to open slavery. And it was probably his experiences in seeking the American captives in Vietnam that finally proved to him that the United States is governed by enemies of the American people.

He is shrewd. He rightly sees that the boobs first put the noose about their necks when they subjected themselves to the Federal Reserve and the Income Tax. He realizes that the uncomprehending Americans are the subjects and victims of a vast international conspiracy, of which he identifies some segments.

As an expert in such operations, he analyses the C.I.A.'s assassinations of President Kennedy, his brother, "Bobby Sox" Kennedy,

9. He mentions a certain Captain D'Jan (what racial muddle is indicated by that name?) who, to obtain information a couple may not have had, resorted to such means as burning off the woman's nipples while her tortured but still conscious husband watched. D'Jan expected to be commended for his ingenuity, and was surprised when Gritz, disapproving of such gratuitous cruelty, relieved him from duty and, knowing that D'Jan was also generally incompetent, sent him back to the U.S., where he successfully advertised himself as a great hero of the "war."

and the obnoxious nigger named King,[10] and comments on the attempted assassinations of George Wallace, President Ford, and Reagan,[11] who were either accidentally or designedly wounded but not killed. He also remarks on the ways these operations were covered up, most commonly by identifying and "framing" as the assassin a person who could not be guilty, or, as in the case of the assassination of Jackanapes Kennedy, by murdering the man falsely accused and then killing off persons whose testimony could have exposed the hoax contrived by Earl Warren to conceal the facts.[12]

10. The C.I.A. had a man named Ray convicted of the "crime." I have intended for several years to review James Earl Ray's Tennessee Waltz, the Making of a Political Prisoner (Saint Andrews Press, Saint Andrews, Tennessee; 1987). I have not yet seen his more recent and, I am told, more explicit book. — King was both an habitual criminal (with a record so foul that it has been sealed up until far into the next century) and a loud-mouthed but thoughtless agitator. It is reported that the New York office of the Jews' National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, sent a communication to the branch office in New Orleans commenting on recent statements by the vicious nigger, who "could not open his mouth without putting his foot into it," and pointedly remarking that a dead martyr would be more useful than a living embarrassment. But the C.I.A. would have needed no reason for the killing other than a wish to stir up the niggers in the United States to more action against the White boobs who tax themselves to subsidize their natural enemies. The racial war, which is to bring home to Americans all the joys that they bestowed on the Cambodians, Laotians, and Vietnamese, must, of course, be approached by easy stages.

11. As was doubtless planned, Reagan, whether or not he knew of the arrangement, sustained only a very slight wound that was not even painful and could not conceivably have been inflicted by the heavy pistol used by the man (named Hinkley) who did shoot some people. It is uncertain whether Hinkley was a patsy, stimulated by C.I.A. agents to attempt an assassination and covertly supervised to limit his fire to expendable victims, or simply hired for a public performance. He is imprisoned in a "mental hospital" to prevent him from explaining his conduct.

12. Gritz missed the point that Warren must have been a member of the conspiracy, as shown by his publicly reading, immediately after he got the good news from Dallas but before he could be advised of what had gone wrong in the scheduled performance, a script that had been prepared in advance and did not take into account what had actually happened.

The last part of the book is an earnest, almost passionate, and largely accurate (as far as it goes) description of the desperate situation of the American people today. Readers of this periodical already know most of the pertinent facts. It would be otiose to repeat them here. One detail calls for comment that I must reserve for a later discussion.

The Astounding Paradox

My duty to you, dear reader, now constrains me to the disagreeable and almost painful task of giving you a significant bit of information you will be unwilling to believe.

Colonel Gritz is a fearless soldier with an heroic record. He has the keen and alert intelligence needed to survive when one is on his own and surrounded by ruthless enemies. He is a master of all the techniques of covert warfare, including psychological aggression by hypnosis and mind-blighting drugs. He is a shrewdly logical observer of some contemporary events. But, in a large area of his mind, he has the mentality of an overgrown child. He is as much a sucker for crude propaganda as the average ignorant and feckless American.

The primary source of his astonishing credulity is patent: he is a Christian, indeed, a very simple-minded Christian. He probably believes all the tales in the Jew-Book, beginning with the silly story about Adam, Eve, and the loquacious snake. He knows that his god personally intervened to save George Washington at the time of Braddock's defeat, and that furthermore "following the Revolutionary War God intervened and allowed us to establish this nation as a beacon to all who would be free." What is more, "the foundation of America is the Holy Bible," and so "We must return America to God"!

But don't you worry, little boy. "The Identity Christian movement (Those who believe America is the new Zion and we are the gathering tribes of Israel) continues to build until its membership becomes self-sustaining." That will enable "those who choose to say no to the new world order to survive....until they are called [up yonder!] or the Christ[13]—the true sovereign comes. God's loyal children are ultimately exalted over the destroyer and the guilty are punished."

13. It is to the Colonel's credit that, unlike so many ignorant Christians, he knows that 'Christ' is a title, not a family name.

As for our immediate future, "Israel will be free to exploit the world's economy for some time. The anti-Christ will appear as will the tribulation[14] and the eventual wrath of God. The good news is that those who keep the faith are promised to be caught up with Christ who will seal the world against evil for a thousand years."[15]

Christianity, like spiritual "AIDS," has destroyed the Colonel's racial immune system and leached from his mind awareness of his own race. It has even made him deny his own experience.

Although alert members of other races soon learn to simulate opinions and behavior that will profitably conciliate the favor of the stupid White Devils, the Colonel must have studied the mentality of the mongrel Mongoloids he used so effectively in Vietnam and perceived how greatly it differed from that of White men. But, as Christians do, he probably told himself that the differences were not innate, but caused by a kind of mental constipation that could be cured with a stiff dose of the spiritual emetic called Jesus.

In his youth Gritz (who is now 53) evidently swallowed and relished the hogwash administered in the schools about the glories of our great ochlocracy ("majority rule"), deceptively called "democracy," with its stinking Melting Pot of races made equal in degradation. That has made him so obstinately unaware of racial realities that, believe it or not, he inveighs against the nasty "Fascists" who enforce apartheid in South Africa and thus avert the blessings of majority rule by the noble niggers![16]

He evidently believes in human freedom, but he commends Jackanapes Kennedy, whom he admires and idealizes, for having sent hordes of goons, dressed as Federal marshals, to teach the White population of Mississippi that they have no rights of which niggers disapprove.

He is simply a sucker for "leftists" everywhere because he imagines that they want "majority rule" and he so loves "freedom" that he will approve every act of illegal and dictatorial oppression (e.g., in Greensboro, North Carolina) to overawe or suppress "Fascists," who don't love his dear "leftists."

Although he is, I suspect, of German descent, he hates Germans, having gulped down all the Jewish hokum about "Nazi dreams of world conquest" and the awful "Holocaust" of the six million Sheenies who were gassed and incinerated before they swarmed into the United States. He is worried because there are "10,000 Nazi war criminals" in the United States, who, he actually believes!, are protected by the international conspiracy. It seems never to occur to him that, assuming that the German soldiers did everything with which the Kikes credit them, he, Colonel Gritz, is, by his own admission, as much of a "war criminal" and could be humiliated, tortured, convicted in a mock trial, and obscenely murdered by the Vietnamese or their sympathizers, including, of course, American pacifists.

He is so naïf that he believes all the propaganda about "democratic" and "Fascist" factions in the countries in Central and South America in which the C.I.A. creates trouble and civil war. (In Nicaragua, for example, noble, freedom-loving "Sandinistas," versus wicked, oppressive, Fascistic "Contras," etc.) He does not realize that the imposition of One World requires a long period of constant turmoil in all countries—turmoil and civil wars excited by use of whatever antagonisms can be best exploited, e.g., between land owners and peasants in San Salvador, between Serbs, Croatians, and Slovenes in Yugoslavia, between Sunni and Shi'ite Moslems in Iraq, 14. Christians can simply take your breath away. Some years ago an aged but distinguished civil engineer traveled two thousand miles to ask me—me, of all people!—whether the Tribulation would precede or follow the Rapture!

15. I am sure Gritz, as a veteran of Special Forces, will take the precaution of putting on the best insulated underwear and outer clothing the Army provides for service within the Arctic Circle before he is caught up to go rapturing and whirl around the Earth like an artificial satellite in orbit. The other True Believers are certain to be frozen stiff in the cold of the upper atmosphere, and that should chill their Rapture. Or will Yahweh, instead of stopping the sun over a village in Asia Minor, order it to turn up the heat until the stratosphere is as balmy as an isle in the South Seas?

16. He wrote, of course, before the recent consummation of treason in South Africa and the suicide of its infatuated and degenerate Aryan population.

between Hindus and Sikhs in India, between Cambodians and Vietnamese in Southeast Asia, and so on, around the globe. The busy boys of the C.I.A. know what they are doing.

The credulity with which he accepts blatant propaganda renders suspect Colonel Gritz's information and conclusions about some matters of importance, such as the African Plague.[17]

I have reluctantly pointed out the misconceptions and illusions that deface Colonel Gritz's book and detract from the cogency of his earnest effort to frustrate the death-wish that has been so deeply implanted in the hearts of American boobs. You may, however, profit from this illustration of the way in which incompatible and even antithetical principles and beliefs can somehow coëxist in a good and eminently practical mind.

The Candidate

I do not wish to discourage those who find amateur politics more entertaining than playing golf, tennis, or pinochle. It is a harmless game and may even do some good by making a few Americans perceive what the immediate future will probably bring upon them.

If you are tempted to play the game with any hope of winning, remember that:

1. Gritz, by the amazing naïveté and credulity I have partly sketched above, has shown that he is incompetent for any position of political power.

2. His incompetence really does not matter, for no man who is friendly to Americans will ever be permitted to attain any significant measure of political authority.

3. For a few more years, at least, the boobs will trot to polling places to cast meaningless ballots for either Tweedledum or Tweedledee, but you may be quite sure that no free election will ever again be held in the United States. I do not exclude the remote possibility that such elections may be held in North America at some time in a far distant future, although that seems extremely improbable. The concept of political power based on election, preferably by a sensibly restricted electorate, is indigenous to our race and so alien to all other races that their awkward simulations of our procedures will be abandoned the moment they cease to be useful for extracting concessions and subsidies from us. There are, furthermore, persuasive, though not quite conclusive, indications that the concept of elections is most firmly held by, if not restricted to, the Nordic segment of our race. At present, however, it seems that not only Americans but Aryans generally throughout the world (e.g., in South Africa) have lost the will to live and will become extinct, like all species of animals that have become biologically unfit to survive. It follows, therefore, that unless our race, and especially the Nordic part of it, by some now unforeseeable and miraculous change, recovers from the epidemic dementia that is destroying it and regains its pristine vigor in sufficient numbers to enable it to fight successfully its overwhelmingly numerous enemies, the territory that is now the United States will be occupied by a race to which the electoral concept is unintelligible and absurd.

If, knowing all this, you will enjoy promoting a candidate and will feel triumphant if he is allowed to receive 0.2% of the votes cast, you may as well work for Colonel Gritz. You could do much worse.

CUI BONO?

Americans who do not read German readily will be glad to know that the fine historical study by Ingrid Weckert, Feuerzeichen, die "Reichskristallnacht" (Tübingen, 1981), which was reviewed in Liberty Bell by Dr. Charles E. Weber, January 1989, pp. 15-20, and mentioned in the issue for April-May 1991, pp. 95-96, 104-105, has been translated into English and published by the Institute for Historical Review (1822½ Newport Boulevard, Costa Mesa, California, 92627; paperback, $17.55 postpaid.)

The learned author contents herself with presenting facts attested by the extant records concerning the incident that occurred in 1938. She does not draw conclusions from them, for that would have brought upon her and her publisher punishment from the Sheenies who own the government that American idiots impose on

17. He believes that the virus of "AIDS" was artificially created by the biological warfare division of the U.S. Army in collusion with the C.I.A., and wickedly tested by infecting noble niggers in Africa and nice perverts in the U.S. This is the contention of two writers whose books I intend to examine, together with several others, in a fairly long article on the lethal disease.

the hapless and long-suffering German people. (Why do you suppose that you are taxed to maintain an idle army, composed largely of niggers and females, in Germany?)

I have often remarked on the Jews' contempt for the stupid Aryan swine,[1] and the consequent carelessness with which they perpetrate their hoaxes, including their great Holohoax. There are some good examples of such nonchalance in this book.

When the Kikes forged a letter from Heydrich to Goering, gleefully attesting the destruction of 815 Jewish business establishments and the burning of 18 large department stores—secure in the confidence that Aryan boobs would not wonder how it happened that there were so many flourishing Jewish businesses in a country in which God's Race was so vilely persecuted—they forged the letter on a letterhead that had been obsolete for a year and a half, with a telephone number of a type that no longer existed, forged a signature in a form that Heydrich had never used and which Goering would have regarded as insolent, and got the address of Goering wrong! (Weckert, pp. 65-67.)

That was only typical of many clumsy Yiddish forgeries and faked evidence to support their yelping about the horrible night on which Germans broke the sacred glass windows of Jewish stores, including some of the large and prosperous department stores which, in Germany at that time, were almost all owned by Yahweh's godly parasites.

The Kristallnacht fitted perfectly into the Zionists' strenuous efforts to provoke the Germans into harming sacred Sheenies for the dual purpose of

(1) inciting a migration of Jews to Palestine in preparation for the mass invasion of Arab territory and the foundation of the bandit state called Israel; and

(2) creating a basis for propaganda in preparation for the attack on Germany that was to be launched by Roosevelt, Stalin, and their half-English stooge, Churchill.

The Zionists' scheme was described and documented with photographic excerpts from their own writings by a what is almost a prodigy in our time, an honest and honorable Jew,[2] the late J. G. Burg (Ginsburg) in his Schuld oder Schicksal? (Munich, 1962), of which, so far as I know, there is no English translation.

1. E.g., Liberty Bell, November 1985, pp. 17-19.

In the present book you now have in English a detailed description of one of the World Conquerors' numerous efforts to incite in Germany the "Holocaust" they had to invent after their victory over our race and civilization in 1945. And the fiction about the Kristallnacht, which they imposed on gullible Aryans by their ownership of politicians and the press, is itself a good and typical example of the forgeries and hoaxes by which the predatory race has flourished ever since it appeared in history, a misfortune to mankind.

Since the hullabaloo in the poison-pen press in the United States excited some indignation among American simpletons at the time, the Kristallnacht, by the way, points two neat lessons:

(1) If Americans did not suffer from their morbid itch to meddle in other people's business while neglecting their own, they would have responded to the accounts in the press, however exaggerated, with indifference, aware that what happened was none of their business, and that Germany had a right to manage her own affairs in her own interest.

(2) Everyone who had a modicum of common sense and was willing to exercise it must have seen at once that the doctrine of cui bono? was applicable, because the reported outbreaks had occurred simultaneously in many parts of Germany, and therefore could not have been spontaneous expressions of local indignation against the despoilers, such as account for most of the so-called 'pogroms' in Czarist Russia. The outbreaks must therefore have been ordered by either a government or a formidable conspiracy against that government.

2. Mr. Burg thought of himself as a Jew and obviously had a Jewish father. I do not know the race of his mother, and hence cannot tell you whether or not he was considered a real Jew according to that race's definition. He testified on behalf of Ernst Zündel in the recent trial in Canada, where Zündel is being persecuted by the Jews' Canadian varlets for expressing disbelief in Jewish hoaxes that are used to intimidate and swindle Aryans in Germany and throughout the world.

Since the small amount of damage and prompt governmental action to restore order prevented a substantial increase in the number of Jews persuaded to emigrate, the German government obviously derived no conceivable advantage from the window-breaking; it would have been ludicrous to imagine a conspiracy of glaziers; the incidents, therefore, were advantageous only to the race that was trying to excite animosity against a nation which was trying to recover full possession of its own country. Thus the double dative rule should have rendered further inquiry unnecessary, and a little rational thought in 1938 should have cautioned Americans to disregard thereafter all similar performances by the Masters of Deception. ❑

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. Here's How To Control People

The difference between true education and vocational training has been cleverly blurred.

Observations
by Charley Reese

Here are a few tips on how very smart people can control other people. If any of this rings a bell—well, then, wake up.

The first principle of people control is not to let them know you are controlling them. If people know, this knowledge will breed resentment and possibly rebellion, which would then require brute force and terror—an old-fashioned, expensive and not 100 percent certain method of control.

It is easier than you think to control people indirectly, to manipulate them into thinking what you want them to think and doing what you want them to do.

One basic technique is to keep them ignorant. Educated people are not as easy to manipulate. Abolishing public education or restricting access to education would be the direct approach. That would spill the beans. The indirect approach is to control the education they do receive.

It's possible in our time to be a Ph.D., a doctor, a lawyer, a businessman, a journalist, or an accountant, just to name a few examples, and at the same time be an uneducated person. The difference between true education and vocational training has been cleverly blurred in our time so that we have people successfully practicing their vocations while at the same time being totally ignorant of the larger issues of the world in which they live.

The most obvious symptom is their absence of original thought. Ask them a question and they will end up reciting what someone else thinks or thought the answer is or was. What do they think? Well, they never thought about it. Their education consisted of learning how to use the library and cite sources.

That greatly simplifies things for the controller because with lots of money, university endowments, foundations, grants and ownership of media, it's relatively easy to control who they will think of as authorities to cite in lieu of doing their own thinking.

Another technique is to keep them entertained. Roman emperors did not stage circuses and gladiator contests because they didn't have television. We have television because we don't have circuses and gladiator contests. Either way, the purpose is to keep the people's minds focused on entertainment, sports, and peripheral political issues. That way you won't have to worry that they will ever figure out the real issues that allow you to control them.

Just as a truly educated person is difficult to control, so too is an economically independent person. Therefore you want to create conditions that will produce people who work for wages, since wage earners have little control over their economic destiny. You'll also want to control the monetary, credit and banking system. This will allow you to inflate the currency and make it next to impossible for wage-earners to accumulate capital. You can also cause periodic deflations to collapse the small businesses, family farms and entrepreneurs, including independent community banks.

To keep trade unions under control, you just promote a scheme that allows you to shift production jobs out of the country and bring back the products as imports (it's called free trade). This way you'll end up with no unions or docile unions.

Another technique is to buy both political parties so that after awhile people will feel that no matter whether they vote for Candidate A or Candidate B, they will get the same policies. This will create great apathy and a belief that the political process is useless for effecting real change.

Pretty soon you will have a population that feels completely helpless, and thinks the bad things happening to them are nobody in particular's fault, just a result of global forces or evolution or some other disembodied abstract concept. If necessary, you can offer scapegoats.

Then you can bleed them dry without having to worry overly much that one of them will sneak into your house one night and cut your throat. If you do it right, they won't even know whose throat deserves cutting. ❑

by
Eric Thomson

I am a White Nationalist. As such, I believe that Our Race is Our Nation. The original, non-Zionist meaning of the word "Nation" meant a People. It had nothing to do with a particular geographical boundary. The Zionists, on the other hand, imposed upon most of us their definition of "Nation", which they define as a piece of land or a political state, no matter what race or races live within such often arbitrary lines on the map. Too many of us today are confused because we use the Zionist definition of "Nation", rather than the true biological meaning.

As a White Nationalist I seek no domination over other races. I am not a White Supremacist and we should not let the Zionists brand us as such. I want Our Race to be free to choose our form of government and our government's policies. I want self-government for Our Race in our own living space. The realization of the following 15 points would achieve for us these goals and would guarantee for us the continuity of White Civilization:

1. To provide White People with a political party which represents their interests as White People.
2. To rid ourselves of Zionist welfare state socialism.
3. To unify the White Tribes of the world.
4. To halt our racial retreat from victory.
5. To remove the alien exploiters and parasites from our midst.
6. To free ourselves from the irresponsible tyranny of organized crimes, bloated bureaucracy, big business, big labor, and secret societies.
7. To regain national control of our money from the Zionist bankers of the Federal Reserve.
8. To re-establish White Law and White Order in a White Society and thereby, to return Our Nation to the path of progress.
9. To rid our society of crime and degeneracy.
10. To create a White Society in which our racial virtues of honesty, integrity, and responsibility shall be promoted instead of punished.

11. To protect the family, which is the basis of our society and of Our Race.

12. To ensure that honest labor and not sterile speculation is rewarded.

13. To separate the Races into self-governing Nationstates.

14. To provide healthy and productive activities of which our youth can be proud.

15. To remove alien control from White Culture, which is the source of our spiritual nourishment, and from the professions on which we depend in our hour of need.

I think that our fellow White Nationalists would agree with these points and could probably come up with ones in addition which would also be desirable. But even if we all agree about the goals which we want Our Race to achieve, we must be careful and discriminating about the means we choose, otherwise we may needlessly suffer death or imprisonment at the hands of our Zionist oppressors, and no racial revolution will be won. This is the lesson which brave Aryan Warriors like Bob Mathews and members of The Order paid for, with their lives and their freedom, to teach us. We owe to them and to ourselves the respect of studying their example very carefully in order to make ourselves more effective and less vulnerable to enemy action, for White Nationhood can only be won through White Revolution.

Revolutions are going on all around us, for revolutions are nothing more than changes which alter the way we live. The automobile altered more drastically the way in which most people live today than have most changes of government. The use of electricity in this century changed our lives so much that hardly anyone anywhere can even think of doing without it. Some revolutions which have produced changes in government have been violent, but violence is not the sole producer of revolutions, as we have seen in the cases of automobiles and electricity.

Let's look at political revolutions, for that is what we, as White Nationalists, want in order to free ourselves from the Zionist Occupation Government. Don't be scared of the word "politics", for politics means nothing more nor less than "people-power". The rule taught to us by history is that politics is defensive. People form political groups when they have or believe that they have something worth protecting, something they don't want to lose. Unfortunately, most White people are not aware that they have everything to lose by going along as they are now and by not organizing themselves politically as White People.

Another rule of history is that revolutions are conservative. People have never fought very hard for something they have never had, but they will fight very hard to keep or to restore something they already had. Two recent examples of conservatism underlying revolutions are those of National Socialism and Communism or Bolshevism. What did the National Socialists promise the German people? Freedom, bread, work and honor! A government of the people, by the people and for the people! National Socialism did not come about in Germany without a long and hard fight, but it was not a military victory or coup d'état which brought National Socialism to power. It was a free election.

Russia is the other recent example, and a very bloody one, of revolution. World War I had brought the civilian population to the point of starvation. Millions of young men had been lost in a useless, unnecessary and disastrous war. The people were starving in the cities because many of them had been thrown off the land. So what did the Bolsheviks or Communists promise to get people on their side? They promised bread, land and peace! What did the Russian people have before the war? Bread, land and peace. We all know or should know what the Russian people really got by supporting the Communists. They got tyranny, terror and very little bread. That is why revolutionary change is occurring right now in the Soviet slave empire. The people still hunger for bread, land and peace. These privations they have suffered under almost 80 years of Judaeo-Communist misrule.

So there is our lesson: people don't become revolutionary just because they are 'fed-up'. They become ready for revolution when they are under-fed or when they are deprived en masse of some other key means of living. When such a situation exists, when the broad majority of people are affected by important changes, then objective conditions for revolution exist. The people are ripe for revolutionary leadership.

Any political system which cannot reward or punish people, because the people disdain its rewards and lose their fear of its punishments, is doomed to collapse. In Judaeo-Communist Hungary, 1956, the vast majority of the Hungarians felt themselves being squeezed into extinction by the ever-increasing privations inflicted on them by the Jewish dictatorship. There were no rewards, just the extension of bare, miserable, depressing existence, and for what? One day, many people gathered in the main square of Budapest, ostensibly in support of Polish people's grievances. When they saw how many they were, they became encouraged to protest on behalf of Hungary. The Zogdogs of the Hungarian secret police opened fire from their headquarters building. The crowd had what it needed: rage and a target. From thence the uprising grew until its final betrayal by the Jewnighted States of America, whose propaganda had incited such uprisings in Soviet satellite states since the beginning of the phony "Cold War". Naturally, the U.S.A. refused to help the Hungarians to throw off their Judaeo-Communist yoke and the U.S.A. even prevented Spain from flying in some anti-tank guns to stop the Soviet invaders. Needless to say, on that first day of the uprising, Zogdogs had to be very quick on their feet and good at disguising themselves, for it was open season on the Judaeo-Communist police. The Hungarian revolution failed, not only from betrayal by the U.S.A., but also from poor, unprepared leadership and lack of organization.

Certainly, objective conditions were present in Hungary in 1956, but what happens when a revolution is attempted without such objective conditions? Two examples are those of Leon Trotsky (Bronstein) and Ernesto "Che" Guevara. Both of these leaders attempted to change the popular will by military means, "the propaganda of the deed". Despite his having the entire Red Army under his ruthless command, Trotsky-Bronstein could not communize Western Europe. On the contrary, his military force was met by opposing nationalist military forces and stopped. Poles, Latvians, Lithuanians, Germans, Hungarians, Romanians, Czechs, Slovaks et al. were not willing to accept the "worker's paradise" promised by the Jew commissars of Bolshevism. In due course, Trotsky-Bronstein was replaced by "Stalin" (Djugashvili or "Son of a Jew" in the Georgian dialect). "Stalin" carried out the orders of his Jew-Bankster masters in New York by declaring "Socialism in one country" and by murdering Trotsky-Bronstein.

Ernesto "Che" Guevara thought he would rally all of Latin America to the Red flag of Judaeo-Communism, without consulting the people whom he was intending to "liberate". He thought that Latin America was a gigantic tinderbox which only required a "spark" of "armed struggle" to ignite into Red Revolution. Here and there, his armed band of foreign commies would attack an isolated military post or police station. Then they would race up and down the muddy village street in a captured government vehicle, shouting "¡Viva la revolución!" until some of the natives woke up. When the "revolutionaries" had departed, they went right back to sleep. At last, Guevara and his dwindling supporters were isolated and run to ground in the Bolivian jungles. Result? Guevara dead. No revolution. Why? No objective conditions.

As we saw in the examples of National Socialism and Communism, objective conditions for revolution can come about, but the question is, who shall take advantage of them and in what direction shall the revolution go?

If the lights went out, all over North America, we would be living in a revolutionary situation. No one would be able to carry on as before. Most work and transportation would shut down, as would most of our comforts and recreations. Try watching TV without electricity. Three of our most important necessities for living would be lacking or severely reduced: water, food and heat. Without electricity, water could not be pumped and even if the main pumping station could operate, high-rise buildings would lack water, because they rely upon electric pumps. Fresh foods would spoil without refrigeration and few oil or gas furnaces can be operated without electricity. Cars and trucks would run out of fuel because filling stations would have no electricity with which to run their pumps.

We see the results of even brief power outages in our cities: Looting and violence by non-Whites begin after a few minutes of general blackout. If the lights were to remain off for days or weeks, we would not recognize our cities.

Revolutionary conditions can be brought about, but certainly not in the way described in The Turner Diaries or Hunter nor in the way attempted by Bob Mathews. Or revolutionary conditions may come about all by themselves, like the AIDS Plague which threatens the lives of everyone.

. AIDS is a typical example of an objective condition for revolution. The masses of asses do not recognize it as such and those who do see that AIDS will radically alter the way we live want to postpone changing their ways as long as possible. This is the way many Russians behaved during the revolution which the Jewish Bolsheviks took over. These Russians "didn't want to know" about it. Many of them died horribly, without even resisting the Khazar killers. A few finally managed to escape to other countries, leaving most of their wealth behind to the Jew murderers. The tragedy of the so-called Russian Revolution was that there was no Russian leadership. The tragedy for White Revolution is that White people seem unprepared to heed the warnings of such leadership as now exists. Without White leaders and White followers, there can be no White Revolution and without a White Revolution, there can be no White Survival and no White Nationhood.

If the AIDS Plague and the non-White Plague continue in their virulence and the tyranny of the Z.O.G. becomes more demanding and less rewarding, White people may wake up in time to save themselves with revolutionary action under a White revolutionary leadership. The only question is, how hard and how often must White people be kicked in order to wake them and how many must die before they begin to lift even one finger in defense of their lives?

For White leaders, the question is: Will we take charge of our revolution the way the German people took charge of theirs in 1933 and 1989, or will we remain passive and disorganized, like the Russians in 1917, and let aliens wrest our revolution from us? Complaining about what we don't like is useless. Knowing what we want is not enough. Having the will to achieve it is what makes the difference. White Power! ❑

by

Dr. Jakob Klatzkin

writing in Krisis und Entscheidung

We are not hyphenated Jews; we are Jews with no qualifications or reservations. We are simply aliens; we are a foreign people in your midst, and we emphasize, we wish to stay that way. There is a wide gap between you and us, so wide that no bridge can be laid across.

Your spirit is alien to us; your myths, legends, habits, customs, traditions and national heritage, your religious and national shrines, your Sundays and holidays ... They are alien to us. The history of your triumphs and defeats, your war songs and battle hymns, your heroes and their mighty deeds, your national ambitions and aspirations, they are all alien to us.

The boundaries of your lands cannot restrict our movements, and your border clashes are not our concern. Far over and above the frontiers and boundaries of your land stands our Jewish unity ... Whosoever calls the foreign land a Fatherland is a traitor to the Jewish people ... Jewish heroes in foreign wars mean nothing to us. The Jewish people has no reason to decorate them with medals; they are not Jewish heroes ... A loyal Jew can never be other than a Jewish patriot. ... We recognize a national unity of Diaspora Jews, no matter in which land they may reside. Therefore, no boundaries can restrain us in pursuing our own Jewish policy ... The Jewish religion is rich in "hedges" which keeps our community intact from foreign influences ... In contrast to other religions, ours is not a collection of dogmas and tenets [Ideenlehre] but a Code of Laws [Gesetzeslehre], and thus by keeping and practicing these laws we have demonstrated our right of self-determination, that is, being governed by our own laws in everyday life.

We have lost our State, but not the Constitution; we have kept and preserved the latter one as a "portable State" which, in fact, enables us to enjoy a sort of national autonomy in the Diaspora ... The secret of a two thousand year old extra-territorial, Jewish reality is the secret of the Jewish religion ... It kept us bound to one another in unity, segregated just for ourselves; even in dispersion it kept us a nation with a nation: as a State within a State ... We were never just a religious community ... A strong wall, erected by ourselves, separated us from the host nation, and behind that wall there existed the Jewish State in miniature... ❑

GANGS BANGING

Following are excerpts from FAEM (First Amendment Exercise Machine), Robert Frens, Editor. For a sample copy and subscription information send $2.00 to P.O. Box 433, Buffalo NY 14223

One person rendered a kindness when he stated that the Junited States was a circus run from the monkey cage. Actually, it is an insane asylum run by criminals.

One of the never ending array of circus acts will be performed here in Buffalo on the 103rd anniversary of Adolf Hitler's birth. It will be a confrontation between one set of loonies called "Pro-Choicers" and another set of loonies called "Pro-Lifers". The prostitute media can be relied upon to properly "hype" this non-event into a spectacle which might rival the Super Bowl in craziness. One group merely wants to impose its will upon the other, and I feel that the community would be well served if both groups were allowed to physically annihilate each other, which is their real desire anyway. The verbal manure will be piled sky high and anyone who is not brain-dead really knows that no one ever convinces another of anything. The police will be caught in the middle, as usual, and will enforce whatever they are told to. It remains to be seen which batch of zoo heads will have the greater say. Through it all, we shall observe the flapping lips of some kosher script reader on our Big Brother cathode ray tube. TV journalists are people with vestigial brains. They input information through their eyes and output it through their mouths without the intermediate inconvenience of processing it all through their grey matter.

The Pro-Life (anti-abortion) crew will be lead by the same out-of-town jerk who instigated the commotion in Kansas City. This whacko claims that he talks to God and gets messages from the angel Gabriel. If this were a sane society, statements such as this might be an invitation for admittance to a funny farm. In third world America, criminals, disease carriers, morons and freaks instantly become national heros with bread and circuses as daily fare. Anyway, it appears that this team will picket abortion centers, scream all sorts of things, will shed a few tears, be clubbed a few times and probably be jailed for all of their trouble. They do, however, have truth on their side. Abortion is the killing of a living entity whether it is condoned or not.

The other team is the Pro-Choice (pro-abortion, pro-death) bunch. This group appears to contain large numbers of lesbians (who have a hard time getting pregnant in the first place) and others with a good case of the uglies (those who contemplating males would never impregnate anyway). They claim all sorts of "rights" and usually have a batch of jew lieyers telling them about the Constitution, a document noted for the lack of jew input. The battle cry concerns a phony "right" that a woman can do what she pleases with her body, a truly prostitute notion. Another argument assumes that the abortion bound twit will get one anyway and therefore it is better to have clean, legal clinics (soon to become AIDS infected) rather than a dirty gravy baster filled with Lysol. The premise is right out of a comic book and extends to other areas of social activity. All that children want to do is screw, so fit them up with condoms to make it safe. Therefore, since drug gulpers are going to bomb out anyway, why not supply them with FDA approved crack? The bottom line of their argument is that a woman can copulate with anyone or anything, anywhere, anytime and then run off to the erasing clinic when the result becomes inconvenient. It is the same mentality and arguments that the faggot rectum worshippers use. They bring AIDS upon themselves and then demand that the non-perverts in society do something about their deserved misfortune.

There has been only one creation of life which, in my opinion, was an embarrassment for God. He will probably not make that mistake again. Since then, life is only a continuation of life, a permutation, so to speak. Since the moment of conception, cells grow and divide and assemble themselves in the direction of a viable and mature entity. In the human, this process takes the better part of a year within the mother's uterus and twenty some years outside of the uterus. During the early period, the infant organism is dependent upon its mother for oxygen and food. Birth is the point when this organism, although a long way from complete development, must intake oxygen and food on its own. In a chicken, birth occurs when the egg cracks and not when it is deposited into a nest. Whether the period from fertilization to birth occurs entirely within the mother's body or not, it is immaterial. Anyone managing to stay awake during his biology class, can see interesting parallels between the seemingly different mammalian reproductive processes of the platypus (egg developing), opossums (pouch developing) and humans (uterus developing). Only the assholes in the Pro-Choice crowd would claim that an egg, or whatever, is part of the mother's body. A fertilized egg is an implant, period. The "choicers" simply want a license to kill that which is inconvenient. It's okay to kill a developing human when it is in the uterus but it is not okay to kill a developing human when it is not in the uterus. Idiotas!

I am not on either side although I often feel that abortion should be made retroactive and I have noticed that the Pro-Choicers obviously had Pro-Lifers for mothers. I will probably bet on the abortion favoring bunch. Most Americans seem to enjoy slaughter and applauded their leader when he ordered that recent zionist-directed genocide known as Desert Storm. Genocidal, pork-belly General Blackhead, a man with psychological problems, was elevated to hero class when he cried about not being allowed to kill more Iraqis.

The anticipated mess that we shall see in the streets of Buffalo is only the acne of a sick body. The sex fetish that pervades every aspect of our lives has its roots in the freaky blather of the jew Freud who maintained that sex was the alpha and kumquat of life. Cigar-munching Freud was a known cocaine user and liked to masturbate while dressed in his mother's clothes. Now that's a man you can trust. Then came hop-along Spock, another jew, who advised that children should be allowed to axe the antiques because to do otherwise would be harmful to their precious psyches. Thus, undisciplined brats grew into immature adults who became parents. Men no longer sought women who would be good mothers. They only wanted a good lay and someone who would relieve them of responsibility, like their mamas did. They encouraged their women to enter the job market (extra bucks to satisfy greed) and the women grabbed at the opportunity to avoid the world's most difficult and nation-sustaining task—raising healthy and normal children. Some women now seek to control the life or death of an inconvenient result of a convenient piece of ass while pussy-whipped men stand by and applaud or gawk.

I would favor abortion on demand only if it were accompanied by sterilization. Any woman who would voluntarily seek the termination of the blending of two lives, hers and her partner's, is a woman not worthy of being a mother in the first place. In fact, she would also make a lousy wife and fit only for some male geek who stretched his willie once too often. This type of female demonstrates contempt for her paramour, contempt for herself and contempt for her forebears. She, and all of those who agree with her, have reduced love and its intimate experience to a barnyard level. America doesn't need a revival. It needs a good bath in the liquid of your choice.

DOWN AND DOWN WE GO...

The Commissioner of Education, a jew named Sobol, here in Cuomo-land, has been running there and here burping about the latest plan to make silk purses out of sow's ears. Sobol's Deputy Commissioner has the name Sheldon and a libber named Diamond is the Assistant to the Commissioner. Nuff said. Anyone with the capacity for thought knows that all of the improvement plans of the past fifty years have come to naught. Man made rules, or prayers for that matter, will never alter what God has sealed into the genes of every living thing. This latest batch of hallucinations and directives is aimed at improving education results in the 1990's. Things will get worse, baby, and that's another "I told you so" prediction. Under the present type of leadership, the only way this country will be Numero Uno by the year 2000, is to give the Iraq treatment to everything else on the planet.

This new product of the condom heads is called "A New Compact for Learning", or "Compact" for those who cannot remember five sequential words. Typically, it has a lexicon of buzz-words which will not alter the smell of the manure. Samples are: Outcome-Based Education; Portfolio Assessment; Exit Outcomes; Commencement Outcomes; Stakeholders; Standards, Not Standardizations; etc., belch and burp. Also typical is the mass of bullshit one has to wade through in order to find the "meat". I can now understand why the first act following a successful revolution is a mass execution of all lawyers and PhD's. Anyway, the name Compact is appropriate. It conjures up an image of a device full of powder and rouge that is used to cover up blemishes and give color to that which is colorless. It is all paper hanging. Another kind is needed.

The first page of the packet I received contains a picture of a Ubangi peering into a Japanese made, Aryan invented microscope, obviously trying to find the beginning of the beginning. This is followed by a picture of a taco belle who belongs to a "thematic unit" which explores the folklore of the Frito Bandito. The anti-white bias of these several papers oozes out from every page. Honkies of the world...unite. You have nothing to lose but your scabs.

"All children can learn! If a child is not learning it is because he\she is not being taught in the way that he\she learns best." Wow! Hows 'bout dat fer a quote? Teachers must now spend time monkey prodding to see what turns the little apes on and then develop individual programs. Practically speaking, no teacher will ever be able to track students on an individual basis and achieve much of anything. It is pure idiocy and this will be another reason why intelligent people will avoid the "teechin' perfession" in the same way that intelligent people avoid AIDS carriers. This type of catering crap is not new and is certainly not the most destructive part of the Compact proposals. I will not attempt to analyze this latest piece of bagel dung nor point out all of its contradictions.

A "good" school is defined as one where the difference between low grades and high grades is small. If the rummies in school "A" score 52 while the brighter ones score 96, then it's a bad school. Too large a spread in grades, you know. Since we are all equal, then the education structure is at fault. The object of Compact is to take from those that have it and give it to those that don't have it. If you really thought communism was dead then you'd better think again. The same thing is happening to your money and your country.

One of the methods for grade leveling is the proposal of group testing. Rastus scored 19 on a recent physics test, which shows that he knows something about physics. Ursula scored a 97 on the same test which shows that there were things she didn't know about physics. Therefore, between the two, they probably know everything about physics. What is more sensible than to have them share in the whole thing? After all, we are all sisters and brothers in the Lord. So, Ursula the fair and Rastus the not fair will pool their efforts on tests and share the resultant score. Three cheers for democracy in action! If you are not a PhD you can well understand that Ursula will slack off since she knows she'll never get a 97 again in spite of the theory that superior folks naturally love parasites. On the other hand, Rastus will also slack off since he knows he'll always get better than a 19 from then on. Two slackers will get about as far as Jesse Owens would in a three-legged race when tied to a paraplegic.

Test sharing is not a new concept as I have used it in the classroom on several occasions. Often, due to economic and safety reasons, people may also have lab partners. Whenever I used the test sharing option, it was for the novelty and the students always enjoyed it. But, but and more but, the associations were always voluntary. Slugs would pair with slugs and the gems with the gems, all according to natural law. No one was penalized for being not-equal.

The commissars of education in this state have no intention of allowing voluntary associations in any endeavor. They despise freedom, oppose choice and once again, people will have about as much to say in education as they do in President choosing or how they want the country to be run. Only an idiot would fail to notice that these new proposals will trash what little is left of education in this land. Of course, there will be the numbers and papers that will "prove" that things are better, much in the same way that phoney laboratory test reports "proved" that the fin assemblies in the Boeing 707's were really super stuff. I was a quality control chemist for several years in the aircraft industry where greed doth make liars of us all. Paper arguments are made of paper.

The warpies and woofies who weave all of this claptrap are either in the third stage of syphilis or the first stage of AIDS. First they scream that test scores don't prove much of anything and then follow it all up with proposals based upon scores from the tests they wanted to abolish. (Where is the Queen of Hearts?) Tests are discriminatory by design. If they weren't, they'd be as useless as Commissioner Scbol.

Papers and meetings and meetings and papers. I endure it all hoping to discover an iota of the real world in it all. No luck so far, and if the American people ever stop lying to themselves and wake up, I'll be the first to offer tar, feathers and rope for sale and one-way tickets to the Promised Land.

Magic Joneston

Consecutively, two items spewed from the jew tube. The first was the horror announcement of a new AIDS victim every eight minutes. This was followed by a sneak preview of the current "hero". A hero, in contemporary America, is anyone dying from a funny disease or at least, is a former prison inmate. This sort of pulls the red carpet out from under Sergeant York, Audie Murphy, Colin Kelly and Roger Young (all nice young jewish lads). Honkies gotta go!

"Magic" has AIDS, can chase bouncing balls, will copulate with anything six degrees warmer than a cadaver and has an IQ of 142 (the sum of two separate tests). Magic has been elevated to hero first class and Prez Bush promptly gave him a hero's job as da spooksman fer da AIDS veras. Soon to follow, I suppose, is another PR moron to drag the protozoan Treponema Pallidum, an underprivileged member of the Spirochaetaceae family (that's syphilis, baby), into the spotlight. Now you know where some of your hard earned tax dollars go and if the Iraqi massacre didn't tell you something about George's peculiar brain, then perhaps this will. I'll get to the AIDS statistic shortly, but I cannot let the fornication notices pass without some comment.

It was mentioned that Magic, boasting of having thousands of sex partners, couldn't hold a candle (Freudian symbol) to the performance of another ball bouncer called Wilt Chamberlain. Undulating Wilt claimed that he scored about 20,000 points in the promiscuity marathons. At the rate of one a night (animal, male, female or mineral), that would take him about 55 years. I find this a little difficult to accept. This claim is on a par with those made by Mr. Friedman in one of the three score and ten thought-crime trials of Ernst Zündel of Canada. Mr. Friedman claimed that he could tell the nationality of an incinerated jew by the color of the flames belching from the chimneys of three score and ten Nazi "death camps". In both cases, we have to rely upon the intelligence and good will of the tale promoter. In trusting America, no one ever bothers to check much of anything anymore. All tales are equal.

Horror statistics must be viewed in perspective. It might seem doom impending to learn that every 8 minutes an AIDS victim goes blotto, but you should remain optimistic knowing that every time 1 AIDS carrier is rewarded nearly 1200 new bodies are dumped upon the planet. Those wee viruses just can't keep up with third world and minority copulation endeavors anymore than the masochistic western world can keep up with their hungry mouths. Make love, not food.

One might wonder where Magic and Wilt (and hundreds of others like them) find all of the "human" trash that is willing to share in their carnival of diseases. I will never understand why filth and ugliness are sexually attractive to many. If God loves America and America is a cesspool, then God loves cesspools.

Pass the Buchanan

The only thing this fellow will save is the status quo. Pat is measurably more honest than George Bushwhacker but is still allowed to write syndicated columns and have regular TV appearances. You should be smart enough to realize that Buchanan is spelled with a capital K. How long do you think he'd last, if he hadn't been given the Good Housekeeping kosher seal of approval? In addition, one of the heavies pushing his presidential campaign is a tribesman by the name of Loeb. Moreover, on a recent Larry King show, Pat bent over backwards explaining how many of his closest friends are Jews. Ain't we hoid all of dis stuff before? A word to the wise...

Yas suh. The Zionist party with two names is still alive and well. Democrats, you get bagels. Republicans, you get bagels. It took Roosevelt's revolution and sixty years to create the mess we're in. Cleaning up the cesspool won't be easy or swift. It will take struggle and sacrifice—two items that most Americans find offensive. As long as their noses are in the slop troughs, their eyes will never reach beyond the mud. Until the lights go on again, keep wishing, praying and believing that the Tooth Fairy will change your rotted molar into silver. Americans have an immense capacity to lie to themselves.

At the time of this writing, it appears that the power users are trying to keep David Duke off the ballot in New Hampshire. It's the same crap that was recently vomited by the millionaire sleeze Ross Perot on another Larry (ugly lecher) King Kosher show. Perot, full of free enterprise and Americanism, demands that people "like Duke" should not be allowed to run for political office. Perot, like the myriad piles of donkey dung that run this country, love a little amount of democracy but are not interested in people really having a total voice in their own affairs. In other words, there is such a thing as too much democracy.

While you are gnashing your teeth at my "un-Americanism", let your mind wander back to operation Desert Slaughter. What if this outlay of destructive technology were applied to the problem of the Mexican swarms that illegally breach our southern border? Aren't Mexicans and Iraqis equal? The fact is that other than a token gesture, the elected criminals who infest Tel Aviv on the Potomac have no intention of allowing America to remain in the hands of the progeny of those who founded it.

If you must vote, then flip the lever for the candidate who draws the most venom from a Koppel, a Rather, Jewsweek magazine, the Jew York Slimes or any script-reading CNN prostitute. Never, never vote for any incumbent. Remember, you always get the government you deserve.

UNITED PENGUIN FLYING FUND

Mad-bomber Bush has, with the help of the KK (korrupt kongress), launched his assault upon private high schools. While cuddling and coddling a pickaninny, he mumbled that your tax dollars will now be used to send the "poor" (spare me!) to those schools which require tuition and where the "education" is better. I am one of those "I told you so" types and my gem for today is "Kiss those schools goodbye."

Back in the dark ages, when I was in high school, the private high schools usually couldn't hold a candle to the academic performance of the government public schools. In our burg, the private schools were a Catholic operation and the nuns were so busy clubbing God's love into their subjects, that trivia such as mathematics and language never came up. Our town was enriched with only one black family and a tiny collection of God's chosen. On the southside dwelled the "wops 'n' p'locks", as they were affectionately known. The northside was primarily inhabited by the rich Anglos who owned everything from the mayor to the factories, and the poor "others" of which I was a member. The police force numbered about nine and, over the past four decades, increased in size to nearly sixty in spite of the fact that the population decreased in size. I have always noticed that when brotherly love increases so does the number of police and the size of the prisons. The only jew in my class was a fellow named Art who ended up being some kind of errand boy for Barry Goldwater, the 1964 presidential hopeful. Art was an object of wonder in the shower as he was the fellow with the funny mutilated schwanz. The only Neger was David who, other than being dark skinned, was easily recognized by the two cops who seemed to be forever chasing him. David, due to his natural superiority, always won those sprinting events. Academically, the Weisse were on top and, interestingly enough, the really superior students were from the poor white group.

Following the war that saved jew communism, jew capitalism and the filthy banking system, came the decade of the fifties which was to become the most fondly remembered joyful time in my life. I remain forever grateful that I lived through this period. Since then, I can only remember two brief moments of exuberance. The first was when I fell in love with Maxine and the other resulted from the news that a scud had landed in Tel Aviv.

The fifties are remembered today as the beginning of the end of effective education in this now rotting system. At gunpoint, schools were required to accept people living outside of their districts. It was, and still is, called desegregation and the net effect is the equality of trash schooling for everyone. Schools were transformed into day care centers and supervised holding centers. Solid geometry, an excellent mathematics course, was dropped from the curriculum because it was "elitist". In predominately black schools, perspective has been removed from art studies because it is a concept alien to the African mind. It goes on and on, and down and down. While at the checkout counter of the local sheenie super market, I said to the young lady who was busy punching keys, "It comes to $27.62." She stepped back in amazement and asked how I managed to have the correct total without the aid of a calculator. I replied, "When I was in the sixth grade, I learned how to add."

Race mixing was not to proceed at the snail's pace that led to the destruction of the old civilizations of Egypt, Rome or even of Portugal and Spain. The hated white societies took too long to degenerate on their own and besides, the Third Reich demonstrated that downward trends could be abruptly halted. Label white people who preferred to live and work with white people as "racists" and "haters". Then force them to associate with blacks under threat of imprisonment, or job loss, for violating the "law". Once they appeared to accept the black plague, it would be easy to swamp the country with wet-backs, dry-backs, half-backs, rice eaters, bean eaters, dog eaters, lepers and disease carriers of all types. When I offered this scenario in the 1950's, people smiled and wondered where I got all of my strange views. Perhaps they are still smiling. I stated in the early 80's that an assault on private schools was soon to come. It's here and I told you so.

Stud of the Union

King Bush's January 29 address was exactly what I expected to hear from a dink who was born rich and plans to stay that way. The poppycock parade began with the usual applause from a gang of thieves (mostly lieyers) who, periodically raid the treasury with impunity. The whole spiel was a cross between an oatmeal commercial ("It's the right thing to do.") and a pep rally (We's nummer one!) laced with Desert Slaughter platitudes. I almost hoped that he would hint that Nagasaki should be nuked again just to show those slants that we build better automobiles than they do.

The most unbearable portions of these jew TV circuses are those involving the prostitute script readers who "analyze" everything for the simple minded goyim. First, their lying lips tell you what you are going to hear; then you hear it; and finally they tell you what you've just heard. "Load a'mighty, Miss Scarlet, da hole c'untry be brain daid."

Believe whatever makes you feel great and perhaps wishing will make it so, but the problems of this land will not be solved by electing a different lying lawyer to Congress or a different greedy moneybags as chief honker or coming up with some new expensive proposal that will enrich the corrupt and screw the worker. We will simply not be Number One in education by the 2000 no matter what delusions King George has. We shall never achieve this position simply because the country is being filled with anthropoids who have never shown the slightest propensity for the technical aspects of human endeavor. Excuses and prayers will not alter the biological facts of inequality and tyrannical laws cannot change what God created. The American people have chosen to ignore natural law and now are starting to smell the stink of the cesspool that is steadily growing. Abetted by our enemies and poisoned by the opiate of our false religions, we have elected to trash the future and ennoble degeneracy.

General Rommel said that no one should criticize an operation unless he had three alternate proposals. I have been told that I mock and complain but never offer any solutions. That's generally true. America is not ready for hard solutions. It hasn't suffered or been degraded enough yet. The demise of this country might eventually be one of a gradual rotting, much like gangrene. I don't know and neither does Jack Van Impe. However, given the power, my first act would be to compel, under penalty of death, each and every member of Congress to perform some type of manual labor, for the benefit of the tax payers they shafted, for the rest of their natural lives. A new Congress would be elected in its entirety and lawyers would only be considered after a scrutinizing examination. Thomas Jefferson never wanted lawyers to sit in Congress, so my proposal is in harmony with the great men who founded this republic. No Harvard professor egghead would have a place in government unless he completed five years of manual labor. Moreover, all elected members of Congress would be paid only upon completion of their terms and in the amount determined by the voters according to the value of their service to the people. Expenses for political campaigns would come from a general public fund and the rules would prohibit any rich slob from having an advantage over a poor contender. The Zionist party with two names (Republican and Democrat) would be abolished and the people will choose directly who they shall vote for. No black man should have to choose some jew or anglo to represent him. No white man should have to choose between a mulatto or a slant. Thus, all people would be represented proportionally and all have an equal say in matters concerning their welfare. Welfare payments for blacks will come from black pockets. Welfare payments for whites will come from white pockets. No group should be parasitic upon another. All advances, whether in the work place or in education, shall be based entirely upon merit and the botched will receive consideration according to their usefulness (present and past) to society and not according to the Marxist concept of need. I propose democracy but friend, the ruling fat cats, whether communist or capitalist, ain't about to suddenly stop shearing their sheep.

America must suffer more and there is nothing quite as stimulating as a wholesale catastrophe to wake people from their fairy tale dreams. The older group of clods, of which I am a member, allowed this mess to begin and most of them will keep sucking on the tit of the system until they die. After all, why should they give a crap about the future since they no longer have one? The middle age group is too busy clawing for affluence and the opportunity to screw someone else's wife. They all want to be cuddled from cradle to grave like the Eloi in H. G. Wells' The Time Machine, with the Morlocs using them as the cattle they are. The hope lies in the restlessness of today's young. More and more, they are rejecting the filth of the present money system and in their souls, they feel the rot of this decaying society. I will have more to say about this in a later issue. In the meantime, young lads with a backbone, join the skins if you like but never, ever break the law. You are already hated because you cannot be corrupted. You are hated simply because of what you stand for. Remain proud and upright and don't give the enemy a chance to nail your hide to a wall. Remember....your day is coming.

Kosher Suds

In a recent issue of Remarks, a chunk of Bradley Smith's article on soap made from jews appeared. Why people insist upon wasting their time discussing these things is beyond me. They're busier than a cat trying to cover up crap on a concrete driveway.

The fat from a jew is very similar to the fat from a pig. To make soap from jew fat, you must first find a fat jew. In the Nazi concentration camps, fat jews were as scarce as truth is at a lawyers' convention. Where did all of the fat come from then? Secondly, during that period, all combatants placed a premium upon fat. The scarcity of butter was known by all of us who lived during that time and this was an additional reason why that laboratory glop known as margarine was sold to the gullible as "food". The reason fat was precious is because it is the source of glycerides, hence glycerine. A twiddle here and a twaddle there, then nitroglycerine, then dynamite, then all go bang. Our government wasn't interested in fighting a war with soap, but it used fats as a source of materials for the manufacture of explosives. So, no fat jews, no fat for anything and no mention of the glycerine aspects of fat manipulation.

One can make soap from human fat. First you'll need a cadaver with a fat something. Carve off the lard and run it through a meat grinder. Drop the suet into a large pot of moderately salted water and simmer for an hour or so. While still warm, strain the soup through a cheesecloth and allow the broth to stand in a cool place. The fat will remain on top and if it is cool enough, the solid fat can easily be separated by hand. Next, you'll need a 25 percent solution of lye (sodium hydroxide). You'll use, by volume, one part of the lye solution for every two and one half parts of fat. The lye solution should be near body temperature and is slowly poured into the fat which should have been warmed to about 120 degrees Fahrenheit. With continued stirring, the mess will become thicker and soon will be ready for pouring into a mold. The soap should be allowed to cure (complete reacting) for about two to three weeks before it is ready for use.

In our home, we did not use purchased lye. We saved all of the ashes from our wood stoves and tossed them into a drum containing water. From time to time, mother would scoop out some liquid and boil much of the water away. The "gravity" of the liquid was checked by observing whether an egg would float in it. The fat was left over bacon drippings. What a conservative way to do things. Grow vegetables and feed the left overs to the pigs. Kill the pigs and fry up the bacon. Use the left over fat and the ashes from the consumed wood to make soap. Take a bath and get some more vegetables.

Quickies

Deceitful PAT ROBERTSON blabbed about the government's Head Start program while showing a classroom filled with blonde haired tykes. The truth is that Head Start is for pickaninnies.

Armageddon prophet JACK VAN IMPE changed doom's year from 1996 to 2001, after consultation with a jew. Check Jack's investments and you'll discover that he really isn't counting upon his own predictions. On a recent program, his air-head wife Rexella said "A liter is three and one half quarts to a gallon." Pray and send money.

According to an alarmist news comment, AFRICAN BEES are more aggressive than European bees, produce far less honey and drive out the European bees. Good grief! Urban flight in bee-land. There was no mention of the productive capacity of Japanese bees.

On a recent Larry King show, NY Governor MARIO CUOMO stated that he is worried about anti-Semitic remarks that are made in the privacy of one's home. If that doesn't make you worry about Mario then you should know that he owns, and often wears, a jewish beanie (without the propeller).

You should listen very carefully to Mr. Cuomo. He is very, very, very slippery as in slippery, slippery and slippery. America was intended to be a mosaic of religions and ethnic groups, according to this lawyer turned governor. All are welcome to come and practice voodoo, goat sacrifice, urine sipping, penis mutilation or whatever type of hokum your religion requires to get you closer to the Big Guy in the sky. If doing your thing means eating the neighbor's dog or defecating in public, then so be it. After all, more cultural diversity is what we need. Mr. Cuomo believes that IQs can be raised and criminality erased by the application of dollars and more dollars. Anyone this dippy must have had his willie bobbed as a boy.

Mr. Cuomo is waiting for the American people to draft him for the presidency. He has the solution for our ills and is confident that the Democrat party of Zion will adopt his menu for their 92 platform. Go ahead. Draft him. I dare you. Then I'll have another "I told you so." ❑

Dear Mr. Dietz

I am writing to you about a Letter to the Editor from an Aryan ex-wife (Freya). I am Irish/American with blue eyes and red hair. I have been married for ten years and have three Aryan children.

First off, there is no reason for any Aryan woman to go outside of her race. This is a disgrace to her and all Aryan women. If the Aryan women don't wake up and realize that this Jewish equal rights crap promotes this kind of behavior, our race will soon die out. If Aryan women want respect and protection from their men, then women need to quit saying "I'm just as good or I can do better than men." In other words, learn your place and keep it, ladies! If women would do this and quit competing with their men, our Aryan youth would at least have a better chance in life than we did.

I see my husband as an Aryan warrior, as I do all the Aryan men who fight for our cause. If Aryan men are proud of their physique, so what? At least they achieve their goal through hard work and sweat. They don't go out and have breast implants, tummy tucks or lipo suction done so they can look lean and sexy like women do. If anybody has a narcissistic complex it's women, not men. Women should not put their men down for feeling good about themselves.

If women do not like to take ordsers from their husbands, then how do they feel about taking orders from their boss? Do women love their husbands or their bosses? Anyway, isn't "take the garbage out, honey" an order? Women need to quit putting all the blame on their men because things are not perfect. Women as well as men make mistakes. If we didn't we would have pretty boring lives.

Respectfully yours, Mrs. J.C.B., Florida

Dear George,

allow me to also comment on the letter written by "Freya," published in the March 1992 Liberty Bell, in which she chastized Aryan men. Donald Clerkin, the Chairman of the Euro-American Alliance gave "Freya" an excellent answer which you published in your April issue. There is nothing I have to add in this regard. However, being in a similar position as you are, I must tell you of my feeling that "Freya" wasn't all she claimed to be, when I read her letter for the first time. And, reading it again, I still stick by my assessment that "Freya" isn't Aryan at all. There are times when I get letters from alleged German-Americans (or Germans visiting the United States) which tell me how "ashamed" they are that I am so "hateful" of Jews, and that they will do their utmost to work against people like myself, etc. Rarely do I take such letters seriously. Just as I (more often than not) can tell a Jew or Jewess by their voices on the telephone, so I am able to see through Jewish machinations when they try to pull one over my ears when writing letters allegedly coming from a German. There are very fine nuances which provide the necessary clues. Whoever wrote the Freya letter merely wanted to tell us "Aryans" what a wonderful people the Jews are, and how we simply can never compete. And, if Freya by chance is real, then I say, "write her off," just as we have to write off millions of Germans in Germany who have been hopelessly brainwashed by our enemies. There are still enough Germanics/Nordics of excellent racial stock here and in Europe so that we can start rebuilding our Germanic nations again from scratch. "Wir sind immer noch die Besten."

Sincerely, Hans Schmidt
Chairman, GANPAC, Box 10600, Burke VA 22015

Dear George, 20 April 1992

I think this date is appropriate to send you some funds for the struggle as the war against European civilization continues.

One week I read that the South African Whites have decided to follow Rhodesia's example; the next week I see that "Zimbabwe" can no longer provide enough food to feed its starving people!

On April 5, "Sixty Minutes' " lead story spotlighted the D.E.A.'s "war-on-drugs" with an interview with one of their cops who stated that any citizen or resident with over One thousand dollars in cash on his person is liable to have his money "arrested" (confiscated) without any charges being brought against that person (with no arrest). The cop said the procedure had been found legal in the Supreme Court!

I have mentioned this to several Americans and have been shocked by their "Oh well, what can you do" attitude.

Neither Bush nor Clinton talk about free trade with Mexico and the 3rd World except superficially; Brown does but he would probably invite them all over the border. I don't hear much from Buchanan, and David Duke seems never to have existed!

Are Americans discussing these things in angry tones? Are they heating up the tar? Are they marching on the state capitals? No one I talk to has any interest whatsoever in anything except their usual routine which never includes national politics!

Either the world has gone crazy or I have. If only the Germans had won the war...

I was surprised to hear of your financial difficulties. Enclosed is an order for books, my renewal to Liberty Bell, and a donation for $100. I will try to order books more regularly and donate periodically throughout the year. Also I want to thank you for continuing my sub before receiving my payment.

Keep up the invaluable work!

Sincerely, M.B., Oregon

Dear George & Family,

I hope L.B. can survive somehow. It has been my adrenalin for years. I'd miss Professor Oliver and all the others who have helped my thinking and answered many questions I've always had. I was given the enclosed amount, so in turn I'll give it to you wherever you need it.

Sincerely, Mrs. G.Z., New Jersey

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

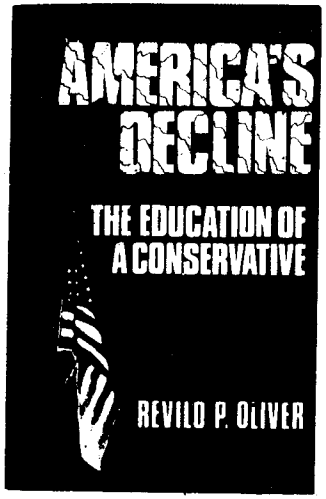
Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!



ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

EMINENT SHEENY

During the past two or three years, four or five of God's Select Darlings have perpetrated billion-dollar swindles so crude and gross that some judicial notice of them had to be taken. The financiers were usually given three or four months' retirement in a comfortable prison and fined forty or fifty million dollars. That amercement seemed huge to the commonalty and consoled the victims, but, considered on the scale of the loot that had been stashed away somewhere, reminded one of the once popular travesty of a mid-Victorian melodrama in which the villain, convicted of seduction of innocent village maidens and many other villainies, is told by the stern judge: "I fine you a dollar and a quarter."

When they emerge from their temporary retirement, the financial wizards generally devise new schemes to augment their billions in concealed savings accounts, confident that the general public will have forgotten their names.

An exception to this rule was a Sheeny whose financial juggling was successful so long as he lived, although after his death experts, gifted with hindsight, opined that a crash had been imminent. He was Abraham Lajbi, alias Ludvig Hoch, alias Leslie du Maurier, alias Robert Maxwell, born sixty-nine years ago in a small town of Carpathian Ruthenia on the border between Czecho-Slovakia and Romania. He became, if not a nine days' wonder, a celebrity for four or five.

His yacht—a real yacht, complete with a swimming pool and the many other amenities essential to the good life—was at sea near Tenerife, the largest of the Canary Islands, in the early morning of 5 November 1991. The captain was on the bridge, two sailors were standing watch, in the engine room far below two engineers tended the diesels; the rest of the crew were presumably asleep in their quarters on one of the lower decks. According to the official reconstruction of what happened, Abraham emerged, naked, from his stateroom, locked the door behind him, and walked down to a lower deck and to the one place on the vessel from which it was possible to fall into the sea.

There he had a heart attack, died, and fell—or fell and died before he could drown. Late that evening his body was found, naked and oddly floating on its back, and recovered by a helicopter.

Abraham was buried on the Mount of Olives, the holiest site in Israel, after a state funeral, attended by all of the mighty in the Holy Land, including the celebrated murderer, Shamir. In the bandit state of Israel, Abraham, alias Maxwell, was a national hero, described as a "colossus who bestrode the whole world." He was properly honored: had he not cozened and fleeced innumerable goyim? And furthermore, despite the Aryan names under which he chose to operate, and despite his furious rivalry with an even more colossal Sheeny, the one who dishonors Scotland by using the name Murdoch, Abraham was a loyal and typically bumptious member of his ubiquitous race. His parents, needless to say, had been exterminated by the awful Nazis, and he was forever bellyaching about the great "Holocaust," of which he was (of course!) a "survivor," and by which, he said, Hitler had tried to "wipe out" God's Chosen People. As we all know, Hitler notoriously failed to try, even in the comparatively small area of the globe under his control, and intelligent Europeans, increasingly impatient of their arrogant masters, are more and more coming to the conclusion that that was Hitler's great crime.

It seems that while Abraham violated the spirit and intent of innumerable laws, he did not technically break any. His operations appear to have been like the one in Judaized America at the turn of the century, described by an embarrassed accountant in one of Edith Wharton's stories: "It certainly wasn't honest, but then it wasn't illegal either; it was—well, it was just business."

If you have a morbid interest in the finagling, double-dealing, chicanery, cheating, cajolery, cunning, rascality, and abject villainy by which talented Sheenies and their pet dogs become colossi of international finance, bestriding the globe they loot, you will find them detailed in the 586 pages of Tom Bower's Maxwell, the Outsider (2d edition; London, Mandarin, 1991). And you may find some sardonic amusement in a description of the weird operations of modern banking and brokerage, more suited to a Witch's Sabbath than civilized nations, by which Abraham could juggle many corporations, none of which was ever solvent, and, although always actually bankrupt, become an immensely wealthy wizard of finance.

Although the subject of this biography tried by every legal and surreptitious means to prevent publication of the first edition of the book in 1988, Bower is relatively kind to Abraham/Maxwell, even suggesting that he did not know he was a crook, but without invoking the more plausible apology that the man was, of course, not dishonest according to the code of the Holy Talmud, of which he professed to have rabbinical knowledge.

Bower also kindly accepts the official, but inherently implausible, theory about the manner of Abraham's death. He mentions, but discounts, the report by Seymour Hirsch, supported by Ari ben-Menasche, that Abraham/Maxwell had been an agent of the Mossad, Israel's dread espionage, sabotage, and murder agency; had been involved in secret sales of armaments to Iran authorized by Shamir and George Bush, then Vice-President; and had betrayed to Mossad the honest Jew, Mordechai Vanunu, who had first supplied indisputable proof that the Sheenies in Israel, while yammering about "world peace" and the evils of atomic warfare, had secretly made themselves a world-power by equipping themselves with the latest and most formidable atomic weapons developed in the United States.[1] There is, of course, no proof of what happened on the

1. On Vanunu's disclosure of the fact that Israel was a great nuclear power, see Liberty Bell, December 1986, pp. 16-19, an article which may have been the first publication in the United States of facts that had for weeks been sensationally featured in the British press, but which newspapers in this country suppressed as long as they could, since they mistakenly feared lest the disclosure make American boobs think. It is true that the British story was picked up by the New York Post, but it was then suppressed before publication on orders from its owner, the Sheeny who calls himself Murdoch. The Jews preparations for atomic warfare were, of course, known to the C.I.A. and its director, our present War Lord, and, astonishingly, had also been discovered by Lyndon LaRouche's private intelligence service (see Liberty Bell, February 1992, pp. 12-13), but while Americans without access to secret information drew the natural inference from the "mysterious disappearance" from American stores of large quantities of materials needed for the manufacture of atomic weapons, they had no proof of their inferences before Vanunu's disclosures. There is reason to believe that the Sheenies in what should be called Kikistan now possess atomic weapons superior to any that the United States had on hand before Bushy's order to destroy what we had and thus make the country defenceless against the might of God's Holy Race in their Holy Land, the future capital of their One World.

luxurious yacht that night, but if Hirsch's disclosures were likely to make Abraham an embarrassment to his superiors in Mossad, they would not have had the slightest qualms about disposing of a faithful but no longer useful servant. Such scruples would be felt only by Aryans, a race Jews despise as childish and innately stupid.

I have chosen to review this book because it contains a few pages of which you should ponder the significance.

Abraham/Maxwell was uneducated and essentially uncivilized, but he had acquired many skills, not all of them criminal; for example, in addition to his native Yiddish, he could speak ten languages, all of them badly but sufficiently to make himself ungrammatically understood, perhaps with the aid of gestures. He shrewdly realized that this made him useful to the British who occupied Germany after the Jews' victory in 1945. That gave him his start, and he as shrewdly perceived an opportunity to exploit the inextricable tangle of vindictive regulations that the crazed victors imposed on the vanquished, e.g., the one that made it a criminal offense for a German to do business with an Austrian or even to recover the property he had owned in Austria when that country was politically, as it was always ethnically, a part of Germany. And that, in turn, gave the Sheeny the great opportunity he shrewdly seized and by which, despite "the British disdain for ruthless negotiations," he became a colossus of international finance. I quote from Mr. Bower's book:

"With the possible exception of radar, German scientists and engineers had outclassed their Allied competitors in the design of military hardware, from airframes, jets, and tanks to submarines, guns, and rockets. German superiority was reflected not only in the new weapons thrown against the Allies, but also in the revolutionary new chemicals, metals, fuels, and gases which German industry had invented. In the period between Montgomery's victory at Alamein and the invasion of France, an Anglo-American plan was conceived to plunder German science and industry."

On one aspect of this looting of the racially and intellectually superior nation, see the article by C. Lester Walker, reprinted in Liberty Bell, March 1992, pp. 22-32, with the appended comments by Hans Schmidt.[2]

Abraham/Maxwell shrewdly perceived that the patent fact of German superiority would create an almost insatiable demand, especially in Britain and the United States, for German scientific and technological publications. For the intrigues and tricks by which he acquired or extorted from the largest German publisher of scientific journals and books the exclusive right to sell in Britain and elsewhere the magazines and books the Germans themselves were forbidden to sell abroad, then acquired from the befuddled British the technically legal right to do it, and, with the subsidies clever Jews can always obtain from their fellow predators, made himself a colossus in the business of publishing, see Mr. Bower's book.

Our concern here is with the obvious proof of German superiority over the hate-crazed and barbarized nations the Sheenies used to defeat and plunder Germany.

You may estimate for yourself how long it will be before the American boobs realize that by destroying Hitler and the National Socialist régime in Germany, they destroyed their own future.

BUSHY'S WAR

There are indications that our War Lord is becoming restive. A whole year has elapsed since he smashed up a nation and caused the death of several hundred thousand human beings, and he shows signs of wanting to refresh the blood on his hands by sending his mongrel myrmidons with their irresistible weapons[1] on another spree of car-

2. Despite the Jews' janissaries' efforts to murder the best part of the surviving population of Germany after the war, and despite the Jews' extortion of enormous and crippling sums from the Germans by means of their now putrid Holohoax, the Germans have regained their superiority over the Judaized British. See, in the New Scientist (London), 21 March 1992, the long article entitled "British Innovation, German Style." The subtitle sufficiently adumbrates the argument: "The major political parties agree that Britain must make industrial capital out of academic ideas. All three are looking to Germany for inspiration."

1. Assuming we have been able to replace what was so lavishly and wastefully expended last year. The calculated destruction of the United States, in progress since 1945, has made our vaunted "high technology" dependent on the favor of the nations and countries that have not sabotaged their own industrial capacity. The Aerospace Education Foundation nage, while ordering his tax-paying animals to pay another hundred billion dollars for his pleasure. His current gabble suggests that the next victim of the high moral purposes which he is now advertising will be Lybia, now ruled by Qaddafi, a wicked heretic who denies the divinity of Sheenies, and who has just completed a grandiose feat of engineering to make part of the desert bloom and thus make his nation more than self-sufficient in food, to the detriment of international usurers.

A correspondent suggests shrewdly that the scenario for performances in Washington may call for Lord Bushy's high principles to boil over in the late summer with a sudden and treacherous attack on Lybia, so that he can be saluted as a Conquering Hero in time for the election in November. That depends, of course, on whether our real masters decide to reappoint Bushy as straw-boss of their Americans.

I have sufficiently accounted for Bushy's attack on Iraq in earlier issues of this periodical, but in October 1991, p. 9. n.1, I mentioned a book that was then in press, and indicated its probable contents on the basis of such information as was available to me when I wrote. Now (1501 Lee Highway, Arlington, Virginia; 22209) has just published a booklet, Lifeline Adrift: the Defense Industrial Base in the 1990s, which exhibits the rapid erosion of our ability to produce weapons. As one example, in 1972 there were ten American companies which manufactured militarily requisite electronic equipment, headed by Texas Instruments, which by 1987 was the only American survivor and almost at the bottom of the list, all other manufacturers being Japanese. Even such statistics usually fail to show the full extent of the Americans' loss of control of vital industries; for example, the Moore Tool Company, the only domestic manufacturer of materials needed for nuclear warfare, is counted as American, but it is now owned by Japanese. For a somewhat different example, note that the American manufacturer of devices essential for communication in the field could not have met the demand of the armed forces in the Persian Gulf, had a Japanese firm refused to supply the necessary batteries.

Well, Jackanapes Kennedy, when President, loudly proclaimed "interdependence" and was not impeached for high treason; instead, the boobs applauded the announced end of their independence. And, as everyone who can perceive the obvious knows, the United States must be made defenseless in preparation for Bushy's New World Ordure, in which all major weapons will be the exclusive possession of God's Children, who will, as predicted in "Bible Prophecy," rule their global plantation and herd its livestock from their capital in Jerusalem.

that the book has been published, I should remind readers that it is available and its contents correspond to that information.

Martin Yant was, until recently, a journalist and columnist on the staff of the Columbus [Ohio] Dispatch.[2] From information that was available in this country (if one knew where to look for it), he compiled Desert Mirage, the True Story of the Gulf War (Buffalo, New York; Prometheus Books, 1991; $19.95 + $3.00 postage).

This is a valuable book, since there still are many literate Americans who do not fully understand that any correspondence between what they are told by their rulers and truth is purely coincidental. Mr. Yant surveys the way in which Bushy trapped Saddam, who was so gullible that he believed an American diplomat, and describes in detail how our War Lord tried to make his wanton attack on Iraq seem respectable by forcing the dissemination of utterly mendacious reports about Saddam's power and purposes. As I remarked in an early article, Bushy's "only regard for his American subjects was shown by the routine use of the national lie machine to spray slime in their stupid faces." He didn't even have the vaudeville show called the United Nations entertain them with its usual song-and-dance act.

After the glorious victory of the United States and its hired allies over a small nation of 14,000,000 (18,000,000 minus domestic enemies) poor people, which was comparable to a victory by a team of tough professional athletes over boys from the sixth grade, the lie machine has been kept at work trying to make the vanquished victim seem to have been sufficiently formidable to make the Bushy's glory as a great Conqueror a little less obscene.

For the disgusting details, I refer you to Mr. Yant's book. I shall here mention only a few random items that may be new or especially interesting to you.

2. Mr. Yant's connection with the newspaper appears to have terminated about the time this book was published. I do not know why. The Dispatch attracted some unfavorable notice from intelligent Americans a few years ago, when it, obeying the journalistic rule that wowing the suckers is the best tonic for circulation, not only cynically exploited a patently fake outbreak of "psychokinesis" by a Poltergeist, but did all in its power to avert or impede exposure of the hoax, which was doubly childish, since it, like Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's famous fairies, was the work of an adolescent girl. See the article by the eminent James Randi in the Skeptical Inquirer, Spring 1985, pp. 221-235.

I note evidence that while the press is hopelessly corrupt, it is evidently not as corrupt as our masters wish, for newspaper reporters sent to the war zone were held in custody by the Army to prevent them from seeing or hearing something that Bushy's serfs should not be told. And even then, everything they wrote was subject to drastic censorship in the name of "national security." Bushy's janissaries saw to it that no report that was both true and significant got out of the "war zone."

The irrationality of Bushy's boobs constantly amazes sane men. There was one reporter, Peter Arnett,[3] who was stationed in Baghdad and accurately reported what he saw to the Cable Network News, which, in turn, broadcast many of his reports and pictures, including some that disclosed the facts of the bombing of the city by the Americans in keeping with their policy of Schrecklichkeit, of which they falsely accused the Germans in two wars.

Arnett reported the facts in vain. The boobs did not want to hear the truth. There is in Washington an outfit that is speciously called Accuracy in Media, solicits funds from conservatives, and is headed by a man named Reed Irvine, of whose genealogy I have no documentation. The conservatives' money was used to send out a hundred thousand official communications, urging everyone to write letters demanding that Arnett be silenced, because he was broadcasting "propaganda for Saddam Hussein...to undermine our morale." Irvine said the propaganda campaign by Accuracy [!] in Media was necessary because Arnett's broadcasts were "a betrayal of the troops" who were valiantly slaughtering defenceless Semites. And the boobs agreed. According to a columnist cited by Mr. Yant, a poll disclosed that 63% of Americans thought that the Army should destroy with its infallible bombs the hotel in Baghdad in which Peter Arnett was staying, doubtless at a time when they could be sure of killing him. And there are people who think chickens stupid!

It may be interesting that among the "Allies" Bushy forced his taxpaying animals to buy with multibillion dollar bribes was the dictator of Turkey, who was a man after Bushy's heart. He had just driven 50,000 Kurds'[4] who had always resided in territory that is now in Turkey, from their homes in three hundred villages, which were then burned to the ground. Bushy knew, of course, that this was not a violation of his much-touted "human rights," because, as is expressly stated in the Holy Talmud, only Sheenies are human. The Kurds, being, like the Americans, largely Aryan, are, of course, animals with no claim to consideration from anyone. With the exception of unwanted refugees in Iran, most of the Kurds will probably be exterminated by the Semitic Iraqis and the Turanian (Mongoloid) Turks later this year. Americans will have to await their turn, perhaps for a decade or more.

3. An honest man, but do not make him a hero: he has a Vietnamese wife.

Another of Bushy's hired pals is Hafez Assad, the dictator of Syria, who accepted five billion dollars and extensive commercial concessions and also used Bushy's war to invade and annex Lebanon, evidently by agreement with God's Chosen, who have been murderously invading and terrorizing Lebanon for a decade but evidently hesitated to annex it themselves at this time, as I expected them to do. For the nonce, God's People were content to gloat over the Syrian slaughter of Lebanese. Mr. Yant quotes the Prime Minister of Israel, the celebrated terrorist and murderer now known under his assumed named as Shamir, as having rapturously exclaimed, "We live in great days in Israel,...days in which air force jets strike and leave dead...the terrorists in Lebanon." So Lebanon has now ceased to exist and the Americans' aid to that hapless land has attained its goal.[5]

4. On the Kurds, see Liberty Bell, July 1991, pp. 3-12. The Reader's Digest for May 1992 contains an article on the present plight of the Kurds in Iraq. It is amusing to notice that the writer ventures to affirm that the Kurds "are not Arabs." He knows that they are not even Semites, but he also knows that the boobs must not be reminded that there are races other than God's Sheenies and the sacrosanct "minorities." As for the Kurds' not being Arabs, that is true of almost all the Semites in Iraq, few of whom can claim Arabian ancestors. If Saddam is entitled to the name he bears, Hussein, he is at least partly an Arab; that may bolster the prestige that has saved him from the usual fate of leaders of defeated nations.

5. An independent Lebanon, created in 1943, was from the first a racial and religious nightmare, but it somehow survived and even enjoyed a relative prosperity until the Communists and the Egyptians, in an ad hoc alliance, incited a revolt against the legally elected President, a man named Camille Chamoun, who was so gullible that he

It is quite possible the Jews are content to postpone grabbing Lebanon until after they have gobbled up Jordan, in which Bushy and his allies have now induced an almost catastrophic economic crisis. Watch what happens there.

Needless to say, the astonishing entente between Syria and the Jews is intended to last only until the latter are ready to stab the Syrians in the back and take Lebanon as part of "greater Israel." They can, of course, count on their American janissaries and tax-payers to do whatever they ordain, whether they appoint Bushy or another scoundrel to govern their North American colony this coming November. But you should watch relations between the Holy Land and Syria during the coming year or two. They will be interesting, as will be the story told the American boobs, when their War Lord treats Syria as he treated Iraq, which the American tax-payers subsidized so long as it was needed to carry on a war against Iran, but destroyed as soon as Bushy decided to cut the throat of his erstwhile friend, Saddam. Fools who become "allies" of the United States all suffer the same fate.

Whether the Arab-speaking nations will become restive and mutinous under the dominion of the Jews' American janissaries is uncertain, but some trouble is inevitable and perhaps Bushy or his successor will be able to enjoy a repetition of the "Gulf War," as it is now called. The mongrel who adorns the American Army as Chief of Staff to advertise the degradation of the American people issued a warning to the Semitic nations: "We have overwhelming power and have demonstrated a willingness to use it"—use it, that is, whenever a War Lord or his Yiddish masters tell their Aryan dogs to pay for another glorious butchery of an innocent people. Mr. Yant evidently expects more trouble in the Near and Middle East soon, and he is probably right.

He also notes that while the United States was hiring Islamic allies, it was paying a lavish added tribute to God's People to pay them trusted Americans and accepted their proffered aid. Our Marines marched in under the command of "our" State Department, overthrew Chamoun who barely escaped with his life, and installed his adversaries, the revolutionists, in power. That was in 1958, before the Kikes were ready to begin raids on Lebanon, which belongs to them because it was part of the Canaan they took from its inhabitants long ago—by conquest according to the story in the Jew-Book, but more probably by their usual techniques for destroying nations.

for forgoing the pleasure of killing Semites themselves. Mr. Yant's mention of the Holy Race shows considerable courage, but, needless to say, neither he nor his publisher were so imprudent as to incur reprisals for speaking candidly about the world's parasites. We cannot blame them.

The chief error in his book, in my opinion, is his talk about "democracy" in Kuwait or elsewhere. He seems not to know that democracy, whether the real thing or the ochlocratic corruption so dear to Americans, is foreign to the mentality of the Semitic race. A real or simulated democratic régime in Kuwait or Iraq or Syria or Saudi Arabia would be as unnatural as clothes on a chimpanzee. This is not an adverse criticism of Semites: it is simply a statement of historical and biological fact.

You will be glad to know that our heroic War Lord has been recompensed for his vast idealism. His war enormously enriched the Bush family's Zapata Offshore Oil Co.,[6] which is now drilling wells in the Persian Gulf off Kuwait (doubtless as payment for services rendered), while another Bush company obtained "the exclusive right to explore for, develop [sic] and produce petroleum throughout substantially all of Bahrain's offshore territory." And the United States has

6. I do not know why the Bush family's oil company was named in honor of a minor "hero" of the Mexican Revolution, a bandit, who, profiting from the virtual anarchy in Mexico after 1911, fomented by American do-gooders, made himself General Zapata and assembled an "army" of two or three hundred peones, mostly savages, who wanted to have fun with a gun. His most noteworthy exploit is worth mentioning here. As is now well-known, Woodrow "Wacky" Wilson, the Jews' well-trained poodle in the White House, operated behind the back of his State Department and secretly organized a corps of a dozen or more "special representatives," mostly sleazy missionaries and the like, to intrigue under his authority and stir up more trouble in Mexico. One of these was a H. L. Hall, an American who had resided for many years in Cuernavaca, where he peddled Jesus and milk from his dairy farm. Learning that Hall was an American agent, General Zapata kidnapped him and held him for a ransom of $20 (twenty dollars) in American money. Hall had so endeared himself to his well-bred neighbors in Cuernavaca that they refused to pay for his release, which was eventually effected by the Government of the United States. Zapata, an illiterate savage, was a thoroughgoing nihilist and hated White men: naturally, he was much admired by nitwits in the United States, who snivveled when he was treacherously assassinated by a fellow "liberator," the Carranza who was one of Wilson's favorite pets.

installed a major military base on Bahrain to protect the oil companies from foreign harassment—and from a change of mind in the governments that granted the monopolistic concessions. The first well was drilled in January 1992.

Incidentally, the accepted description of American military might and its efficiency requires some modification. So far as I can learn, our "high-technology" (with the exception of the "Patriot" anti-missile missiles) functioned well in service, and we can indeed guide bombs infallibly onto targets as, for example, when we accurately pinpointed and penetrated the air shelter that was crowded with Iraqis, whom we roasted alive. But most of our terrorist bombing of Iranian cities and towns was carried out with bombs dropped from airplanes as in the Jews' War, where our destruction of German cities and railroads attested a high degree of accuracy. Our airforce has evidently deteriorated enormously since that time, for, according to Mr. Yant, the Air Force had to admit that 70% (seventy percent) of such bombs had missed their targets. But then, of course, our planes were bombing miserable Semites, which is fun, but did not have the inspiration that evidently comes to Americans when they can slaughter their betters.

PROMPT CONFIRMATION

My article on Nigger Superiority in the May issue of Liberty Bell was in print before events in Los Angeles gave it an emphatic confirmation.

Consider what happened. If, let us say, an Italian had led the police on a breakneck chase at a hundred miles an hour, been stopped by a roadblock, and beaten while resisting arrest, there would have been no cameraman waiting, and the incident, if reported at all, would have been given five lines on an inner page of the local newspaper. The man arrested would have been only a White man and no one would have been interested.

The criminal who tried to escape belonged to the race which is recognized as superior because the White slaves have to work hard to support it, encourage its guinea-pig style breeding, and provide it with Cadillacs and other necessities of life. He was a black gorilla, so huge that his wrists were too big for handcuffs, and his hundred-mile an hour attempt to escape was halted by a roadblock that was set by directions over short-wave radio that anyone could hear. The cameraman was waiting, shot his 'footage,' and the poison-pen press and our enemies' boob-tubes made the incident a national agitation, at the time and for a year thereafter while the courts were troubled with litigation about the incident.

The mayor of the rotting city—a nigger!—was given what he had long sought, a pretext to force from office the chief of police in Los Angeles, whose department was one of the most efficient and relatively honest in the United States, and to replace him with a nigger, who, you may be sure, will teach his White subordinates not to interfere with savages exercising their Civil Right to hunt White rabbits. The policemen who had done their duty were persecuted in the courts and finally acquitted by a jury of White Americans, so bigoted that they did not know that the savage pets of the Master Race can do no wrong.

The incident has not been fully explained. It is possible, of course, that the gorilla, a former convict with a criminal record, was trying to escape from some exercise of his Civil Rights, such as robbing a store or raping a White bitch, but we must suspect that on this occasion he had not committed a crime, but instead performed for the waiting cameraman, and then collected his fee.

The acquittal of the persecuted policemen is said to have set the niggers to looting and destroying property, not only in Los Angeles but in dirty cities throughout the country. As exploited by our domestic enemies, it doubtless did provide an occasion for outbreaks by the savages, just as a failure of electric power in the center of New York City did some years ago. Niggers naturally loot and destroy when they see a good opportunity or have a suitable pretext for tribal festivities. It was not at all remarkable that in Los Angeles big niggers drove up in the Cadillacs they had been given, directly or indirectly, by White idiots, and looted stores right in front of cameras. Their contempt for the tax-paying animals that work for them is almost infinite and certainly justified.

The only aspect of the affair in Los Angeles that was not commonplace was the fact that the significant word 'revolution' was used for the first time, so far as I know.

According to the statistics available to me as I write, the festivities in Los Angeles produced 58 corpses, 158 persons critically injured and perhaps maimed, and 2000+ injured but not fatally. The statistics do not show how many of these casualties were really regrettable, i.e., of White Americans, possibly including even White men who were fit to survive.

The full extent of the "demonstrations" will never be stated in a comprehensive report. In the larger cities, the true extent of the outbreak was reported only locally and probably minimized at that. In smaller cities that have, as yet, only relatively small contingents of the superior race, White men had long since learned not to go out alone late at night and had taken to going in pairs. So the resourceful savages formed gangs of six to ten and when they caught two or three men alone, joyously clubbed them to insensibility and left lying in pools of their own blood. The local liepaper reported, often days later, that the victims were in the hospital after an "altercation" with unidentified "youths," or, if the color of the assailants had to be admitted, assured their stupid readers that the incident "had no racial overtones."

In one town, at least, a White man was found with his skull crushed with a baseball bat or similar weapon, and the local police, frightened lest they be treated as were the Los Angeles police, professed to be mystified and even suggested that the victim might have committed suicide by crawling into some machine that crushed his skull.

In some cities, trembling judges or juries hastily acquitted niggers on trial for various crimes so that the savages would not devastate their defenseless cities. In those cities it will henceforth be a waste of time to try to arrest and try niggers for their crimes. The precedent has been established and the savages will not forget it.

In one city, a playful nigger had just been convicted of murdering three employees of stores that he robbed, but, when I last heard, the pavid judge was putting off pronouncing sentence, lest the local niggers resent infringement of their right to prey on the race that enslaved itself for their benefit.

In many slums that once were universities, the gangs of niggers roamed the campus, intimidating White people, threatening to burn down buildings, or occupying administrative offices, and demanding whatever "rights" took their fancy of the moment. Some of the responsible administrators claimed to be feeble-minded—that, at least, is the only possible interpretation of their plea that they were surprised by the conduct of the niggers they had imported to take the place of White students and had coddled with lavish "scholarships" and special privileges at the expense of the taxpaying-animals or the fools who devise by will large bequests to what was a university in their youth.

In southern California after the jury's verdict, the thugs of journalism published the names and addresses of the offending jurors in the hope they would be murdered or, at least, driven from burning homes.

Throughout the country the holy men started yapping in a deafening chorus, like a pack of fox terriers in a large kennel, denouncing the jurors who had dared to consider the evidence before them, about which the dervishes knew nothing. Of course, as we all know, the dervishes yapp at every opportunity to advertise their righteousness, and never need to know relevant facts, since they are professional vendors of a delusive superstition. But in this case they were using a poisonous superstition which, at best, denied the facts of race, and, since the Marxian Reformation, became a calculated offensive against our race and the civilization it created.

The slime machine went into action throughout the nation, displaying, as it had done continually throughout the past year, a carefully edited excerpt from the film and yelling about Civil Rites of obeisance to the superior race. And White half-wits, who knew nothing of the evidence the jury had heard, promptly declared that the jury had sinned—obviously because it had not recognized the vast superiority of the race for which the idiots work.

Most ominous of all, our War Lord, whose sense of power over his serfs has become megalomania, and who had illegally meddled with an election in Louisiana some months ago, let out a yell and rushed from his lair in Washington to Los Angeles to strut, orate, and proclaim the end of law in the United States. Having recently commanded his vast herd of tax-paying sheep to pay seventy or a hundred billion dollars for his fun in Iraq, he naturally looked for pretexts to impose another heavy burden on the dumb brutes for "welfare" to subsidize more abundantly the niggers in Los Angeles and ensure bigger and better riots in the near future.

The Most Puissant Lord Bushy, Viceroy of the Jews' New World Ordure, not content with ordering the hundred million tax-payers he owns to pay for fresh incentives to further outbreaks of savagery in Los Angeles, proclaimed that the four policemen were guilty of displeasing him and would be tried in his Federal courts and (of course) condignly punished. Although he mouthed some pseudo-legal claptrap, what our Lord did was abolish the provision against double jeopardy, one of the bits of Anglo-Saxon law that the Warren Gang and its successors had not yet canceled.

What our Sovereign Lord intends to do and probably will do is so to terrorize police departments throughout the country that they will never again dare to arrest niggers or interfere with them when they are having fun robbing, raping, and killing White boobs.

Obvious Lessons

The incidents in Los Angeles have proved three things. The least and most obvious one is that the savages are, de facto (as diplomats say) racially superior to the White slaves who work for them and who are even so humble and degraded that they do so without objection. The degenerate Whites, furthermore, frankly acknowledge their racial inferiority by electing or tolerating nigger mayors, nigger legislators and Congressmen, nigger governors, nigger judges, and nigger commanders of the armed forces.

The second lesson is that our enemies' plans for the final enslavement and extermination of Aryans in the United States have not changed. For decades it has required no wit to see that, as I have often pointed out in these pages, the intensive and highly successful campaign in the boob-hatcheries, the Jesus shops, the press, and the boob-tubes to make Aryans feel guilty for existing, presupposed plans for an eventual insurrection by the niggers and a consequent race war in which we would be decisively defeated.

Whether the pursuit and arrest of the nigger criminal in Los Angeles was carefully planned in advance or, as is hardly likely, was an unscheduled incident, it was immediately and intensively used by the electronic sewers that most Americans maintain in their living rooms to deliver the Jewish sewage the thoughtless and uncomprehending boobs eagerly lap up. That outpouring of excrement to incite in Whites hatred of their own race and to simulate the niggers' innate hatred of it was obviously planned in preparation for the outbreak in Los Angeles that took place a year or more after the arrest. It was doubtless planned with the foreknowledge that no honest jury could do other than acquit the four policemen who were being persecuted for having done their duty.

As I noted above, in Los Angeles, where the niggers had such fun in hauling Aryans from their automobiles and killing or maiming them, the word 'revolution' was openly mentioned for the first time. If you wish, you may classify that event as the first preliminary opening of guerrilla warfare that will be conducted intermittently but on a progressively increasing scale henceforth. Most of the victims, needless to say, have been made so imbecile by their schools and churches that they will not have the slightest comprehension that what happens to them is what they themselves ordained.

The most important lesson, for those who have wit enough to learn it, is that niggers are by nature savages, and that nature cannot be changed by window-dressing or persiflage. No one doubts the unalterability of inherent instincts in other animals. Chimpanzees, for example, may be taught to wear clothing, understand commands, ride bicycles, smoke cigarettes, and even to act as nursemaids to children (if well paid for their services in bananas). They recognize that they must be obedient to their masters, but everyone knows that if bands of chimpanzees were free from control, they would behave with the ferocity you may have glimpsed for a moment or two if you watched the National Geographic's video-tape about them, filmed by Jane Goodall.[1]

The simple fact is that all pure-blooded Congoids and most other niggers are innately savages and can never be anything else. First-generation mulattos, the result of miscegenation, a crime that would be stringently prohibited if tender-hearted humanitarians had any sense of pity, are almost invariably savages,[2] but may inherit some White instincts and thus be condemned to suffer an incurable schizophrenia throughout their wretched lives. In quadroons occasionally and octoroons frequently the White elements may dominate and produce individuals capable of civilization instead of mimicking it when expedient. A few, indeed, are highly intelligent, as witness Lawrence Dennis, who was one of the victims of Franklin Roosevelt's premature attempt to begin ruling by terror in imitation of his model, Lenin, and his fellow conspirator, Stalin. A rational and compassionate American, however, would have thought it pathetic that so intelligent and courageous a man as Dennis had to be almost childishly proud that he could entertain acquaintances in the Harvard Club, aware, of course, of the indelible genetic blot on his being.

1. Note also, a little later on the film, the behavior of the chimpanzees' loose-limbed cousins in the clothes that meddling missionaries forced on them and that they are now accustomed to wear as status-symbols.

2. There is evidence that in such combinations, Nordic and perhaps all White genes are recessive (cf. Richard McCulloch's Destiny of Angels, which is concerned chiefly with physical beauty), but the facts will never be ascertained with certainty so long as God's Race enforces its prohibition of racial research.

With the stated exceptions, niggers are savages and you should understand that you can never understand them, except as you understand cheetahs or cuttlefish, by observing their behavior. All missionaries and other gospel-venders pretend, and simple-minded ones actually believe, that niggers can be transformed by dousing them in holy water and giving them sips of Jesus-juice, but that is sheer nonsense, as Noël Hunt, who spent many years observing Bantu both in their native habitat and in South Africa, pointed out in the article quoted at some length in Liberty Bell, May 1986, pp. 9-16. The Christianity the savages may mimic to obtain favors from White men is merely a superficial simulation to conceal their real beliefs, which are grotesque but innate superstitions, unchanged from their days in the jungle.

You must, above all, avoid deluding yourself by imagining some analogy between the consciousness of a nigger and your own. As Noël Hunt puts it succinctly, "A white man can no more think like a black than he can think like a bee."

Like all anthropoids, the savages can be taught patterns of behavior by persons who have authority over them, and, since they are capable of speech, they are more adaptable than chimpanzees. They can be taught to speak a recognizable English, wear currently fashionable clothes, drive automobiles, and perform almost any simple act that will win them a reward—even one that is deferred for some little time—and to avoid performing acts that will certainly be punished, sooner or later. (This is a marked difference from, e.g., dogs, who, as you know, must be rewarded or punished at the time of the act, for there is no way of communicating to them the meaning of a deferred reward or punishment. The same is true of chimpanzees.) Under competent supervision, niggers can perform useful work, and many can be taught to perform tasks that require some continuous attention and a fairly high degree of skill. Many, like all domesticated animals (especially dogs and horses), can become attached to their masters and take pride in serving them. And our enemies can teach them to yell for unearned rewards and privileges that White nitwits think themselves obliged to bestow on what they imagine the savages to be. And it is likely that, as has been verified by observation of American Indians, the Congoids' nervous systems perceive pain and pleasure in ways that differ greatly from the comparable reactions of Aryans.

Savages are incapable of civilization, for the same reason that tigers are incapable of becoming vegetarians. Savages, however, being innately treacherous, have a well developed capacity for simulation when it is to their advantage to employ it. Some anthropologists believe that the savages could, if left alone, evolve biologically and become capable of founding or inwardly appreciating a civilization in ten thousand years or so. Under coercion, they might develop a sense of civilization more quickly, perhaps in two or three thousand years.

If our race finds it profitable or otherwise worthwhile to impose a measure of civilization on savages, it can bestow on them great benefits, according to our scale of values. But you must always remember what Dr. Albert Schweitzer, who was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1952 for his efforts to improve conditions in Africa, learned by bitter experience and stated clearly in a memorable passage of which an American newspaper, if we had any instead of the Jews' liepapers, would continually remind its readers:

> I have given my life to try to alleviate suffering among Africans. There is something that white men who have lived there, as I have, must have learned and know: that those people are a sub-race.[3]
> They have neither the intellectual and mental nor the emotional abilities to equate themselves or share equally with white men in any of the functions of our civilization.
> I have given my life to try to bring to them the advantages which our civilization must offer, but I have become well aware that we must preserve

3. He means an inferior race, not a 'sub-race' in the sense in which that word is used in biological taxonomy. I have corrected the tense of 'learned' and the syntax of 'have,' and other errors that were probably made in translation from the French. I also correct the English, without in any way altering the meaning, in several places in what follows.

our status: whites are the superior, and they the inferior race. For whenever a white man seeks to live among them as their equal, they will destroy him and all his work.

And so for any lasting relationship or any benefit to this people, let white men from anywhere in the world who would come to help Africans remember that they must continually maintain this status: you are the master and they the inferiors, like children that you would help or teach.

Never fraternize with them or accept them as your social equals, or they will devour you, they will destroy you.

The indisputable facts that Dr. Schweitzer courageously stated, sacrificing the favor he had enjoyed from our enemies and their dupes, were, of course, known to the World Destroyers when they began their gradual and cleverly accelerated work to stir up the savages by telling them they had "rights" they must assert, while at the same time paralysing the minds of the American boobs by convincing them they had a Christian duty to deny themselves something they wanted in order to subsidize and pamper the "underprivileged" savages. In a nation that was already suffering from the egalitarian psychosis and had given the savages the "right" to vote, the work of calculated subversion was easily carried out and not even noticed by the boobs who are to be herded to extinction.

The facts about savagery are also known to the infamous hirelings who do the Yids' work in the press and over the device that is properly called the electronic Jew in your living room. But they are paid for their treason to their own race and, if they have vestigial consciences, doubtless comfort themselves by not thinking about the consequences.

The situation, soon to become desperate, in the United States differs from that prevalent elsewhere only because there are so many mulattos among the savages. The percentage of White blood among niggers in the United States has been estimated as 40%, but there are no valid statistics. This consequence of miscegenation is only partly the result of the inexpiable crime that the boobs have been taught to call a Civil War. The deadly process began in the barracoons. It may have been initiated by the merchants, chiefly Arabs, who purchased slaves from their relatives or captors (thus often saving their lives) and sold them to trading posts, operated chiefly by Portuguese (some of them already mongrelized) and Spaniards, located on the estuaries of the major rivers of Africa, whence they were shipped to associated traders in the Western Hemisphere, on ships commonly owned by Jews but usually with White captains and officers. The capitalists who controlled the business and reaped the largest share of the profits were mostly Jews, who operated from their luxurious offices and did none of the dirty work, but some inferior members of the international tribe took part in the actual work of purchase, transport, and marketing. They have left even linguistic traces of their activity.[4]

In the South before the Northern invasion, there were male slaves who had a perceptible moustache or beard, a clear indication that their Congoid blood had been diluted with White (Semitic or Aryan) genes, and as everyone knows, 'high yellow girls,' attractive female quadroons or octoroons, commanded fantastically high prices. The emancipation of the niggers merely continued, and perhaps accelerated, a mongrelization that was already well under way in this country. So long as the hybrids remained slaves, the potentially disastrous consequences of miscegenation could be overlooked, and after their emancipation our people's obtuseness to racial realities was fostered by a hallucinogenic religion that is a denial of reality and a violation of Nature.

Even if the estimate of 40% of White blood in the nigger population as a whole is an exaggeration, it is indubitable that we are afflicted with a large number of mulattos, most of whom are mentally superior to pure Congoids and naturally become their leaders, and some of whom have the ability to become agitators on a large scale, adding to concealed but innate savagery a bitter and largely justified hatred of the once dominant race that fecklessly created them and condemned them to life in a kind of interracial limbo, since they spiritually belong to neither race and may be intelligent enough to be aware of a consequent schizophrenia. It is the mulattos who direct against our once proud and now debased and enslaved race the savages, who, if left to themselves, would direct their destructive and homicidal urges against their fellows, the most available objects. In South Africa thus far the festive niggers have, almost without exception, killed with horrible torture other niggers, although, of course, our do-gooders can with assurance look forward to better things in the future of that hapless country, where a majority of the White population, led by foul traitors, has elected to go the way of Rhodesia.

4. Linguists who have studied the dialects of the niggers in Jamaica affirm that they find clear evidence of the derivation of some words and terms from Hebrew. That is puzzling. The Jews of the time did not use Hebrew, a dead language which few of them knew, and while Hebrew words entered the Jews' dialects of Aramaic and so may have survived in Ladino or Yiddish, I do not myself see how such elements can be securely distinguished from derivatives that are merely Semitic.

In the ruins of Rhodesia, now a fetid jungle called Zimbabwe, the niggers, having now deprived of their property the Whites who foolishly remained in the territory after the Americans and British, with the aid of South African traitors,[5] degraded their race and destroyed civilization in that hapless land, are now supreme and unfettered by civilization, except as necessary to ensure the profits of the Sheenies who exploit it. The photograph herewith, reproduced from the Chicago Tribune, 7 May, shows a passel of savages in a nigger "university" behaving normally after they have beaten the riot squads of nigger police sent to control them and seized the black constabulary's equipment. The "political and economic issues" mentioned in the caption under the picture may have served as a pretext, but any other pretext would have done as well, and no pretext was really needed. In the picture you can contemplate typical niggers behaving naturally, as naturally, for example, as chimpanzees climb trees and swing from branches. You can also contemplate in the picture a preview of what is now the Manifest Destiny that Americans have chosen for themselves and the country that once was theirs.

Campus unrest in Zimbabwe

Showing off captured riot police equipment, protesters at the University of Zimbabwe in Harare rally Wednesday. Unrest was spurred by anger over political and economic issues.

5. The extent to which the traitors who governed South Africa actually forced the collapse of civilization in Rhodesia is the subject of a little article I hope to complete and publish someday.

The outbreak in Los Angeles, the first, I believe, in which the word 'revolution' was a slogan, was an improvement on the many outbreaks that preceded it, and, needless to say, would not have occurred, had the Americans had sense enough to send into Watts in 1965 a regiment of the National Guard with instructions to shoot looters and rioters on sight—and shoot to kill. But evidently the boobs, to judge by their conduct, wanted more and better outbreaks and accordingly got them.

The incidents in Los Angeles will, of course, be repeated frequently, greatly improved and on a continually enhanced scale in the near future. Eventually, even the boobs in Dubuque, who were too backward to enjoy an echo of the recent festivities in their own city, will share in this country's progress toward the ideal status of what was Rhodesia and the Congo. It seems at present that the epidemic of Immune Deficiency is producing its effects too slowly to save either South Africa or the United States as a habitat for civilized peoples.

The massive deluge of sludge that gushed from the boob-tubes will probably prevent any considerable perception of the lesson that should have been taught by the events in and near Los Angeles. It now seems certain that the average Aryan boob, no longer capable of reading coherent discourse, has a consciousness, politely called a mind, that has been made permanently incapable of learning anything. But there is still a minority of literates, and one wonders what they will do. They fall into two distinct groups, between which communication is difficult, often impossible. You must belong to one or the other.

If you want to drug yourself with hashish, heroin, or Christianity to avoid seeing the real world in which you must live and die, that, like suicide, is your privilege, but please retain sufficient decency to refrain from imposing your hallucinations on sober men. And if you are capable of pity, refrain from engendering children whom your drugs will not save from the coming consequences of your moral cowardice.

If you are willing to think rationally about your plight in a crazed nation, remember the unalterable facts of life: dogs are dogs, elephants are elephants, and savages are savages. You cannot make an elephant out of a dog, or a civilized man out of a nigger.

Seventy years ago, when many American children were still given some education, any schoolboy and many schoolgirls would have cited the Horatian aphorism: Naturam expellas furco, tamen usque recurret: though you drive out Nature with a pitchfork, she will incessantly return. In this unlettered generation, you may quote the late Professor Feynman, who warned you at the time that the Space Agency's multiracial show boat blew up, "Nature cannot be fooled." ❑

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. The Awesome, Destructive Power of Television in the United States

By

Dr. Charles E. Weber

To understand the deportment of American television and the objectives of that deportment, we must first of all be aware of the fact that the privately owned American television networks are largely owned and controlled by members of an ethnic minority which comprises only about 3% of the American population, a minority that was present in the United States only in very small numbers prior to the 1880s, when its fortunes in eastern Europe were changed for the worse by decrees of the Russian government. These decrees, often designated as the "May Laws," stimulated a massive Jewish emigration to the United States. Fortunately, we have a very valuable source of information which contains many details of the largely Jewish ownership and control of American television. This source is entitled Who Rules America? and is available at a modest price from the National Alliance, Post Office Box 330, Hillsboro, West Virginia, 24946.

Through the medium of television, the psychological nature and cultural traditions of Jews from Europe and their descendants have had an almost incalculable influence on the political, psychological, social and moral development of the American people since the 1940s. Hostility toward host populations and a desire to control them through causation of internal strife are characteristic of the Jewish cultural and religious traditions, as we can note in a source of information available in almost every American home and even almost every hotel room in the country. That source is the Old Testament. Specifically, we can note the method of control in Isaiah XIX, 2:

> And I will set the Egyptians against the Egyptians: and they shall fight every one against his brother, and every one against his neighbor; city against city, and kingdom against kingdom.

A forecast of modern Jewish attitudes toward host populations is contained in Deuteronomy VII, 16:

> And thou shalt consume all the people which the Lord thy God shall deliver thee; thine eye shall have no pity on them.

The passage from Deuteronomy could do much to explain the pitiless tyranny of the Communist governments dominated by Jews in Russia and Hungary during 1917 ff. and 1919.

So great was the hostility toward Jews in earlier centuries that a number of western European nations expelled them, for example, England in 1290 and Spain in 1492. The effects of such expulsions in the development of attitudes of Jews toward their host populations can, of course, scarcely be underestimated. Attempts to limit Jewish power in the economic and professional areas in the twentieth century have also had a profound influence on Jewish attitudes toward host populations.

The traditions expressed in the Biblical passages quoted above also go far in explaining the diabolical use which Jews have made of television, a modern instrument of almost unlimited potential for controlling a country in addition to the power that Jews have attained through financial manipulations in earlier centuries and down to the present day.

A notable example of the efforts of American television to influence American concepts of history is the series War and Remembrance, which was broadcast by the American Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) in November, 1988 and May, 1989. This series, which was based on a long novel by the Jewish author Herman Wouk, occupied some thirty hours of "prime time." Its production costs are reputed to have been around $140,000,000., a staggering, unprecedented sum which must prompt questions about the motivations for such an expenditure. Limitations of space forbid me from discussing in detail the many distortions and falsehoods contained in the series, which has as its central theme the real or alleged sufferings of Jews in Europe during the Second World War, a war which has had a disastrously divisive and debilitating effect on the nations of Europe and which influential, wealthy Jews had an important rôle in precipitating, as has been documented, for example, in studies by the well-known British historian, David Irving. (For my detailed discussions of this series, see Liberty Bell, issues of January, 1989 and July, 1989.) War and Remembrance was a sequel to a series entitled The Winds of War, which had been broadcast in February, 1983. These series presented a Jewish version of the Second World War, a war in which the Jews were only one of the nations which underwent untold suffering, although this ethnocentric series would hardly have conveyed that fact to people who are naive about history. The series seem to be based on the premise that only the sufferings of Jews are important. The Second World War, by the way, was almost certainly prolonged by the genocidal threats against the German nation inherent in the Morgenthau Plan initialed by Roosevelt in September, 1944.

A recent example of the manner in which American television networks have provoked strife in the host populations is the provocative manner of reporting the incident which triggered the costly and divisive riots in Los Angeles. Edited (shortened) versions of a film showing the attempts by several policemen to subdue a Negro resisting arrest were shown innumerable times. Resentments, justified or unjustified, that had been long smoldering amongst Negroes in a poor district of Los Angeles were made to burst into violence that caused scores of deaths and bright, large flames that consumed hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property values. In this instance we also have an example of the manipulating techniques so often employed in network television; editing of materials and selective interviewing.

Political life and religious life in the United States are now largely filtered through the people who control television. So-called "televangelism," a tremendously profitable industry which has hardly brought honor to religious traditions of the American majority, can only exist with the approval of those who control network television. Political campaigns have become tremendously expensive undertakings that are virtually ineffective without television advertising. It is reasonable to assume that the rapid growth of crime in the United State during the past decades has been accelerated by violence in fictional television programs, to which so many youngsters are addicted at the expense of time for school homework.

The power of television to demoralize a war effort or to glorify a war is exemplified in the varied attitudes generated toward the war in Vietnam against Communism and, by way of stark contrast, the war fought for the benefit of Israel against Iraq.

The destructive influence of so-called "feminism" in recent decades can be ascribed in large measure to television, which constantly brings up topics and themes that provoke dissension between men and women and hence have a destructive effect on the stability of the American family. Other objectives of those who control American television seem to be the acceptance or even promotion of homosexuality and miscegenation, types of sexual behavior which can only have a debilitating effect on the majority component of the American population which has quite appropriately been characterized as the "dispossessed majority." (The Dispossessed Majority is the title of an important book that documents the decline of fortunes of Americans of European descent [available from Liberty Bell Publications, $15 + $2.50 for postage].) In the case of miscegenation, however, a would-be biter might have been bitten. One of the chief concerns of Jewish leaders lies in the high incidence of Jews who are now marrying non-Jews in the United States.

The dispossessed American majority can liberate itself from the diabolically destructive effects of network television only if it becomes cognizant of the orientations and objectives of those who control it. A powerful defense against its effect could be made by letters of protest to advertisers who sponsor objectionable television programs. Refusing to buy the products of such sponsors could also be effective provided that the sponsors are made aware of the reasons for the refusal. ❑

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to

More on the Einstein Myth

by

Ben Kriegh

If a publication like the Liberty Bell is to gain credibility it is important that its articles be reasonably accurate. Unfortunately, even though it is well intentioned, the article on the Einstein Myth in the April issue is carelessly done. For example, in the expression of physical laws, such as $E = 1/2\ mv^2$, it is a gross impropriety to suggest that the factor 1/2 is "quantitatively irrelevant...".

Probably the most exhaustive study of the "Einstein Myth" is contained In the book The Einstein Myth and the Ives Papers, by Dean Turner and Richard Hazelett, published by Devin-Adair in 1979. (It may no longer be available.) Although the authors are inclined to bring in some of their religious mysticism, the book is important in that it brings to light a number of significant but almost unknown facts. As is to be expected, most of the modern academic community, spineless wonders that they are, ignores these fact because they are not "politically acceptable."

One of the first notable results relating mass and energy was expressed by J. J. Thompson in 1881 when he calculated that a moving electrically charged spherical conductor appeared to have an additional mass equal to 4/3 the energy of the electric field divided by c^2, where c is the speed of light. In 1905, several months before Einstein published his paper on the special theory of relativity, a German physicist, Fritz Hasenoehrl, published a paper which obtained the same result but with respect to electromagnetic radiation in a reflecting box. As we now know, these results were incorrect by the factor 4/3. However, it was clear that physicists realized that there was a connection between mass and energy.

However, the most dramatic result was obtained by H. Poincare in a paper published in 1900 in which he obtained the result that the momentum of radiation is equal to the flux of radiation divided by the square of the speed of light, i.e., $M = S/c^2$. In deriving this result, Poincare showed that the "mass" due to radiation was derived through the definition of force as the rate of change of momentum. As the authors of the above mentioned text state, "the equation $e = mc^2$ could be derived by any alert physics student" from Poincare's equation. In short, Poincare had essentially obtained the result $e = mc^2$ indirectly, but possibly did not recognize its importance at the time. Poincare's priority of discovery was actually acknowledged by Einstein in 1906, although he remained silent about the matter thereafter.

From the historical point of view, the result which made Einstein's reputation was his supposed derivation of the famous equation $e = mc^2$ from his special theory of relativity in his second paper of 1905. However, the most astonishing aspect of Einstein's work was that his so-called derivation was mathematically defective. In other words, Einstein did not correctly derive the result for which he is given fame and credit! In fact, a correct derivation of the famous equation was given first by Max Planck in 1907.

It is clear that Einstein's reputation was based on the apparent development of the relationship between matter and energy as a consequence of the Theory of Relativity. The result was considered a triumph for relativity. Yet, the famous result was suspected and implicitly deduced earlier without the need for relativity, a simple truth which apparently has been ignored. In fact, Einstein implied that the result could not be obtained without relativity theory. In this, he was wrong.

Thus far, we have looked only at the Einstein Myth in regard to the famous relation between matter and energy. There is much more to the "MYTH."

Dr. Herbert Eugene Ives a a brilliant theoretical and experimental physicist and director of electro-optical research at Bell Laboratories in the 1930's and 1940's. He was not happy with the Theory Relativity because it encompasses a number of unresolved paradoxes. So, he proceeded to develop a theoretical approach to explain phenomena supposedly explained only by relativity. Ives succeeded in showing that such phenomena, e.g., the advance of the perihelion of Mercury, could be explained within the context of Newtonian physics and absolute space and time. Unfortunately, by the time Ives came out with his results, Einstein had been apotheosized. As a result, Ives was largely ignored and has essentially been forgotten, even though his work poses a formidable challenge to several aspects of the theory of relativity.

School children today are told that Einstein was a great genius, a mathematician, and scientist. I suspect that he was a genius in only one way, at exploitation. He certainly was no mathematician, and if he is to be classified as a scientist, then he was one of the most unproductive ones. It should be acknowledged that Einstein did have excellent insights into certain aspects of physics. But for all the years he was at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, he produced essentially nothing.

The Einstein Myth and the Ives Papers is an important book in that it is well referenced and includes reprints of many of Ives' important papers. Anyone interested can gain much from the book, even if he does not have the mathematical and physics background necessary to follow the technical aspects contained in the Ives papers. ❑

RODNEY KING

The black man refuses to live by the White man's law. Blacks have destroyed the viability of every major city in America. Whites do not feel safe anywhere in centralcity. To carry on the current integrationist course means that either White civilization surrenders to black chaos, or the White race perforce defends itself to the death of the black insurgency. The rational alternative to this dilemma is racial separation together with a one-time "reparation" to each black head of a household or individual living on his or her own. The stipulation must be that blacks who accept the "reparation" must return to Africa. There is no living together in harmony. Either the blacks return to Africa or the White race emigrates to Europe—or a terrible race conflagration erupts, the end of which can only mean the destruction of much of North America as a viable place to live. Those Whites who continue to preach integration when murder and mayhem are all that most blacks dream of doing to Whites will soon see the end of their multi-racial fantasy. This fantasy of multi-cultural diversity and equality has killed the America that once was great and mighty. We Aryans will get away from the black race by any means necessary. There is no compromise that won't weaken and destroy us. Twenty-six years ago (1996), Lincoln Rockwell told Stokely Carmichael that the racial issue could only be settled over guns. Barring racial separation, we see no other alternative.

ABC / "Prejudice"

Gather on a network television set a group of children. Make that gathering the reflection of the emerging American racial and ethnic mosaic, and proceed to choose two White children to humiliate. Put slave collars on the White children. Then have the camp-of-the-saints gathering jeer at the two White children. This is what Peter Jennings did, calling the experiment a useful study in "racism." This is euphemistic language for instilling a White guilt complex over black slavery and segregation, alleged White bigotry against every other race and group. In Milwaukee the local ABC affiliate asked some black children what they thought of the 'experiment.' One said that now Whites would know that just because blacks do drive-by shootings (Zebra-style) every night Whites shouldn't get the idea that blacks are a violent race. A little black girl said in response:

"Black (be) beautiful." And how the local mattoid creatures of the media beamed. White children like their own being publicly humiliated. This is the America we are told to love and revere. Ugh!!!

"60 Minutes" German Racial-Nationalism

No matter how strongly the Jews and their surrogates attempt to stifle Nationalist Socialist urges in the Germans, just two and a half years after the fall of the Berlin Wall the youth of Germany are marching again. Austrian Gottfried Küssel is their titular leader. All throughout Germany and Europe the Aryans are revolting against race treason and the immigrants from the Third World, the so-called refugees and the asylum seekers. "60 Minutes" showed America all manner of non-whites peering out of their welfare hostels in Germany, as though the German youth had no right to oppose their presence. Is Germany destined to become another Uganda? The Bonn regime claims that everyone in the world with a claim to asylum has a RIGHT to go to Germany, live on welfare, have babies on the medical system, and push the Germans out of their way. Küssel and the National Socialists will reawaken the racial and cultural heritage of Germany and Aryan Europe.

Ross Perot

What can a Ross Perot candidacy accomplish? if he gets 20% of the popular vote or more in the most populous states, the states with the most electoral votes, he could deny Bush and Clinton, either of them, an electoral majority of 270 votes. The presidential election could be decided in the U.S. House of Representatives. There the debates could become lethal. The Black Caucus will demand that Jesse Jackson be chosen, and when Jackson isn't chosen they will walk out. The Democrats will call for Mario Cuomo, Bill Clinton, Paul Tsongas, Jerry Brown, or even Ted Kennedy. The Republicans will want George Bush, with a few votes for Pat Buchanan. There will be few compromises. Many Congressmen will grow tired of the arguing late into the night, and some punches will be thrown; someone may even pull out a pistol. Four hundred and thirty-five members of the House in a great brawl on the House floor—a perfect example of why we say that America is dead in the water. With no president chosen, the government's power will begin to atrophy. This is the effect that Ross Perot's candidacy can have. We don't endorse him, but we are going to vote for him. A stiff dose of chaos could be just what this sad country needs to wake up the slumbering White race. The Los Angeles riots demonstrated what can happen to Whites when crazy niggers get a full head of racial steam. Riot in the Congress will seal the argument we have been making about the Humpty-Dumpty nature of the vaunted United States of America.

Mordecai Vanunu

Remember Vanunu? Last night I watched the film "Secret Weapon," the story of Israel's kidnapping in Rome of this Israeli technician who had worked on the development of the Israeli nuclear bombs. Vanunu told a London newspaper of Israel's stash of enriched plutonium and the thermonuclear devices that 'peace-loving Israel' was building and hiding in the Negev Desert; Vanunu had worked on this top-secret project for nine years. The Mossad sicked a femme fatale on old Mordecai, who lured the gullible Jew to Rome where the Mossad wrapped Vanunu up and flew him to Israel to stand trial for treason; Vanunu got eighteen years. The female Mossad agent allegedly fell in love with Mordecai Vanunu, but being a loyal Jewess she turned him in anyway. This movie was meant to demonstrate the near invincibility of the Israeli secret service, whose tactics never failed in this film. The movie showed Mossad agents operating all over the world—Sydney, London and Rome—driving taxis, in travel agencies, working in hotels, everywhere getting close to their targets with sex stings and finishing the job off with a team of assassins using silencers. The Jewess picked up her clothing from the floor and left by the same door that the two Mossad assassins came into the killing room. The Jews who make movies like to intimidate with Mossad scare stories.

HOMBRE DE BIGOTE

I could not resist an indirect reply to a recently received letter. A man with the jewish name of Koch apparently came unglued as he read a sample copy of FAEM. He said he lived in the middle of red-neck country and called me a bigot. He claimed my language was foul and undreamed of. One might ask if he has seen any recent copies of Penthouse or watched a TV movie lately. Stand-up comics (mostly jews) habitually use tons of filthy language and the audience thinks it's very funny. Anyway, Mr. Koch runs the "Interplanetary Church of Cosmic Science" and the "Comfort Corner" which counsels mental dwarfs in happiness and metaphysics. I never knew what metaphysics was and I remain indebted to Eric Thomson for the explanation. When a ball at the top of a hill rolls to the bottom, that's ordinary physics. When a ball at the bottom of a hill rolls to the top, that's metaphysics. I guess you have to be a metaphysician to understand what an "interplanetary church" is. As for the "cosmic science" bit, that must really be awesome.

Mr. Comfort Corner wants me to love the "race of man", whatever that is. Man, men, mens (Latin), mentio, mention, mental, and so on, leads us to the statement "one who has the capacity to think". Hooman beans, as it were. How close some bipeds can get to apes and still be called human, is anyone's guess. "Race" is a biological division of mankind of which there are three major kinds: white, yellow and black. In everyday, unscientific terms, they are honkie, gook and nigger. Gringos, slants and spooks. Palefaces, ricers and coons. What's in a name anyway? These three divisions have their own subdivisions and so on and so forth. A race is distinguished by the relative frequency of genes and the resultant physical characteristics of hair texture, hair color, eye color, skin color, bone structure, body proportions, stature, circulatory systems and what all. The brains are physically different and obviously function in a different manner. A race has the same ancestry, family, clan, lineage and blah, blah, blah. We even smell different. A fellow with the odd name of Wong Long Dong remarked that all whites were "stinky". Since he wasn't a white, he could not be accused of uttering a racist remark. Blacks are often heard laughing about how honkies have no lips and no ass. We look weird tc them and they look weird to us while the Koreans laugh at us both. If a person's brain malfunctions to the extent that the only difference he notices is a wee bit of suntan, then I would suggest that he must have a head filled with silicone or have been sniffing too much amyl acetate. Anyway, the "race of man" is an absurd expression fit only for members of a comfort church. If enough support is found, Mr. Koch will soon open his "Intercosmic Church of Planetary Science" and an accompanying opium den.

During my stay at Camp Pickett (charge!), Virginia, we were often served a strange item euphemistically called "shit on a shingle". It was Beef In Gravy On Toast. The gentlemen among us (there were two of them in our company alone!) referred to it as B.I.G.O.T. or "bigot" for short. Bigote is Spanish for mustache and has "goatee" as a derivation. The Latin "biga" refers to a span of spirited horses and hence, a bigot was a man of spirit with a firm and obstinate character. Today, this term usually refers to one who is prejudiced or not tolerant (intolerant). A man who refuses to eat a horseball without previously experiencing the sensation, is said to be prejudiced, or pre-judging. If he is tolerant, that is, if he chooses to put up with a discomfort, he will eat the horseball. If, after eating the horseball, he refuses to eat another because it is offensive to him, he is then said to be practicing discrimination. If, after eating the horseball, he develops a craving for shit, he is said to be free from hate and "one with the Lord". A bigot is anyone who stubbornly refuses to change his mind about things he doesn't like, in spite of contrary evidence. A bigot is anyone who refuses to allow AIDS Johnson to drool into their food.

One notices readily that those who shout "bigot", "hater" and the like, are actually the real haters. I have absolutely no objection to people who love to swap spit with Higis or copulate with goats (with the goat's consent, of course). Faggots, as long as they stay in their water closets, are of little concern to me. I am tolerant of what they do but I am not tolerant of those who attempt to impose their behaviors and values upon me. I am (and hopefully you are also) hated because I prefer to choose my own associates and live among like minded members of my own race. I grant this to others, but the favor is not returned. The haters do not wish me to have this freedom. I must tolerate a smoke filled room because some weed puffer hates fresh air. I must tolerate jungle noises blaring from the roof tops because some black man has gone wild with a white man's device. I must tolerate another's dog crapping in my rose garden and a neighbor's undisciplined brat ripping off my lilacs. I must tolerate, i.e., suffer, all sorts of intrusions upon my life but no one will pay heed to my request to be left in peace. I am not alone and it's time we shouted our objections to the freedom crushers around us. It is time we stopped diving under the bed every time someone shouts "racist", "hater", "fascist" or whatever. It's time to stare the haters down. It's time to give a GI scrubbing to every faggot who waves his brown stained willie at us. It's time to be men; mens "those who think". I'll bet there must be a hundred of us. At least. Somewhere.

HELL'S BELLS

Any three year old child soon learns that calling someone a name, whether he knows what it means or not, usually causes the targeted person to leap into the air. Profanity also does this and never fails to get one's attention. I say, to all of you tired and polite individuals who think I am crude, that the time for gentle tea sipping in the parlor has passed. For over fifty years, we have gathered around the fireplace, munching cookies, and whispered about the state of things and mumbled nice suggestions to each other. Wake up and face life. We haven't caused one dent in the armor of the enemies of this Republic. Communist led mobs have urinated, en masse, in the streets (civil riots) and the venal politicians have bent over backwards to give them their way. We have seen orchestrated chaos, usually called peace demonstrations, placated and again legislation enacted which allowed more privileges for the criminal mobs. Fighting never was sweet and friendly. If you won't defend your way of life, then what good are you? As God intended, every critter on the planet will defend its way of life. Only in the white race has this extinct almost vanished with them still pretending that their lives are worthwhile.

I will continue to use whatever language I feel is necessary to make a point. If we are to combat sewer rats, we must learn about sewer rats before we can effectively fight sewer rats. Americans love to eat steak but run and hide when the facts of slaughter and butchering are brought to light. One must know his enemy in order to defend himself. I want spiritually healthy white people to know about the habits of the perverts who spread AIDS. I want my kind of people to know about the swill that the greedy manufacturers sell as "food". I place a premium upon honesty and will not dive under the carpet (and neither should any self-respecting person) simply because someone calls me a "bigot", "queer-hater", "anti-Semite", "fascist" or whatever. No person is under any obligation to "prove" that he isn't what some Sam (rug-head) Donaldson thinks he is. David Duke made this fatal error by going on the defensive and phased himself out of any effective picture. His enemies hated him and his apologies did not lessen that hate one iota.

FAEM is close to breaking even in the dollar department. I still send free copies to people who have limited means and request them. This money comes from the IHBD fund (I've Had Better Days) which results from the gifts of generous others. I would also like to start a ICUCM fund (I Could Use a Copying Machine) and thus by-pass the twits I have to rely upon in a distant printing service who habitually mis-align everything. I can get by without this gadget, but my hair will grey sooner. Well, maybe. I don't worry because I belong to a very inventive and ingenious race.

A VITAL VITAMIN A

Barbara was a friend of mine for a short period of time. She was a beautiful young woman who was a pleasure to look upon, among other things. When I pressed my ear close to hers, I could hear the ocean. Barbara was typically American. Whenever something slightly prodded her brain, she began to have a headache. To prevent such an uncomfortable state, Barbara would let others do the thinking for her. She is one of millions. This accounts, then, for the massive amount of pure nonsense that one finds in the discussions of religion, nutrition and war atrocity stories.

God did not intend that your physical nutrition be some sort of problem solving exercise. He designed your lungs to handle pure air and your stomach to handle vegetable and animal matter. Things were to be simple and natural. If a food is not simple or not found in some living thing, then it is most likely bad for you. I asked a female MD why a natural food, such as butter, was "bad" for you while an artificial fat, like diglycol stearate or hydrogenated stink weed oil, was "good" for you. She had no answer. I asked a veterinarian why the best "scientific" dog food contained so much corn meal and soy beans, substances that no undomesticated canine would touch with a ten foot fang and why rare steak, eggs and raw liver were "bad" for a dog to eat. She said they needed their carbohydrates. I countered by mentioning that our two dogs Hank and Purp lived to be nearly 19 years old and ate nothing but fresh rabbit, woodchuck and raw cow's milk and never had a sick day in their life. She told me that the carbohydrates came from the inside of the rabbits intestines. Give me a break! Whatever remains within the intestines is brown stuff ready to be excreted since the carbohydrates had been extracted by the process. Furthermore, I asked her if she ever considered the relative proportion of any remaining carbohydrate to the mass of protein that made up the bulk of the dog's meal. She abruptly walked away from me. What crap! And she spent seven years at Cornell to have common sense erased from her brain. A dog's teeth tells you all you want to know about its life style and food requirements.

Hector is a dog owned by a friend of mine. The critter was listless, in poor health and Chris considered putting him "to sleep". I asked her what she was feeding the animal. I was correct in my assumption that she used a dog chow that was recommended by the "scientific" experts at the Purina company. Purina never had any dog's welfare at heart. They are interested in profit and long ago discovered that a starving dog will eat chicken feed and that some ignoramus could be TV enticed into buying it. I suggested that Chris not have the poor mutt killed until she gave my suggestions a try. Dogs are killers and eat raw bloody meat. Give Hector some liver, kidney, heart, muscle meat, eggs, milk and observe what happens. In about one month, she called me saying that Hector was running about the house in sustained displays of energy quite unlike any of which she could remember. Keep it simple and keep it natural.

Vitamin A is a fat soluble substance. It is necessary for every cell in your body although some, like those of the eyes, require a larger amount in proportion. Low vitamin A is correlated with heart disease. People who have succumbed to the latest "low fat" diet craze are exposing themselves to gallstone problems and vitamin A, D and E deficiencies. (Low fat foods don't get rancid, and that is the only reason manufacturers are pushing them. If you think they are good for you, then you deserve to get sick.) Vitamin A is stored in the liver which is the richest source of this vitamin. Every lion, cheetah and wolf will instinctively seek out this organ in absolute preference. A four ounce piece of liver, eaten once a week, will supply any human with the recognized optimal amount. If you hate liver, then eat an egg a day or seven eggs every Tuesday or thirty on the last day of every month. If animal products are against your religion, then you'll not find much vitamin A in the plant kingdom. Carrots, for example, contain no vitamin A but are rich in carotene. Your intestinal wall will convert carotene into vitamin A for storage. You'll need a carrot a day to keep the doctor away. If you can't stand to munch like Bugs Bunny, then get a powerful blender, add your carrots with a bit of water and whip it into a thin puree. Drink it all as the pulp usually contains more nutrients than does the juice. This is true for nearly all fruits and vegetables. Simply eat the whole thing. Your teeth are an excellent blender and it's more fun chewing anyway. Do not worry about any vitamin on a daily basis. You can run for weeks on the stored vitamin A in your liver without ever eating any. Don't buy vitamin tablets. Buy food. It's better, cheaper and tastier. Eat simple and eat natural and don't worry as 40 percent of your problems exist only in your head and another 40 percent results from the crap you stuff into your mouth.

Americans are over fed and under nourished. They eat tons of artificial crap because it tickles their taste buds and makes enormous profits for the phoney food business. In the local YMCA there hangs a picture of the 1937 basketball champs. They were a lean and tough looking bunch without a giraffe-type freak in the lot. Next to it is a picture of a set of flabby players that represent today's young men. One might ask why the players in the past looked so trim, strong and without a heart murmur in the group, as opposed to the weak and freakish looking clowns we have today. The game was the same but the diet wasn't. During those years, we ate simple foods and the concoctions (cookies, puddings, etc.) were mixed at home out of pure foodstuffs. Mom never used artificial fats, synthetic preservatives, phoney colors, phoney flavors or phoney anything. I am indebted to my father for marrying a woman instead of some career-bound sheet-twat who loves to dump her offspring in some commune for children (day mis-care center) where they are exposed to a variety of diseases and the psychological abuse we love to call "social adjustment".

During the late 1930's (see FAEM Jan 92) hydrogenated paint binders and soap by-products were foisted upon the public in the form of Crisco, Spry and "oleo" (margarine). People (brainless and ignoring God's nature) started eating these worthless, border line poisons by the bucket. This was the real start of the heart and circulatory problems that are swamping this country today. When this practice renders you sick and weak, you then run to a legal drug pusher called a "doctor" (I've never seen a healthy one yet). He prescribes a drug which is supposed to "cure" something but actually leaves you with side effects that need another drug to "cure". It continues until you die and he has all of your money. I often wonder why people find simple foods unacceptable to eat. Your body was not designed to handle artificial fats and the continual use of them places an intolerable burden upon your system; a burden which will eventually lead to mucho misery.

Yes, I eat home baked muffins. I start with wheat direct from the farm. I grind it and add eggs, whole milk (raw milk, if I can find it), butter, honey and homemade baking powder. No crap. I eat little crap. Also, (potassium freaks take notice) a spoonful of baking powder contains more potassium than six bunches of bananas. I am not against bananas–just including an interesting fact.

I just finished eating my poached eggs dripping in butter. I hope you'll enjoy your Cheese Fritos and Coca Cola.

"Rudolf Vrba": The Holohoax in Person

by

Eyewitness & Survivor Eric Thomson

I, Eric Thomson, was among those who witnessed and survived the First Great Holocaust Thoughtcrime Trial in 1984 through 1985, under the Zionist Occupation Government of Soviet Canada. The victim of this lengthy and costly (to the Gentile tax-payers) jewdicial persecution was and still is, at the time of this writing, Ernst Zündel, who is the only man on this planet who risks going to prison for discussing World War II. What this proves, to the knowledgeable observer, is that World War II is still going on and never ended in 1945, as we have been misled to believe by the jewsmedia and Goy stooges of our respective Zionist Occupation Governments.

As a retired railroad man, I have often lamented the prodigal abandonment of thousands of miles of track and the curtailment of rail service in most parts of the world, but I can say from firsthand experience that the railroad business is alive and well in the courtrooms of our so-called democracies.

"Rudolf Vrba" is a name most people never heard of. The jew who uses that name claims, under oath, that his original name was "Walter Rosenberg" and later, "Joseph Israel Rosenberg." Who he really was is likely unprovable, since he has testified that "all my documents were burned [cremated?] in Maidanek." Maidanek, on the outskirts of Lublin, Poland, was one of those alleged "death camps" which produced mostly "survivors," including Vrba-Rosenberg, whose identity papers were the only things which got "holocausted."

According to "survivors" stories, the "fiendish" Nazis transferred jews from one "death-camp" to another in a form of Russian Roulette which required thousands of precious trains, hundreds of camps stretching from the Atlantic coast to Poland and Austria, and supposedly millions of participants, instead of revolvers loaded with one bullet each. The "sadistic" Nazis, we are supposed to believe (because jews know how to cry as they lie), got so fascinated with this gigantic game that they 'forgot' to kill around five million jews who have been receiving 'reparations payments' from the Zionist Occupation Government of Germany (Bundeszog) ever since. Vrba-Rosenberg was no exception but for the fact that he was probably the first jew to get his gas chamber lies into print, as one of the co-liars who concocted the infamous "War Refugee Board Report" of 1944 which was published under the auspices of the Jewnighted States Government at the behest of jewish President Roosevelt, who apparently thought the liars of the British Government were a bunch of wimps for omitting the "gas chamber" accusation from their official statement on alleged German atrocities in August 1943. Roosevelt had no such scruples. In fact, he had no scruples whatsoever, as we know.

Vrba-Rosenberg is himself an interesting study. He claimed, under oath, that he was born in 1924, yet he did not appear to be 61 years old. His hair was not grey, unless he dyed it, but his physical condition mainly belied his years, even if his hair were white, for he had the stocky build and muscular stride of a bouncer, with the face of a crude and ill-tempered thug, as well as the manners and speech of one. It is therefore an exhibition of astonishing arrogance that the Zionist authorities expect us to believe that this specimen was able to earn a doctorate in chemistry and/or pharmacology and that he was capable of teaching these subjects at the University of British Columbia or at any other institution as an associate professor, . This is not to deny his academic rank, but it is to doubt his academic capacities for research and instruction. Anyone may be accorded academic titles and also receive a professor's salary, even if he has no academic abilities nor qualifications. Those of us who have seen racial hiring quotas in action now view this corruption of our educational institutions as increasingly commonplace. But Vrba-Rosenberg is a very uncommon case.

Under oath, he was asked his academic specialty. Vrba-Rosenberg replied: "The chemistry of the brain—immunochemistry [sic]—that means the chemical composition of the brain." Here we have a jew "professor" who cannot correctly identify his field of specialization. Any student who gave such a definition for "immunochemistry" would flunk the course, for it would prove that he knew nothing about this subject. But Vrba-Rosenberg is an associate professor, so he cannot flunk.

Because I was suspicious of Vrba-Rosenberg's academic qualifications, whatever the number of "degrees" he has received from academic institutions, I commissioned a colleague who lived in British Columbia to investigate his research papers and to find out if he actually taught a course. Eventually, I received the titles of his research papers, several of which purported to deal with brain chemistry, but certainly not "immunochemistry." I was suitably impressed, not by Vrba-Rosenberg's abilities as a researcher, but by the fact that each and every paper that I saw was co-authored. Not one had been written by Vrba-Rosenberg himself.

Although no information was forthcoming about his teaching schedule, I seriously doubt that he would be able to teach any course in English, for I had witnessed his constant murdering of the language throughout his days of testimony. If Vrba-Rosenberg were knowledgeable in the field of chemistry, he could describe his condition as one of "chronic dysphasia," which is defined as "...loss of the power to use or understand language, caused by injury to or disease of the brain." Although he claimed to speak various European languages, including German and English, both of which he consistently massacred, one wonders if Vrba-Rosenberg can speak any language correctly and/or fluently.

The words "cars," "trucks," "wagons," "trains" and "lorries" were used by Vrba-Rosenberg interchangeably throughout his testimony, so one could never be sure if he was talking about railroad cars or wagons individually or collectively , as "trains." When he would say "trucks," he usually meant railroad cars, although it could turn out that he was really talking about trucks of the motor vehicle variety. Persons and lumber were "stapled," not "stacked." An epidemic was always an "epidemy." Even when he was speaking in nearly correct English, he was unidiomatic and difficult to understand. One might conclude that this was a tactic for concealing impossibilities or inconsistencies in his story by confusing everyone in the courtroom. In addition to this game of language, he rarely answered questions put to him in cross-examination by defense attorney Douglas Christie. Sometimes the jew would give two contradictory answers. As usual, the 'Chief Prosecutor,' Judge

Locke, who was blatantly partisan against the defense, ignored these abuses of procedure and often reinforced them by interrupting and criticizing defense counsel before the jury. As one can imagine, it would be difficult to prove that a witness was lying if no one could figure out what he was saying.

Occasionally, Vrba-Rosenberg would be caught by the physical impossibility of his monstrous allegations. One example of this occurred when he lied that bodies were being burned in "pits, the depth I would estimate for [sic] six meters." When defense counsel pointed out to him that the water table was around one meter beneath the surface, since the area is marshy, Vrba-Rosenberg responded by saying that the ground was frozen because it was December. When defense counsel asked him why the intense heat which he described as emanating from the pits did not melt the ice, he said that the Nazis had "ameliorated" the groundwater level, but he did not know how they had done it! The cretins, morons and cowards of the jury accepted it as 'fact' that Nazis could burn jews in water-filled ditches because this arrogant jew said they could. After all, if the jews could "part the Red Sea," then the Nazis could likewise magically hold back the groundwater so the "burning-pits" could do their work. Perhaps wise men are right when they say that

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book, that the single unifying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. a Christian can be made to believe anything, since he has already swallowed a camel-sized absurdity!

This founder of the Holohoax introduced some amazing new "information" in his testimony. For example, Vrba-Rosenberg claims that "children's heads don't burn...they contain such an amount of water, that to burn completely, a child [sic] skull is much more difficult than a grown-up's skull." He claimed, under oath, that if a person is sufficiently anti-Nazi, he can unerringly find his way over unknown terrain, without a compass—in the dark! Aside from losing one's way in the woods, it would be a good way to break one's neck, but the jury did not doubt him for a moment.

He claimed that each Auschwitz prisoner had a number "tattooed on his hand." Funny thing that all the "Auschwitz survivors" seem to have numbers on their arms, not on their hands. If Vrba-Rosenberg is right about that, there is going to be a rush of millions to the tattoo parlors. Like all of his kosher cohorts, he makes fantastic claims concerning the efficiency of the Nazis' old-fashioned crematoria. They could do in twenty minutes what it takes our most modern facilities over an hour to do, under optimum conditions. Of course, any people who could make flames burn under water would probably have no trouble making flames work three or four times as fast as our clammy 'democratic' flames.

The sort of verbal jousting which went on whenever defense counsel would ask this jew a simple question was a real eye-opener, if any Gentile in the courtroom paid attention. Other jew witnesses, like Raul Hilberg, used the same tactics, although Hilberg was more refined and less obviously antagonistic than Vrba-Rosenberg. The following are some of the tactics used by jew witnesses, in addition to perjury: (1) Pretend not to hear the question; (2) Pretend not to understand the question; (3) 'Answer' with another question; (4) Ignore the question and make a short speech on another subject; (5) Give contradictory answers, while pretending to answer the question; (6) Avoid whenever possible giving yes or no answers. Of course, no Aryan would be permitted to use such blatantly obstructive tactics, for any judge is aware of such stunts and would sternly order the Aryan witness to behave properly. Not so, however, in the case of one jew witness after the other. Here is a mercifully brief sample of 'Vrba-lese' during his cross-examination by defense attorney Doug Christie: "Witness, will you say it's true that you have told stories about Auschwitz?"

Vrba: "I didn't keep a secret out of it."

Christie: "Would you say that all the things you've said about Auschwitz are true?"

Vrba: "I would think so, within the frame of possibility of a reference."

Christie: "I now produce and show to you a book entitled, 'I Cannot Forgive.' Are you the author of this book?"

Vrba: "I am a co-author."

Christie: "Did you check it and see that all the contents were true?"

Vrba: "Which year has this book been published?"

Judge Locke (even a Zogling can become impatient with a jew): "Would you answer the question, please, sir?"

Christie: "Could you answer the question?"

Vrba: "Which year has the book been published?"

Judge: "Show him the book."

Christie: "1964 March by Grove Press. It attributes the authorship to you and to a Mr. Alan Bestick. Did you read that book?"

Vrba: "Yes. Certainly. I wrote the book."

Christie: "All the contents are true?"

Vrba: "I wouldn't answer in a direct way to this question, because this is a work of literature, and not a document, and therefore I would like to make certain remarks on the background of the book which will make it more clear to you what the book is about. Please don't interrupt me, because I cannot work this way."

Christie: "Would you let me ask a question?"

Vrba: "I didn't finish your previous question."

Christie: "Pardon me."

Vrba: "I did not yet finish your previous question."

Christie: "Fine. Carry on."

Obviously, the lies which Vrba-Rosenberg authored in his allegedly 'true' work of fictional, anti-German hate propaganda were too flagrant to stand up to serious cross-examination, but he insisted on having his proverbial cake and eating it too, as all jews will do. He did not want to admit that he was not an 'omniscient observer' to all the bogus events he wrote about, yet he would agree that, "perhaps" he had heard these false tales from others, without having seen any of them himself, especially events which purportedly took place after his alleged "escape" from Auschwitz-Birkenau. When defense counsel would press him to tell the court which events were hearsay and which events he had seen, Vrba-Rosenberg would become evasive and relapse into his insistence that the book was a "literary exercise," but nonetheless true. ZOG-judge Hugh Locke never intervened to have him answer any of the questions in a coherent manner. Should we be surprised? Why shouldn't our enemy grow strong and arrogant when we continue to support him with our tax dollars and our interest payments?

Vrba-Rosenberg advanced some truly novel ways of calculating the number of jews "gassed" at Auschwitz. One way which he used to arrive at a figure of 1,760,000 kosher "gassees" was to count the times his barracks shook, when trucks were passing on the nearby dirt road. Although he never saw what the trucks were carrying, he assumed them to be full of jews who were soon to be converted into "puffs of harmless black smoke." By assuming the number of jews per truck and by multiplying that number by the number of shakes, he obtained his fantastic Holohoax figure. Of course, there was no way to tell which way the trucks were heading, since they made the barracks rattle coming and going, nor had he any way of confirming his supposition that the trucks carried jews and not soldiers and supplies on their way to the front, which was getting close in 1944.

Now we come to the crude and grotesque diagrams used by Vrba-Rosenberg "to keep his lies straight," in the words of defense counsel. The jew claimed to have scrawled these blotches shortly after he "escaped" from Auschwitz. Without looking at them, it seemed impossible for him to testify and when he gave testimony, it could never be taken out of the order in which he recited, like spooling an audiotape backwards and starting again. Many spectators in the courtroom, including myself, noted and commented upon Vrba-Rosenberg's peculiarity of "recollection." Here is a typical example of this jew's inability to answer a question with specific information, even when he is not trying to evade or cover up:

Prosecutor Griffiths (born a U.S. citizen and reputed to have come to Canada to dodge the draft during the Vietnam War): "Before you went to England, where were you: what country were you living in?"

Vrba: "I was born in Czechoslovakia on September 11, 1924. I lived in Czechoslovakia until 1939 when Czechoslovakia was dismembered, and from '39 onwards I lived in a puppet Slovakia in a puppet state which was under German rule with local underlings ruling until 1942. In June of 1940 I have been deported to the concentration camp of Maidanek where I was fourteen days."

Despite the verbosity, Vrba-Rosenberg did not answer the question. Perhaps he was not 'programmed' to answer it, for that is what his peculiar behavior indicates: programming or 'brainwashing.' People who memorize information, stories or speeches can usually pluck a specific detail out of the whole without having to 'play-back' entire sentences and paragraphs, but hypnotically-programmed subjects have difficulties in separating the parts from the whole. Students who cram for exams the night before exhibit a notable urge to spew out everything they have memorized onto paper before they forget, often without reading or actually answering the question. In this jew's case, however, there seemed to be no danger that he would forget—as long as he had his Pavlovian diagrams in front of him: How many people do you know, if any, who require a diagram to recall what they did or saw? Only rarely in the course of Vrba-Rosenberg's testimony was there any need to refer to a map of Auschwitz-Birkenau-Monowitz, and the diagrams for that purpose were drafted by others, and they bore little resemblance to the daubings of Vrba-Rosenberg.

After witnessing the performance of this Holohoaxer and after a further examination of his testimony, I conclude that any jew and even some Gentiles could be "Rudolf Vrba," whose credentials and persona are of postwar manufacture, and certified "kosher" by World-Z.O.G. Knowledgeable people are aware of the C.I.A.-directed "psychic-driving" and "mental-programming" experiments conducted in the 1960's by Canadian as well as U.S. psychiatrists on their unsuspecting patients, at least some of whom were jews. Their conclusion, from what I have learned in my own research, was that "stable personalities" were most difficult to "program," similar to the job an architect would have if he attempted to make major alterations in a massive, solidly-built structure. The "programming" required to make major alterations in the personality and behavior of the stable personalities usually rendered these subjects useless as tools of the programmers and useless to themselves, similar to the victims of psycho-surgery or lobotomies. "Unstable personalities," on the other hand, were more amenable to "programming." Alcoholics, drug-addicts, schizophrenics, etc. were more easily directed to adopt new behavior patterns and attitudes under the C.I.A.'s 'treatments,' which involved isolation, repetition, hallucinogenic and soporific drugs, electroshock, insulin shock and Pavlovian pain-drug hypnosis.

Jews in particular, apparently because of their tri-racial genetic composition, are disproportionately afflicted by schizophrenia, to greater or lesser degrees. The half-jew comedian, Peter Sellers, for instance, was asked by an interviewer how he had come to be so adept at portraying so many characters in his films. Sellers answered: "Because I really don't know who I am." Dozens of jews whom I encountered in college and university said to me that the "Great Human Problem," i.e., the jews' problem, was to discover their identities. Like a typical dumb Goy, I would ask: "What's wrong, did you lose your birth certificate?" How does a crazy person explain the 'reality' of his world to a sane person? Although it is hard for a person of one race to understand a mixed-race person, it is wellnigh impossible for the victim of race-mixing to understand himself. The jews are forever writing and talking about achieving self-awareness and self-understanding, unlike Blacks, Whites or Yellows: yet, the jews are never successful in their quest, for one can never achieve understanding of oneself if one does not know who he is. A color-blind person can write and talk about colors, but he will never see them.

As an Aryan, I can feel sorry for a creature like Vrba-Rosenberg, who shows many of the recorded symptoms of a victim of brain-chemistry experiments, rather than a practitioner thereof. I cannot feel sorry, however, for those of Our Race who have allied themselves with the Zionist deceivers, exploiters and destroyers of mankind, for they have a racial duty to know better, just as do the Aryans who refuse to use their own brains and thus believe the impudent lies and calumnies of these vicious parasites. ❑

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Ah, the trials and tribulations of being human! In my last letter of a month ago, I included a sentence or two which might possibly have been misconstrued by yourself, with negative connotations towards L.B. I'm afraid the letter was hastily written and poorly thought out; allow me an explanation. (With any luck you utilized the "20-spot" contained in that letter and "deep-sixed" the rest and are even now wondering what-in-the-hell I'm talking about.)

Anyway, I distinctly remember a sentence or so that implied the thought, "If a situation or program is going to succeed, certainly within a given amount of time it will either fly or flop" (i.e., L.B. has been operating for some time [19 years] and by now might be enjoying better success than it presently is).

Now then, I'm not a complete dunder head (I only write like one at times). As well as anyone else, I realize:

(1) L.B. is not, and even under favorable circumstances probably never would be, a well financed publication since it is built along educational lines (lines which the Boobus Americanus seem incapable of understanding); L.B.'s subscribers will always be a small group.

(2) The facts presented in L.B. are extremely beneficial to reasoning Americans and I personally cringe at the thought of where my mind would be had I not been exposed to L.B. some 8 or 9 years ago. Correspondingly, I am hopeful that L.B. will be able to stay solvent for a long time into the future.

Simply put, in my last bumbling letter I was only trying to convey my appreciation of the great (understatement of all time) knowledge I have received from L.B. Also, should you decide at year's end that L.B. has gone as far as George Dietz can personally take it, then this subscriber will accept the decision without prejudice and recognize your heroic efforts on behalf of our race.]

As the editor of about the only "right-wing" periodical that has proven it's right to exist I believe you should at the very least be entitled to coherent correspondence, and when I have, in my haste, written an ambiguous letter I feel an obligation to explain my error and pass on my regrets should it have caused any misunderstanding or hard feelings...

Respectfully yours, V.G., Michigan

Dear Landsmann:

...I enclose $20 as a drop of water on a hot stone, so to speak. Alas, all the money is on the Jew side. If so, under the Jews' economic determinism, that would guarantee their success as none would join a cause that doesn't pay. What really motivates the White nationalist press is not cash but religion. Nietzsche once pointed out that the real White religion is worship of truth. This is inherent in the White mind like lying is in the jewish mind, and explains the White mastery of science. It also accounts for your struggle and things like the 29 year effort of thousands of individual Whites to solve the Kennedy murder despite the government and media cover-up. A successful effort, I might add, since it is now known that the CIA and British Intelligence had Kennedy murdered after he dared oppose the jew money monopoly by issuing $400 million in U.S. notes which were not borrowed from the jews' Federal Reserve Bank as all money is supposed to be.

25% of prisoners in the NY state prisons (90% colored) now test positive for TB. Lyndon LaRouche and his people were right, TB is the "marker" for AIDS. A person with HIV infection will immediately catch TB as a first symptom. This is a much more sensitive test for AIDS than any of the doctors' tests. Anyone testing positive for TB in America is virtually certain to have AIDS. Thus, 25% of the NY prison population is now AIDS infected. As a racially specific disease, AIDS will eventually infect and kill every negro and jew in the world, as well as those Whites copulating with them and using injected drugs and vaccines. For the first time we have a biological solution to the biological problems of jew parasitism and black race-mixing. I see nothing to stop AIDS. Condoms are useless and the jews are preventing any quarantine of the plague spreaders since it would mean quarantining themselves and their black dogs.

The Jap stock markets collapsed last week as the war in the Middle East gets closer and closer. This is to be a nuclear war and we are now waiting to see which side will make a nuclear preemptive strike first. The Israelis have openly threatened to attack Syria, Iraq and Iran. Israel's U.S. flunky is threatening Libya and Iraq. This time the atomic destruction of the Saudi oil fields, planned for 1991, will occur. That, in turn, will push oil prices up to $100 per barrel and collapse the world economy, especially Japan's economy, which is why their market collapsed now. The jews will then blame the collapse their usury has caused on the Arabs. Like in 1977. This will make it the third attempt at this by the U.S. since 1987. The first attempt was the attack on Iran climaxing in the shooting down of an Iranian airliner by the Vincennes in the Gulf. Khomenei defused that crisis by refusing to retaliate and ending the war with Iraq. In 1991 the Kuwait crisis was again defused, before the planned nuclear strike, by Hussain's withdrawal from Kuwait and his orders to his troops not to fight the Americans. Like a typical bully and coward, Bush is now trying to provoke another war upon people he hopes to be able to murder with impunity. Libya, Grenada, Panama, and Iraq, so goes the sorry list of victims so far. Encouraged by "success," his frogship is now looking for bigger puddles and the Israelis plan to use him to conquer the entire Middle East for Israel.

The wildcard in this dirty game is Russia. They demanded $10 billion to allow the 1991 war. They are reportedly demanding $30 billion for this one. Last week a $24 billion bribe package was announced, apparently stopping their mouth for the moment. But there is great dissention in Russia on this. Nationalists do not like to see Mother Russia prostituted for cash. Reportedly, the former chief of staff had 100 officers working around the clock to ship parts for missiles, nuclear weapons, gas and biological weapons to Iran. The jews demanded Yeltsin fire him and there was apparently a 3-day confrontation between Yeltsin and the Army. Finally Yeltsin, just barely, prevailed and Vladimir Lobov, the former CoS, was fired. But only massive bribes turned the trick. The moment the Middle East war occurs, Yeltsin is out. With all the talk about Russia's decrepitude, people ignore that Russia has the most powerful Army in the world...

Sincerely, S.R., New York State

Dear George,

Sincere Aryan greetings!

I just wanted to write a short note to thank the person who sponsored me for a subscription to Liberty Bell. I really enjoy reading all the articles. I could give you my life story about how I ended up in prison. I won't, just allow me to say I believe it was because of lack of racial awareness. I had no pride in myself (no true pride!). According to the jewsmedia, we, as Aryans, are supposed to be embarrassed, or guilty, about being White! I now see the foolishness and the jewish purpose behind that propaganda.

Anyway, thanks to Hitler's Mein Kampf and Liberty Bell I see the purpose for my existence and I have a cause to fight for. While I sit in this cell and wait for my parole day I am desperately trying to gain more knowledge about N.S. and think of ways to help our race out of this jewish oppression.

I really hope LB will be able to keep its door open. I honestly believe that the books I received from you saved my life! I say that because before I read Mein Kampf I had no purpose and no goals. Now I have a reason to carry on in my struggle for existence.

Thanks again, T.T., Texas

Dear George,

After three months in England, we could not stick it; so here we are again in New Zealand and I enclose my renewal to LB and also the cash for ten extra copies of the March 1992 issue.

I do believe that the Almighty would have much difficulty in publishing any materials as has Dr. William Pierce. We all know the great restraints existing within the so-called Establishment; it is a very sad and also a very odd fact that we find the destroyers and the builders all working away in the self same country. What is to be the end of it all?

I had a few extra copies of the Airship Hindenburg photo; I believe it is the best way of expressing my personal views regarding Germany and World War II. I left the British Army in the late twenties, I was doing orderly Sergeant before I left, but they did not get me in the Army again when the war began, I saw to that. I remembered the slogans I had seen chalked up on the walls in Germany: "Die Juden sind unser Unglück!," or some such words. It was a rather strange circumstance, my mother had said she would like to visit Germany and it was in August 1939 that I decided to take both of my parents over there for a holiday. Well, I did just that and as events turned out, it was as well I did do so; we had a marvelous time and it was not until we were returning to England and we stayed for a day or two in Ostende in Belgium where they were practicing the Blackout, that I realized they were preparing for war. So the Establishment Authorities were even then in the know; they and Churchill knew well enough there would be a war. He was the warmonger.

There are all kinds of "False News" items going the rounds, particularly items published in the Establishment lie-papers, when it comes to WW II history; I simply cannot stomach the rubbish, the outright lies and half truths; we are so used to propaganda now, we never really know for sure when it happens to be the truth. I can't see WW II ever going away; I believe the example of Iraq and the Gulf War only lends itself to further apprehension; those who wrote the Bible were obviously insane; the most frightening aspect is the knowledge that they have the control of most all broadcasting and newspaper production.

I have just received the news that it will no longer be possible to send out any registered mail from this country, further proof of total bankruptcy within the Western world, but I do not despair; it will in fact bring those of National Socialist Principles together and therefore be beneficial in the long term; it becomes just the time factor for those like myself, born in 1907...

Yours faithfully, J.L., New Zealand.

Editor, The Tulsa Tribune

A considerable measure of blame for the recent murderous, destructive and unjustified riots by the "inner-city poor" in California must be assigned to the electronic media. The motion pictures of the police action to restrain a man resisting arrest were edited (shortened) and presented in a diabolically inciting manner which could have hardly been better calculated to stir up trouble in a situation already made tense by envy.

What was the motivation of the ethnic group which so largely controls American television? We must bear in mind that that component of the American population has a tradition, going back to ancient times, of stirring up dissention in its host populations, as we can read in Isaiah 19, 2.

Now those who are eager to see higher taxes imposed on the more productive components of our population think that they now have a new rationale to advocate increased government intervention in the form of larger handouts, although federal intervention has now long included such economic aid for the "inner-city-poor" as food coupons and preferential hiring, designated by the cynical euphemism, "affirmative action."

In the late, decadent stages of the Roman Empire restive masses in big cities were placated by handouts of grain. To publicize this measure Roman coins were struck during a number of reigns which depicted bags of grain and were inscribed ANNONA AUGUSTI (The Emperor's Grain). As the later, further decay and fall of the city of Rome demonstrate, such measures could not be successful in the long run. We should learn a lesson from history.

Dear Mr. George Dietz:

I enclose a few supplies for your use, along with little music for your time of recreation.

I greatly enjoyed the book by Harold Covington entitled The March Up Country, and will shortly reread it to make sure I've assimilated all of it. Does he have any other full-length works available?...

Thanks again for keeping the banner waving—when I see the Liberty Bell in my mailbox, I burn holes in my shoes racing to grab it; you guys help maintain our sense of humor in these pre-

Dear Landsmann:

5/10/92

Enclosed is my subscription renewal. I will really miss Liberty Bell if it ceases publication, but I can't expect you to sacrifice yourself to put it out. It is only the highest of White traits, the worship of truth, that makes a magazine like Liberty Bell possible.

The big news of the day is the Los Angeles race riots. They are so much like the Detroit riots of 1967 that it is uncanny. Again the police vanished and let the nigger thieves loot and burn undhinderedly. Again the jewsmedia set up the riots with constant incitement of black racism. Again the National Guard is sent to the scene with empty guns. Again law abiding people (Koreans in LA, Whites in Detroit) defended their property with guns after the police abandoned them to the colored mob. There was one new wrinkle this time; according to my source, the black agent provocateurs setting the fires were ordered to wear light colored T-shirts so that police helicopters could follow them as they set fires to see if they were earning their pay!

The news coverage was pretty much the same as in 1967. Lots of BS about "Black rage," "alienation," "poverty" and all that sort of manure. If Rodney King getting beat up by police justifies the LA riots, what does the police murder of the man they thought was Gordon Kahl justify? How about the outrageous decision of Judge Sands in Yonkers to bankrupt the city unless it moved black welfare vermin into White neighborhoods? Why didn't the persecuted Whites burn Judge Sands in his house and kill every nigger they found in the streets to show their "outrage" at the racist verdict? Why didn't Whites take to the streets and kill niggers when they saw black savages assault that White truck driver? Is it only blacks who can riot to show outrage at racism? The answer of the Liberal jewsmedia is, yes, of course. Did you notice how disappointed the commentators were that most of the dead were black?

One thing was different in the news coverage. Last time around the riots were used as a reason to get Whites to pay more taxes to buy off the niggers. It was claimed the riots were due to "poverty" and hence it was the duty of Whites to help the blacks out of poverty. This was reinforced with the implied threat that if Whites didn't, the savages would burn their neighborhood next. 25 years and $3 1/2 trillion later, blacks are still poor and still savages. Not even Liberals could claim any longer that the problem can be solved by lavishing more money on the vermin.

This time the purpose of the riots seems to be to get citizens to demand "law and order" so that they will accept dictatorial rule by the New (read "Jew") World Order. For this purpose nationwide riots are absolutely necessary. I'm rather surprised that they weren't arranged for May 1.

The moral of the story should be clear: have your weapons ready. In case of racial war, the police will do nothing to protect you. At the first sign of trouble, the police will vanish and you will be on your own.

Yours truly, S.R., New York State

Dear Mr. Dietz;

Enclosed is my check for $5.00. Please send a copy of the April 1992 issue of Liberty Bell. If sold out, a printer's "spoiled" copy or photo copy is acceptable, so long as it is readable. I am particularly interested in the articles on Poland and the Einstein Myth.

Since it has been too many years when I last had contact with a Gleichgesinnter, may I continue a bit...

In the late 1970's, I was contemplating a move to Reedy from my then current base of operations in Washington DC. I had gone there to be, somehow, someway, more practically involved in the defense and advocacy of Western civilization! The two major groups for which I labored were disappointments.

I found the political right to be fraught with self-styled "mini"-Führers who bickered and pointed fingers more amongst themselves than tackling the more important, supposedly common enemy. So many idiots adopted the perceived teachings and even mannerisms of the Hero of the Second World War, when all they did was support and give credence to the stereotypes of German and European fascists. They were, as Sir Oswald Mosley so correctly remarked, "dwarfs parading about in the clothes of dead giants."

Disgusted with the small-minded, venal, agendas pursued by these groups, I vanished from the scene, resigned to Spengler's doomage prophecy. The events of the past decade have angered me ever more: Our self-professed advocates do nothing, NOTHING.

White males, the heirs to the legacy of Central Europe, Germany at its very heart (the seat of all culture), have become impotent and almost willing scapegoats for every evil on Earth. Every act of a White male is a form of rape; every malcontent woman or person of color has an automatic excuse for their shortcomings, i.e., centuries of oppression and conditioning by physically and psychologically rapacious White males.

So-called alternative cultures and alternative "lifestyles" are presented as the equal or better of anything the West had to offer. Never mind that these alternatives are often rooted in superstition and primitivism; never mind that the much-touted ideals of democracy (albeit in always tendentious, proto-Marxist versions now) were developed in ancient Greece, before it was "darkened" by sub-Mediterranean invasions. Forget Plato and Nietzsche, Vergil and Goethe, Aeschylus and Shakespeare, Pythagoras and Kepler, Gallileo and von Braun, Bach and Wagner.

Everything has become abstraction, which prevents analysis and thought. A White male is today invariably one or more of the following: a sexist, racist, anti-Semite, adultist, elitist, Eurocentric, phallist, rapist, homophobe—it's interesting to note that last appellation. The "gays" have adopted it as a term connoting a fear of homosexuals. An accurate translation of the word is fear of men, which is in truth the whole story behind the decay in the West.

Unfortunately, the term Western Civilization has also become an abstraction. The names mentioned above are no longer comprehendingly attached to it, their works no longer read and understood.

The best place to see the fate of the West is in the plethora of television ads for spiritualists, tarot readings, astrologists and clairvoyants. Democracy, the great leveler, and the masters of the mass media, have brought us back to the Dark Ages. Fundamentalist Christians (some uncritically adoring of modern Israel) are not staving off the ravages of a civilization gone mad, as they believe. They are part of that Dark Age, as any competent historian or reader of history will know.

Where does that leave us? Only with the hope that Europe, with its experience of fratricidal wars, its infection in part with utopian communism and American degeneracy will recombine into the force it was in the 1940's, when a leader was still on Earth, to strive for a semblance of the future foretold by the most tragic martyr in history.

World War Two was launched to fight the "greatest evil the world has ever known." Nations were mobilized (by whom?) to kill the truth, so that a better tomorrow will be a reality for every miserable human being. The legacy of the victory over evil, the Paradise promised by the Democracies in alliance with Stalin, well, we enjoy it every day: An undisciplined youth which has lost all ruggedness, sexual relations and sexual practices becoming matters of political agenda, a perpetual welfare class which continues to grow, misplaced compassion to feed starving masses in undeveloped regions which does nothing but give energy for still more copulation and the creation of more useless mouths...on and on.

Europe had better come around by 2000, for by then we White males and our families will have no place else to go! We can't recover with a "back to Africa" movement anymore. It must be a "back to Europe" one!

I should have applied for employment with you. You are the one who has managed to endure. Just continue to do what you do, and thanks for having the balls to do it!

Best personal regards, K.L., Minnesota

Guten Tag,

The efficiency of your customer service is superior! You cleared up a minor complication which prevented me from receiving LB, with the ease, effectiveness, and honor of a true Aryan. All of my back issues were delivered Express Mail and the amiability of the Frau I spoke to on the telephone at LB Publications was inspiring.

Upon reading the "Letters to the Editor," however, I got the horrible feeling that LB was doomed. Is it? God, I hope not! I am eighteen years of age and a student, so I have no funds. Please accept this small donation of money and postage stamps.

I intend to spend the rest of my life fighting. I will pick up the flag.

FOR MY LEGIONARIES

The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $10.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the missing pieces of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. (Solzhenitsyn would appear to have not the slightest inkling of who conquered his country!—E.C.) FOR MY LEGIONARIES. Order #02000, single copy $10.00, 3 copies $25.00, 5 copies $35.00.

For postage and handling add: On domestic orders, $1.50 for orders under $10.00, 15% of order total for orders over $10.00. On orders from abroad, $2.00 or 20% respectively. Sample copy of our monthly magazine Liberty Bell and copy of our huge booklist containing hundreds of "Eye-Openers," $5.00. Subscription for 12 hard-hitting, fact-packed issues, $37.00 (U.S. only). KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations.

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

CINEMATIC RÉSUMÉ

A very popular motion picture entitled "J.F.K." has recently redirected attention to the assassination of President Kennedy in Dallas on 22 November 1963. It also stirred up sleeping snakes in the Dismal Swamp on the banks of the Potomac.

Certain facts have been established beyond reasonable doubt:

1. Kennedy was assassinated by a conspiracy that included the C.I.A., Earl Warren, and doubtless many others. There are grounds for suspecting the complicity of (a) Kennedy's brother, Robert, then the Attorney General, who was enlisting "Bobby's Boys" to convert the F.B.I., not yet entirely corrupt, into the Federal Bureau of Intimidation, and (b) Lyndon Johnson, whose ambitions were fulfilled by the vacancy thus created, but there is no solid proof of the plausible inferences. The suggested complicity of various others is (thus far) merely conjectural or inferential.

2. The motive need have been no more than the need to quash the growing dissatisfaction of Americans with the use of their resources to bolster and enrich the overtly Communist allies of the government in Washington, largely aroused by the Indignation Meetings organized by patriotic businessmen in Dallas. It is certain that Dallas was selected as the site for the assassination because it was then the capital of American opposition to government by aliens and traitors. If there was a secondary motive, the most likely of the many suggested was Kennedy's order for the printing of currency that was a re-issue of Lincoln's "greenbacks" and created interest-free debt, thus infringing on the perquisites of the Federal Reserve swindle and depriving our greedy parasites of some usury. This would indicate yet unexplained in-fighting among the ruling gangsters, such as often occurs in the Mafia and other organizations similar to the American government.

3. The assassination was planned and scheduled by experts, but something went wrong and it proved impossible to accuse and convict patriotic Americans in Dallas, as had been originally planned and was stated in the prepared speech that the chief of the Warren Gang read immediately after the assassination and before he could be informed that there had been a hitch in the execution of the plot. Just what went wrong is still conjectural.[1]

4. Immediately after the assassination of Kennedy, a Dallas policeman, J. D. Tippit, was murdered, for reasons that are still unknown.

5. Oswald did not kill anyone and probably did not even fire a rifle. He was employed for some function by the conspirators, and was a convenient patsy when the scenario had to be revised. He was, of course, murdered before he could talk to his attorney by another low-level agent of the conspirators, Rubenstein, who was in turn eliminated when it was convenient, possibly necessary, to do so.

6. Warren was charged with the task of covering up for his fellow conspirators and adopted the obviously spurious explanation that the murdered Oswald had acted alone and without accomplices. Warren may not have been responsible for that blunder; he was following the directions set forth four days after the assassination by Super-Sheeny Nicholas Katzenbach, who was Deputy Attorney General (i.e., officially Bobby Kennedy's second in command; probably his supervisor). The national liemachine, commonly called the media, was given orders to follow Warren's lead, although that was so inherently implausible at the time that no objective observer of even the facts that were then known was deceived by it.

7. A large number of persons who had witnessed the assassination or preparations for it were murdered to prevent them from contradicting Warren's bundle of fiction. For most of the victims, it is now uncertain what was the damning fact they knew or why it was crucial to maintenance of Warren's hoax.

8. Innumerable books have been published to demonstrate precisely how Kennedy was murdered and the location from which the assassins operated. All the hypothetical reconstructions cannot be right, and it would be a thankless task of almost infinite labor to deduce what probably happened from the many inconsistent or conflicting stories and to segregate evidence that was imagined by persons seeking temporary notoriety or hired to confuse the issue.

1. It could have been the arrest of Oswald.

For our purposes, it does not really matter how the conspiracy's agents carried out their assignments. The Warren Commission's report, inherently incredible, has been exposed as a fraud by many facts, but the consideration that is most cogent to the general public is the proof that at least one bullet came from some place ahead of Kennedy, perhaps the now famous "grassy knoll." That, however, is not a crucial fact; it is merely a detail and it does not really matter just where the chief assassin took his stand.

The Warren Report is, in itself, proof that a conspiracy ordered its agents to carry out the assassination. Another conclusive proof, of course, is the fact that it was found necessary to seal up the relevant evidence and keep it, like Nigger King's criminal record, secret until well into the next century.

The popularity of the cinema, "J.F.K.," which our enemies' many teams of professional liars have tried to discredit, largely in vain, has inspired a man fairly well-known in "conservative" circles, Nord Davis, to publish a new edition of the pamphlet, Dallas Conspiracy,[2] in which he had set forth in 1968 his theory of the method of assassination.

An unprejudiced and dispassionate reader will take up Davis's pamphlet with two a priori reservations, videlicet:

(1) He professes to be the chief of a secret organization, the Northpoint Teams, which twice frustrated policies of the government in Washington and once, during the presidency of Nixon, issued an ultimatum that government was forced to obey, but which nevertheless survives to the present day and even carried out a "Project Sheba" that affected the outcome of Bushy's attack on Iraq. Despite all this, it was not liquidated by the C.I.A.! A claim so insulting to "our" great espionage and murder agency necessarily arouses scepticism.

(2) Davis claims that he is protected by a celestial spook whom he calls "King of Kings," i.e., the old and famous firm of Yahweh & Son, Inc. He is also an expert on "Bible prophecy" and can tell you just what passages in that collection of tales show that the Jews who composed or compiled them in the period 500 B.C. to A.D. 300, anticipated what is now happening in the United States and elsewhere.

Davis has no trouble, of course, in demonstrating how spurious was the Warren Commission's hoax. He also makes the valid objection to the film, "J.F.K.," that it disingenuously identifies the conspirators as a "military-industrial complex," thus detracting attention from the real conspirators, the masters of the United States.

Davis has his own reconstruction of the mechanism of the assassination, and chooses as the actual assassin a man whom he identifies as Georges von Mohrenskold, alias George Sergi de Morenschildt, who was obviously an agent, probably of the C.I.A., and involved in the conspiracy in some way, and who was murdered in 1977 when he was under subpoena to testify in a reopened investigation of the assassination.

According to Davis, Mohrenskold was the man who, enveloped in a black cloak, was standing on the curb opposite to Kennedy's automobile at the moment of the assassination. That this man had some function in the conspiracy, perhaps to signal to the assassin that he need not fire again, is made probable by the fact that the magazine Life was compelled to falsify the picture that showed him as a by-stander with extended arm when it republished that picture after Warren's dirty work got under way. This we may grant, but Davis would have you believe that the man in a black coat was blazing away at Kennedy with a silenced machine-pistol in each hand but was observed by no one—not even by the numerous spectators across the street, who also failed to notice that he had just killed a woman who blundered into the path of his many bullets. That is hard—very, very hard—to believe.

I notice this pamphlet for its one significant contribution to theories about the details of the assassination. The currently popular cinema stirred up the rulers in Washington, who don't want their subjects to think about conspiracies. Such thoughts could make the boobs restless. When the liepapers failed successfully to discredit the motion picture, other channels had to be employed.

The American Medical Association, founded in 1847, in the early part of this century fell into the hands of a Sheeny named Fishbein, who converted it into a bureaucracy with a virtually dictatorial power that terrorizes physicians and prevents open dissent from the official propaganda line. It also operates to suppress competition[3] by taking advantage of our enemies' subversion of the law contemplated in the American Constitution, which has, for the most part, been replaced by Communist-style "administrative law." The Association would have you believe that its voice is as authoritative as the famous Voice from Sinai. It may be as spurious.

The Journal of the American Medical Association rushed to defend the mendacious Warren Report with three articles in its issue for 27 May 1992, pp. 2791, 2794-2803, 2804-2807. The two major articles are not listed in the table of contents on p. 2709 and so seem to have been an addition made at the last moment before the issue went to press. We are assured (p. 2794) that the articles provide complete proof of "the 1964 Warren Commission['s] conclusion that Kennedy was killed by a lone assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald." One senses regret that the autopsy in the hospital at Bethesda did not find in the body a bullet signed by Oswald. That would have tied everything up nicely, wouldn't it?

Three physicians conducted the autopsy in Bethesda. Two of them, Drs. James Joseph Humes and "J" [sic] Thornton Boswell were interviewed in Florida by George D. Lundberg, the editor of the Journal. The third man, Col. Dr. Pierre Finch, the "expert consultant" at the autopsy, evidently refused to talk. He was in Switzerland, refused to fly to Florida for the interview, and Lundberg made no effort to fly to Switzerland. Significantly also, the article contains innuendos that Col. Dr. Finch is a timid man and was probably too awed by the persons present at the autopsy to have noticed much accurately.

The two physicians asseverate over and over again that there is no doubt,—no manner of doubt, no probable, possible shadow of doubt, no possible doubt whatever,—but that Kennedy was killed by a bullet fired "from above and behind." Two of their explanations seem to limp badly.

3. For example, it or one of its subsidiaries ordered the corrupt government of the State of Alabama to send goons to close the clinic in Cottonwood, Alabama, that was directed by Dr. H. R. Evers, confiscate the magnificent estate that was given him by grateful patients, and turn it over to a pack of niggers, who, so far as I know, are putting progress into the small town of Cottonwood. Whether the progress has as yet included the virus of the African Plague ("AIDS") I do not know.

1. Humes burned his notes immediately after the autopsy because "they were stained with Kennedy's blood [either his hands were bloody from dabbling in the corpse or the pages were somehow put on a yet bloody part of the cadaver], and I did not want them to become a collector's item [as they would have, had he auctioned them off]."
2. When Kennedy was shot in the head, he, as is shown in a motion picture film taken at the time, fell backward. That was because "an object struck in the rear by a high-velocity missile similar to the one that hit Kennedy always falls forward [their italics] as a result of the jet-propulsion effect created by tissues exploding out the front." If you doubt that, experiment for yourself. If you own a high-powered rifle, it is certainly much better than the second-hand second-rate rifle Oswald supposedly obtained by mail from a bargain basement, and that will make the test the more conclusive. Take a small cylindrical box, such as is used in vending "Quaker Oats," fill it with hot mush, and place it on a convenient fence. (The box, unlike a head, won't be attached to a heavy body, so the test will be stacked in favor of the physicians' theory.) Then drill the box with your rifle and note on which side of the fence it falls. If it falls back toward you, you will deserve a Congressional Medal of Honor.

It is odd, also, that despite earlier reports that Kennedy's brain was sealed in a metal box that subsequently evaporated or otherwise disappeared, the two physicians don't know what happened to it. They think they gave it to Admiral Burkley and suppose that it was buried with the corpse.

There is also one curious item in the physicians' story. They say they detected no symptom ("cushingoid appearance") of the disease from which Kennedy was suffering, which made it necessary for him to wear a strong spinal brace (removed in Dallas), and which was kept in check only by continuous medication, and which, according to some pathologists, gave him a life-expectancy of about five years. This could be significant; see below.

If you are aware of the composition and operations of the vast machine of corruption centered on the banks of the Potomac, you must approve the aphorism that a fish out of water feels like an honest man in Washington. And knowing that official statements on all subjects always falsify the truth on matters of real importance, and that hundreds, perhaps thousands, of well-trained and well-paid "scientists" are available to vouch for any lie that the masters deem expedient, you will dismiss the statement from Bethesda out of hand. In the terminology of "democracy," the fix was on.

It is true that the now voluble physicians offer no explanation why, after saying their piece for the Warren Report, they kept obstinately silent for twenty-eight years, refusing to be interviewed by the countless reporters and others who wanted to question them, and ignoring a flood of books about the assassination, most of which accused them of misconduct of one kind or another—kept obstinately silent until the heat was on in Washington. And everyone will immediately speculate about the various kinds of pressure that can be applied to individuals by the vast machine of oppression to which the American boobs gave their country and themselves.

There is, however, a possible explanation, creditable to the physicians, that may be worth mention. The raison d'état may have been invoked. In 1915, when the British auxiliary cruiser and munitions ship, Lusitania, was disguised as a passenger liner so that it could be loaded with American passengers and used by Winston Churchill as "45,000 tons of livebait," which he successfully dangled before German submarines, the ship was sunk, not by a German torpedo, but by the explosion of the munitions, including a thousand tons of guncotton, in her hold. An official inquiry was held, over which Britain's most eminent and distinguished judge, Lord Mersey, presided. He was informed that the British Empire needed a decision which would state that the Lusitania was only a passenger liner and carried no munitions of war (i.e., one which would help Woodrow Wilson talk the excitable Americans into meddling in the European War). Lord Mersey yielded to the raison d'état, which binds the aristocracy of a monarchy, since the King, by virtue of his position as the soul of a nation, may act legibus solutis for its welfare, of which he is the sole arbiter, and whatever he commands, he may be obeyed without dishonor. Lord Mersey provided the required decision, but evidently entertained doubts about the matter of honor, for, having done his duty, he wrote to the Prime Minister, "I must request that henceforth I be excused from administering His Majesty's Justice." As he told his family, it had been "a damned dirty business" and he never again appeared in public as a jurist.

Now it is uncertain whether the raison d'état would be valid in an ochlocracy, since there is no authority to determine what the welfare of a nation, much less a mere country, requires. And it is equally uncertain whether, if invoked, it would or should be obeyed, but the point is worth considering.

The second article deals with the physicians who received Kennedy's body in the Lakeland Hospital in Dallas. Four of them excuse themselves from answering the crucial question by saying they were too busy to notice whether the bullet that destroyed the brain had entered the head at the back or at the front.[4] They speak somewhat disparagingly of their junior colleague, Dr. Charles Crenshaw, who, in his recently published JKF, the Conspiracy of Silence, states categorically that the bullet which blew out the back of the President's head entered his skull from the front. Crenshaw, you see, is profiting from a book they did not think of writing, and they naturally resent being accused of having been silent when they should have spoken. Whether they were intimidated or put under other pressure from Washington is not known, but it is odd that they spoke up only when the heat was on.

A fifth physician who participated in examining the body at Lakeland, Dr. Robert McClelland, reaffirmed his belief, on the basis of his own observations and the motion picture that shows Kennedy at the moment he was shot, that the bullet entered the skull from the front.

It is obvious that there was hanky-panky in Dallas. It was for some reason deemed necessary to prevent Dr. Earl Ross from performing the autopsy, which it was his duty to perform. The Secret Service, headed by a man named Kellerman, was impatiently waiting and, as soon as the corpse was disconnected from the instruments that had been attached to it, grabbed the wheeled table and ran with it, "all but running over Dr. Earl Ross, the Dallas Medical Examiner." Then, in open violation of the laws of Texas, Kellerman and his crew, who doubtless would have drawn their guns, had that been necessary, rushed away with the corpse, presumably packed it in a coffin for shipment, and had it on Lyndon Johnson's plane, bound for Washington, only ninety minutes after Kennedy was shot. The Secret Service may also have planted the bullet from Oswald's rifle that was found in the Lakeland Hospital as though it had dropped from Kennedy's clothing.

4. They could have added that they were distracted by the presence of Mrs. Kennedy in the room. She appeared almost hysterical and was clutching in one hand a piece of her husband's brain.

The conflict in the evidence could be reconciled by the bold hypothesis advanced by Davis in the second edition of his pamphlet, published, of course, before the Medical Association's Journal appeared. He believes that the body examined at Bethesda was not Kennedy's. He is almost certain that it was the corpse of the murdered policeman, J. D. Tippit, and points out that Tippit's body was first taken to the same hospital as Kennedy's and was then rushed to another hospital at which Tippit was redundantly pronounced "dead on arrival" to conceal the fact that his corpse had first accompanied Kennedy's to the Lakeland Hospital. This raises the interesting possibility that Jack Kennedy lies buried somewhere in Texas. That would be bizarre.

The important point is the possible substitution of bodies. It does not matter whose was the second body. No one seems to know whether Kennedy had a "double" to stand in for him at times, such as Eisenhower is said to have had, on the basis of press photographs that identified as Eisenhower two men whose features were not entirely alike.

Davis has therefore made a very important addition to the chaos of theories regarding the details of the assassination. His deduction may startle you and is not by any means cogent, but it is not in any way impossible. You must never imagine that there is any villainy or crime that your masters are not ready to commit at any moment—and, if necessary, commit with Yiddish effrontery.

The details, about which there is so much heated contention, are, as I have said, relatively unimportant. The crucial fact, now established beyond reasonable doubt, is that Kennedy was assassinated by part of the alien government in Washington, doubtless with the concurrence of most or all of the rest.

Remember that the direction from which one or more bullets came is not of decisive importance. It does not really matter if, perchance, Kennedy was shot from the rear and the bullet that shattered his skull did have a wonderful "jet-propulsion effect," becoming as marvellous as the Warren Report's famous bumble-bee bullet, which went through Kennedy and then turned around to wound Governor

Connally. If the shot did come from behind, that merely confirms the statement of retired Major Hugh J. McDonald of Military Intelligence and former Chief of Detectives in Los Angeles County, in his Appointment in Dallas (New York, McDonald Publishing [= Zebra Books], 1975). McDonald claims that he, acting on an intimation from his friend in the C.I.A., Herman Kimsey, traced and interviewed the assassin, a professional killer whom he calls "Saul,"[5] who admitted that he had shot Kennedy from a vantage point in the County Records Building (diagonally across the intersection from the building in which Oswald was employed) and would have killed Oswald, had the Secret Service men who were "protecting" the President not failed to carry out their rôle in the assassination.[6]

The Journal's editorial on p. 2791 tries to impress the reader by comparing the assassination of Kennedy to the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. That is an association that the writer should have avoided.

The planners in the C.I.A. may have hoped to duplicate the assassination that was a real masterpiece, that of Abraham Lincoln, who was murdered by the very people who had put him in the White House—murdered when he had accomplished the task for which he had been chosen and before he could become an obstacle by trying to carry out the one plan he seems to have had at heart, that of shipping the niggers out of the United States.[7] That assassination, as I have said, was a masterpiece. There were several serious mishaps and it was necessary to murder by mock-trial and execution several persons, including a woman, who had information (we are not sure what) that would have aroused doubts. But for all that, the assassination was triumphantly put over on the gullible American public and brilliantly used further to afflict the victims of the barbarians' invasion of the South, thus both adding to the enormous profits and deliciously slaking again

5. Oddly enough, according to Davis, "Saul" was the cover-name of Mohrenskold/Morenschildt in the C.I.A., but the two men could not possibly be identical. Major McDonald's "Saul" claimed to have been instructed by a cut-out named "Troit," and Davis says that was also a code-name used by Morenschildt. That identification, so far as I know, could be correct.

the sadistic lusts of the contrivers of the foul aggression they made the boobs call a Civil War.

If it is any consolation to you, the relatively botched assassination of Kennedy seems to indicate that there has been a marked decline in the ingenuity and verve of our enemies.

APPENDIX

According to "Saul," as reported in McDonald's book, the plan was that Oswald would appear at the window of the Texas Book Depository and fire several aimless shots to attract attention. Saul, who would already have Kennedy's head in position in his telescopic sight, would kill Kennedy, the report of his high-powered rifle being covered by Oswald's shots. The Secret Service men around the President would then draw their guns and start shooting at Oswald, a target high above them and at a distance that made it virtually impossible for them to hit the mark with their automatic pistols. Until the cover of their fusillade, Saul, who already had Oswald in his telescopic sight, would kill Oswald, and then take his departure. The dead Oswald would be assumed to have been the assassin, and everybody would be happy.

Now, assuming that McDonald wrote in good faith, I am astonished that he did not see what was wrong with that story. Although Oswald would thus have been neatly disposed of, there would necessarily be an autopsy, the bullet that killed him would be found in his corpse, and although Saul was using fragmentation bullets, the fragments of that bullet could not possibly have been mistaken for a bullet fired from an automatic pistol.

We can see the further objection that the intended explanation would not have been the one forecast in the speech that Warren read immediately after the assassination, which implied that patriotic Americans, probably General Walker or one of the business men who organized the Indignation meetings, were guilty of the murder, doubtless by hiring a professional killer, since there would have been little chance of luring one of those men into a position in which he could be plausibly accused of having fired the shot himself.

Assuming McDonald's bona fides, it is likely that "Saul" had some part in the assassination, although not the one he describes. He may, for example, have been a "back up," positioned to kill if the first murderer somehow failed. This would mean that Kimsey of the C.I.A.

deceived his friend, McDonald, but that is no objection. I have described "the business of deception" in Liberty Bell, January 1988, giving a simple but clear example that should show you why intelligence agencies habitually and sometimes necessarily deceive everyone not privy to a given operation—even their superiors. On the other hand, it is quite possible that McDonald, who had close ties with the C.I.A., was its agent in the kind of deception called "damage control." His book appeared when it had become apparent to everyone that Oswald could not have killed Kennedy, and provided an alternative explanation, which would misdirect attention toward a mysteriously unidentified principal in the assassination (perhaps a "military-industrial complex"), since Kimsey is said to have assured McDonald that the C.I.A. was not the prime mover, and, of course, there is no mention of Mossad. According to "Saul's" story as reported by McDonald (and according to all probability aside from that story) the Secret Service was part of the assassination team, but doubtless as hirelings, as was "Saul," but while McDonald's "revelation" would provide an explanation that would satisfy many who had rejected the official tale and would help confuse the issue for others, it was not sufficient to force on the Congress an investigation of the Secret Service. Only the man or men in charge of the Secret Service agents around Kennedy need have been, or are likely to have been, conscious participants in the conspiracy, and it would be interesting to know whether he or they were subsequently made permanently silent.

TECHNOLOGICAL LYING

Long ago, in the era when our race was still sane and specifically in the period between c. 1840 and c. 1860, the new art of photography was practiced by the daguerrotype process, with images recorded on copper plates.[1] That gave rise to the aphorism, true at the time, that "Photographs do not lie."

With the development of celluloid film and printing on sensitized paper, photography became more versatile, and the resources of the new art were early exploited by the spiritualist 'mediums,' intent on fleecing suckers (such as Sir Arthur Conan Doyle). The aphorism had to be revised: "Photographs do not lie, but photographers do."

It is quite easy to produce photographs that do lie. In August 1988 some eight to ten thousand emotionally unstable individuals, calling themselves "charismatics" because they were, or pretended to be, subject to fits of temporary insanity, assembled in Lubbock, Texas, to see miracles. They not only saw the celebrated Mary playing hide and seek among the cumulus clouds, but saw the doorway to Heaven open in the deep blue of the Texas sky, and, being up-to-date, they took photographs of what they saw. The local photographers, venally cautious lest they alienate potential customers, locked their common sense up in a closet and affirmed that, so far as they could tell, the photographs were genuine.

I was amused, because when I was about twelve, I entertained myself for a time by producing photographs that showed suitably transparent ghosts, some pensive, some malevolent, haunting drawing rooms or operating typewriters, dogs (equipped with tinsel wings) flying over housetops or roosting on the topmost branches of trees, and similar phenomena. I had even ascertained by experiment that the ordinary good folding 'Kodak,' preferably of post-card size, with a rectilinear lens was better for my purposes than a more professional model with a faster lens. Needless to say, the negatives of my double-exposures, like the ones made at Lubbock, could not have deceived a professional photographer for an instant.

Trick photography, requiring greater ingenuity and resources, was early developed by the producers of cinematographic films, but probably did not deceive many spectators, who knew they were witnessing a contrived illusion, even if they did not know how it had been produced.

Photographers for the press early devised means of misrepresenting the subjects of their photographs to fit the propaganda line peddled by their employers. Some of the means were quite simple. One remembers a widely reproduced photograph published at the time that vermin were swarming into Selma, Alabama, to harass Americans in that town. Brutal "racists" were shown as they cruelly held down a saintly nigger bitch. One margin of the picture had, of course, been cropped to conceal the butcher knife in the poor dear's hand.

A similar trick was used by the Jews' boob-tubes during the year they worked to befuddle stupid Americans in preparation for the riots in Los Angeles, Toronto, Atlanta, and other cities. They exhibited a short sequence that showed a nigger criminal being subdued by police officers while he resisted arrest. Concealed from the victims of "television" was the beginning of the scene, when the nigger attacked the police who had finally succeeded in capturing him after he tried to escape by driving at a hundred miles an hour on the streets of a residential district.[2] The net result was a photographic lie, although, so far as we now know, the pictures that were exhibited out of context had not been doctored.

We all know about the television films that exhibited the cruel oppression of niggers in South Africa who had been hired to stand behind barbed wire fences and look sad, or were engaged in "peaceful protests" during which they were cruelly used by White "racists," as was proved by segments of film produced in Hollywood and interpolated in the news reel.

But technological progress marches on and makes it ever easier to delude the boobs. In the issue for May 1992 of Skeptical Briefs, which are pamphlets separately published as monthly supplements to the Skeptical Inquirer, Tom Flynn describes the techniques of falsification used in two recent motion pictures.

Actors were photographed as they, suspended on steel cables or supported by steel underpinnings, made motions suggesting that they were flying. The negatives were then given to experts, who erased the images of the cables or steel bars from each frame of the film and filled in the gaps thus created by inserting the requisite portions of pictures of the background. The negatives thus interpolated were then copied by laser onto other negatives, which were technically indistinguishable from genuine pictures. Making such cinemas is a tedious process, since each frame of the original negatives has to be altered, and there are twenty-four frames for each second of action, but by use of this technique lying pictures suitable for reproduction in newspapers or magazines can be manufactured in short order and with photographic equipment that is generally available.

2. I have just been informed by telephone that in one of our corrupt courts a feeble-minded or alien jury awarded the nigger, King, a few million dollars of additional salary for his performance.

Technology, however, incessantly progresses to what is new and better. Photography in the accepted sense of that word, i.e., pictures made by light impinging on sensitized film, is being supplanted by digital recording of scenes with a combined camera and phonographic microphone, barbarously called a "camcorder," which records scenes as 'graphics files' on electronic tape in the way that data are recorded on a disk in your computer. Such a tape was the source of the pictures of nigger King when he was resisting arrest.

As Mr. Flynn tells us, 'graphics files' are "the ideal format for easy manipulation." He is right. I am informed by an expert in such matters that whereas a fairly high degree of expertise and precise workmanship is requisite to produce fabricated negatives that appear genuine, anyone can learn to use the equipment now available for copying video-tapes to erase or replace parts of pictures, just as you can interpolate, delete, or replace words or phrases in files on your computer.

Mr. Flynn warns us specifically, "The days when a skilled photo-analyst could be sure of detecting a distorted image may soon be history. The next Rodney-King style scandal could be set in motion by faked camcorder footage, and the fakery may prove difficult or impossible for authorities to detect."

In other words, the Judaization of photography is now complete. Photographs can lie—and they will lie with increasing frequency. You can no longer believe your own eyes.

A ROSE IS A ROSE, &c.

Although the affirmation of a rose's identity was made popular by a female mountebank named Gertrude Stein, it states a fundamental fact of biology. Poison ivy is poison ivy. Tigers are tigers. And, as I remarked at some length in the June issue of Liberty Bell, savages are savages.

On Sunday, 14 June 1992, a local team of niggers won a basketball game in Chicago. Almost any incident suffices to set off untethered savages, and the winning of a game by a favorite pack of enormously overpaid niggers was sufficient for a riot, which, however, appears to have been spontaneous, rather than planned. Prompt action by the evidently efficient police of Chicago prevented the violence from attaining the virulence of the riots in Los Angeles and elsewhere.

Stores were looted and buildings set afire in the wide area of the city that has been made a slum by the black blight, unfortunately for the firemen who tried to extinguish fires while dodging heavy stones thrown by rioters. Some commercial buildings destroyed by fire were five storeys high, and at least one apartment building destroyed had four storeys.[1] There are hardly any very tall buildings in the older parts of Chicago.

At latest reports, however, our Lord Bushy has not rushed to Chicago to squander a few hundred million dollars to be extorted from his tax-paying animals or to prosecute, in violation of American law, the police who restored order and arrested about a thousand of the rioters.

Some packs of savages naturally thought of revenge on the White boobs who pay to maintain them in comfort. They invaded the select shopping district on Michigan Avenue and the night clubs on the near North Side. They overturned and smashed taxicabs, damaged other automobiles, broke the windows of some thirty buses, smashed the plate glass windows of expensive shops and stole the exposed merchandise, and otherwise behaved as one would expect. The savages in the better districts were brought under control by mounted policemen—a point that all responsible police departments should note.

Throughout the city, about ninety policemen were injured, only two seriously. No deaths were reported, unless a man and a woman who were almost burned to death in a looted and burned store eventually die.

The liepapers naturally minimized the event, concealing the race of the rioters, who were called "fans."[2] The next day, the mayor of Chicago was accused of "racism." The efficiency of his police department was tactfully unmentioned in the prompt accusation, which was

1. I adopt the British spelling as marking a useful distinction between quite different words. The etymology of the architectural term is still uncertain, pending more thorough investigation of the vulgar Latin jargon used by Mediaeval builders.

2. It is probably true that among the rioters were some apparently White individuals so degenerate they voluntarily associate with niggers.

purportedly based on the bigotry of a mayor who did not discharge nasty White swine who held jobs that nice niggers want.

The affair in Chicago can thus be dismissed as a minor incident by those who refuse to see its significance. Optimists believe that when the insurrections in Los Angeles, Toronto, et alibi are repeated a dozen times or more, a simple truth of biology may find lodgement in the pickled mush that fills the crania of the great American majority.[3] Well, perhaps, but let's hope.

WAR AND PEACE

The current (Spring 1992) issue of the Journal of Historical Review contains two articles that have in common questions of what is termed 'international law.'

The term, although historically explicable, is a misnomer. In the first place, there is no international law in the current sense of that word, i.e., a code established by legislation and administered by an authority that can and will punish violations of it. It can be regarded as a 'law' only within the concept of the Greek nomos, which includes conventions of comity and conduct that are universally respected

3. That, however, will probably be too late. We cannot know what plans our destroyers have made; we can only guess what seems possible and likely according to our limited information. One possible scenario would call for a rapid intensification of the nigger revolution against our race during the coming summer to such a point of anarchy and chaos that Bushy would invoke the dictatorial powers he now possesses and impose his cherished "New Order" by importing feral troops, perhaps Soviet Mongolians, as "peace-keepers," who will beat the White boobs into total submission even more ferociously than the niggers intend. This seems to me to call for an excessive acceleration of events, but it may be desired to avert an election in September, which could give signs of the growing dissatisfaction of Americans who are not unconscious.

Few Americans realize that they are living under a dictatorship more absolute than any achieved in by "Lenin," "Trotsky," and "Stalin" in Soviet Russia, the only difference being that our War Lord has not yet seen fit to utter the four syllables, "emergency," and invoke the powers he now possesses, thanks to the utterly unconstitutional "executive orders" planted in the Congressional Record by his predecessors in preparation for the eventual abolition of the United States and the massacre or total enslavement of the mindless boobs who form a majority of the American inhabitants of that territory.

within a given society and, although not sanctioned by legislation, may be even more binding on participants in that society's culture.

If you invite a guest for dinner in your home, you rely on our prevailing nomos and are quite sure that even if the roast is underdone, he will not throw it at the hostess. Even in our disintegrating society, such things are "not done," and they will not be done, even by men who constantly evade or violate legislation of which they disapprove. During the Eighteenth Century there was legislation in almost all Western countries that forbade duelling, but the legislation conflicted with the nomos: no gentleman would ignore a challenge and every gentleman stood ready to facilitate the escape of a duellist who had killed his adversary. The concept of personal honor was far more binding than a government's legislation.

In the same way, 'international law' was the expression of a nomos that regulated relations between civilized states and which was observed because violation of it was dishonorable. The ambiguity of the term, however, plus a recrudescene of Christian fatuity, inspired a multitude of crackpots and scoundrels to devise schemes to make the relations between sovereign states subject to legislation that would curtail a state's sovereignty and thus, nitwits imagined, ensure lots of peace.

The potentiality of notions that appealed to sentimentalists was not overlooked by the enemies of our race and civilization. If you have read the poisonous slop concocted by a Kike who is now known under the Germanic name he assumed, Karl Marx, you will remember that his appeal to the envy, malice, and greed of the proletariat and of mediocrities who want to pose as "intellectual," includes a promise of a warless world as soon as Western civilization has been stamped out. Peace-posh was especially fostered and often subsidized by a conspiratorial organization bent on the liquidation of the United States, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.[1]

1. Cf. the significant cartoon, first published in 1910 and reproduced in Liberty Bell, April 1992, p. 16, in which Andrew Carnegie, the great financier and "philanthropist," is depicted as welcoming Karl Marx to the United States. The plotters of the Endowment injudiciously left written records of some of their deliberations, so there can be no doubt about their guilt, which cannot be palliated by talk about hypothetical "ideals."

From such sources sprang the subversive agitation for a "League of Nations" or a "United Nations" that would reduce the conventions of intercourse between sovereign states to a legislated law enforced by super-national military power, thus abolishing the sovereignty and independence of states and creating the Sheenies' "One World" of universal tyranny and slavery.

In the second place, 'international law' was not strictly international: it dealt, not with relations between nations, but with relations between states, i.e., territories under a single government. A state may be a nation, as is Japan today and as was Germany before 1945, but it may also be a government that rules a multinational population, as, for example, was the Austro-Hungarian Empire, in which a German monarchy and a German aristocracy, to which some Germanized Bohemians, Hungarians, and Poles had been recruited, ruled equably and well widely diverse ethnic groups, which were and still are separated by reciprocal and innate antagonisms, as is made obvious today by Serbian aggression on the peoples of Croatia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina.[2]

The ferocious and enormously bloody Wars of Religion, culminating in the Thirty Years' War, conclusively proved that the Christians' oddly composite god, Yahweh & Son, Inc., would do nothing to help his True Believers exterminate the diabolical servants of the Antichrist (i.e., Protestants or Catholics), and rational men had to come to the conclusion that the tripartite monster in the clouds either didn't give a damn about his votaries or, as was more probable, had never existed outside crude fiction. The superstition still had value for governing a populace, but the European monarchies had to find a reasonable basis for governing relations among themselves.

They naturally revived the Romans' ius gentium, the consensus of civilized nations and states on standards of conduct that permitted and facilitated intercourse between them. This was expounded and elaborated with reference to contemporary conditions by a series of eminent scholars. Hugo Grotius, now better known for his elegant Latin translation of the Anthologia Planudea, produced the fundamental work of

2. It may be worth while to remark that the English pronunciation is Herzegovi'na, with the accent on the penult. The mispronunciation one commonly hears on the radio and television today is Serbian. It may be intended to imply that the province belongs to Lord Bushy's Serbian pals.

'international law,' De iure belli ac pacis (1625). This was prolixly elaborated by Samuel Pufendorf in Elementa iurisprudentiae universalis (1660), and finally, with logical precision, by Christian von Wolff in Ius gentium methodo scientifico pertractatum (1746). This was codified in what had become the language of diplomacy by Emmerich von Vattel in his Droit des gens, ou principes de la loi naturelle appliquées à la conduite et aux affaires des nations et des souverains (1756), which became the standard and universally accepted authority.[3]

It must be noted that, first, international law, as formulated, applied only to relations between civilized nations and states, i.e., Aryans. No one in his senses ever thought it applied to relations with tribes of niggers in Africa or of savages in North America. It could be extended to relatively civilized and firmly established Oriental monarchs, such as the Sultans of Turkey, the Maharajahs of India, and the Emperors of China, to the extent that they were willing to accept its provisions and abide by them. But it was essentially a code of conduct for Europeans.

Second, the code was eminently practical. No state could attack another without a preliminary declaration of war, because no state wanted to be exposed to the danger of a sudden attack without warning. Ambassadors and envoys were sacrosanct, because if they were not, you could not reasonably ask one of your subjects to take the risk of entering the territory of a possibly hostile power. When enemy troops surrendered, you guaranteed not only their lives but comforts in captivity equal to those enjoyed by your own men of comparable rank, because you wanted to spare your men if they found themselves in a similar situation.[4] The white flag of surrender must always be respected, because you wish to avoid the losses and possible change of fortune that you would face, if the enemy fought to the death with the courage of despair. The provisions of treaties, whether public or secret, must be honorably kept until one party to the treaty denounces it (for no one imagines that a state can sign away the right to act for its own best interests).

3. I know not how many hundreds of scribblers subsequently wrote on this subject, most of them trying to promote some pet idea of their own or have their own axe ground at public expense. Near the end of the Nineteenth Century, innumerable volumes of drivel were published by crackpots who jabbered in print about "world peace" and similar niaiserie. As I remarked above, the nonsense was encouraged and often subsidized by our eternal enemies.

4. Enemy officers, being deemed to be gentlemen, were not confined to prisons or camps; if they gave their word they would not escape, they were free 'on parole' to walk about the town, make purchases in shops or taverns, chat with the inhabitants, and accept dinner invitations. How strange all that seems today, when personal honor has been abolished and all but forgotten!

War must be strictly limited and made as humane as possible, because you wish to spare your own people and, if you take territory from the enemy, you want that territory to be undamaged and prosperous, and its population to be content with their transfer from one state to another. War, therefore, is the business of disciplined armies, and wars are to be decided by those armies. Civilians are, by definition, non-combatants, and their lives and property are to be preserved so far as it is humanly possible to do so, to the mutual advantage of both the victorious and defeated states. Civilians of an enemy state are entitled to protection, even from an invading army, unless, of course, they have renounced their status as civilians by taking up arms. Even in civil wars, civilians who do not participate in the rebellion are to be protected, whatever their sympathies. (You remember that during the American revolution, General Gage hanged some of his own soldiers, who had been guilty of breaking into a colonial's shop.) But civilians who engage in hostilities against an enemy army are, in effect, rebels against their own government, like pirates and bandits, and are to be treated accordingly.

Such was the code of civilized decency in peace and war observed by European nations for two centuries. There were wars in monarchical Europe, but none was disastrous. Colonel Hoffman Nickerson, who liked to call democracy l'anthropophage because it devours so many human lives, was fond of noting how small were the armies of European monarchies and how relatively few lives were lost in their wars. He cited the estimate that in 1704, the year of Blenheim (which contemporaries considered a terribly bloody battle), the British Army and Navy decided the fate of Europe at the cost of less than 5000 dead, of which 2000 fell in the four major battles, whereas in 1914-1918 the British Army and Navy lost an average of 200,000 men every year.[5] Thus did democracy permanently impoverish Britain's genetic heritage.

5. See especially Colonel Nickerson's article, "Democracy and Mass Massacre," in the American Mercury, April 1932.

Even after the blood-thirsty conspirators of the French Revolution revived the Christian mania of Holy Wars, civilized nations tried to respect the canon of international law. The first serious breach in that code was made surreptitiously by Great Britain in 1915, when she used armed merchant vessels treacherously to destroy German submarines that observed the rules of civilized warfare. And the last nation that tried to observe the old decencies of combat was Germany under Adolf Hitler.

The crazed Americans did not openly become an outlaw nation until 1945. They respected some parts of the old code. For example, they treated with some consideration the Japanese diplomats who were stranded here in 1941, and they interned the thousands of Japanese who were residing in this country, instead of massacring them, as would have been more in keeping with American righteousness and as they would doubtless have done, had their Jewish masters hated Japanese as much as they hated Aryans.

With so much of preamble, we may turn to the articles in the Journal of Historical Review.

I

As everyone who had access to reliable information at the time well knew, the "heroic French Resistance," so clamorously lauded by the liepapers after the defeat of France in 1940, was really a pack of rebels engaged in a revolt against the legitimate government of France, which, having miscalculated when it declared war on Germany, had been decisively defeated and had accordingly concluded the best possible treaty with Germany to spare the French people unnecessary hardship and suffering. But the "Resistance" was more than that. It consisted primarily of the criminal class of France, hired by British Intelligence and paid handsomely by American taxpayers. The apaches and other professional criminals were augmented by Communist-minded potential criminals among the lowest classes of peasantry and workers, also eager for gold and immunity for the crimes they could at last commit with impunity; and there was a small leven of hot-headed and unthinking French youths and "idealists," inflated with a spurious patriotism or "humanitarianism," who principally served as decoys to be thrown in the path of the German Gestapo while the hardened and expert criminals made their escape.

Even if it had not been composed of such unsavory and vicious creatures, the French Resistance was, in terms of international law, a horde of outlaws, similar to pirates and ordinary bandits, and it is amazing what adulation it was accorded by Americans crazed with Christian righteousness, even before the great War Criminal in Washington contrived open warfare against Germany by surreptitiously mounting a projected and treacherous attack on Japan.

I remember having attended a performance of a play, written and produced by a blood-thirsty American woman in 1941 to arouse enthusiasm for a jihad against Germany. It was full of hogwash about "saving the world" and "the cause of mankind," and one saw jack-booted and ruthless "Nazis," but I now remember only one scene. The hero of the play was a Professor of English in an American university who had contracted an itch to "fight for freedom [sic!]" and deliriously rushed off to join the French "freedom-fighters." I recall only the scene in which he, looking like a wet rat, crawled out of the sewers of Paris (the authoress had read Les Misérables) to help heroic French men and women plot to dynamite a railway train on the chance that some of the victims might be Germans.

After the defeat of Germany, the French criminals and French scum that had waited to join them until it was safe to do so indulged in a vast orgy of murder to sate their innate blood-lust and their hatred of their betters, with the approval of the French revolutionary general, Charles de Gaulle, whose treason had been rewarded with success and temporary sovereignty over his unhappy country. These massacres were euphemistically called the Épuration. Many of the murders were inspired by the hostes generis humani to avenge rational consideration of the Jewish problem, and others were hired by businessmen, large and small, who delightedly found a way to eliminate successful rivals in their business. It has been estimated that about one hundred thousand French men and women of the upper classes were murdered between 1940 and 1946 by the "heroic" criminals of the "Resistance," whom professional liars have taught you to admire.

Years ago, Professor Robert Faurisson, a true hero who has championed the cause of historical truth despite vicious harassment by the Jewish government of France, undertook a detailed study of the bloody operations of the "heroic Resistance" in 1944, i.e., before the defeat of Germany, by just two bands of maquisards in certain communities of just one small district of France, the region around Confolens, a small town of a few thousand inhabitants north-east of Angoulème and north-north-east of a small city of which all Americans know the name, Cognac, in the modern département of Charente, which is directly east of Charente-Maritime, the département on the Atlantic coast, south of La Rochelle.

In that relatively tiny and rather thinly populated area, Professor Faurisson undertook to ascertain the names of the victims of the maquis, the circumstances of their murder, and the lies by which the guilty have with some success covered up their crimes. For example, some residents of the region now repeat the story that a priest who was foully tortured and murdered, probably because he went to the guerilla band to protest their treatment of seven of his parishioners whom they were about to murder, was not a priest, but was a German spy, who had worn a German captain's uniform under his cassock. That story had been validated by murdering the priest's house-keeper, who knew the truth.

Professor Faurisson even ascertained in many cases what had been done with the corpses; e.g., "Ten or so bodies [i.e., ten identified victims and possibly others] are still buried in the 'foxholes' at the old Jayet mill, for exhuming them would mean exhuming a part of the truth in contradiction to the legend that grows stronger year by year."

In this highly detailed study, Professor Faurisson meticulously reports what he learned from each witness who dared talk to him, and he judiciously evaluates each testimony with critical acumen. Some of the stories he was told exemplify a common phenomenon: narrators supply from imagination details they do not recall. For example, one source told Professor Faurisson that a young bride, whom the "Freedom Fighters" seized and murdered in her wedding gown after looting her well-furnished chalet,[6] had been shot "at dawn." Actually the murder occurred at 9 P.M.

6. It took 126 men with two trucks to cart away all the loot. You will have no diffculty in understanding, despite the author's scrupulous silence, why the unfortunate young woman, who seems to have had no political interests whatever, was guilty of "collaboration with the Nazis." The guilt of the owner of what was the most highly reputed automobile-factory in France and many other prosperous and cultivated victims was, no doubt, similarly established.

Professor Faurisson even located and interviewed some of the murderers, who are still alive, flourishing, and feel quite secure. No one, of course, would ever accuse them of "war crimes": they never offended a Sheeny.

Four excerpts from Professor Faurisson's unfinished work were published in the Revue d'histoire révisionniste in the spring of 1991, and have now been translated into English under the title, "A Dry Chronicle of the Purge."

These portions of his study do not lend themselves to summary, and it will suffice to say that the conduct of the "heroic Resistance" was precisely what any intelligent man would expect of the human offal of which it was composed. When one reads the article in the Journal of Historical Review, one must remember that the author scrupulously refrains from inferring even obvious motives when there is no specific evidence for them, and bear in mind that what he reports is only one small sample of the work of the "heroic Resistance," which, multiplied many thousand times, engulfed all France with its terrible hatred of decent human beings.

That, in turn, is a small part of the disasters the American boobs brought upon mankind, which, an imaginative person would say, they are now doomed to expiate.

II

The diary kept by the Japanese General and Prime Minister, Hideki Tojo, after he was imprisoned by the Americans in 1945 and until they murdered him in 1948, has been translated into English for the first time by Henry Symington and General Hideo Miki. It is not easy reading in many places, but you must not unjustly suspect the translators. Tojo was a man of a race whose mentality is fundamentally different from ours, but he was trying to address our mentality (which he probably could not understand), and I feel confident that his sometimes involute discourse was accurately put into English, at least so far as is possible, given the great difference between the two kinds of language.

The "trial" of Tojo, needless to say, was an obscene farce. Not only by international law, but by the innate ethics of our race, the rulers and officers of a defeated state, who fought for their country and nation, are entitled to the respect and consideration that Aryans instinctively accord brave enemies.[7] But the American assassins, sent to murder Tojo, played with the unfortunate victim and subjected him to at least mental torture by pretending, with odious hypocrisy, to be a court of justice and open to reasonable argument.

The murder of the Japanese was probably ordered to provide a kind of simulated counterpart to the even more foul murders that the victorious Americans, reverting to the savagery of the Indians from whom they once took their country, perpetrated at Nuremberg and elsewhere in Germany at the behest of their Yiddish masters.

Well, the really binding laws of nature, from which there is no appeal, cannot be flouted with impunity. Now, forty-five years later, Japan is the foremost industrial nation of the whole world. The United States is a wasteland, ruled by its implacable enemies and filled with biological refuse, and the ruined Americans, their economy bankrupt and their industry destroyed, have become a dead nation, waiting for the undertaker.

7. The fact that the Japanese, like the Chinese and all Mongoloid peoples, were, by biological necessity, the enemies of our race was relevant, but not mentioned at the time, since plans for the liquidation of Americans depended on keeping the boobs befuddled with the Christian hokum that denies biological reality.

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way, Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. Politics of Terror in South Africa

Ivor Benson examines the psychological warfare being used to induce South African Whites to surrender control of their country, and identifies those behind it.

A BUDGET of information we have received from sources close to the centre of things indicates that South Africa will soon be moving into a situation much like that which prevails in Lebanon, Yugoslavia, Azerbeijan, Afghanistan, etc.

So there are shocks in store for those who have allowed themselves to be persuaded that the 'yes' vote in the snap referendum in March means that the whole problem of South Africa's political future has been solved—a false impression enhanced by the partial lifting of international sanctions and the much publicised return of South Africa to international sport.

In other words, the 'yes' vote in the referendum does not mean what it seems to mean; all that can be learned from it is what happens when modern high-tech psychological warfare costing millions of pounds, reinforced with tactics of terror, are brought to bear on an unprotected population.

One of our correspondents writes:

> During the fortnight before polling day something happened which had never happened before. Banks, insurance companies, huge industrial corporations like SASOL (the oil-from-coal monopoly), the great mining houses, etc., warned their employees that if a 'no' verdict was returned full sanctions would be imposed and they would lose their jobs."

There was no way in which the opposition groups could reach the electorate with a response to this threat in the short time before polling day.

The result of the referendum will now have to be compared with the result of a by-election in the Orange Free State mining town of Welcom due to take place on June 17th. The Conservative Party with its public meetings, door-to-door canvassing, etc., will be very much less at a disadvantage in presenting its case to the voters.

Already there are signs that F.W. de Klerk is not having it all his own way. The reception that awaited him when he opened his nationwide campaign was summed up in a poster put out by the Sunday paper Rap- port: "Chaos at Mitchell's Plain during FW visit." This was quickly withdrawn and replaced with another which sought to link the 'chaos' with de Klerk's supposed 'triumph'.

Writes another correspondent who is closely associated with the opposition:

> We are under no illusion. Order is rapidly disintegrating and a realignment of political forces is rapidly taking place. De Klerk's own National Party of in a ferment, giving rise to the possibility of defections and more by-elections, and even of another general election before de Klerk can finalise a deal with the ANC/Communist Party alliance.

He adds:

> The general mood in the Conservative Party after the referendum is one of absolute determination as we face the great troubles that lie ahead. you may be sure that the Conservative leaders are well aware of the arcane international forces which lie behind this onslaught against South Africa.

A correspondent in Cape Town, who had it from a source inside the British Embassy, reports that more than 500,000 South Africans have a legal right to British passports, not to mention the scores of thousands of other post-war immigrants who never gave up British citizenship.

The implications of this are twofold: (1) If the country falls into serious disorder, Britain might have to receive anything up to one million people from South Africa; (2) With so many persons of British ancestry involved, happenings in South Africa can be expected to produce in Britain repercussions, both public and private, of a kind not produced in places like LebaNon, Yugoslavia, Afghanistan, etc.

A Maverick Expelled

The summary dismissal by the Conservative Party of one of its most senior and outspoken members, Koos van der Merwe, "for articulating policy contrary to that of the leadership" confirms other reports to the effect that the CP is bent on achieving a high degree of inner unity and discipline. Van der Merwe had been getting a great deal of media publicity, arguing that the party should participate in the CODESA negotiations. This may happen, but it will be on the CP's own terms.

Andrew Smith, chairman of the Western Goals Institute, London, an organisation representing so-called 'extreme right-wing' groups in the European Parliament, including Jean-Marie Le Pen's National Front, said in an interview in Cape Town that the Conservative Party in South Africa had the full support of all the national conservative parties in Europe. It was their view, too, that regardless of the results of the referendum, the CP should continue to fight for white political self-determination. He remarked of the propaganda for a 'yes' vote in the referendum that media manipulation and intimidation on such a scale had never been seen before anywhere in the world.

Appearance and Reality

As a preliminary to any discussion of the undeclared war against South Africa, which now seems to be heading towards a grim climacteric, one all-embracing generalisation needs to be stated:

The reality of what has been happening is something quite different from what most people have been made to believe it is.

There are many other ways in which such a generalisation can be worded. For example, we can say that what we have to contend with, in trying to understand what is happening in South Africa, and will continue to happen at an accelerating pace, is a structure of falsehood so vast, so complex, and by so many innocently believed, that it is virtually impregnable. In short, it is a world of lies from which few who are caught up in it can escape.

But how could such a world of lies have come into existence? For an answer to that question we need some knowledge of history down the ages, one of the main lessons of which is that great changes in the disposition of great power are all linked with the emergence of some new way of waging war, some change in weaponry and tactics which has conferred on one nation an insuperable advantage over its opponents.

So, too, in our age, the nations of the world have been taken by surprise, caught wholly unprepared, by the employment of forms of warfare, conducted under the appearance pf politics, in which the weapon of major importance is the lie.

The reasoning goes like this: If physical violence can be used as an instrument of conquest, why not also moral violence? Would not aggression be so much harder to resist if conducted secretly under the cloak of amity?

A New Kind of Warfare

What all this amounts to, of course, is the transferrence of struggle to a new battleground of the mind.

Indeed, the expression 'moral violence' more accurately describes the new kind of warfare which has given the world an age of conflict and suffering without any precedent in recorded history.

There seem to be only three lines of action available to those who seek to fight back against a campaign of psycho-political fraud such as that now being brought to bear on the people of South Africa:

(1) They can content with the world of lies piecemeal, disputing or exclaiming against this or that component of it. For example, it can be shown quite easily that Nelson Mandela has no genuine claim to the leadership of South Africa's Blacks; first to dispute that claim are the Zulus, who are the country's biggest ethnic group.

(2) They can introduce new facts into the dispute, or recover and bring back again to public attention information about which there can be no doubt but which is never mentioned again by the politicians and the media, information which could throw more light on the entire South African drama. An example of this would be the retelling of the story of the police swoop in 1963 on a mansion at Rivonia, near Johannesburg, when the entire Communist underground headquarters and the leadership were captured intact—including Mandela. All the Whites arrested at Rivonia were Jews.

Volumes could be filled with information and argument challenging the thesis that the revolution in South Africa is being run by and for the black population, but there could never be enough of it, supplied fast enough, to keep pace with the Great Lie, which, like some legendary monster, sprouts new limbs as fast as they are cut off.

Fighting Back with Truth

Then there is option (3), which is to disregard the 'world of lies' and concentrate rather on boldly stating the truth as we see it, like this:

There is incontrovertible proof that the revolutionary movement in South Africa is essentially a Jewish nationalist enterprise wearing the disguise of a black liberation movement; or, as we have put it before in this service, a "white hand in a black glove." The South African drama is thus a replica of the Bolshevik Revolution in which a Jewish nationalist imperialism passed itself off, with the support and connivance of highly influential elements in western capitalism, as an uprising of the oppressed Russian masses.

Anyone wishing to test the authenticity of statements like the above could hardly do better than begin with Dr. Gideon Shimoni's book Jews and Zionism: The South African experience, 1910-1967, published by Oxford University Press in 1980, in which the story of Jewish involvement in the revolution is told with remarkable frankness.

The main struggle, Shimoni writes, began in 1950, when the Government introduced the Suppression of Communism Act. He goes on:

> Apart from the effect of these dramatic events upon the lives of Jews as white citizens of South Africa, they had significant consequences for South African Jewry as a community. The reason was the extraordinary salience of Jewish individuals in the white opposition to the regime... Throughout this period Jewish names kept appearing in every facet of the struggle...in the radical communist opposition; in the courts, whether as defendants or as counsel for the defence; in the lists of bannings and among those who fled the country to evade arrest. Their presence was particularly marked in the course of the Treason Trial which occupied an important place in the news throughout the second half of the 1950s... Twenty-three of those arrested were Whites, more than half of them Jews.

To top it all, adds Shimoni, at one state of the trial the defence counsel was led my Israel Maisels, the prominent Jewish communal leader.

In Shimoni's books we find Zionism defined as "a progressive nationalism campatible with socialism according to the formula: socialist in content and national in form"—i.e., 'national socialism' for Jews, but not for others.

There are many other books which could be consulted on the subject of the Jewish role in South Africa. One of the most comprehensive and most detailed is Henry R. Pike's A History of Communism in South Africa, published by the Christian Mission International (available from Thinker's Library, Box 23397, Joubert Park, Johannesburg).

The bigger subject of the Jewish role in in western history is discussed in Douglas Reed's The Controversy of Zion [available from Liberty Bell Publications, $12.00 + $1.80 for postage] and this writer's The Zionist Factor, a new and enlarged edition of which is available from Noontide Press, Costa Mesa, California. ❑

by
G.S., New Mexico

Unknown, or unnoticed by the rest of the world, the immensely powerful international Jewish community had severe internal tribal problems maintaining cohesion within Judaism as the 20th Century began. In fact, the forces acting upon the Jewish community were sufficiently divisive that the community was unable to remain united. There were three factions. Here is their story.

The first faction, principally made up of wealthy or upward rising and influential German Jewish immigrants to the United States and Great Britain, as well as older, established, Jews in Europe, can be called the Capitalist faction. These people came to dominate the clothing industry, entertainment (movies, TV, the music business, etc.), department stores as well as many facets of banking, law and medicine in whatever country they lived. One might also call them marginally religious. They developed the Reformed and Conservative branches of Judaism in the United States in order to make Judaism more flexible as a political system. The Orthodox faith had restricted Jewish social and monetary goals too much.

The second faction, in large part Eastern European Jews from Russia and Poland, as well as immigrants from those same countries to America and Great Britain, can be called the Socialist faction. These Jews exist in large numbers today. They are mainly atheists and liberals, and tend to support the forming of organizations among minority groups, using those groups as shields to protect against a rise of anti-Semitism, but also drafting them as allies at the same time. These Jews created such powerful bastions of atheism and socialism as the American Civil Liberties Union, to mention only one of the bewildering number of Socialist/Jewish-based lobbying groups now active among the non-Jewish majority. They have set themselves the task of dividing and conquering the vast majority of non-Jews by splitting that huge majority into smaller, mutually hostile segments which can be more easily managed.

Some of these population segments can be categorized by race (Blacks, Orientals, Hispanics, etc.); some by gender or sexual preference (women's groups, homosexuals, etc.); others are grouped by function (environmentalists, pro-choice factions (the pro-life movement is a backlash against the Socialist/Jewish sponsored movement in abortion), anti-gun groups, etc.). In an odd trading of Holocausts we find that there were 6 million mainly Socialist Jews destroyed during WW II compared with over 25 million dead aborted non-Jewish babies (at last count) in the Abortion Wars between the Socialist/Atheist Jews (plus liberal allies) and their ancient offspring, the Christians. Abortion is the Jewish ACLU's top priority, so look for the death total to rise even higher. And the Jews speak of Holocaust monuments in Washington. Which Holocaust will we honor?

Socialist Jews also formed the core of the World Zionist Movement that eventually led to the founding of the State of Israel. They champion the world of secular humanism, one race, one culture, hopefully no religion. Do you find it hard reading about Jews who are atheists? The majority of the world's Jews appear not to believe in a God even though they are given credit for giving the world the concept of One God. They champion free speech and free action as long as they are the ones doing the speaking and acting. They would like to muzzle the non-Jewish right-wing in America and in Europe, and show signs of making the attempt to define free speech along political lines desirable for them. Look soon to see laws on the books making it a major crime to speak against the Jews or call them names.

The third faction, a vicious and uncontrollable minority among the Jews in the early 20th century, considered both of the other Jewish factions as evil, anachronistic or irrelevant. This group, historically relegated to the fringe of the Jewish struggle to gain a large piece of world control, provided the brainpower and brutality behind the Bolshevik movement of Lenin in Russia. It was Trotsky and Kamenev and Litvinov and Dzerzhinsky (the Russian Secret Police) and Luxemburg and Liebknecht and Kun and thousands of other Jewish Bolsheviks who exploded on the world scene in the dark days at the end of WW I and made the most ferocious attempt at a Jewish power grab in the history of the world until today. These were the Jews who gave us and the rest of humanity the specter of Communism for over 70 years. They were different from Socialist Jews only in their violent means of opponent elimination and their tendency to dictatorial solutions.

Why does the normal non-Jewish person in the street know nothing of these people except rumors if they are as powerful as all that? We know of the lesser figures of our world such as Reagan and Nixon and Ford and Carter and Bush and all the rest of the less powerful. Why do we not know of the true power, in the world? Why is the man in the street so ignorant of the threat from the triple headed gorgon of Judaism? Much of this ignorance stems from the fact that no one dares raise a hand against them. The Jews control the communications and propaganda media at the national level where it counts. Jews make virtually all of our movies, tell us what we are to believe in a multitude of TV programs and talk shows designed for that purpose, create our fads and feed us literary works for those who still read and cannot be reached through movies or TV.

Our children listen to Nirvana and Poison and Metallica, et al, having their heads filled with Satanism and individualism (if everyone is doing his own thing, there will be no group to challenge Jewish power). Through Rock music they teach our children. That monstrous music fad is nothing but a Jewish teaching device, and very profitable also. Find that hard to believe? Who owns and operates all of the Rock music business? Do you know? Look at the management of Warner Records (Metallica) (the Jews Moe Ostin), Polygram (Bon Jovi) (the Jew Alain Levy), MCA (Nirvana) (the Jew Lennie Wasserman) and Capitol (Poison) (the Jew H.J. Maxmin) and the other music companies. All major movie and music companies (hopefully not C & W) are controlled by the Jews of the Socialist/Humanist faction. The world's children know nothing of the Jews pulling the strings behind their singing puppets, but they are getting the brainwashing down pat. Check out our youth's demands for individualism over loyalty to group, family, nation; disrespect for adults and other authority, et al. Divide and conquer, that is the name of the game.

Back to our story. In 1917, the Bolshevik fringe of Judaism rose up and attempted to take over control of the World Jewish Power Base. In Russia, they threw down the gauntlet to the Capitalist and Socialist factions, telling them that the atheistic/radical branch of Jewish Bolshevism was going to beat them to world control. We all know what happened. The Capitalist Jews took 70 years but slowly strangled the Bolshevik Jews and their non-Jewish Communist allies and, through out-spending them, brought the Bolsheviks to their knees. Do you really believe that it wasn't the Jews who tore the heart out of Communism. Silly person you. Of course, the average American and European provided the bulk of the money and legwork necessary to accomplish the victory of the Jewish Capitalists over their now chastened upstart brethren.

The collapse of the Bolshevik Jews in the USSR and their subsequent failure to capture the world Jewish power base can best be noticed in modern history after they surrendered to the outside Jewish Capitalists and became Soviet dissidents in the 1970's. After that, the fall of Communism was a foregone conclusion. Dozens of Capitalist/Jewish and Socialist/Jewish help groups and political action groups came forward to pressure our President and Congress as well as other International powers to aid their now repented brethren languishing under the control of the "evil empire" of Communism. What a bunch of garbage! They made the "evil empire" in the first place. Of course, we all weeped for the Jews under a barrage of media attention for their plight. They merely wanted out of their homespun failure.

There was only one hitch after 1917. For the first time in centuries, a hostile European non-Jewish power faction arose at the worst possible time and, because there was a three-way breach in the Jewish power base in the 1920's and 1930's, this anti-Jewish faction was able to struggle to power and defend their world against the Gorgon. Do you think Adolf Hitler could have come to power if the Jewish Capitalists were not fighting the effects of a world-wide depression at the same time they were fighting their upstart Bolshevik and Socialist relatives for the principle path to Jewish international control? Hitler was an aberration. He was a Spartacus of the non-Jewish world, and he conquered for a while only because his world enemy was in temporary disarray.

By 1941, a coalition of Capitalist, Socialist and Bolshevik Jews had come into being, dropping for the duration of the war their squabbling among each other. Of course, their principle puppet peoples, the Americans, Britons and Soviets were also molded into an unholy alliance of Jewish Christianity and Jewish atheism just long enough to destroy the modern Spartacus (perhaps we should say Arminius since Hitler was a Germanic folk hero), and his resurrected slave people. The Germans breathed a little of the air of freedom after 2000 years, and then the Jewish cloak covered them once more. We now face a truly ferocious and powerful monster, more determined than ever (and with the resources of an awesome communications empire) to keep us under tight, and "loving" control.

Take a look around, slaves! I am not lying. Look who produces your movies, who says what you will watch on TV. Look at who controls your music and publishing. Find out why the ACLU is quoted almost every night on TV, specially on CNN programs. Think, examine, learn, (don't take any leader of a liberal organization at face value—find out who the power behind the throne really is) before it is all too late. The World Community of the Jewish dream is very close to being a reality. They will rebuild and own Russia soon, mostly with our money and their avarice. Take that as a fact, not a prediction.

The Jewish people are not all bad. They look upon us as stupid Goyim, wayward and ignorant children in need of being taught. My findings show that that is exactly what we are. We only need to change the teachers.

Would I like to see the Jewish World Power Structure overthrown? I have never know any other world but one controlled for me by the Jews, never known a blessed day of freedom from their constant interfering in the lives of my people. I wonder what a non-Jewish movie would look like, what non-Jewish popular music would sound like, what kind of programs I might see on a TV network not controlled by the Jews or their benighted allies. Would my people be any good at providing better and more pleasing material? I don't know. I only know that I want to see faces on my people like I see in the old newsreels and documentaries which survive from the very earliest days of Nazism in Germany, days before murder came and clouded over their smiling eyes, and days when the Jewish power was broken for the first time in 2000 long years. None of my people have ever smiled more deeply, or hoped more genuinely, nor had a more stronger faith than they had then. The light of a genuine, not false, freedom was in those eyes, undimmed in the eye of the camera by all these many years since. No amount of Jewish defamation of that light can ever destroy the memory now burning ever so brightly just out of reach. ❑

The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $10.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza, the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. ("Solzhenitsyn would appear to have not the slightest inkling of who conquered his country!"—B.C.) FOR MY LEGIONARIES, Order #06003, single copy $10.00, 3 copies $25.00, 5 copies $35.00

For postage and handling add: On domestic orders, $1.50 for orders under $10.00, 15% of order total for orders over $10.00. On orders from abroad, $2.00 or 20% respectively. THE LOS ANGELES RIOTS OF APRIL 1992 AND THE REICHSKRISTALLNACHT OF NOVEMBER 1938:

Similarities and Differences

By
Charles E. Weber

Historians now have available a detailed and penetrating study of the anti-Jewish riots which took place in many German cities on the night of 9 November 1938 and which are commonly known as the Reichskristallnacht (Reich Crystal Night). That study is the book by the German historian Ingrid Weckert, Feuerzeichen: Die "Reichskristallnacht": Anstifter und Brandstifter — Opfer und Nutznießer (Fire Signal: The "Reich Crystal Night": Instigators and Arsonists — Victims and Beneficiaries, Tübingen: Grabert-Verlag, 1981. My review of Feuerzeichen was published both in the Liberty Bell of January, 1989 and The Journal of Historical Review, Winter 1988-1989. Subsequently an English translation was published in California under the title, Flashpoint. Miss Weckert also summarized her findings about the riots in a paper presented to the Sixth International Revisionist Conference and later published in The Journal of Historical Review, Summer, 1985, pages 183-206.

The recent, extremely destructive riots in Los Angeles can hardly fail to remind Americans with a good knowledge of twentieth century European history of the riots in Germany in November, 1938. Indeed, there are some notable similarities, or at least superficial similarities. There was a central element of racial hostilities as a causative factor in both tragedies. In both cases property damage was extensive. Miss Weckert estimates that of the approximately 1,400 synagogues in Germany (including the recently annexed Austria at that time) some 180 were destroyed or damaged. Of the ca. 100,000 shops and department stores still owned by Jews (nearly six years after the National Socialists came to power!) about 7,500 had their windows broken, (whence the common name for the riots). There were comparable numbers of people killed. In the case of the Reichskristallnacht, one report places the number at 36, another at 91. In the case of the Los Angeles riots, the number of persons killed seems to total about three score. After the riots the leading figures in both the German and American governments were keenly aware of the resultant economic burdens. Göring, for example, was concerned about the loss of scarce foreign currency, since the window glass needed to replace the broken glass was manufactured in Belgium. The Germans were especially worried about the effects of the riots on public opionion in foreign countries, while the California riots can hardly enhance the reputation of the United States as a moral force in world public opinion. In both cases a quite specific act of violence touched off the riots. In the case of the Reichskristallnacht, the act of violence was the shooting on 7 November 1938 of an official of the German embassy in Paris by a young Polish Jew, Herschel Grynszpan, who was apparently acting as an agent of a Zionist organization with headquarters in Paris and who, amazingly, was never brought to trial for his crime. In fact, he survived the war. (The German diplomat did not die from his wounds until after the riots started.)

Important or unimportant though these similarities might be, there are also important differences. Prominent American political leaders such as Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln had long ago recognized that serious conflicts between Negro and Caucasian components of the American population were likely to be a feature of American life in coming generations. The efforts to stimulate emigration of Negroes resulted in the foundation of the American Colonization Society in 1816 and the foundation of the Liberian Republic in1847, long before Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation in the midst of the desperate War Between the States (1863). Even such Negro leaders as Marcus Garvey (1887-1940) also saw the desirability of emigration of Negroes from the United States. By 1992, few Americans, Negro or Caucasian, envisaged emigration as a solution to racial problems. American Negroes have a far more prosperous and easier life than they have in any other country; in Haiti or in any Negro republic in Africa. National Socialism, on the other hand, contemplated emigration of the Jews as a final solution to problems it considered to be engendered by the presence of Jews in Germany. The National Socialist government established agencies for the purpose of assisting Jews to emigrate, especially to Palestine, a British mandate at that time. These efforts on the part of the German government were largely frustrated by the angry resistance of the Palestinians and the unwillingness of the major powers to admit many Jews as immigrants, as the failure of the Evian Conference in 1938 demonstrated. The possibilities of Madagascar as a homeland for Jews were also eliminated by the circumstances of the war.

The riots of 1992 were almost entirly confined to Los Angeles, while the Reichskristallnacht was a tragedy which occurred in many localities. The former were characterized by a great deal of looting, while looting was only a minor feature of the Reichskristallnacht. The American media played a large role in causing the riots, especially the television networks, which repeatedly ran the edited film showing police efforts to subdue the strong Negro with a criminal record who was resisting arrest. German political leaders, on the other hand, knew very well what they had to lose by the riots and swiftly put a stop to them.

The causes of the riots of 1992 are fairly clear, while the identity of the instigators of the Reichskristallnacht remains unclear even to this day. Miss Weckert finds strong evidence that the Reichskristallnacht was the immediate result of efforts by foreign agents, perhaps Zionist agents whose objective was the stimulation of emigration of Jews to Palestine. She believes that these agents might have provoked the riots by means of false orders telephoned to offices of the National Socialist Party in various regions.

The 1938 riots were and still are portrayed as an ugly stain on the National Socialist government in power from 1933 to 1945. They are still emphasized by detractors of National Socialism in particular and of the German nation in general. The Reichskristallnacht was of crucial importance in damaging the reputation of Germany amongst the nations of the world at the very time when Germany was attempting to overcome some of the worst features of the Versailles Treaty. Amongst Germans themselves the Reichskristallnacht had a tendency to dampen the previous widespread enthusiasm for National Socialism and its successes. It remains to be seen to what extent the Los Angeles riots of 1992 will have damaged the reputation of the United States during the coming years. However, export markets are far less vital to the United States of 1992 than they were to the Germany of 1938. ❑

MUST WE DESPAIR?

AN ARYAN OVERVIEW

by

Eric Thomson

How many times have we heard fellow Aryans say, "We are overwhelmingly out-numbered," and/or "We are totally out-maneuvered by the jews," and/or "we are totally dominated and controlled by the Zionist Occupation Government?" And then how many times has the same speaker concluded: "Therefore, the Aryan Race is doomed?" Probably everyone in the Struggle for Aryan Survival has heard this funeral dirge in theme and variations from many of those who say they would like Our Race to survive, but who claim that our struggle is in vain, and have therefore thrown in the proverbial towel and 'withdrawn' from the struggle.

To these Aryan defeatists I would like to point out (1) that no one can opt out of the struggle, except, perhaps, by death; and even this option is uncertain, in view of Our Race's belief in reincarnation, which goes back to our pre-judeo-christian alienation, for it was the inculcation of so-called Christianity which partially severed our roots of racial memory, almost as effectively as race-mixing itself. Wherever we seek to hide in the ongoing struggle, we will betray ourselves, "for the color of our skin is our uniform," as Commander Rockwell said, many years ago. Even Aryan traitors who serve the enemies of Our Race will be dealt with fatally by their non-Aryan masters, once they see that there are insufficient numbers of Aryans to deceive by means of their Aryan shabbas Goyim or frontmen. Thus it is that even our traitors depend upon our survival for their survival. As for the jews, they could not begin to survive in their present numbers, were it not for their wonderful Aryan 'milk-cows.' Imagine, for a moment, if the jews were condemned to live off the efforts of Black slaves, Black 'scientists,' Black 'inventors,' Black tax-payers and Black farmers. How few the jews would be, and how poor they would be, as compared to the hordes of affluent and idle jews presently sustained by Aryan Civilization! This is not to say that the jew will be smart enough to maintain sufficient numbers of Aryans in order to maintain the benefits of Aryan Civilization, for it is in the jew's mad, race-mixed nature to destroy all that is superior, intelligent, healthy, productive and beautiful. The jew cannot fight his own nature, but that does not mean that we must be accomplices in our own extinction. WE CAN FIGHT THE JEW! But this we must sincerely desire to do, in every aspect of our lives and with every fiber of our beings.

I would like to point out (2) that there is no justification for despair. Despair is the loss of hope. The key word and the key to despair is "loss". Our defeatist Aryans are homeless because of their having lost something or their fear that something will be inevitably lost. Let us see what we have lost and what we stand to lose through the actions of our enemies and by the inaction of our fellow-Aryans.

It is well said that a cynic is a disappointed or disillusioned romantic. Some people are disappointed and become prone to cynicism when they discover the truth behind Santa Claus and the Easter Bunny and/or the Tooth-Fairy. Others become cynical and even despairing when they find out that "freedom" does not exist under "democracy", which itself does not and has not existed. Our parents and the schools to which they entrust us can be faulted for the inculcation of these illusions, but once we have become disillusioned, that is no excuse for behaving as lifelong 'victims' and/or political cripples. Once we have a good idea of the kind of world we live in, it is our choice to sink or to swim in it. Those who prefer to sink, should have the decency to drown themselves as quickly and as quietly as possible, so as not to discourage those who are just learning to swim.

The loss of illusions is indeed a gain, if we wish to live as Aryans and not as Asiatic lotus-eaters. Let us look at some illusions which defeatists seem to view as 'losses': We have lost great numbers of Our Race, through the actions of our enemies. We have lost great territories. We have lost and/or lost control of our governments, our religions, our possessions, our freedoms, our way of life. Further losses are threatened on all fronts.

Certainly, the Aryan has not distinguished himself by thinking or acting on behalf of the Aryan Race, any more than the mosquito thought about avoiding DDT. Yes, large numbers of mosquitos were killed by DDT, just as large numbers of Aryans have been killed by judeo-christianity, but the mosquitos who survived the initial onslaught of DDT bred further generations which were increasingly resistant to the poison. I hope that Aryans have a similar capability, which is basically bound up with their desire to survive. Those who wish to survive will purge themselves of judeo-christian poison, and they will see to it that future generations are immunized. Nature is doing this for us, and even if large numbers of Aryans must die, history shows that some will survive to form the nucleus for Aryan Resurgence. We must accept the losses which the Aryan chooses to inflict upon himself. Our Race will be the better for the absence of such people in the ongoing struggle for Aryan Survival, the only prerequisite being the serious wish to survive as Aryans.

Let us look at other 'losses'. It is only true to say that one cannot lose that which one never possessed. How many Europeans are really Aryans, for example? Europe, like North America, is merely a geographical expression. Although most White People or Aryans are to be found in Europe, there are large numbers of Europeans with Black or Yellow admixtures, just as there are in North America. "Aryan" is a biological, not a geographical concept, and it is behavioral! I have observed blond, blue-eyed, fair-skinned offspring of parents I know to be part Black or Yellow. In the book, The Genetics of the Jews, by A.E. Mourant et al., the authors of which are hematologists and jews themselves, they state in summary that "even the blondest jews have from five to ten percent Negro marker genes". Of course, when one adds the necessary Mongol percentage to the Ashkenazim or "White Jews", the Aryan percentage shrinks even more. If "White Jews" cannot be classified as Aryans, then what about non-jews who have similar racial admixtures? Indeed, many people whom we thought of as "White" or "Aryan" may well have been race-mixed with certain predominant Aryan features. The 'loss' of the race-mixed is an undiluted blessing to Our Race, for it is miscegenation which causes "the loss of understanding, and from this, all evil," in the words of our Aryan ancestors who conquered India. Are there any evil Aryans? This we can only discover when we live in a society of pure Aryans, otherwise we may never know!

The behavioral aspect of race is perhaps the most important distinction, and the least studied. Values determine behavior and values emanate from race. Each race has its own peculiar concept of "God". The Hebrew god is certainly congruent with the racial emanations of its followers, who glorify deceit and murderous assaults upon the Hebrews' host populations. The Aryans of European stock have been ill-served by their adoption of the "son" of this Asiatic demon as their "god", for in no way does this "god" correspond to the behavior or aspirations of pure Aryans. Jew authors have said so themselves, thereby adding the proverbial insult to injury, although the insult should give Aryans cause to cease injuring themselves by not adhering to the alien creed of judeo-christianity. Whenever you see outwardly-appearing Aryans behaving like hysterical dervishes in judeo-christian churches or playing thunderous "rap" as they drive down the street, please consider if this can be Aryan behavior. Since it is not, can we consider such people as Aryans? I do not. If I cannot think and live as an Aryan, then I care not if my tormentors are blond, blue-eyed and fair-skinned. And here is the essence of Our Struggle: It stems from the undeniable wish to live according to Our Aryan Values. These values are innate and they emanate in everything we do, say and think. The jew can feel these emanations and he reacts with hysterical hostility whenever he encounters them. "What did I say wrong?" thinks the innocent Aryan. It was not what you said, but who you revealed yourself to be, that drove the jew into his fearful frenzy. We are engaged in a cosmic struggle of BEING, of which the jew, but not the Aryan, is fully aware. In order for the Aryan to become aware, he must first be wakened. Aryans must cease their dreaming in jewsmedia fantasy-land.

The huge territorial 'losses' suffered by the Aryan Race need not be permanent. The collapse of Aryan Civilization will produce a population crash amongst the huge numbers of non-Aryans who presently feast upon it. As for "losing control of our governments", we must first make sure they were 'ours' to begin with. Speaking as an American with two ancestors who signed the so-called Declaration of Independence, I can honestly and objectively state that its major premise: "that all men are created equal", is mischievous nonsense. Not even Aryans are created equal, from conception onwards. Why did my ancestors sign this nonsensical document? Perhaps they were drunk at the time or perhaps their minds were clouded by judeo-freemasonic hypnosis. This only reveals that Aryans are not gods, nor are they perfect; otherwise they would not have got themselves into their present dire straits. Perhaps they were just not very bright! In other words, from its very beginnings, the United States was established upon the grounds of an alien and erroneous philosophy. Today we can see the logical outcome of that nonsense: Affirmative Action or 'enforced equality', which is the ultimate nonsense.

It was this fallacious preamble of 'equality' which was the 'original sin' or 'fatal flaw' in the foundation of the United States and it was further compounded by the Constitution which was touted as "a government of law, not of men". As we know, law is a statement of values and values emanate from race. This is what White people are being taught by Black People in Los Angeles and in other U.S. cities. Under whose laws will we be governed? White laws can be fully applicable to White People, but there 'must be exceptions for Blacks,' sufficient for them to be 'above the law'. The Blacks are teaching the Whites a very important lesson, and I hope the Whites are paying attention!

The second sin in the establishment of the United States was in the judeo-freemasonic founders' insistence that laws could substitute for racial and individual quality. The Constitution, like money, is only as valuable as the people who back it. If the people are worthless crooks, then no bit of paper will correct the situation which such people bring about. It is people, not laws, who make the difference. By insisting otherwise, the founders of the United States are guilty of hubris, that arrogance which offends the gods and nature, similar to that depicted in the Tower of Babel Fable in the jew-book. We have seen one unwieldy judeo-monstrosity fall asunder: the Soviet Jewnion. There is one domino remaining: the Jewnighted States. Its collapse will be the rescue of the Aryan World Remnant, and the sooner, the better. The United States was never 'ours' to begin with, so how could we Aryans ever 'lose' it? As for "Christianity" and its poisonous splinter sects, that never was ours, either, and its 'loss' to non-Aryans is a healthy thing for Our Race.

The loss of our freedoms and our Aryan Way of Life, such as they have been, are in direct proportion to the diminution of Aryans in the general population. To regain these important aspects of Aryan behavior, we must naturally seek out fellow Aryans in order to form Aryan communities. If we do not do this, then we must be prepared to exercise our Aryan values as best we can, in isolation.

Many, if not most, Aryans seem to fear the loss of their material possessions and their means of gaining such things. The Zionist Government of the United States does not recognize anyone's "right of ownership". If you are surprised by that, it simply means you have not read the newspapers. Any person accused of illegal activity and/or tax evasion can be dispossessed of all his property and personal possessions. He and his relatives can be stripped as naked as jaybirds, any minute of the day, by armed bandits of the United States Government and/or lesser jurisdictions. It is all "perfectly legal". The rule for knowledgeable Aryans, therefore, is to possess nothing which you cannot defend. As unorganized as we Aryans are, that is all we can defend: Nothing. If Aryans love their possessions more than their race, which seems to be the case, they may one day decide to organize themselves politically on behalf of their TV sets, refrigerators or beach-buggies. If not, then they love their possessions no more than they love their race and the loss of something one does not love is no loss at all.

Aryans, like members of all races and parts thereof, fear losing their lives; yet, reality-prone Aryans know that the loss is inevitable. Worst of all is the loss of health before the loss of life. That is why Aryan Odinists prayed for death in battle, rather than "a straw death" or dying in bed, which was not only often more painful, but considered shameful. They clearly valued a life of good quality, however short, to one of dreary servitude, however long. German Aryans have a wise saying: "Better a horrible end than an endless horror." Perhaps the most recent proponent of Aryan-thinking was Patrick Henry, who said, "Give me liberty or give me death!"

Aryans, being the most 'human' of races, are therefore among the most adaptable. We were not born with thick-skins, fur, long fangs and claws, so we had to invent substitutes which turned out to be much better. The circumstances in which we find ourselves, besieged by the Hordes of Zion, in our own societies, demand of us our best in terms of adaptability and moral courage; that is, for those of us who truly wish to survive as Aryans. Those who survive this onslaught will be Aryans indeed! ❑

Dear Mrs. Franz:

I read your letter on the role of the television networks in destroying our country. Enclosed is an article [see Liberty Bell, June 1992, pg. 25] which I wrote recently on that topic.

I would not deny that there is a moral question with regard to abortion, but I believe that you might be missing some of your most important arguments against abortion. To me, the most important "bottom line" in the abortion question is the possibility that abortion during the past 20 years has had a dysgenic rather than eugenic effect on the development of the American population. There seems to be some disturbing evidence that points in that direction, such as the declining test scores of American pupils and our declining ability to compete in the world markets of manufactured goods.

I have the impression that American women with good genes are killing their fetuses at a far higher rate than women who should not be bringing children into the world. There are probably a number of social and economic factors involved here, such as heavy taxation of the more productive and orderly components of our population and a welfare system that favors the reproduction of the least productive and orderly. The recent riots in Los Angeles might well be a further piece of evidence that abortion is having a dysgenic effect. I advocate sterilization as an alternative to abortion, especially in the case of mothers on welfare.

Dear Editor:

The following excerpt translated from Dr. Goebbels, A Portrait of the Propaganda Minister, by Friedrich Christian Prince zu Schaumburg-Lippe (Arndt-Verlag, Kiel 1990, page 27) is my answer to the writer on page 59 of the May 1992 Liberty Bell:

In a speech to civil servants of his department—quite early during his tenure as a cabinet officer—when the Party would find such deliberation "soft", Goebbels said:

"The best propaganda, ladies and gentlemen, is when we are trying to do good, as much as possible, simply doing good—regardless of any politics—apparently without any political background, and without any regard to how those whom we are helping are politically orientated. Believe me, well-known Christian charity is the most effective propaganda method—in the long run only when it is, in fact, applied solely for the sake of our neighbors/acquaintances, and for the sake of love—not because of any personal interest or a means to an end.

"Undebased good will in the end always has good results—just as the bad deed will never be without setback. For ten long years I have believed that we can come to power by legal means if we indeed "will" the good and thereby win love, charitable love—conscious of our Volk community. Thereby, and only thereby, did we achieve gaining, and soon gained, those as our comrades who, by their suffering, had become the loneliest—for them love and community meant the most—they had been the most chased after and were the most grateful. Captains of industry will not be affected by it, but millions of communists have been led back to a positive outlook on life and thereby back to our Volk. They understood it and became National Socialists, or not—we have helped them, they will never forget. That was the only way we could confront communism—this was more important than the conquest of the power of the State, it was the conquest of power of the hearts of the lonely.

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed is a money order for $150.00 to renew my subscription and a little extra to help out. I certainly hope you can survive as a publication and continue to provide an outlet for the ideas and writings of the many outstanding thinkers who are ignored or ostracized by establishment publications.

Sincerely, T.K., Alaska

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Due to my move from Arizona back to Germany, my subscription lapsed. However, I do not want to be without Liberty Bell, the only truthful political magazine.

So please find enclosed my check for a one-year air mail subscription. Again, congratulations on your work and I hope it can continue for a long time.

Yours truly, Miss C.S., Germany

Dear Sir:

My check for LB renewal and a donation is enclosed.

My husband passed away in October 1991, suddenly. He was a great patriot and Liberty Bell was his favorite publication. He admired Revilo P. Oliver and you.

Sincerely yours, Mrs. F.D., Washington

Dear George:

I enclose some more provisions for your struggle against the foolishness of modern times.

This past weekend I saw a copy of Grimm's Volk Ohne Raum at an indoor flea-market in Pennsylvania, but as the merchant saw my eyes bugging out of my head, I didn't feel that I was in a good bargaining position! Next time I go I'll keep my enthusiasm totally to myself, and I'm sure I'll have better luck.

There's is one writer I hear about occasionally in the literature on National Socialism named Christop Steding—that Chosenite "historian" Fritz Stern describes him as "the idol of young National Socialist Historians." I believe that Steding died at a very young age, but wrote a theoretical treatise on modern Euro-Politics entitled Das Reich und die Krankheit der Europäischen Kultur. I'm fascinated by all these Fascist philosophers who seem to have fallen through the cracks of history, solely due to the ill-fortune of arms. I'm thinking of, among others, Klages, Schuler, BBaeumler, Kolbenheyer, Drieu la Rochelle, Bardeche, Brasilach, Josef Weinheber, etc., etc. I just want all of our intellectual soldiers armed and prepared for "The Day That is to Come."...

May the gods keep you.

Yours truly, J.P., New York State

Dear Sir:

Is David Duke really the great "hero" American patriots have been led to believe? A closer look at the man may be in order.

David Duke ended his campaign for Governor of Louisiana with several hundred thousand dollars "left over." In the final week of the race he allowed himself to be outspent on radio and TV by at least 100 to 1. Patriots were led to believe, "Edwards and the Zionists have more money." That is true. However, Duke still had a considerable sum and he was spending it to defend himself!

Duke decided to run for President. In the next three months he did not send out a single request for funds! He then withdrew from Maryland because he "did not have enough funds."

What did he do next? Duke flew to the Massachussetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island area and threatened to sue everyone if his name was not put on the ballot! (It is interesting to note that Duke was never expected to do well in these liberal states, but was expected to do well in Maryland.)

After months with no request for funds, he finally sent out a letter requesting $1,000,000 in support. What did he do next? He quit the race!

For years American patriots have been led to believe political campaigns were a great way to "educate the public"...they are. What has David Duke down to educate the American people of the past few years? He says his past was a "mistake" or a "youthful indiscretion." He has not said one word against Zionism! Is this the man who is going to save America?

Sincerely, R.E.L., Connecticut

Dear Editor:

After reading about the Odinist group in your publication several months ago, I sent them money for a subscription. Here is a message for your group about the Odinist.

This group is just as weak and pathetic as Christianity itself. They are just as straight-jacket bound to dogma as Judaeo Christianity. Their message is one of weakness and subordination.

The champions of the White Races, ever since the ancient world, have lived and died by the creed of strength; the Sword. Look at the heroes of the Iliad, the Odyssey, the Aeneid, the Spartans, the Romans, and the Teutonic Knights; all historic warriors of the White Races.

Thor, like Zeus, Apollo, and Jupiter, were the Aryan gods of war and strength. They represented the Sword. The history of the Aryan races from time immemorial is one of brutal conquest, which is perfectly healthy and proper. In real life, might is absolutely right. Now the White Races use bombs and fighter planes instead of swords. Life for the Aryan races is kill or be killed. This is a fundamental law of nature. The Odinist ideology of "live and let live" is just as pathetic as Christianity.

The struggle for world conquest was once that of the diverse White Races. Now this initiative has been lost to a race of non-whites who, through their religion, have risen to World Masters using the idiotic white goyim herd as their slaves.

At the hands of these World Masters, the white herd in America has sentenced the White Races throughout the world to indescribable atrocities at the hands of these aliens and their Negro and colored, non-white murdering savages.

What will their Odinist reaction be when the coloreds repeatedly gang-rape their daughters into unconsciousness? Maybe they'll pray to Jesus or whimper a little Odinist prayer.

The history of the Bolshevik Revolution and the Communist regimes after WW II have demonstrated the cruelty and blood-lust of these alien World Masters who will soon orchestrate the slaughter of the White Races. (The White Races are a minority on planet earth.) The White Races' past is their future. It is all spelled out in the history books. What is about to happen to America has happened time and time again throughout history. Read about the death throes of America in the histories of ancient Rome, Greece, and Egypt.

The Odinist group is so closed-minded that they deny any ties to "racists" or the "Nazis." Yet their Sun-Wheel emblem is nothing more than a weak representation of the Swastika and the Iron Cross. These symbols are the true Sun Symbols of the ancient Aryans. The White Races from distant times have always used these signs of the Sun. Even the tau cross is a symbol of the Sun. The White Races adopted it after succumbing to the mental degeneracy of Christianity.

Dear Editor:

I would like to make a few comments on National Vanguard's new book called Serpent's Walk.

First, there is no secret, hidden wealthy underground "Nazi Network" that will save the White Race in America. The National Socialist Party died in 1945. If there were such a group still existent, it would be closed to the average white American for security reasons; and justifiably so.

Second, the book is replete with "Deues ex machina" solutions to impossible conditions. One solution contained in the book is the "Zombie Pill." The hero swallowed it just in time to be able to survive the worldwide-biological-germ-warfare-holocaust and wakes up afterwards to champion the White Race's struggle to survive. Right! I'll sell you a bridge if you believe this one. There are no such easy solutions in the real world.

Third, the books philosophical segments are crudely written propaganda. The message is good, but the method of delivery is a sour pill at best. The author insults the female intellect when he attributes this propaganda to the heroine.

Last and most importantly, the book's "soft-sell" approach to what the White Race must do in order to survive is unrealistic and disarming. The days of soft-selling the survival of the White Race are long gone.

The above shortcomings are dangerous. They give a false sense of security. The readers may think there is an easy "Deux ex machina" solution to a desperate situation, and that this will save them from the approaching horrors.

The reality of the struggle for the White Race to survive the upcoming real Holocaust is far too extreme and cruel for such pipe-dreaming as found in this book.

National Vanguard does deserve your support however. They have the courage to go on worldwide shortwave radio and speak the truth. Their shortwave program is on every Saturday night on 7355 Mhz at 1900 hours Mountain time. They will knock your socks off talking about the White Race, the Jews, the Negroes, the ADL, the Communists, and the New World Order. No one else is doing this. My hat is off to them, and I can only wish them the best of luck before they are fire-bombed out of existence. Listen in before it is too late!

Sincerely, Publicus Prudentis

LA RAZA

Arguments should not follow if one believes that "in the beginning there was the word (God)" or if one believes that "in the beginning there was hydrogen". One might believe that life miraculously popped into existence in some stupefying manner by the command of some awesome entity. One might believe in a nearly infinite number of improbable random collisions of inert particles that somehow miraculously "evolved" into life. No matter what your undemonstrable opinions might be, we can all agree that it was a one shot deal triggered by something we can never hope to understand. I call this undefinable whatever "God". No matter which piece of Gibran's mirror you hold, we undoubtedly agree upon many observable things.

God did not create mules. Mules are mongrel animals that would result from the unnatural act of a male donkey copulating with a female horse. God did not create hinnies. A hinny would result from the anti-God act of copulation between a male horse and a female donkey. God intended like to beget like and it is all spelled out in the "Word of God" book that Hypochristians blather about but pay no attention to. In the wild state, no donkey would ever choose a horse and no horse would ever choose a donkey. The producers of these critters resort to artificial means. Moreover, no stallion would ever attempt to stuff his member into the rear of another stallion. An act of that sort is also anti-God or anti-nature if the word "God" offends you. Life forms that produce quasi-clones of themselves are life forms that were created according to some hypothetical bang-bang. Zebras mating with zebras produce zebras with stripes, identifiable blood types and whatever, all within the same classification. Blue-eyed, fair-skinned Northern Europeans, produce blue-eyed, fair-skinned offspring. Zulus mating with Zulus produce Zulus with recognizable eye color, skin texture, body odor, etc.

In my boyhood home town, we had a strange fellow who would copulate with heifers. At that time, he was found guilty of a perversion and was sent to jail. Today, he probably would be displayed on the Larry Kink Show or elected to Congress. In any event, he would just be compelled, by his goodness, to write a book describing all of the culture expanding details. Also, there was the daughter of a school teacher who was reported to have habitually enticed her Collie into sex relations with her. A friend of mine, living in La Habra, CA, said he witnessed a woman and a donkey copulating as part of a tourist attraction in beaner land. Faggots are also part of this unnatural circus. There is a natural order to things and faggotry, miscegenation, sodomy, and so forth, is not part of it. If you are a Bible buff, you'll be able to find it all within the pages. It appears then, that certain males throughout history have had some sort of abnormal drive to "catch a sheep running uphill", play "drop the soap" or "get some head". Because it is possible, or even permissible, does not make perverted behavior normal or natural. Anything against the natural order of things is anti-God. If you want to know what the natural and orderly world is all about, you should spend considerable time in a state of absorbing observation. The animals will teach you something.

Miscegenation, between blacks and whites for example, produces a mongrel which cannot reproduce the gene frequencies of either parent. This type of mongrel (we call it a mullato(a)) belongs to neither race and is therefore outside the pale of normality or naturalness. Mongrels, the mamzers of the Bible, are the products of bipeds who lacked (or were mentally deranged) the natural desire to mate with their own kind. Throughout the ages, this flagrant and nihilistic behavior has led to a world filled with mud peoples that defy description, much less classification. Left to themselves, they would have been weeded out by natural episodes much in the same way as defective gazelles are weeded out by wild dogs and starvation.

God created races. Man "created" mongrels. The typical jew, according to Prof. Mourant (The Genetics of the Jews, 1978), has 5 to 15 percent black lineage with a varying mixture of yellow and white lineage. This is verifiable through the science of blood analysis. Benjamin Franklin called the jews "oriental" and most rabbis admit that jews do not belong to the white race even if Pat Robertson and other "Christians" think so. The jews are the ultimate mongrels and, of course, can belong to no race. The "jewish race" is a meaningless expression. Mongrels are not the product of God and therefore, any claim to be "God's chosen" is absurd on the face of it. If God ever lowered Himself to talk to any of those TV charlatans, He'd agree with this.

The activities of created forms also lend themselves to classification. Salmon exhibit behavior peculiar to them as do eagles and coyotes. This is also true of the races of man. White people are not static. They continually manipulate the environment with one technological advance followed by another. Thus, we see continued sophistication in the development of machines and a never ending sequence of astonishments from lasars to manned flights to the moon. These accomplishments should be sufficient to demonstrate that the white race is apart from the rest of mankind by virtue of its creativity. No other race, if left to themselves, would ever follow these paths. The black man, unassisted, would never advance beyond mud huts and spear chucking. The yellow man, with nothing to copy, would reach a higher plateau than the black man but would forever be a slave to his genes and thus be relatively static. Mongrels, like the jews of Israel, are not viable and would perish without outside assistance. Israel can not exist without massive assistance from the white societies. If they really were "chosen", they'd be in a Garden of Eden instead of a wasteland.

The white race is its own enemy. Perhaps twenty percent of it is unrecoverably degenerate. Over half of it suffers from some sort of delusion. Most of it has adopted the behavior of the world's most successful mongrel–the jew. Indeed, most whites now look to the jew for guidance. They have even adopted the jew "scientific" method–start with a conclusion and then select the data to fit it. Even as I write, the SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test) is being revised to support the erroneous conclusion that blacks and whites are equally intelligent. The black had nothing to offer (and still doesn't) over the past thousands of years, other than the Dark Continent. Our inner cities are little more than jungle enclaves which demonstrate what the black man produces and considers desirable. Our anti-white federal government must use force and threats of force to impose unnatural conditions upon the society. It is this unnaturalness and unwholesomeness that has doomed present day America. The evidence abounds and only the weak escapists, drowned in drugs or Jesus joose, fail to notice.

"Saving America" and "saving the white race" are exercises for the foolish which fatten the purveyors of "did you know?" literature and the promoters of useless "holocaust debates". More damage is done by the "Jesus was a jew" and the "turn the other cheek" blather of the Hypochristians than could ever be done by six million courses in holocaust studies or a millennium of "black history" months. What this country needs is a good five cent baseball bat.

A Brooklyn Boy Is Exposed to the Führer

by J.P., New York State

While growing up in the fifties I never heard Adolf Hitler's name mentioned. I mean not once. And this is especially surprising in view of the fact that my father was a war-hero (Silver Star, etc.) in the North Italian campaign, whose outfit was mentioned in [Field Marshal] Kesselring's War Memoirs. So my first exposure to Hitler, that "baleful," "manical" prophet/god didn't occur until the Sixth Grade, when our ideological instruction in the evils of Fascism was undertaken by a teacher who, to put it mildly, miscalculated her effects. Without any verbal preamble, we where shown a clip from what I realized many years later was the great [Leni] Riefenstahl's "Triumph des Willens" [Triumph of the Will, available on VHS video cassette, $50.00 + postage, from Liberty Bell Publications]; the clip contained a somewhat tense scene in which a strange man with hypnotic eyes harangued some soldiers outside in a stadium flooded with a peculiarly garish sunlight. I didn't realize at that time, of course, the reason for the tension (namely, the recent S.A. purge), but the net effect of this film on the class was to incite all the boys to strut around for days afterwards, vainly endeavoring to mimic the Master's hoarse delivery, in a comically bogus German, made up almost entirely of gratingly harsh consonantal growlings, and hissingly exaggerated sibilants. The teacher, needless to say, was appallled at this incipient hero-worship, and so, no more films were shown.

Next, we were treated to an avalanche of sequipedalian fustian and hooey about the grisly and disgusting boches, with their beer, bratwurst, balderdash and well-honed homicidal skills. What's more, we were told that all of Germany's history was a series of cannibalistic feastings and ravings (this was, after all, before the farcical enthusiasm hooples nowadays display for Hate-Crime legislation—still it seems as though nothing will ever get the Germans off the hook. Nothing, that is, until the American National Socialists clean out the Augean stables here!). In fact, with regard to this notion of Hate-Crimes, I have a theory which entails a steady-state quantum of hatred at any one time. The only suspense involved concerns just who gets the pie in the face, or, when the mob is exceptionally roused, the boot in the scrotum.

As I say, the verbiage piled up faster than cow-chips at a Cabinet meeting, but the script-writers could never seem to get their act together: Hitler was, we were informed, at one and the same time, a housepainter, portrait-painter (untalented), imbecile, a genius (evil, of course!) jackass, superb logician, mystagogue, hypnotist, hypocrite, common man, elitist, anti-capitalist, stooge of capitalism, doctrinaire socialist (this, of course, from Conservatives), and destroyer of all righteous socialist Utopias (this, conversely, from superstitious Marxists), puritanical dry-as-dust and sexual deviant, master manipulator and servile pawn etc., etc., ad nauseum.

Of course, the problem faced by Hitler's detractors was, and still is, one of Ideal portrayal: if he was a genius/madman, he will be perceived as fascinating; now we can't have that, for obvious reasons! But, on the other hand, if he is painted as a fool and a dupe, then we simply cannot account for his career. Problems, problems.....

Now those Revisionists who keep treating Hitler as if he were a passerby, innocently buried under the avalanche of September 1939, should bear in mind that the only pure victim to exert an enduring influence on the history of the West was Jesus, called the Christ; but then his disciples claim that he was also the Creator of the Universe!

Well, it was another eleven years before I began to examine Hitler's life and career systematically. By that time, I was ready for the encounter—as Christians say, I had found God. And I realized that the hoarse voice and theatrical mannerisms resulted from an entirely justified anger, and I found that I began to share that anger.

Which I am more than happy to share with you.

The Color Of Aids

by

Ernst Kisgud

From the start of the AIDS epidemic and the beginning of statistical tabulation of the disease in the USA it has been evident that the black race and other people of color have a disproportional representation. As of February 1992 the score is, according to the CDC, Whites 113,444 all others 96,599. It is well to keep in mind that these numbers represent reported cases and do not necessarily reflect an accurate count. The numbers do not account for about 15 to 20 percent of the AIDS cases that are never reported, because deaths by AIDS patients are often covered-up by family doctors and hospitals or attributed to other sickness. Also keep in mind that Jews are counted as whites.

While much of the publicity in the media presents AIDS as an equal opportunity disease, it's hitting members of minority communities in an unequal and potentially devastating way. The following chart shows the annual incidence rate per 100,000 population of selected cities and states.

State	Rate	City	Rate
New York	43.9	New York	79.4
New Jersey	28.5	Newark	50.3
New Jersey	28.5	Jersey City	73.8
California	27.48	San Francisco	122.0
Florida	42.1	Miami	101.7
Georgia	21.2	Atlanta	36.3
Puerto Rico	43.7	San Juan	52.8
Metro Wash.DC	33.4	Dist.Columbia	117.1

Source Center For Disease Control, February 1992

Anyone with even a slight knowledge of demographics is aware that the above cities have a large population of minorities. The minority communities are the hardest hit. This fact is being reported over and over again.

In June 1992, the National Aids Commission reported that Puerto Rico has the second highest rate of AIDS in the nation. In the last ten years AIDS has become the leading cause of death in Puerto Rico for men ages 25 to 44 and women ages 25 to 34. The rate of new cases in 1991 was 50 in 100,000 people and was second only to the rate in D.C.

with their 120 cases per 100,000 as of June, 1992. (UPI, June 2, 1992)

Black homosexual and bisexual men may have a greater risk of contracting the AIDS virus than their white counterparts. Researchers compared the incidence of needle-sharing, multiple sex partners and anal sex among the groups, and found that this did not explain the difference.

From a world-wide perspective, the future is bleak for people of color.

On September 25, 1990, the World Health Organization reported an estimated 400,000 infants have been stricken by AIDS and millions more will have developed this disease by the turn of the century in just nine years. The dissemination of the HIV-1 virus is principally heterosexual and is rising significantly among women of child-bearing age with a corresponding growth of infants infected by their mothers.

Africa with the largest number of cases faces child mortality rates of fifty percent, with 10 million or more children expected to be infected. The majority will have developed AIDS and died by the year 2000. Infants with Aids infected mothers look forward to a bleak future AIDS will be a major cause of death leaving many children orphaned.

In Washington DC, 1 in 74 black women give birth to a potentially HIV infected baby because the mothers are HIV positive. This is seven times the U.S. average. Currently, women account for 11 to 12% of reported cases; this figure does not include a great portion of the female population that is infected but as yet show no symptoms. Most women with AIDS are young non whites.

The World Health Organization reports that from April 1991 to February 1992 there were one million additional cases of HIV infection counted, with ninety percent of those cases among adults and ten percent afflicting children. WHO estimates that the world-wide count is 10-12 million infected people. Third world countries account for eighty percent of cases as it now stands, and with ninety percent of new cases reported in third world nations they will soon have ninety percent of all cases on the globe. Africa already stands at six to seven million HIV infected people with a million with fully developed AIDS.

One black school near Durban, South Africa, in late 1990, had a 60% infection rate, rivaling the 80% in some Zimbabwean factories.

(South African Observer, October 1991)

It appears that the AIDS virus discriminates genetically. A team of British scientists and researchers have identified an inherited protein that seems to reduce susceptibility by the AIDS virus. They also found that people with a different genetic distinction of the same protein were highly susceptible to AIDS. Genetics experts say the findings offer immense potential for understanding how the AIDS virus attacks the body. The protein linked with genetic risk to AIDS infection was identified as Gc. Scientists found noticeable differences in susceptibility to AIDS according to the specific deviation of the protein carried by a patient. All persons have Gc in their blood, but they inherit the protein in one of six combinations of three major genetic subtypes.

Researchers at the University of Pittsburgh and the National Institute of Health said they found a set of genes that may influence how the AIDS virus affects the immune system. Their findings suggest some people may be born with genes that make their immune system more susceptible to the AIDS virus by making it easier for the virus to penetrate immune system cells and reproduce inside them.

Scientists find that genetic factors seem to play a role in the individuals susceptible to the aids virus. It appears that some races are more equal to others in their ability to acquire the HIV virus.

Professor Luc Montagnier, the French scientist who is the co-discoverer of the virus believed to cause AIDS, surmises that the disease may have other causes, and theorizes that the search for a vaccine could be fruitless. At The University of California at Berkeley, Peter Duesberg has said that HIV is not a new virus, but is perhaps hundreds of years old. He believes that the epidemic is the result of increasing use of drugs such as cocaine, which can damage the immune system, and claims that the epidemic is being fueled by the use of AZT and aggravated by unnecessary medical treatment.

The HIV is known to be a retrovirus, retro, because it acts in a reverse direction. In all known organisms, the genetic material, DNA, is converted to RNA and then to proteins. In retroviruses the hereditary information is carried by RNA, which is translated backward to DNA. The resulting DNA then infects the host cell, inserting itself into the host's genetic material where it can later reproduce. One characteristic of retroviruses is that they can become incorporated into the genetic material of the host cell, lie dormant, and be reactivated at a later time.

While at present it is almost a certainty that this plague deserves the title Black Plague, it can still pose a danger to Whites who are so foolish as to hold the opinion that it cannot be acquired by anything but direct sexual contact with other races. Transmission is typically through introduction into the body of fluids from an infected person. All body fluids of infected HIV persons blood, sweat, tears, saliva, urine, mucus, and even mothers milk contain the virus.

There is a real danger to young people from the deceptive information that appears in TV spots and is additionally promulgated in the school system as "Safe Sex Education." The students are told that if they use condoms that they are at low risk of acquiring AIDS. Examination of that premise reveals that most young people do not regard heavy petting as sexual action and do participate in behavior that is dangerous to their health, both mental and physical.

Kissing, as part of sexual activity but not exclusive to it, usually results in the exchange of saliva, hence the colloquial term among young people of "swapping spit" to mean kissing. The Food and Drug Administration, in August 1990, has approved a saliva-based test for AIDS. The study at several hospitals involves more than 4000 samples of blood and saliva. Now one would think that if the FDA would approve saliva testing for the presence of AIDS one could rationally conclude that saliva can transmit the Aids virus. (Detroit Free Press, August 8, 1990)

In our multiracial society, most of us are forced by circumstances to mingle with all shades of people; this is certainly true of most school children, and with the Liberal bent of the "education" system today, the pressure to conform to the "One World-One People" dogma is a formidable force on our young people.

Keeping a positive racial outlook and therefore doing what comes naturally, i.e., no social or sexual intercourse with nonwhites, and a cautious attitude toward HIV carries will, with few exceptions, keep you safe from the new Black Death. AIDS appears to demonstrate that genetics follow natural law, evoking harsh and unconditional judgement with explicit and absolute penalties for violation. ❑

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD

When you pick up a newspaper these days, you are likely to find, perhaps in a small item at the bottom of a column on an inside page, the report that another holy man is in trouble for paederasty or, at least, homosexual perversion. Only infrequently do you see, probably with a sense of relief, news of a Man of God so illiberal and old-fashioned that he seduces women.

The Roman Catholic Church is most often the denomination involved in the scandals. According to a reporter in the Los Angeles Times, 13 October 1990, that church had already paid out between $100,000,000 and $300,000,000 to quiet parents whose children were victims of libidinous priests, and had just settled for $22,000,000 claims arising from the libido of a priest who had been convicted in the courts of Louisiana of enticing or forcing thirty-seven altar boys, Boy Scouts, et al. to satisfy his sexual appetites. The San Diego Tribune, 21 July 1990, reported that a priest who had been convicted of sexual molestation of some thirty children in 1986, but given probation, had been caught enjoying a fourteen-year-old boy and sentenced to prison. The Chicago Tribune, 16 June 1992, reported that fifteen priests in or near Chicago had been or were being relieved of their holy office when found guilty of sexual molestation of boys, and on 22 June, reported that a priest had been indicted in Wisconsin for sexually assaulting altar boys and for threatening to kill another boy if he disclosed the holy man's favorite sport—and that the indicted priest was asking his parishioners to secure his release from custody by posting a $50,000 bond! And so on, around the country.

One expects sexual scandals in the Roman Church, given its doctrine that sexual continence somehow contributed to the efficacy of the magic performed by priests. The monastic orders, needless to say, were founded on the theory that sexual abstinence manufactured merits that were duly recorded by the celestial bookkeepers, thus giving the Church a huge credit balance on which its ministers could draw to cancel the debts of sinners. Whether celibacy was also required of priests and their superiors in the hierarchy was long in doubt. As early as the Fifth Century, a pope named Leo, whose effective authority probably was limited to the vicinity of Rome, is said to have forbidden married men to put away their wives when they were ordained as priests, relying on them to take vows that after ordination they and their wives would live together without sexual intercourse. A canon lawyer once told me that as late as 1917 such an arrangement remained theoretically a legal possibility.

The first real attempt to enforce celibacy (and presumably abstinence) on the clergy was made by a wily Jew who masqueraded under the Germanic name of Hildebrand and became Pope Gregory VII.[1] There is always a vast difference between enacting legislation and enforcing it. Gregory's ukase did in time limit married priests to outlying regions, such as Scandinavia, and it eventually prevented the ordained clergy everywhere from having wives, except by special dispensation from the Papacy.[2] The result, naturally, was concubinage, which was very common, almost normal, until the Council of Trent and the Counter Reformation.

Since the Counter Reformation regarded a presumption of sacerdotal chastity as an important factor in competing with the Protestant sects, concubinage, the maintenance of resident concubines, became relatively rare and clandestine, and priests of normal masculinity had to content themselves with more or less temporary liaisons with available females. Some, no doubt, had a success that Casanovas might envy. It is said that in France in the Nineteenth Century there were sophisticated priests who boasted to their confrères that they had seduced every attractive woman in their parishes.

Whether the Counter Reformation increased the incidence of homosexuality among the clergy is problematical. Judicious Catholics, whatever their public pronouncements, have always recognized that, as

1. See my Christianity Today (= Liberty Bell, November 1987), pp. 22-25.

2. Thomas Aquinas codified the opinion held by many theologians before him, that the celibacy of priests was ordained, not by God but by the Church, which could therefore grant dispensations from its own regulation. Needless to say, the requisite dispensations were usually given only to ranking and influential members of the hierarchy who were in the good graces of whatever pope was in power at the moment.

About thirty years ago I had a graduate student who had spent two years studying for the priesthood in what was the finest Catholic seminary in the United States. A favorite project of Cardinal Mundelein, it had architecture that was in good taste, was lavishly furnished, and was culturally endowed in both its library and in the paintings (not always of religious subjects) by famous artists that adorned its walls. Even at that time, however, the seminary had only a fourth as many candidates for the priesthood as it could have accommodated. My student was certain there was no tendency to perversion among his fellow students; he described how eagerly they watched, every Friday afternoon, for the procession of limousines that brought to them a contingent of select whores to remind them that women were ever so much more fun.[3]

One of the few points of doctrine on which almost all Protestant sects agree is a married clergy, and since marriage can always be supplemented with judicious adultery, one would expect in theory that male homosexuality would be virtually unknown among the Protestant clergy. As we all know, paradoxically the reverse is true. Every one of the larger denominations now has perverts in its clergy, many of them prancing proudly as they obscenely avow and justify their now fashionable depravity, and the sect's annual conventions are convulsed with heated debates over the piety of having perverts in its pulpits and of subsidizing a blessed increase in the numbers of semiviri practicing this form of Christian love.

No Protestant sect is exempt, not even those in which you would least expect to find perverts. The President (head) of a quite small and reputedly conservative Lutheran sect recently confessed that he derived lots of fun and the virus of "AIDS" from the homosexual divertissements with which he had indulged himself for twenty years, although he has a wife of whom he was presumably sufficiently fond to infect

3. This pragmatic practice may have fallen into desuetude. The Champaign [Illinois] News-Gazette, 16 June 1992, reported that the present Archbishop, alarmed by the scandalous (and, no doubt, expensive) tastes of so many priests in his diocese, would probably take the prophylactic precaution of hiring pseudo-scientific medicine men to discover, by psychiatric inquisition, among the students in the seminaries under his jurisdiction, those inclined to paederasty. There was no mention of other forms of male homosexuality.

her. Even a minister of the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church has recently confessed to sexual abuse of thirteen-year-old boys under his care. The bureaucracy that is now running that church into apostasy and dissolution resorted to blanket denials and frantic denunciation of the Duluth News-Tribune, the newspaper that reported the scandal, evoking from its editor a public letter that occupied almost an entire page of Christian News, 18 May 1992. The editor, addressing the Synod's bureaucracy, concluded by remarking: "As a human being, I must confess that I find your lack of concern for the victims to be outrageous."

How much of the current scandals is to be attributed to the frantic promotion of an exacerbated sexuality by the public schools, "Liberal" circles generally, and the Rockefeller Foundation,[4] and how much results from the weakening of the political forces that once stifled scandal about religious bodies, and how much is excited by the publicity that has made known the opportunity of victims to recover fairly large sums of money in compensation for the degradation and suffering that was inflicted on them by divines, is uncertain.

CHRISTIAN LOVE

Since Christianity inherited the Jews' morbid and nasty preoccupation with sex, the religion has always had a strong underlying eroticism. Female mystics and pietists usually identify their Jesus as an ideal lover.[5] Male mystics and pietists frequently think of Jesus in homosexual terms. For this they could claim scriptural authority, for although a homosexual passage was expunged from the gospel attributed to an unidentified Marcus,[6] there remained in the gospel attributed to a certain Iohannes the suggestive episode of the "beloved disciple," who reclined on Jesus's breast at dinner, as a favorite mignon would do.

A clear illustration of homosexual piety may be found in autobiographical passages in the voluminous writings of Rupert of Deutz,[7] who was one of the most important theologians of the Twelfth Century.[8]

Rupert tells us that, in preparation for his task of correcting the current interpretations of Scripture, he subjected himself for eight years to austerities (which would have driven anyone mad!), after which he received divine authorization when he perceived that the Christ on a lofty crucifix was alive and regarding him benignly. He was miraculously raised to the level of the crucifix so that he could embrace Jesus, who not only kissed him again and again passionately, but opened his mouth so that they could kiss with tongues as well as lips.[9]

Male homosexuality, a subject about which almost no one seems willing to talk sense, must be understood historically and requires a

4. See Liberty Bell, February 1992, pp. 14-21.

5. Among the laity, this is commonly done by Nordic women who have a strong faith in their superstition. A distinguished attorney, who has observed many Protestant congregations, tells me that whenever the women are permitted to choose a hymn, their choice is usually "In the Garden," in which the singer affirms that she met Jesus "And He walks with me, and He talks with me,| And He tells me I am His own,| And the joys we share as we tarry there,| None other has ever known." Mediterranean women, on the other hand, usually focus their devotion on Mary, a goddess who, like Isis and Juno, bore children but miraculously recovered her virginity, and who can understand and sympathize with their sexual desires and frustrations.

6. For an English translation of this passage, see Professor Morton Smith's The Secret Gospel (New York, Harper & Row, 1975).

7. Divitia, in Mediaeval Latin also Duitia and Tuitium, in the Rhineland near Cologne, where Rupert was Abbot of the Benedictine Monastery. He died before 1136, perhaps in 1129, when he was about sixty.

8. So far as I know, no one of the many "specialists" in the study of Mediaeval Christianity has thought of writing a potentially sensational book by claiming Rupert as a precursor of the Protestant Reformation. Rupert's writings are mostly expositions of portions of the Vulgate, but he insists on interpreting the texts in ways that contradict Augustine and the established doctrines of the Church, thus making the texts (as he understood them) superior to the established orthodoxy. He was prosecuted at least once for heresy while he was at Liège, and had eventually to flee to the more tolerant Rhineland.

9. This mode of osculation, sometimes called "French kissing" or "soul kissing," is popularly believed to be so sexually provocative as to make coitus an almost inevitable sequel. The passage to which I refer will be found in Rupert's exegetic commentary De gloria et honore filii hominis, super Matthaeum, in Migne's Patrologia Latina, Vol. CLXVIII, column 1601. Rupert thought (ibidem, 1603) that his canoodling with Jesus was in keeping with the opening verse of the Cantica canticorum, where the King James version has "Let him kiss me with kisses of his mouth: for thy love is better than wine." Whether the masculine pronouns are justified depends on a nice point in the grammar of Koine Greek, but they are inconsistent with the following phrase which, subjected to theological tampering in the King James version, really says, "for thy breasts are better than wine," certainly implying a female recipient, as elsewhere in that diatribe of incoherent eroticism.

treatment far beyond the scope of this article, which is concerned with only a phase of that subject, paederasty,[10] and, for the most part, indeed, with a special and especially repulsive form of that vice, the abuse of very young children of either sex.

The sexual abuse of very young children is a vice of which we find little trace in the records, except among Jews, where specified forms of it are explicitly sanctioned by the Talmud.[11] So far as I know—and I must remind you that I speak on the basis of general reading and without having undertaken any research on a most unpleasant topic that is not mentioned in the few works of reference that I have at hand—the rape or virtual rape of young children, usually boys but sometimes girls, beginning at the age of four or five, which seems to be becoming popular in some circles today, is attested in the past only for a few creatures that are accounted monsters of inhuman depravity and actually insane: Giles de Rais, the infamous "Marquis" de Sade,[12] and a very few others.

I cannot tell you, therefore, when holy men first acquired a taste for assaults on young children. It may have been common for a long time and successfully kept from public knowledge, or it may have been a consequence of the promotion of an exasperated sexuality by the public schools and much touted "sexologists" (e.g., Freud, Kinsey). Although cases of such abuse have been publicly reported only in the past few years, they have been common since the 1950s at least. The Christian News, 13 July 1992, contains an article on a priest who indulged his propensities for thirty years and whose victims are said to number three hundred. The attitude of the Roman Church, which transferred him from parish to parish when there seemed to be a danger of prosecution, is shown by an irate Cardinal's boast that he will get old Yahweh to punish the newspapers that did not keep the pious peccadillos secret ("We call down God's power on the media"!).

A particularly heinous example of the sexual abuse of children is the subject of a new book by Michael Harris, Unholy Orders (Toronto, Penguin Books Canada, 1991). Before considering it, I think it worthwhile to sketch the historical antecedents of the events it describes.

CHRISTIAN BROTHERS

In 1684 Jean Baptiste de la Salle, a French priest and canon of the cathedral at Rheims, founded the Institutum Fratrum Scholarum Christianarum to provide free instruction for male children who were orphans or had parents too poor to pay tuition in the existing schools in France. And to train teachers in his schools he established what appears to have been the first normal school, thus setting an example that was imitated throughout the world.[13] The order was eventually recognized by the Pope and given headquarters in Rome. It established

10. 'Paederasty' is the accepted, and indeed the only correct term for sexual intercourse between an adult and a boy who is pubescent or in the earliest stage of adolescence. Perverts, like Jews, like to hide by crawling under misused euphemisms, and, as we all know, the creatures who morosely exhibit their depravity in public are called 'gay' by the whores of journalism, who are so debased that they gladly prostitute their mother tongue. The creatures who practice sexual abuse of young children call themselves 'pedophil' in their propaganda, not knowing what that misspelling of 'paedophil' would really mean if interpreted by a plausible etymology. Now paedophilia is simply a liking or fondness for children, and is often used of women who are fond of children in general as well as their own. There seems to be no specific term for the sexual abuse of children far below the age of puberty. One could suggest paedophthoria.

11. For some of these provisions, see the pages photographically reproduced from the official English translation of the Babylonian Talmud in the documentary appendix to Elizabeth Dilling's The Plot Against Christianity and the revised edition of that work now in print, The Jewish Religion and Its Influence Today (Torrance [now Costa Mesa], California; Noontide Press, 1983.)

12. He was actually a count, but promoted himself to the rank of marquis. He claimed descent from the noble family that attained prestige in the Seventeenth Century by asserting that Petrarch's Laura had been a De Sade. He is best known for his famous dictum that "All men are created equal," his project of a "United Nations," the word 'sadism,' and three atrocious books, Juliette, Justine, and Cent vingt jours de Sodome, all of which are worth reading, if you are cynically hardened to the desolating panorama of human depravity and if you have a very strong stomach. There are said to be English translations, but I have seen none of them and shall be astonished if any is complete.

13. Every state in the United States established several normal schools, usually one in each of the four quarters of the state, so that pupils would not have to travel long distances from their homes. These normal schools were intended to provide the rudiments of a college education in the subjects that the pupils, usually young women, prepared many schools in France, where its members were popularly and satirically called Frères ignorantines, because its founder, himself a learned priest, wisely provided in the by-laws that men with a theological education were excluded from membership; and Frères fouetteurs, from the frequency and severity with which they applied the lash for even very minor infractions of discipline. The schools were so successful and highly regarded that Baptiste de la Salle was eventually made a saint and thus became the celestial recipient of prayers his ghost would transmit to the rulers of Heaven.

The Catholics of Ireland, living under the Protestant government of England, which looked with disfavor and suspicion on their religion and all that was connected with it,[14] found a patron in their fellow Catholic, a very wealthy merchant named Edward Ignatius Rice, who began in 1801 to endow schools for poor boys, and enlisted followers and supporters for an organization, modeled on La Salle's, that was recognized and blessed by Pope Pius VII in 1829 as the Fratres Scholarum Christianarum in Hibernia, commonly called in English the Christian Brothers.[15] The Brothers took vows of chastity, poverty, perseverance in providing free instruction for boys, and monastic obedience to their Superior General, who had his headquarters in Dublin.

themselves to teach in elementary and, later, secondary schools. They were eventually invaded by the racket called "Science of Education," which John Dewey and his fellow conspirators used so successfully to keep American children ignorant and prepare them for an existence as unthinking chattels in a state that is communist in all but name. — The normal schools flourished until the wild inflation of "higher education" that followed the catastrophe of 1945, when every normal school, so far as I have noticed, set itself up as a "University" and a bottomless funnel into which the state's legislature poured millions and millions of dollars extracted from tax-paying animals so stupid that any "do-gooder" can milk their udders. It is true that a few of these institutions attained a measure of academic respectability.

15. When I last noticed, decades ago, the official designations of Catholic orders, episcopal sees, etc.. were still officially in Latin, but in the routine administration of the Church Ecclesiastical Latin had been supplanted by Italian, in which the order is called Fratelli delle Scuole Christiane d'Irlanda. It will be found under that title, for example, in the Annuario Ponteficio.

The first to hold that office was Rice; his successors were, perhaps, more dependent on their order's Procurator General in the Vatican. The new order acquired a high and, so far as we know, deserved reputation in Catholic Ireland.

NEWFOUNDLAND

In 1583, the ill-fated Sir Humphrey Gilbert, commanding a small squadron, set out to annex for Queen Elizabeth the island of Newfoundland, taking with him, by the way, a young Hungarian Humanist, Stephanus Parmenius, who wanted to describe and celebrate the new colony in Latin verse.[16] Gilbert found the island frequented by numerous Portuguese, French, and English fishermen, who were exploiting the seemingly inexhaustible shoals of codfish on the Grand Banks. British claim to the island was vindicated after several wars with France. Although immigration from Ireland was discouraged by various restrictions imposed by the British authorities, who feared that Irish Catholics would constitute a domestic danger in any war with France,—an opinion not without justification in experience,—there was a considerable influx of Irish during the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries, when they formed about a third of the island's total population.

Many of the Irish on Newfoundland, regarded with not entirely unjustified suspicion by the British government, were unable to pay for their children's education, and those who could pay found that their offspring were not welcome in either Anglican or other Protestant schools. They accordingly asked the Christian Brothers of Ireland to establish schools on Newfoundland, but it was not until 1875 that the first Christian Brothers came to the island, and, in the following year,

16. We know only his Humanistic name; his Hungarian name is unknown. He was evidently the child of a prosperous family of Calvinists in Hungary, which was then a Turkish province. When he perished at sea, as Sir Humphrey was to do a little later, he must have had with him the manuscript of the projected poem, which he had doubtless begun, so we now have on this subject only the 330 hexameters De navigatione that he wrote in anticipation of the voyage to Newfoundland. They were published in London in 1582 and edited, with a biographical memoir, the Humanist's other extant writings, commentaries, and English translations (which I have not checked) by David B. Quinn and Neil M. Cheshire: The New Found Land of Stephen Parmenius (University of Toronto Press, 1972).

began to teach male children of the poor in the Old Orphan Asylum. A combined orphanage and school was opened at Mount Cashel in 1898. In the 1950s, Mount Cashel, which had thus far depended on private charity and the operation of a farm that produced foodstuffs, began to receive subventions from the Province of Newfoundland and later from the Federal government of Canada.[17]

During all those years and until sometime in the 1970s the combined orphanage and school had a high and unblemished reputation and was regarded by the people of Newfoundland, Catholic and Protestant alike, with respect and gratitude. We may assume that until 1952 this reputation was justified, although we cannot be sure that it was not in some part attained by successful secrecy.

THE HOLE IN HOLINESS

The boys in the school, orphans or separated from their parents, were, of course, totally at the mercy of the Brothers, and it is not clear when the latter or some of them first began to abuse the boys sexually.

Mr. Harris has given us a book of 383 pages, of which the essentials relevant to our interest here could have been stated in a twenty-page article. He was Editor and Publisher of the newspaper in St, John's (capital of Newfoundland) that was principally responsible for the investigation that finally resulted in the conviction of eight Brothers, and he has written an extremely detailed and often tiresome chronicle of the affair, because he regards the conduct of the Christian Brothers, deplorable as it was, as posing an even more fundamental social, religious, and political question.

The first report of the sexual abuse of children in the orphanage and school at Mount Cashel reached the Archbishop of the province in 1952. How was it possible for the Church and the government to keep the Brothers' sexual abuse of children secret for twenty-three years, and even then so stifle the inquiry conducted in 1975 that it was not until 1988, when the scandal could no longer be concealed from the public, that there was a real investigation which led to the arrest and eventual conviction of some of the child-raping perverts?

If you are familiar with the normal behavior of the hierarchy of any large and prosperous ecclesiastical establishment, and are also familiar with the normal process of "democratic" government, you know very well what gave the holy men at Mount Cashel freedom to indulge their appetites for thirty-six years, and the details will merely bore you. Mr. Harris, on the other hand, is determined to establish the responsibility of the ecclesiastics, politicians, and others who kept the lid on the boiling and malodorous pot, and to recognize the courage and industry of the few men who finally breached the wall of official silence and evasion. He accordingly painstakingly details each complaint and the way in which it was hushed up, and gives us biographical sketches of all the numerous individuals who were concerned with the scandal in one way or another. His account will doubtless interest many citizens of Newfoundland, but you and I will find this long narrative merely another performance of a play we have seen too often.

17. Newfoundland became a Province of Canada in 1949.

Mr. Harris, furthermore, has confused two radically different matters: corporal punishment and sexual rape. A long chapter is devoted to a mother's protest over a beating of her son in the orphanage. It is not at all remarkable that her protest was shelved by the authorities. The Brothers, after all, had a tradition that went back to the "Frères fouetteurs," and the corporal punishment they administered, though sometimes severe, was not more painful—was usually less painful—than the "birching" to which English boys were routinely subjected in the best preparatory schools for infractions of discipline or failure to prepare lessons properly. There is no evidence that such punishments harmed the boys.[18] Swinburne, one of the greatest of all English poets, even composed a series of verses about the often bloody "birchings" inflicted on him and his fellows at Eton. Corporal punishment by the Brothers was noteworthy only when it was a preliminary to sexual assault or a means of terrorizing the victims and ensuring their silent submission. Had Mr. Harris perceived this, he could have spared himself and his readers many tiresome pages about "child abuse."

The Brothers' rape of young boys, described in some detail here and there in the course of the book, followed a more or less fixed pattern, but each Brother seems to have had a favorite or favorites whom his fellows did not molest. It is not clear how many of the Brothers enjoyed the privileges of their pious calling. We learn that the eight who were convicted on criminal charges and sentenced were not the only offenders; others—we are not told how many—have been accused. Yet others may have escaped implication because their victims, if still in the school, were ashamed or afraid to speak, while those who had left the orphanage and were trying to establish themselves in some trade or profession did not come forward as witnesses. What is beyond doubt is that in so relatively small and closed a community all of the Brothers must have been aware of the sexual activity of the guilty and condoned it, for they made no protest and did not appeal to their ecclesiastical superiors. They may have known, of course, that complaints to the hierarchy of the Church would not only be futile but would bring upon them reprisals from episcopal dignitaries who resented being informed of what they already knew or suspected and were determined to ignore.

The libidinous Brothers usually began their erotic efforts by manipulating the sexual organs of impuberate boys to induce an unnatural and morbidly precocious sexuality as a preliminary to sodomy and irrumation. They thus gave a kind of informal "sex education," going a little beyond what is recommended in the public schools today, and, of course, the result was that after the victims became puberate and adolescent homosexual activity became prevalent among the boys themselves. That was ensured, if by nothing else, by the natural impulse that accounts, in large part, for the perpetuation of college fraternities, fraternal orders, and secret societies that are not political conspiracies. That impulsion is sometimes called the First Commandment: "Do unto others as was done unto you."

One secret of the Brothers' long immunity from prosecution and even suspicion was their success in terrifying their victims. One man, who had been placed in the orphanage at the age of eight and at once given a sexual education by one of the Brothers, testified that he and his two brothers had been so terrified that no one of them learned that the others were also victims until after they were released from Mount Cashel years later. Some who lived through their incarceration in the orphanage tried to commit suicide when they were released or took to narcotic drugs to escape from their memories.

I see no need for you to read this tedious and disgusting account, but if you do, read carefully and analytically the passages which describe the Brothers' sexual activities in detail as recounted by victims who did not censor their own stories.

PRAGMATIC "SEX EDUCATION"

Needless to say, the sexual violation of children is not a speciality of holy men. I first became aware of it among members of our race not notoriously insane[19] about twenty-five years ago, so nearly as I can recall. A chauffeur employed by a line of taxicabs that I frequently used was convicted of aggravated homicide. He had inadvertently killed the five-year-old son of one of his friends, because he was so intent on his own delights that he did not realize that the boy was being suffocated.

A particularly revolting case was reported in The Spotlight, 1 June 1992, pp. 14-17. If that report is correct, the McMartin Pre-school in Manhattan Beach, California, must have been constructed for the purposes for which it was used for ten years, with tunnels beneath the building's floor into which the "pre-school" children were taken and forced to witness Satanic rites and the killing of animals as sacrifices to fictitious demons. The children were thus terrified to the point of mental aberration and their silence ensured. Our ardent feminists will, no doubt, be pleased that there was no discrimination between male and female children.

The school, however, was not founded merely to provide entertainment for its staff. After the District Attorney of Los Angeles County and other authorities could no longer ignore the evidence that at least forty-one children had been victims of the educational establishment, there was a series of trials, at which some of the principal witnesses were not permitted to testify, ending in the eventual acquittal of all the accused. That is not at all astonishing, if it is true that the children, after having been accustomed to sexual violation, were taken from the school and prostituted to clients who paid lavishly for the kind of fun they preferred, and that the clients included men who "were household names: actors, sports figures, politicians." That fact, also, is not in the least astonishing.

If you have the fortitude to consider analytically attested cases of the rape of young children, you will discover that in many cases, at least, the conduct of perverts cannot be adequately explained by a need to release sexual tensions or indulge sexual lust. There is an underlying—perhaps ever overriding—motive, a determination to degrade and defile their victims. That frenzied desire is sadism, which Christians will identify as Satanic, and to which rational men apply that term metaphorically. That is more than lubricity; it is something inherently evil—and, remember, sadism is not mammalian or bestial: it is specifically and exclusively human.

19. E.g., Albert Fish of Washington, D.C., who was executed in 1935. He was a thoroughgoing "pedophil," so fond of children that he not only violated them sexually but ate them. I am not informed of his race, so you are free to suspect that he was some kind of hybrid.

All this presents us with an urgent problem. Now that male homosexuality has not only been made fashionable, but has been so glorified that perverts, in and out of pulpits, now preen themselves as though they were heroes decorated for valor in battle, the "pedophils"[20] are preparing to attain the same social distinction. I have seen propaganda from their organizations which proves "scientifically" that impuberate children are saved from "psychological imbalance" and "damaging cultural constructs" by being given a practical education in sex at the earliest possible age. And the propaganda complains about legal violations of the "civil rights" of the "pedophils" who are so anxious to do good to young children.

More significant is a recent development in the academic world, where, you must remember, most of the administrators of colleges and universities think first of staying in fashion: "monkey see, monkey do."

The University of Massachusetts has long advertised its high intellectual standing by assuring homosexuals that they will be welcomed and taken to the bosom of their alma mater. (Whether scholarships have been established to attract such pearls of great price, I do not know.) The institution, with its eye on the stupid tax-payers, exempted from its cordial invitation paederasts, of whose recreations it officially disapproved. But the University has now become more "Liberal" and is keeping in tune with the times. According to a news item reproduced in Christian News, 15 June 1992, the University, at least on its principal campus at Amherst, has rescinded the bigoted provision that denied the protection of Alma Mammy's bosom to "persons whose sexual orientation includes minor children." The "pedophils" will now enjoy the special privileged status given to "minorities," such as ordinary homosexuals, niggers, etc.

20. Cf. footnote 10 supra.

We live in an age in which the public schools generally instruct boys and girls of eight or nine, somewhat prematurely, in the use of free condoms[21] for "safe sex" with persons of the same or opposite gender, and in New York City youngsters in high school are instructed in the use of surgical gloves in a kind of almost incredible depravity of which most Americans have not even heard. Everyone believes in the magic of "education," of course, but just the same, I am sure that there are Americans who disapprove of progress such as the University of Massachusetts is promoting. I am sure there are some, I say, but I shall not guess how many.

I shall not try to guess, for I have learned from experience. Around 1954 I made a colossal error in attempting to conjecture what was likely in the then immediate future. I assumed that Americans were still a viable species of mammals, and that, like all the larger mammals and many birds,[22] they still felt the imperative to assure the survival of their species by protecting their offspring until the latter were old enough to fend for themselves. I reasoned accordingly that Americans

21. I cannot refrain from commenting on the amazing revolution of social standards in the past forty years. In 1951, thinking to be of service to the few who still practiced the high art of Latin epistolography, I prepared for the Classical Weekly a glossary of English words for which there was no equivalent in Classical Latin (typewriter, rifle, aëroplane, Communism, spiritualism, etc.), giving the Modern Latin equivalents approved in Cardinal Bacci's Lexicon eorum vocabulorum quae difficilius Latine reddunter (in which the lemmata were in Italian). One of the words was 'condom.' The Classical Weekly had once been a strictly scholarly publication, but it had been taken over by an association of teachers in high schools and preparatory schools, many of whom were women. The editor, Professor Edward Robinson, consulted the editors of highly respected periodicals such as the Atlantic Monthly and Harper's, and found that 'condom' was an obscene word that must never appear in a journal of general circulation. He and I would have been utterly incredulous, had we been told that within a few decades, 'condom' would become one of the words most frequently used in public schools, magazines, and newspapers, and that up-to-date holy men would be distributing those fallacious guarantees of "safe" promiscuity to their bovine congregations.

22. Only the other day a friend of mine, hearing peeping from a hedge, looked into it and saw a nest with several fledgelings in it. One of the parents, mistaking his interest and regardless of the possible consequences to itself, descended on the man's head and slashed his scalp with its beak.

would never voluntarily consent to having their children subjected to the degradation and danger of forced association with young niggers. I was, of course, totally wrong. There were a few protests, but the mongrel traitor and War Criminal, Eisenhower, in flagrant violation of the Constitution that was then still regarded as in force, sent in troops to overawe the undegenerate parents with bayonets, and the majority of the boobs applauded, obviously not giving a damn about what would happen to their own hapless children.

So I shall not venture to say more than that I believe that there are still Americans who will disapprove of the Wave of the Future. And I do not expect them to do more than mutter to one another when they are sure they will not be overheard.

APPENDIX

Before you start cursing English "bigotry" and "intolerance" with Hibernian vehemence, perpend a well-known historical fact that is almost never mentioned in this context. In 1199, when Richard Cœur de Lion, suffering from mortification of the wound he had received at the siege of Châlus, was dying in agony, he named, or was said to have named, his younger and despicable brother, John, his successor as King of England, although he had theretofore tried to prevent John, who hated him, from attaining any political power, and had recognized as his successor the legitimate heir, Arthur of Brittany. Pope Innocent III, taking advantage of John's enormous unpopularity and his dubious title to the throne, which he had not strengthened by murdering the legitimate heir in 1203, forced John, in 1213, to acknowledge that the supreme ruler of England and Ireland, appointed by God, was the Pope, and that he, John, was King of England and Ireland only because those realms had been bestowed on him as a feudal fief by his sovereign lord, the Pope. This was not a legal fiction: Innocent actually began to rule England through his legates. This was more than Nordics could bear, and the revolt of the barons, who forced John to accept the Magna Carta of English liberties at Runnymede in 1215, was in part a revolt against Papal rule. It is uncertain what would have happened, if Innocent III had not died in 1216. John was succeeded by his son, the incompetent and thoroughly dishonest Henry III, who was little better than a Papal vassal, and the English had to force on him the Provisions of Oxford in 1258 and finally to defeat him in battle in 1264, after which Henry was virtually or actually a prisoner until his death. Later Kings were strong enough to ignore Papal overlordship and later Popes realized they could not then enforce the right that John had conceded to them, but you should remember that the English always had hanging over them the menace of Papal suzerainty, which some reversal of fortune might make no longer theoretical. This political rather than religious consideration had much to do with the success of Henry VIII's repudiation of Papal authority over the English Church and with English enthusiasm for Queen Elizabeth when she succeeded Queen Mary.

Papal claims to Ireland were, for a long time, more than theoretical, and various pontiffs entertained hopes that, with the aid of France, Ireland could be detached from the English crown and made a separate kingdom in which Protestants could be exterminated. They counted especially on the activity of the Irish priests, most of whom constantly exhorted their ignorant customers to hate the English, the vile heretics who were enemies of God's Vicar on Earth, and declaimed about the Irish right to become true Christians and independent of the minions of the Anti-Christ, thus nurturing a spirit of clandestine sabotage and schemes for an open revolt, which was feared by the Catholic upper classes as much as by the Scotch and English Protestants in Ireland. Thanks to the Papacy and its priests, Ireland was for centuries a potential danger to England. That fact may make English distrust of Irish Catholics explicable in less emotional terms than you are accustomed to hear.

PHOTOGRAPHY

In the July issue I remarked that while the latest technology had made it much easier to produce photographic lies, especially in cinematographic form, it had long been possible to produce mendacious pictures, that is, pictures that portrayed something that did not happen. This, of course, is quite different from using genuine photographs while lying about the time and place at which they were taken, as, for example, the Sheenies do when they promote their great swindle, the Holohoax, by showing pictures of the bodies of German civilians massacred by the ferocious British and American barbarians at such places as Dresden, but claiming the pictures showed members of the Holy Race whom the godless Germans had slain.

A subscriber has lent me a copy of the issue of Trains for August 1992, which reproduces on p. 27 a picture that was first published in that magazine in April 1970. The photograph was taken at night (with the aid of flash-bulbs) at Gilman, Illinois, where the tracks of the Toledo, Peoria & Western crossed the main line of the Illinois Central. A train on the former was shown waiting while a train of the Illinois Central was about to pass over the crossing. The photograph was interesting because such meetings of two trains became rare after passenger trains all but disappeared and freight trains became few, as a result of the Federal government's policy of liquidating American industry and the railroads on which it depended.

This photograph was accepted as showing an actual event for twenty-two years and until a man who had been familiar with the interlocking installation at Gilman and who had eyes worthy of Lynceus noticed that the signal on the left margin of the picture was in the wrong position. Investigation brought a confession from the photographer: he had simply set up his camera in a fixed position, photographed the Illinois Central train and then waited until a train on the Toledo, Peoria & Western came along, when he photographed it on the same film. He wanted only to produce an interesting photograph for sale to the magazine, and, by the way, put on his picture a caption that was misleading in its implication, but did not affirm that the photograph was genuine. (The old Jesuit trick of suppressio veri).

It is, perhaps, worthy of remark that the Illinois Central train shown in the picture was traveling on a track that was recently torn up and sold as junk.[1] The Illinois Central absorbed the Gulf, Mobile & Ohio, which had already absorbed the Chicago & Alton, the Gulf,

1. The same issue of Trains (P.O. Box 1612, Waukesha, Wisconsin; $28.96 per annum) contains an article by R. L. Taylor, an economist with long experience in railway management and president of a small railway, who predicts "that in 10 years there will be no more railroads,....except for the publicly owned suburban passenger operations, which do not have to earn a return on investment." That, he says, will be the natural and inevitable culmination of the offensive against railways that began in 1920 "and will end only when the last mile of track is torn up and sold for scrap." If you want to date exactly the progressive hostility to railroads by an increasingly Marxist government, you

Mobile & Northern, and the New Orleans Great Northern, and the amalgamation fell into the hands of a management that has been dismembering it, selling off parts of it to corporations hurriedly organized to save some local industries, and ripping up much of the rest and selling it for scrap—scrap of which a large part may be sold to Japan for its ever thriving steel industry. The passing of the United States as an industrial nation is a phenomenon noted with wonder throughout the world, except, of course, in the United States.

Mr. Taylor concludes his article with the hopeful suggestion that if the Americans come to their senses, they could create a system of transportation of both passengers and freight comparable to what is found in more advanced countries, such as Japan and France. But who can imagine that American peons, having long since passed the point of no return, could still become reasonable or again have a country of their own?

THE RAMPAGING OUTLAW

The tribunal in Tel-Aviv-on-the-Potomac has upheld a lower court, which sentenced Manuel Antonio Noriega, the former President of Panamá, to forty years in prison for having offended Lord Bushy. That was to be expected, since, as we all know, the function of the Revolutionary Tribunal is to give a legal coloring to the commands of our rulers.

What the old Supreme Court, which once sat in the same building, would have done is uncertain. It might well have held that the United States was bound by its treaties until it repudiated them, and that numerous treaties had recognized the Republic of Panamá as an independent and sovereign nation. But it is true that the Supreme Court often showed itself pavid and time-serving since 1860. The last Justice might fix on 1917, when the crazed Americans set out on a Holy War that gave a pretext for seizure of all the railroads by the Jewish satrap who was the real ruler of the United States, "Barney" Baruch. When the railways were returned to their owners, the Federal government paid some compensation for the damage wrought, perhaps maliciously, by Baruch, but the sum paid was a mere fraction of the cost of restoring the railroads to efficient operation. For some of the looting in other fields of industry during the jihad, see Professor James J. Martin's The Saga of Hog Island and Other Essays in Inconvenient History (Colorado Springs, Ralph Myles, 1977).

who dared apply the provisions of the Constitution strictly, even when his decision would be unpopular, was Chief Justice Robert B. Taney.

It is true, also, that the Republic of Panamá was the result of a blunder by an American employee, who exceeded his instructions.[1] But the United States had repeatedly recognized it as a sovereign nation, as, indeed, it was necessary to do before stripping the American boobs of the canal they had built through the Isthmus.

The effect of the recent decision is merely to confirm the status of the American people as a horde of barbarians who have long repudiated international law and the standards of civilization.[2] Their government has now openly arrogated to itself the privileges of its Jewish masters, who operate as outlaws and terrorists, with contemptuous disregard of the integrity of civilized nations, as in their kidnapping of Eichmann from Argentina.[3]

The interesting corollary of this is that we cannot reasonably complain if other countries emulate our banditry and contempt for nations that do not have the power to answer our lawless violence with force. For example, a British court recently indicted the American aviators who, by what must have been more than negligence, killed nine British soldiers, whom Mrs. Thatcher had sent to the Persian Gulf to give a semblance of British coöperation in Lord Bushy's attack on Iraq. The indictments were followed by a demand for extradition of the guilty, but the Director of Public Prosecutions then ruled that British courts had no jurisdiction to punish crimes that were not committed on British territory (except when God's Race wanted to make some Aryan suffer).[4]

I do not know where the American aviators are now. If they are on some foreign station, the British Secret Service, emulating Mossad's kidapping of Vanunu in England, could use an attractive female operative as bait to lure them into a place in which they could be packed up and shipped to England, and the British, emulating the United States' treatment of Noriega, could then try them in violation of British law, and hang them. But if the aviators have returned to this country, they could not be kidnapped without arousing vehement protest from the Irish in the United States, and even Bushy might feel that the British had infringed on his righteous privilege to order terrorist abductions.

We can go farther in our speculations. When Bushy recently visited Panamá, a large contingent of agents with drawn guns protected him from the crowds of Panamanians, who jeered him to express their hatred of the country that had lawlessly and treacherously (i.e., without provocation and without warning) invaded their own. And, of course, his army was ready to act, should he need further protection. It is not inconceivable, however, that our Lord might some day, especially after he leaves the White House, find himself in a position in which Palestinian agents could kidnap him and take him to Saddam Hussein for trial and eventual execution as a "war criminal." There is an aphorism about men of violence who are hoist with their own petard.

This, of course, does not mean that we should welcome such a bit of "poetic justice." We know now that Ross Perot's antics were designed, as we suspected from the first,[5] to ruin Patrick Buchanan's candidacy for nomination in the Republican wing of the head, p. 15. The information that has reached me neither discloses the probable motive of the pilots who killed the British soldiers, nor indicates their race. Congoids are biologically incapable of piloting aircraft, but it is said that some mulattos can be trained to do so, and, of course, in a multi-racial compost heap, they would be cuddled and given preference over Americans. Jews have deeply penetrated the Air Force and are usually competent pilots, as are many Semites and Mongolians.

5. The alternative was that he intended to throw the election into the House of Representatives and thus ensure the election of the sleazy race-mixer called Clinton. That seemed less probable. In most states, persons who signed petitions to put Perot on the ballot thereby debarred themselves from voting for Buchanan in the Republican primary. It is noteworthy that Perot, having appealed to the voters who were likely to support Buchanan, proceeded to demoralize them by a series of well-timed announcements by which he destroyed, one after another, Demopublican Party. Buchanan, nevertheless, received 27% of the votes in California as a whole, 30% in Los Angeles Country, and 52% in one district in the city. That, however, was the end of his campaign.

Now the voters are faced with a choice between Lord Bushy and a mongrel on whom respectable niggers will look down, recognizing him as a "piece of poor White trash."[6] Plain self-respect obliges us to choose to serve Bushy, who, to everyone's astonishment, has, since Buchanan announced his candidacy, shown an unwonted respect for American interests.

He refused to give the Sheenies in Israel the ten billion dollars they demanded from their American serfs in addition to the $110,000,000 the tax-paying animals give them every week. He thus—bravely, it seems—made indignant the Masters of Deceit, who expect their dogs to perform on command. He went down to Rio de Janeiro to attend an international conference on ecology which the "Third World" was using to shakedown the Aryan boobs in North America and Europe, and he refused to yield to blackmail, even though "scientists," ambitious for publicity and promotion, were hysterically yelling that we have "only two years to save the planet," at the expense, of course, of American tax-paying animals. It would be too much to suppose that he had a change of heart, but at the very least we can respect him as a literate man, infinitely superior to the bedraggled Jews' stooge whom the Demopublicans have presented to us as the only alternative. One could, of course, argue that election of the multiracial scalawag would encourage his masters to hasten the inevitable collapse of the United States, but it is hard to see how that would be an advantage.

their hopes that, if elected, he would represent American interests in one or another item of policy, such as the right to own guns and halting the immigration of racial garbage.

6. 'Poor' refers to quality, not to income. Before the Jews succeeded in mobilizing the niggers as a weapon against us, there was a social structure in all communities that contained a considerable number of blacks: (1) White people, always recognized as superior; (2) Decent "colored folk," who took pride in the Aryans who employed them; (3) "White trash," persons whom respectable Whites regarded as unacceptable and untrustworthy or whose conduct evinced dishonesty or lawlessness; and, barely below them, (4) "no-'count niggers," who were shiftless, disinclined to work, and criminally inclined.

TELEVISION

I shall not be astonished if the Dèn of Thieves[1] enacts legislation to restrict or harass the companies that provide television by cable. I do not know whether a preliminary step was taken by the new regulation that permits local telephone companies, many or all of which are now in the hands of Jews, to engage in that business.

Alternatively, technology may be used to accomplish the same end. In Britain, the Jewish government has just opened to a broadcasting company the ultra-high-frequency channels that "are currently used to connect video machines and games, satellite receivers, and simple computers to television sets." It is estimated that "between four and eight million video recorders and an unknown number of satellite receivers and video games will need retuning."[2] The possibility of manipulation to the disadvantage of cable television is obvious. And there is in the offing the present deadlock between the Japanese, who have invented a type of television that produces pictures of much sharper definition and greater clarity, and a European consortium, headed by the Philips Company, which has devised a different system that is "almost as good." Whichever system is finally adopted, all existing television sets and video-tapes will be made obsolete.

The objection to cable television, of course, is that is permits Americans to watch television screens without having their faces pelted with Jewish excrement from the three big broadcasting networks. And what is even worse, some cable television gives to its subscribers information that has not been warranted kosher.

1. The boobs recently manifested some indignation when it was disclosed that many Congressmen habitually wrote fraudulent cheques on their private bank, making it insolvent, but they have for decades acquiesced with bovine stolidity when the thieves regularly embezzle the funds that are ostensibly extorted for "Social Security," which, in addition to being a means of numbering tax-paying animals and subjecting them to perpetual surveillance, is simply a swindle of the type first made famous by Ivan Kruger and adopted by innumerable crooks thereafter. And the boobs acquiesce when the elected thieves increase taxes or the public debt and produce an inflation that robs every American who owns bonds, insurance policies, equity in pension plans, or other investments that have a fixed return—robs him as openly and criminally as though the Congressmen flourished gats and emptied his pockets.

2. See the New Scientist (London), 18 July 1992, p.6.

In the June issue of Liberty Bell I mentioned the Cable News Network, which had permitted its subscribers to see what was actually happening in Baghdad during our War Lord's attack on Iraq. That must have been most annoying to our rulers. And now Cable News Network has obtained and exhibited to its subscribers the whole of the video-tape that shows the efforts of the Los Angeles police to subdue a vicious criminal named King, thus exposing the Jewish broadcasters' mendacious use of a tiny segment of that tape, over and over again, for an entire year to help the black scoundrel that is mayor of Los Angeles take over and sabotage the city's distressingly efficient police force and incite the riot that was the opening of the coming race war in the United States.

The viewers saw the huge black felon, who must be a creature of almost Herculean strength, attack the police officers who had stopped him with a roadblock after pursuing him as he drove through a residential district at a hundred miles an hour with typically negroid disregard of human life. They saw the four officers' efforts to subdue the rabid beast in a fight of which the outcome was for a time in doubt. And they knew how the Sheenies' slime machine had lied to the American public for thirteen months.

This is not to say that the policemen's conduct was irreproachable. What they should have done, of course, was not engage in physical combat with the ferocious criminal, but just shoot him as one shoots a rabid dog. The nigger who was elected mayor by the stupid White oafs in Los Angeles would have yelped, of course, but a responsible state government would have had the National Guard prepared to deal promptly and properly with any outbreak by his fellow savages.

You can see why cable television distresses our rulers. You would suppose that visual revelation of the truth would be news, but all the daily newspapers are either owned by the Sheenies or aware that they exist only on sufferance. I seldom read newspapers, for I must rely on friends to sent me cuttings of items they deem important, so I may be mistaken, but so far as I know, the Houston Post was the only newspaper which even printed so much as a letter from a subscriber who had watched the Cable News Network's showing of the cinematographic record. Many other papers, no doubt inadvertently, reprinted the two letters from the Post when they were quoted in a syndicated column for perplexed females conducted under the name of Abigail Van Buren by a clever woman who is said to be a Jewess. I hope B'nai B'rith will not spank her for her indiscretion. ❑

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the rôles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. For your copy of Which Way Western Man? send $17.50 (which includes $2.50 for postage and handling for the softback edition (Order No. 22003).

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980—except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. For your copy (Order No. 03014) send $10.00 (which includes $1.50 for postage and handling). LETTERS to the EDITOR

Why Despair? — Comments on "Here Comes the Revolution", Liberty Bell, May 1992

I have just read Sex vs. Civilization. I agree with Eric Thomson and Elmer Pendel's conclusions that the gradual fall of the Aryan civilizations throughout history have been caused by racial degeneration. This is true for America also. The Jews are right when they say, "Race Is Everything."

The reason that I may have sounded so defeatist to Liberty Bell readers in past letters is that I find it so very painful to watch my race dying before my eyes. The white race is physically the most beautiful race on planet Earth. This is why young white girls bring the highest price on the slave market.

The white race is plummeting in America, and will soon be a numerical minority. When this happens, the real horrors will begin. Even in rural America, I see my race's beautiful blonde, blue-eyed girls eager to line up for servicing by Negroes or Mexicans. Of course, the white boys stand by and whimper about it; they having learned how to best whimper from their fathers. Then, the white boys marry Mexicans, Asians, or queers, because they can't find any decent white girls to marry. It goes without saying that the white girls' Christian fathers, mothers, and brothers, won't say a word about race-mixing for fear of loosing their jobs, new homes, new cars, new boats, new TVs, new stereos, new Nintendos, new credit cards, new baubles and bubbles. Many white Americans are a disgrace to the white race.

To be honest, their destruction will be a benefit to the race as a whole, so that the white race may survive somewhere else other than America. Surely you must have figured out that the white race will necessarily have to fight and defeat the American military in order to survive the upcoming real Holocaust already being waged against it. Good luck fighting against Cruise missiles, M-1 Abrahms, F-11's, and F-15's! America is doomed, and rightfully so. Many white Americans don't deserve to be saved anyway.

Have you ever asked yourself how you are going to stop the destruction of Western Civilization and the white race?

The Jewish religion, which is aimed at destroying the white race, has been working on this goal for centuries. The Aryans are the Jews' foremost threat to world domination. The white race's ancestors, the Romans, sacked their Temple twice in ancient times. Thus, the Jewish Babylonian Talmud is rife with hatred of the white race. Somehow, the Aryans have always managed to survive and create new civilizations after the Jews have destroyed their previous ones. Now the historical cycle is different. This is the first time that the Jews have risen to World Masters and are targeting the white race for "utter and total" destruction. The Jews have upped the ante to causing mortal combat between the diverse races; but only the whites are too ignorant to understand this. After the white race's genes have been destroyed, the race will be lost forever. The only good news is that if this happens, the world will finally be rid of that cursed abomination of Christian hypocrisy.

By the way, if one considers oneself to be an Anglo-Saxon by race, then, according to Webster, one is German of blood and by race. If this is so, what were WWs I and II all about anyway?

The viability of a herd can be measured by the number of its breeding females. The white herd of goyim in America is entering into its death throes. The majority of young Caucasian females of breeding age won't breed true to race. One can see this in every metropolitan area in America. True racial breeding is the only thing that will keep the white race viable as a people. The racial demographics of the situation in this country are obvious.

Don't sugar coat the desperate situation of the white race in America by criticizing with self-righteous words of "defeatism" or "negativism," or "secret death-wish," in talking about the attempts of those who understand the difficulties that lie ahead for the survival of the white race on planet earth.

Instead, please tell us Liberty Bell readers when you are going to take up the sword, pull the trigger, and start the bloody revolution that must take place in America in order for the white race to survive. Or, will you go back to your paycheck, your new home, your new car, or your new bubble and bauble? When and where are you going to die to save the White Race? Excuses, eh?

Rescuing an Ideologue. At a time when ideologies are collapsing more quickly than fat people at a Marathon, I think we might just be able to muscle our way into the main-stream of the "World-Spirit," if we can call on the exertions of all of the soldiers in the Fascist "Legion of the Lost."

One such figure whom I would like to bring to the attention of readers of Liberty Bell is the well-nigh forgotten philosopher and theologian Jakob Friedrich Fries, who was born in 1775 and died in 1843.

Apart from the contributions made by our hero to a large number of philosophical disciplines, what should interest us most particularly is a booklet published by Fries in the summer of 1816, entitled "Über die Gefährdung des Wohlstandes und Charakters der Deutschen durch die Juden;" in this astonishing Little work, Fries anticipates with uncanny prescience the conclusions of forthright thinkers of a much later day: on page 243 of the version published in the Heidelbergische Jahrbücher der Litteratur, Fries describes the Jews as the "bloodsuckers of the Volk," who live not according to the laws of Moses, but according to the Talmud." He goes on to assert that the Jews must be eliminated in their entirety ("mit Stumpf und Stiel ausgerottet"), because of the obvious fact that the Jews are "of all secret political societies and states-within-a-state by far the most dangerous"! He then goes on, in quick succession, to demand a prototype of the Nuremberg Laws to protect the German Volk from the unending depredations of these vampiric aliens, an end to all immigration of Jews into the Fatherland, and that the Germans should force all Jews to wear a "special mark upon their clothing." All this in 1816!

So the next time you see the mutants in the urban bookstore clearing off the shelves of now-obsolete Marxist "literature" (except, that is, for the bilge of the Trotskyites—they learn nothing, and forget nothing), remember that that vacant shelf-space might soon be occupied by the writing of the illustrious—but temporarily obscure—Jakob Friedrich Fries.

Dear George:

Kosher In, Kosher Out! The kosher outfit known as Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing, Inc. has come up with a splendid piece of Jewish engineering. It is an All Purpose Scotch Brite Toilet Bowl Scrub, in blue, no less. This kosher item carries the circled 'U' on the cardboard holder indicating approval by the Union of Orthodox Hebrew Congregations. You can buy one for only $3.69. Such a bargain!

The Jews with their kosher extortion racket not only clip Americans at the check-out counter of their food store, they clip them again at the other end of their digestive tracts. That's called chutzpah!

Sincerely, M.D., Washington

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I think you will have some Spanish speaking person within your staff; thus I send you a copy of the front page of a weekly which deals with the "Attentat" against the embassy of Israel in Buenos Aires. Everybody here knew of its background, but to the editor of this weekly goes the credit for publishing it.

It's common all over the world that when Jewish issues are at stake—e.g., push laws through parliament which favor Jews, struggle for privileges, or simply to camouflage Jewish crimes (mainly economic ones) and distract public attention off major issues—an "anti-Semitic" action will be staged. Such is the case here too.

In deed, an attentat with a car bomb was planned and effectively carried out. On this behalf, shortly before the attentat started, the staff of the Israeli embassy (in the ground- and upper floors) was evacuated—the same thing happened with the staff of the Romanian embassy in the immediate neighborhood. Recently, after these measures were carried out, the attentat was executed as planned.

But then something happened that wasn't in the plan. You must know that in the basement of the embassy building there was a huge quantity of weapons, ammunition and explosives. (It is the general opinion that among all this war-material there was also one (or more) Argentine Condor rocket. This rocket was employed by Iraq during the Gulf War, superior to the Scuds, and it was the only one that caused damage and losses to the American armed forces. Consequently, the plant which produced the rockets (near the city of Cordoba) was not only closed by pressure of the USA, but also entirely dismantled. The rockets already finished or half finished were shipped away. And the Israelis claimed their share. Thus a rocket reached the embassy in question). All this stuff exploded, unforeseen, with the car bomb. This was the very reason for the enormous destruction, not yet knowing up to know the entire extend of the catastrophe.

Why was this attentat staged? First, by accusing the Iranians they wanted to discredit the government of Teheran as well as the Arabic and Islamic world as a whole. Second, hit the Arabic influence on and in connection with the Argentine government as well as denounce nationalist groups in Argentina, push through "anti-hate laws" and intimidate the entire population which is seriously concerned about the growing influence of the Jews on the clonish, dictatorial President Menem. Third, accelerate the way for and suppress any objection against the planned mass-immigration of Jews from Russia.

It was officially announced that Argentina will admit 1,000 Jewish families (that means roughly 5,000 persons) from Russia every three months—settling them mainly in Patagon (but also in the provinces of Entre Rios and Misiones) where an adequate infrastructure already exists. This turns into reality the prophecy of Theodore Herzl made in his book The Jewish Estate where he proposes Argentina as an alternative to Palestine. After the revolution of 1905 in Russia, already a stream of Jewish immigrants (financed and protected by Baron Hirsch, chief of Bunge & Born, one of the most important grain dealers in the world) entered this country. They formed the basis of Jewry in Argentina. Enlarged by the influx of many gassed Jews after WWII, this community is very powerful now and counts nowadays between 700 thousand and 1 million members.

Sincerely, E. S., Argentina

ONE: GAS BAG ATTACK!

Can there be a greater delight than puncturing the pomposity of a posturing ass? I rather doubt it. On 7 July 1992, a monstrous Zeppelin named Robert Mitchell, Commander, U.S. Navy Reserve, blotted out the sun and darkened the face of the land as it sailed majestically across the "Viewpoints" page of the Asbury Park Press.

Not since the days of Lieutenant Frank Luke, World War I "Balloon Buster," has a fighter jock had a better opportunity to let the wind out of a great bag of gas! So...let's "eyeball a mil setting in the gunsight...arm the switches," and "roll in" on the good ship Robert Mitchell!

"Tallyho the bogie!"
"Attacking!"
"SPLASH ONE!"

* * *

A very minor victory. One bulging bag of gas out of a vast Armada of "Politically Correct" Zeppelins that have been launched by the media to carry this message: QUEERS BELONG IN THE MILITARY!

This vast Armada of P.C. Gas Bags is commanded by the greatest GAS BAG of them all: Field Marshal, Air Marshal, Fleet Admiral Pat Schroeder, Congress..er..person? and Democrat from Colorado. A self-styled "military expert" who would have great difficulty in telling a Zeppelin from a Zucchini. A thoroughly dumb broad, who was apparently informed by "Shirley of Hollywood"—a really dumb broad—that she was Karl von Clausewitz in another life.

Well...maybe—intellectually speaking—the horse of Karl von Clausewitz. Specifically: the south end of Karl's horse—as it gallops north!

If there's any justice in this world—or the next one—"Shirley of Hollywood" will spend her next life as a fire hydrant—right in front of Doris Day's house!

* * *

Of course, it's "a piece of cake" for a fighter jock to shoot down a big, slow, unmaneuverable bag of gas like the Robert Mitchell—a target that big is hard to miss. That's why all the jocks have been grounded by the media, and it's a rare event when a real jock is actually allowed a shot at these politically correct blimps. Let's face it, all those non-military types could not possibly survive in a real "dog fight" with the professionals. So the American public is informed all about the military by non-military "experts," and the professional soldiers are pointedly ignored and silenced.

Now, this aerial skirmish actually had its start when the Asbury Park Press screwed-up and inadvertently allowed a real fighter jock, Lt. Cmdr. Ed Toner, to shoot down another bag of gas, the titanic dirigible: Arthur P. Brill Jr.

So, let's debrief these two sorties. Both of them were good, clean kills.

TWO: OF CABBAGES AND NAVIGUESSERS.

Robert Mitchell, Commander, U.S. Navy Reserve, is an unabashed supporter of homosexuals in the military. Specifically, in the U.S. Navy, where one Lt.J.G. Tracy Thorne is about to get his butt and frilly frocks booted out of service.

It seems our Nancy-boy had come flouncing out of his closet to proclaim that he was "gay." Which is perfectly all right with the U.S. Navy. The Navy doesn't mind if a chap is "gay": joyful, cheerful—even quite jolly—as long as he's not QUEER! And Tracy Thorne is now boasting that he can make change of a nine dollar bill—with three threes! Although Robert Mitchell might think this trick is "precious"—the U.S. Navy thinks otherwise.

Naturally, that great vegetable intellect of the House of Representatives, "Cabbage Head" Schroeder, has introduced a bill in Congress that would make perverts welcome in the military. Of course, this bill is in keeping with a campaign pledge of "Slick-Willy" Clinton to allow perverts in the military. Well...what can you expect from a cowardly DRAFT-DODGER who wants to be Commander In Chief?

If Schroeder doesn't get her bill passed, she has threatened to go into her infamous "CABBAGE-PATCH" blubber! A terrible sight that has been known to curdle a fellow's beer!

In his Asbury Park Press "Viewpoints" article, Mitchell declared that he was "outraged" because Lt. Cmdr. Ed. Toner, a retired Naval fighter pilot, and a good, upstanding, beer drinkin' Irishman, had a letter published responding to a long article written by Arthur P. Brill Jr. In his article, Brill fervently supported the gay navigator Tracy Thorne, whom he declared to be a "navigator-bombardier" of heroic proportions, as in: "...one hell of a flight officer, capable of spotting and zapping a target at tree-top level in an A-6 attack jet at 500 mph."

Y A W N ! Say...how come I'm not thrilled?

Brill, a non-flyer, may be just thrilled to pieces with his gay navigator, but there are some fighter jocks who consider the "naviguesser" to be a "passenger," or less kindly, "dead weight."

Lt.Cmdr. Toner, writing for the overwhelming majority of the military—and all fighter jocks—noted that Brill was a non-pilot, a non-aviator, and he did not have the expertise or experience to comment on Thorne's flying in a combat aircraft. Indeed, it is that same lack of any expertise and experience possessed by the thoroughly "outraged" Robert Mitchell, that makes him, like Brill, "experts" in something they know absolutely nothing about. Like "doctors" with degrees in Sociology—in Operating Rooms.

Of course, it doesn't take an intellect much greater than that of a Barbary Ape to realize that non-aviators, like Brill and Mitchell, must support a homosexual in Naval Aviation, because the aviators who do the job don't want homosexuals in the aircraft. It's the same reason the National Organization of Women must support females as line-backers in the NFL, because the professionals don't want broads on the field.

Robert Mitchell may sometimes wear a Navy uniform in the reserves, but he is certainly not Navy, or—THANK GOD!—Air Force. All his huffery and puffery about flying and combat clearly defines him as a non-aviator and non-combatant. I'm afraid that Mitchell falls into that category known to the Navy and Air Force as a "Ground Pounder," or a "Gravel Grinder." In short, one who has never seen the deck of a ship or the cockpit of an aircraft.

I don't know what Mitchell does in the Navy, but whatever it is, it ain't military. What kind of job is it that gives Mitchell this strange view of the military? Supply, accounting, dentistry? Proctology?

In point of fact, if Mitchell were military, he would realize that he has committed a serious breach of military etiquette: It's considered very bad form for a "Desk Jock" to criticize a "Fighter Jock."

Shame on you Robert Mitchell!

THREE: TARGETS OF OPPORTUNITY.

If it's not breaking some unwritten law of journalism that absolutely prohibits persons with expertise and experience in a specific field from commenting on that field, as an old Air Force pilot with plenty of combat time, let me answer some of the silly statements made by the thoroughly "outraged" Mitchell, and in doing so, explain why having homosexuals in the military would be an absolute disaster for the United States.

* * *

Mitchell pouts that Ed Toner "makes several unreasonable statements and implications." Well, let's take a look at them:

Mitchell takes exception to the fact that Lt.J.G. Thorne lied when he took an oath that he was not a homosexual. Mitchell dismisses this oath as meaningless.

Is it as meaningless as Thorne's oath to defend the Constitution? Is it as meaningless as Thorne's oath to obey the orders of his Commander In Chief? As meaningless as all those other oaths regarding Secret and Top Secret information? According to Mitchell, one may selectively obey oaths.

* * *

Mitchell is "outraged" because a fighter pilot like Ed Toner is not properly impressed with Thorne's job as a "navigator-bombardier." A job Mitchell obviously knows nothing about.

Alas, if Mitchell were military, he would realize that those who fly regard themselves as far superior to those who don't. And those who fly fighters regard themselves as superior to anything on the planet.

In point of fact, fighter pilots only reluctantly concede that bomber pilots are actually pilots—well, sort of—and they do not hold them in the highest of esteem, as evidenced by this fine old fighter pilot's song:

"Oh, the bomber pilot's life is just a farce.
Oh, the bomber pilot's life is just a farce.
The automatic pilot's on...he's reading novels in the john.
The bomber pilot's life is just a farce."

As for all other aviators—including the magnificent navigator-bombardier Tracy Thorne—the fighter jocks sort of summed things up during the Second World War with this little ditty:

"Oh, there are no fighter pilots down in hell.
Oh, there are no fighter pilots down in hell.
Oh, the place is full of queers...navigators...bombardiers.

There are no fighter pilots down in hell."

* * *

Mitchell claims there are many gays, "still in the closet, who are excellent sailors."

By my orders:

"Ten-n..HUT!

Open-n...MOUTH!

Inser-r-t...FOOT!"

If Mitchell knows of homosexuals in the military, he is now in violation of a half-dozen Articles of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. And, I rather expect, very soggy feet—from constantly shoving them in his mouth.

* * *

Poor Mitchell is in a positive tizzy over Toner's statement: "no pilot in his right mind would want a wounded homosexual next to him." He pouts that this is "AIDS trash."

Is it? Well...let's see about that:

The U.S. Center for Disease Control clearly documents the primary spread of AIDS as coming from two sources: Homosexuals and Intravenous drug users.

Both of these groups are now barred from the military—with good reason! If homosexuals are allowed in the military, we can expect to have in service the type of individual that the Center for Disease Control found in the so-called "Gay Community."

According to CDC research: The "average" homosexual living in a "Gay Community" went to gatherings of homosexuals on an average of three times a week; wherein, he had sex with an average of five different partners. On the other days of the week, he had sexual encounters with strangers or planned liaisons with known partners.

The reason AIDS spread like wildfire amongst homosexuals, is their lifestyle, it is a lifestyle that would duplicate an effort in a laboratory to reproduce a disease for study. The homosexual is a walking Petri Dish, very receptive to the production and spread of any bacteria or virus.

Make no mistake about this: The lifestyle of the homosexual has no counterpart in the heterosexual community. Unless one were to compare it to the promiscuity of a prostitute—in a Panamanian "crib."

Even with the whole of the media shouting AIDS, morning, noon and night, homosexuals are still the primary vector for the spread of AIDS. Clearly, the perverted lifestyle of homosexuals means more to them than life itself. Their claims of practicing "safe sex" with condoms runs into a law of probability. A condom is only 80 to 85 percent effective. That's just about the odds you will get playing Russian Roulette. Given their multiplicity of partners, it would be remarkable if a homosexual didn't get AIDS.

First Aid and Emergency Squads now wear masks, goggles, gloves and disposable smocks when dealing with any trauma case that produces bleeding. In every Trauma Center of every hospital, extreme care must now be taken to prevent the spread of AIDS from the blood of patients.

And then we have something called...COMBAT. Combat is a BLOODY MESS!

* * *

A naval ship in combat may have to use the Mess Deck as a hospital, its usually the only large space available. The wounded are simply carried in by their shipmates who have invariably come into contact with the wounded man's blood.

During combat, the deck may be splattered with blood, with men slipping and sliding in it as the ship maneuvers during a naval action.

If we add contaminated blood to this charming abattoir, we will certainly have men who survive their wounds,only to die of AIDS, years later, because an infected homosexual had his blood spread about. These men may even infect their wives and children before they find out that they are HIV Positive.

* * *

As for the "Grunts" on land, the threat is even greater, in that, they may encounter wounded, and bleeding, on a daily basis.

Unlike a ship, stretchers are not readily available in the field. The wounded are usually moved with a "Fireman's Carry," on the back of a fellow soldier, who may end up soaked with the wounded man's blood.

It's interesting to note that a pilot program in New York City that had firefighters responding to cardiac emergencies, along with the Emergency Medical Service, has been suspended because some of the firefighters were sent to treat the gunshot and knife wounds of persons who were later found to be HIV positive.

The New York firefighters are now demanding the goggles, gloves and protective smocks that the Emergency Medical Service are required to wear. Who can blame them?

What safety measures can be taken in dealing with a wounded homosexual in the field? Obviously none. Do you ask for a "volunteer" to carry a wounded homosexual to a medical station or to a helicopter "Dust Off"? Or, does the Officer / NCO order another homosexual to carry a wounded homosexual? And...will he do it?

* * *

There are two reasons for typing the blood of military personnel: The first is to give the fellow a transfusion if he is wounded and he needs blood. The second reason is to use the fellow's blood for a battlefield transfusion. All armies rely on their "walking blood banks."

With homosexuals in the military, and in combat, many of our wounded would refuse a battlefield transfusion and prefer to take their chances until properly screened blood in availabie. Without a doubt, this will cost us needless deaths.

* * *

Mitchell doesn't see why Lt.Cmdr. Toner would not want to fly with a homosexual in the cockpit. Ed Toner put it quite succinctly: "No pilot in his right mind would want a wounded homosexual next to him."

Mitchell, the non-pilot, the non-combatant, calls on every bit of his non-expertise and non-experience to make this preposterous state

Aerial combat produces special problems when there is bleeding. The Bad Guys have punched holes in your nice cockpit and maybe wounded someone in the process. Add any fluid, and those holes, along with the wind-blast, produce the same effect as an aerosol can. There were times when wounded pilots had great difficulty seeing and flying the aircraft, because the wind-blast from the holes in the cockpit was spraying their blood in their face and coating the inside of the canopy.

Mitchell, old boy, aerial combat can really be a very BLOODY MESS!

In side-by-side seating—a type of aircraft flown by our gay navigator—an AA hit could result in a man having an arm or a leg blown off. A massive wound of this type will produce a massive problem in the cockpit.

In fact, it happened to a friend of mine. He was flying as a navigator in the right seat of an A-26 on a night mission over the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Laos.

They took a 37MM hit on the right side of the aircraft. It blew his right arm off. The pilot actually managed to get that shot-up wreck back to the base—they had to scrap it. But it was too late, he died from a massive loss of blood.

* * *

If the politicians like "Slick Willy" and old "Cabbage Head," force the military to accept homosexuals, all the BLOODY PROBLEMS that I've mentioned will be solved on the field of combat.

It's inevitable that a wounded homosexual will be found to be HIV Positive. Members of his unit will be called in from the field, or assembled on board ship, and informed of this fact. And they will be tested for AIDS—just like the New York firefighters.

It will not take very long for military personnel in combat to realize that the homosexuals amongst them constitute a threat to themselves, their comrades, and even their wives and children. A threat above and beyond anything they bargained for when they volunteered to serve their country.

The Pentagon will vehemently deny this next statement, but I'm certain the Grunts will solve their problem in the field by "fragging the queers." The Navy boys will schedule them for "shark bait,"and a great many homosexuals will simply be reported as "missing at sea."

Of course, the politicians and the media will be HORRIFIED! Combat veterans will not be the least bit surprised.

The politicians who stick their big nose into something they know nothing about— COMBAT—and think it's like a Hollywood movie—are in for one hell of a big surprise!

FOUR: SCREAMIN' EAGLES, OR SCREAMIN' QUEENS?

If our politicians cave in to the awesome media might of PERVERT POWER and force the U.S. military to accept homosexuals, I hope the American people realize that the military will not be able to discriminate amongst any of the different perverts eager to join the Pansy Corps of Pat Schroeder. Once they get their foot in the door, it may be squeezed into a patent leather pump instead of a combat boot. Along with the "almost" normal looking, we will also get the freaks who mince and flounce down Broadway in New York City, when New York airs its garbage during its "Gay Pride Parade." Ah yes, the air is filled with lavender, as 70,000 marching, mincing-flouncers take to the streets to the squeaks, squeals and cheers of a half-million of New York's terminally strange.

The blatantly perverted "Queens" will probably necessitate some fundamental changes in Basic Training. Changes ordered by Commander In Chief..SLICK WILLY! Orders carried out by Secretary of Defense...PAT SCHROEDER! As in:

"Ten-n-n...HUT!
By the RIGHT FLANK!
FOR-WAR-R-RD...FLOUNCE!
You there! Stop that skipping!"

* * *

And then there is that problem associated with the "new" military dress code. Since the military now permits service personnel to wear "civies" in their off hours—and only limited space is available in a barracks or on board a ship—where will our military queens keep their ball gowns? And what security will be provided for their TIARAS?

Admittedly, this will not be a problem for all the BULL DYKES, who prefer to dress like one of the guys...only more MACHO...in leather...with chains...

* * *

The feminists—or FEMINUTS—are always complaining about the so-called "Old Boy's Network." Do they really think it will be any better with an "Old Queen's Network"?

One can well imagine the new variety of "sexual harassment" cases that the military will have to deal with: None of the usual weeping, wailing and blubbering about being physically, or the ever-popular, "verbally" molested—just a short right to the jaw!

Now, if a junior decks a senior, or an enlisted man decks an officer, whose word does one take about what, when, where and how? With

Given the undisputable fact that homosexuals and lesbians always "network" in support of their kind—they're famous for it—with a Pervert's Network in place, any "straight" male or female will have as much chance as a snowball in hell if he or she is engaged in a conflict with a pervert.

The result of forcing the military to accept homosexuals, will be an internecine battle. A battle between the "straights" and the "perverts." A battle that will destroy discipline and therefore military effectiveness.

* * *

Military "discipline" is not to be confused with the pervert "discipline" of the "whip and chains" degenerates, who routinely send their paramours off to the Emergency Room or the Morgue when their so-called "lovemaking" gets out of hand. The loathsome "S&M" perverts who, I'm sure, are just "dying" to get in the military.

During wars the military gets its share of perverts and degenerates—some of whom even volunteer for service. We get the sadists who will beat a prostitute to a bloody pulp—just for kicks! We get the child-molesters. Any kind of perversion you can name—we get it! It's the same with any military during any war, when the military can't properly screen those coming into service.

The professional soldiers have the duty to keep an eye out for this filth and toss it in the stockade or brig. That's because these despicable actions are now crimes in the military. However, some of these filthy perversions are not regarded as "crimes" amongst homosexuals. Some homosexuals regard these actions as a kind of "foreplay" and perfectly normal. Indeed, we see homosexuals all the time on the Boob Tube trying to hustle their perversions as normal. And when all the freaks, the homosexuals and lesbians of all kinds, march and mince proudly down Broadway in New York during their "Gay Pride Parade," there is always a group amongst them proudly marching and carrying their banner—it is the banner of NAMBLA. NAMBLA is an abbreviation of : North American Man Boy Love Association. A "proud" band of child molesters, whose motto is: "Get 'em before eight, before it's too late." These filthy, loathsome degenerates who prey on little children are just as welcome in a Gay Pride Parade as any other degenerates committed to "doing their special thing."

It's an old expression: "People judge you by the company you keep." So, homosexuals and lesbians should be judged by all the filthy perverts and perversions that they so willingly tolerate.

The "clean cut" queers selectively presented to us on the ol' Boob Tube by our glorious media—they will never show you the freaks—willingly associate with degenerates whose disgusting perversions would make most people lose their lunch!

* * *

Our media has given us this queer set of double-standards: A heterosexual who molests little children is regarded as mentally deranged and one of the lowest forms of life by a heterosexual society.

This is certainly not true of a homosexual in a homosexual community—the filthy perverts proudly parade down the avenue to the cheers of the community. A heterosexual who is into "kinky" or bizarre sex is shunned by a heterosexual society and regarded as a mental degenerate.

Not so with a homosexual in his community, where any perversion, no matter how revolting, falls under the umbrella of, "doing your own thing."

If we appiy the same standards to homosexuals that we have always applied to heterosexuals, we end up with precisely the same result: a diseased mind that should be shunned by civilized society and NEVER permitted in the military.

FIVE: YA GOTTA HAVE RESPECT!

Discipline can mean success or failure in combat. All failures in combat are paid for in the coin of combat: casualties!

Discipline means having the respect and confidence in those Officers and NCOs giving the orders to execute the orders without question.

If an American patrol were to stumble into an ambush, their survival would depend, in large measure, on their discipline. If you are taking fire, the "natural" thing to do is to bunch together—returning fire—and try to back out of the ambush. Doing the "natural" thing will naturally get you killed.

Bunching up will get you killed in bunches. Maintaining proper separation will reduce casualties.

The weakest point in the ambush is probably straight ahead. Even going to the right or left might get you out of it. However, going back where you came from is sure death—it's certain to be the strongest point of the ambush.

Disciplined troops who will follow orders—without question—have the best chance of surviving an ambush. Undisciplined troops "naturally" get shot to hell.

* * *

As a Forward Air Controller in Vietnam, I worked with different Battalions of the same Brigade in the Tay Ninh sector of Three Corps—a very active area.

The difference between Battalions was almost a difference of night and day. The aggressive, well-disciplined troops were great: they got the job done and they took very few casualties.

One Battalion became infamous—a joke. It lacked aggressiveness and discipline, because the Commander thought the officers, NCOs and enlisted men should all be...pals. Troops rapidly lose respect for authority if it isn't exercised, and "pals" are a nice, friendly bunch who wouldn't think of exercising authority on other "pals."

In a sweep through an enemy area, when an aggressive, well-disciplined Battalion comes under fire...they attack! They concentrate fire. They call in artillery, air and gun ships. Most importantly, they keep moving.

On taking fire, our Battalion of buddies would stop DEAD in their Armored Personnel Carriers—like sitting ducks—and get shot to pieces. They couldn't seem to follow orders from their "buddies" and "pals." Some APCs actually tried backing up. Others sort of milled around. Seen from the air, it was THE KEYSTONE KOPS! They got shot to hell and accomplished nothing.

* * *

It doesn't really matter if soldiers like or dislike their NCOs and officers—as long as they respect them. A lot of guys who have survived combat thoroughly detested the NCOs and officers who drove them, night and day, until they dropped. They hated their guts! And yet, they'll still say: "Those miserable bastards kept me alive—I respect them for that."

Whether Pat Schroeder likes it or not, soldiers do not respect queers! Soldiering is a manly profession, and it attracts the aggressive male that all armies must have to succeed in any war. This aggressive male regards queers with contempt and derision—creatures not worth of respect.

Once respect is lost amongst the hard-core aggressive male, when they are forced to obey orders from perverts, the discipline of the fighting force will go to hell and take combat effectiveness with it.

I don't think the American people are willing to needlessly sacrifice their kids in combat because some of Pat Schroeder's best friends are homosexuals and lesbians. And ol' Cabbage Head Schroeder sees nothing wrong in pleasing them by forcing the American military to accept homosexuals and lesbians. For Schroeder it's little more than political patronage: a government job for loyal Democrats. For the American people: A BODY BAG!

Pat Schroeder was appointed to the Armed Services Committee by the leftwing of the Democrat Party to vote NO! on any effort to defend this nation. This is her job and she does it better than anyone else. She has demonstrated, time after time, year after year, that she knows nothing about the military, or weapons, or warfare, or combat; and yet, she has anointed herself as a kind of feminist Clausewitz, quite prepared to kill off large numbers of Americans with her mind-boggling ignorance and stupidity. It would be far more humane of Schroeder to go into an operating room in Washington and kill them off one at a time as an amateur surgeon, then by the thousands as an amateur Clausewitz.

Erwin Rommel's Panzers were well-disciplined troops, regarded as "crack troops" even by their adversaries like Patton and Montgomery. Patsy's Pink Panzers will be an historical disaster created by one of the leading CRACK-POTS in the Congress.

SIX: PATSY'S PERFECT PANZERS.

The kind of military that Field Marshal, Air Marshal, Fleet Admiral Schroeder yearns to impose on the United States is already in existence. Yes indeed, it is the world-famous military of the Netherlands.

A military guaranteed to bring a tear to the eye and a rather damp feeling to the baggy knickers of any BULL FEMINIST! All ranks in this symphony of military perfection have their very own LABOR UNIONS! Yes, it's quite an irresistible military dream for any Liberal Democrat. Whoops! There goes the knickers again!

Now, these Labor Unions actually negotiate their pay, their work hours, and all manner of military decisions. So, you see, discipline is simply not needed in this perfect military where one may even negotiate orders. Instead of having military personnel frantically rushing about to obey an order—like the foolish American military—isn't it so much more civilized to sit down at a bargaining table and have a truly meaningful discussion on that order? After all, it may involve overtime.

In Patsy's symphony of military perfection, everyone may "do his own thing." So there is lots and lots of PINK and POT about.

And...long hair. And beads. And very scruffy beards. And smelly, unwashed bodies. And bits and pieces of uniforms. It's been said that Patsy's Perfection rather resembles a mob of unwashed beatnicks who raided an Army-Navy store.

This world-famous military mob is known as: THE WORST ARMY IN THE WORLD! Even the most backward Third World military mob—chucking spears at a tourist bus—considers itself to be better than Patsy's Wet Dream: the "alleged" army of the Netherlands.

Believe it or not. This army joke is actually part of NATO! But no one actually thinks that it would defend Europe—or even the Netheriands! Well...not on a weekend anyway. And certainly not if it's raining. But, what the hell, the queers love it.

SEVEN: THE BUTCHERS ON THE "HILL".

I've served in the U.S. military as an enlisted man, an NCO, and an officer, during two hot wars and as a SAC bomber pilot during the Cold War. I have never seen any interference in the military by politicians produce a worthwhile result. NEVER! Every action by every self-styled Field Marshal, Air Marshal and Fleet Admiral strolling the halls of Congress produced a negative result. It either degraded the ability of our forces to defend this nation, or it cost us needless casualties in combat. Pat Schroeder's crazy plan to homosexulize the American military will do both. She will seriously degrade the ability of our forces to defend this nation, and she will cost us thousands of needless casualties in any combat.

If a professional soldier makes a mistake, he is held accountable for his mistake by his peers and by military historians. The politicians who are so eager to play soldier are NEVER held accountable for their stupid butchery, because, like Pat Schroeder, they are almost always liberals and our liberal media will never blow the whistle on one of their own. During the whole of the Vietnam War, the liberal American media never blew the whistle on even one of the liberal Congressional BUTCHERS who slaughtered Americans with their stupidity.

If the American people are willing to let the likes of Pat Schroeder make military decisions that will effect the very survival of their sons and daughters in combat, they can't complain if they get their kids back in plastic bags, or with missing parts. ❑

The Plot to Abolish White Racial Heredity

by
Major D.V. Clerkin

The races of the world are clearly delineated by facial features, hair textures, skin colors, skin areas, which makes each racial group distinguishable from all the others. We do not usually mistake a white man for a negro, an Asian, or an American Indian, at least when there is no evidence of blood mixture. Races are millions of years in the making. Heredity of a group-racial nature is not contrived, not the result of a man-made ideology or plan. Like-unto-like is the natural order.

Trips to foreign places where other races are indigenous show that each race has a unique aptitude for creating cultural forms. China and Japan display architectural forms that are peculiar to the people who built them, an expression of a cultural soul that is unlike anything to be seen in Europe. Europe abounds with examples of Aryan racial culture: the Gothic cathedral; the symphony orchestra; portrait painting in oil; and earlier, Doric, Ionian and Corinthian capitals, Roman feats of engineering and administration. Proof that races differ not only in the colors of their skins, but differ as to how to view life; philosophies as widely different as fire and water.

The black race has no cultural expression beyond the cohesiveness of the tribe. Africa below the Sahara has no writing, therefore no history; it has no architecture, no technics, not even a tribal medicine beyond the mojos of the witch doctor. Of the thee major racial groups in the world, the black race is the most poorly equipped to bring forth a civilization of its own. The attempt to impose European civilization upon the black race has been a dismal failure, as witnessed by the upheavals in the Belgian Congo after independence in the early 1960s. Today, blacks riot over the slightest social pretext, when in fact it is a total rejection of the white man's way of life that is taking place. African savagery is genetically predisposed. What was seen in the video of the beating of Reginald Denny in LosAngeles was a black tribal dance of victory over the fallen white man. There is no cultural difference between the dance in Los Angeles and that dance of the "Simbas" in Stanleyville, on the Congo River, in 1964. When the Belgian paratroopers and the white mercenaries entered Stanleyville they witnessed the "Simbas" dancing wildly over the bodies of their white victims. No "Simba" prisoners were taken that day; they were put up to a wall within the sight of those whites who remained alive and conscious.

Aryan warmaking is in general a matter of chivalry when the enemy is also a kindred member of the Aryan race. The concept of the "gentleman's war" was a product of the European medieval period. And up until World War II, which was a distorted example of Jewish psychological influence on the Allied side, leading to mass bombing of German civilian targets, warfare among the states of Europe was usually brief and relatively humane, ending in a treaty that both sides could live by. There were notable exceptions, especially the brutal Thirty Years' War, a religious fiasco between Catholics and Protestants much like the seemingly endless sectarian strife in Northern Ireland.

Asian warmaking is generally a sanguinary event, though of all the peoples of Asia the Japanese have proven to be the most warlike, the Chinese the least warlike. Japan's Samurai code of Bushido, tied to emperor worship, brought forth the formidable Japanese military and naval forces, whose victims stretched from Korea and China, to the British, French and Dutch empires in Southeast Asia; and even to the United States in the air attack on Pearl Harbor. When the militant Asian makes war, as the Asian Triad drug gangs, immigrants to the United States, are now waging in the streets of this country, he kills not in a utilitarian sense, but almost religiously. Bodies everywhere! The day will come in America when the fools in the Justice Department who patted themselves on the back for locking up the Mafia will yearn wistfully for the days when the Mob took out just one guy, the guy they were after.

Racial integrationists, mongrelizers, have a deep-seated hatred for the thoroughbred human, for the man who is a paragon of his race, for heredity. Heredity among human beings can mean vitality and greatness. The ideology of mongrelization prefers the human condition to be life-less, devoid of spirit, with the stated intent that racial levelling through miscegenation will bring forth a utopian world, a world in which each individual will be equal and of no greater value than those around him. Racial selection through discriminatory mating has given the world the only progress it has achieved. There can be demonstrated no evidence of equality among individuals as to health, capabllities or intelligence. Each race is better equipped for certain things that are beyond the abilities of the other races. The mongrelizer would make an end to human progress in the cause of absolute equality. It is not the white racist who holds back progress. He cherishes race and culture. The mongrelizer hates that natural caste that race brings with it, but that caste is everything to human achievement.

The integrationist ideology poured into the United States hierarchy during the Roosevelt New Deal of 1930s. Rising out of Jewish nihilism in the universities, the desire of the Jews to expunge the Aryan culture from America, and behind which desire lurked the Jewish Bolshevist, the idea that black-white sexual union was the inevitable wave of the future became the driving force of public education after World War II. Prior to that time, no one in ordinary society had an inkling of what was to take place in the American classroom. When Brown v. Board of Education was decided in 1954 by the U.S. supreme Court, it was mandated by the lower U.S. courts that "desegregation" of public education take place "with all deliberate speed," which meant the primary grades first, then the secondary grades. Kids were shoved onto buses and moved all over the cities, but mostly busing meant black children in white schools. It did not matter that black parents thought it unfair that their kids had to do the busing, or that white parents threatened everything from a tax strike to a boycott of the integrated schools themselves. The buses rolled because the mongrelizers conceived of the day when little white girls would grow up to bear black babies. The fraud of school integration claimed that it would expand opportunities for blacks to sit next to whites in school. Opportunites for what was never the question integrationists would ever answer.

We now know what that was. Mixed marriages in the United States up nearly 400% from 1970 to 1991: 65,000 - 231,00.

Still, the integration, the mongrelizing goes on unabated by logic or costs; or even by bloody riots that have clearly demonstrated that when blacks can get hold of a white man they will either kill him or try to. To the average black, for whom white taxpayers have shelled out billions in welfare payments and special goverment stipends, integration means an opportunity to prey on whites. Obviously the peace, love and harmony bunk of the mongrelizers has not affected the African psyches of the black population in the United States. Was it meant to work on blacks, or only on the gullible whites?

Clearly the white race is threatened by the plot against heredity. White heredity cannot compete against non-white genes. A black cat and a white cat will usually have a litter of four: one black, one white, a brownish or tan tabby, and the possibility of a calico. That is Gregor Mendel's Law of Heredity in the animal world at work. But a black-white human sexual union will produce no white offspring. White genes are at a 4:1 disadvantage to black genes. There can be no miscegenation that does not utterly ruin and destroy the white race. How many young girls who sleep with blacks realize this genetic fact? Would they do it if they knew that every child they bear will have negroid features kinky hair, thick lips, and probably a lower potential for intelligence? Facts such as these are denied to white kids in the integration process. They do not know that what they are doing is creating more blacks, no possibility of white offspring. Nevertheless, facts are facts; and no white who really cares for his or her race, its continuation, can have anything to do with race mixing.

Will whites lose this struggle to retain their heredity? That depends on whether the mongrelizers and their false equality propaganda have their way with the coming generations of whites. The mongrelizers are well aware that they are involvedin a plot to commit genocide against the white race, though they would like us to believe that white preservation is somehow the act of genocide. Only thewhite race is targeted for extinction. Miscegenation, abortion propaganda, equality mongering, each is a definite part of a larger strategy designed to drive the white race to the wall. The sooner whites come to realize that they are the target, the sooner they will organize to put a halt to the process and punish those who have been responsible for it.

ET CETERA

In the last issue of the Quarterly, we commented on the Chief Crazy Horse monument that is in the process of being completed in the Black Hills of South Dakota. We said that the monument was probably financed with white taxpayers' money, and'that it was a shame because if anyone was anti-white it was Crazy Horse. Chester Grabowski of the Post Eagle newspaper, a Polish organ, called me to say that the designer of the monument, a Polish immigrant to the United States would accept no federal funds to build the Crazy Horse monument. We weren't certain, so a letter was sent to Congressman Gerald D. Kleczka of Wisconsin, to ask whether any federal money was used. Rep. Kleczka confirmed Mr. Grabowski's statement that the artist refused all public moneys, at least he refused federal money. We stand corrected, but there is a question as to why a white man would dedicate his life to memorialize the life and deeds of Crazy Horse, or Rain-In-The-Face, or Sitting Bull, or Geronimo, or any other anti-white warrior. We respect our skillful opponents, but we do not set aside our own people to praise them.

CBS News has reported that hundreds of American "recession asylees" have invaded Prague, Czechoslovakia looking for jobs. One wonders why these punky swells converged on Prague? Certainly not for the Czech Philharmonic concerts! Most likely the bulk of these American expatriates are Jews and brain-dead whites who want to do drugs and figure that the Czech authorities will look the other way. Their next move will be to petition the Czech government to import some Congoids from the inner cities of America. Yuppies just can't "get down" without anthropoids. ❑

I AM A PROPAGANDIST

by
Gordon S.Clark

As a reader of Liberty Bell once contacted me saying he was communicating with me because I obviously had guts if I wrote the kind of things I did and didn't hesitate to give my name and address, I must confess that there was a time when I withheld my name, contacted certain people without giving a return address on the envelope for the Feds to list on the "mail cover" they can by law keep on suspected people and groups.

I realized that this was futile when a letter without return on outside was returned "Opened by dead letter office" after being stamped undeliverable as addressed. So nice of the Federal snoops to return my check intended to buy books from National Youth Alliance. They even charged me return postage, so I paid double for them NOT delivering my letter. As the letter did have the NYA proper address, what was I to conclude, that the mail man was an 'Affirmative Action' hire who couldn't read, maybe? Yet there were other times I was not totally open in my writings, as when I was a bureaucrat. A man should not risk his job because he believes that crap about "freedom of expression and speech," but if he is stupid enough to believe that, maybe he should lose his job.

If you think it is easy or even probable that you can remain a part of what the Klan used to call "The Invisible Empire," then consider the Federals use of Right Wing mailing lists as "evidence" of conspiracy, their Mother Hubhard charge against the fourteen tried at the Ft.Smith witch hunt. The groups did not offer those lists to the unwashed Federal dogs freely. The information was stolen!

Understand further that the Ft. Smith trials were obviously not intended to convict but rather to persecute, a deliberate act by government against our people. The intent was to keep those men out of circulation for a while, worry the older ones into heart attacks if possible, cost them all they owned to hire lawyers and to drain cash from the true patriots who supported them. From the ZOG/JOG point of view the trials succeeded. Surely charging them all with being white supremacists when two were full blooded Choctah Indians should make that obvious. Yes, even non-Whites can fervently hate ZOG.

That the word 'propaganda' was given a bad name by allied propaganda itself when Dr. Goebbels was information minister for the Third Reich is unfortunate and clouds people's understanding until many Americans understand about like the Nigger who asked a wench, "What do dey means by propaganda?" and she replied, "Le's put it dis way, I'z a goose but youz not de propaganda."

But a propagandist I must be because when some Kike didn't like a letter of mine to the editor of a Dallas paper he addressed a letter to me "Gordon S. Clark, Propaganda Agent For The PLO, Eastland, TX" and that one was delivered faithfully. Then, if further evidence that I am what I claim be needed, I really was once offered a subsidy by a Palestinian but had to decline. The money would have been traced to the PLO and there is a law that states that all agents of foreign powers must register and, furthermore, that anything they send out must be clearly identified as paid propaganda for a foreign power. Now, obviously, in my case that would he a damnable lie as I write against Zionism out of my own heart and, furthermore, since the US government refuses to recognize the PLO as a legitimate government or the Palestinians as even being a distinct people (the Israeli party line), then how could I have been acting for a government that did not exist? Ah, but unless you are the brother, wife of, or are otherwise closely connected to, the president, a senator or big Jews in the District of Corruption, you can be prosecuted as I was clearly informed by the Department of INjustice. So, I gave them my cheer for that most famous university for low class Mexicans, "Peon U! Peon U!" and redoubled my efforts for Palestine free of charge. Damn, but I could have used a few more pieces of Federal phony money.

In FDRs war to make the world safe for Jew Communism I lost a hand and an eye with the other eye so badly damaged that I am now classed as legally (though not totally) blind.

Do not think for a minute that Communism is dead. It lives in Cuba, a dozen African countries and in Israel, to name just a few places. However, there is one good development coming out of the "communism is dead" lie. It is now harder for professional anti-communist pulpit pounders to skin poor old ladies out of their social security with tales of the Red Dragon poised to swoop down upon the "Promised Land" and the "Chosen People". Even the few who were able to double clutch and quick shift to the threat of "Babylon" when 'Saddam is Hitler' was in vogue were unconvincing after the Bushwhacker so quickly destroyed his straw man. But the people seem desperate to believe something the Jewsmedia will provide anyhow.

The old adage was "Believe none of what you hear and only half of what you see", but that was before the boob tube, so now you can cut the part you see to a small fraction. With my visual problems, I enjoy the point of the story wherein a news boy offered a blind man a paper. The man said, "Son, don't you see this white cane that tells you I am blind?"

The lad asked, "But you can still smell can't you?"

When the blind man agreed that he could still smell, the boy said, "Well buy a paper then. It's all full of BS anyhow."

So, likewise, when I hear "You are watching CBS," I think "with extra stress on that BS part and the other networks, too."

A propagandist should have a good stock of quick replies like, "Yes, I have a friend who will agree with you that they are a 'Chosen people' but he disagrees as to who chose them." Or again, when a dear lady wrote me with the intention of saving my soul and freeing me of anti-Semitism, in one of my letters I expressed my opinion of treacherous, lecherous, dirty old FDR. She informed me that it was sinful to say evil of the dead who could no longer defend themselves. I wrote back expressing my joy that in her at last I had found one person who would never say anything bad about poor old ADOLf HITLER who also was no longer able to defend himself. She quit writing.

Now understand, please, that 'propaganda' can serve many purposes. I write to bring a ray of sunshine to political prisoners in the dungeons and one even made a few bucks by sending some of my risque jokes to magazines that pay for such. Propaganda may be chiefly in op ed columns, but there are rules governing best results. The shorter and harder the letter, expect as few as one in five to be printed; some writers don't even seem to know that profanity will be rejected. Some papers print only local letters, most reject mass copied stuff and some have a "one letter each 60 days" policy though not always stated. An amateur can play the game but study the pros.

Regarding letters to prisoners, though it should not need said, most have no income and will beg money. Some are professional con artists. So, you should make a definite decision as to whether, and if so, exactly how much you will contribute.

Maybe I have been a sucker at times, but having been in the navy and in hospitals, I know at least part of the feeling of being cut off from the outside world and "No Letter Today".

How awful it must have been for Rudolf Hess and I wonder if some enterprising Russian who has access to KGB files might sell anything they dad on Hess. Wouldn't that have the potential for nightmares in London and Washington?

The recognized propagandist may collect strange friends. I would not have before suspected there were so many Right Wing groups and it gives a warm feeling to know you have so much agreeable company.

My services have been requested by a couple of politicians, persons having personal grudges, a teacher unjustly fired (as she is related to a close friend, you KNOW her termination was unjust), and even students with reports to write.

Though not universally loved, I am at least respected. At least I take it as a sign of respect when one asked me if I soaked my typewriter ribbons in curare or some other poison. One fellow said that at least I made people think, and the other said, "Yes, even if what they think is 'damn'.

I certainly agree that 'He who will not read is no better off than he who cannot read', but reading without thinking is as bad as hearing without understanding.

What use is 'freedom of speech' if people fear to express themselves, and who has the authority to decree what is 'politically correct'? The brutal truth is that not only is Communism not dead but the old Party Line has been renamed Politically Correct and it rules most American campuses. So, P.F. or F.L., it is the S.O.S. (Same Old S—).

Again re letters to political prisoners (what ZOG would consider aid and comfort to the enemy), each institution has its own rules and many are 'Mickey Mouse', so try to learn the rules for each. Even that will not prevent crap like a Ms. Washington at a California prison rejecting a letter on which I put the zip code but left off city and state. She marked it "RETURN TO SENDER, reason: NO RETURN ADDRESS." If it had no return address you might wonder how she expected it to be returned, but when did Nigger 'mentality' make sense anyhow. A complaint to both California and D.C. were only to express my low regard for them and, as expected, from California no reply and from D.C. the sickest excuses for no action. I would have been disappointed if either had done otherwise.

A propagandist may have to tailor his words so as to make them acceptable to more people but he will hurt somebody's feelings regardless. Some are just naturally ready to be offended. I was surprised at how perceptive a black woman in England was when she demanded other workers be reprimanded and apologize for leaving a ball point pen on her desk. She claimed they were inferring that she was a monkey. Well, the ball point was a Bic Banana. You remember those yellow, curved pens. Now, how could authorities believe that a gift pen was an insult? Well, maybe someone had told her she could swing in the trees. But in these JewSA they would probably call that remark a threat of a lynching. The things people can read into a few words!

You don't even need words to be misunderstood. Like the Peace Corps worker in an African country who was sent home because she happened to put a stamp with the Nigger dictator's picture on the envelope upside down.

Now I have heard various people say that a stamp upside down meant "I love you," while others say it means "no answer desired". But when I put on a flag stamp upside down it is the old naval signal of distress, and believe me, this "Ship of State" is in great distress. Just look at the rat politicians leaving Washington as a ship destined to sink. ❑ by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. Single copy $7.00, 3 for $15., 5 for $20.00, 10 for $30.00.

For postage and handling add:On domestic orders, $1.50 for orders under $10.00, 15% of order total for orders over $10.00. On orders from abroad, $2.00 or 20% respectively. Subliminals in the Movie "J.F.K."

by Dean Grace

This is a record of observations of subliminal and possible subliminal messages in the film "J.F.K." using the slow motion and freeze frame controls on a VCR. I have made this list in the order of appearance in which they occurred. Subliminals are at their greatest frequency and intensity during the middle and especially the second half of the film. The following list of subliminal descriptions is totally the result of my own personal observations. All interpretations of scenes, opinions, and conclusions are my own.

Scene number:

1. A man's face wearing eyeglasses can be seen subliminally three times during the movie. He appears to wear the same style eyeglass frame that Garrison wears. This is the first subliminal image seen in freeze frame in the movie. Is it Garrison's face?

2. Black and white scene of Sowed being questioned by F.B.I. agent after Sowed is arrested for fighting with anti-Castro Cubans. One moment Sowed is sitting in a chair being questioned by F.B.I. agent sitting behind a desk. By advancing the scene frame by frame Oswald is seen sitting in a chair facing his questioner then Sowed is standing against a wall facing the opposite direction. The chair is empty. The subliminal message is that Sowed can be in two different places at the same time.

3. Garrison questions homosexual convict O'Keef. In the flashback homosexual party scene there appears a full screen subliminal skull, rat in a cage, and image of a skull in the background over Shaw's raised left hand.

4. Man in dark suit passes three hoboes being taken into custody by police. There is a hint that the man gives the hoboes a secret hand sign. This happens again later in the film in more detail.

5. White ghost-like figure in picture on wall watches Garrison and his staff meeting in Garrison's home.

6. During a carnival parade an American flag is lowered to expose huge human skull.

7. Garrison questions Shaw in Garrison's office. There are flashback homosexual scenes and subliminal scenes suggesting homosexuality.

8. After David Farrie's death the subliminals seen in Farrie's apartment are a skull, rats, and religious figurines.

9. Garrison goes to Washington D.C. to meet with a former intelligence agent called "X" who knows all. While leaving the Lincoln Memorial Garrison opens an umbrella and raises it over his head. Garrison becomes an "umbrella man." Agent "X" instantly identifies Garrison and their talk begins. Passersby have raised umbrellas, however it does not appear to be raining. The subliminal message is that perhaps Garrison has something to do with the conspiracy that assassinated J.F.K.

10. Man in dark suit passes three tramps and gives a clear secret-like hand sign supposedly for the alleged tramps benefit. Man turns and looks back at tramps.

11. Moments after Martin Luther King Jr's assassination is announced on television, Garrison's young daughter talks to a stranger on the telephone who tells her that she has just been entered into a beauty contest. Over her head on the wall behind her is again the picture frame containing a curious ghost-like figure. Advancing the scene frame by frame the figure appears to talk.

12. Garrison talks to his legal staff in meeting room about F.B.I. agent questioning Oswald in New Orleans after Sowed is arrested for fighting with anti-Castro Cubans. Scene changes to black and white. And again one moment Sowed is questioned sitting in the chair. The next moment he is standing facing the opposite direction. The chair is empty. Repeat of the same earlier subliminal message reinforces feeling that Oswald can be in two different places at the same time.

13. Moments before Garrison sees Robert Kennedy shot on television, Garrison makes a sandwich using 'Wonder Bread.' Of course, viewers wonder who killed J.F.K.

14. Robert Kennedy speaking on television is heard to say: "We are a great country, and a selfish country, and a compassionate country . . ." Seconds later he is shot on television.

15. Moments after Robert Kennedy is assassinated, Garrison goes upstairs and makes love to his wife. Horrible televised violence gets Garrison in the mood.

16. While Garrison and his team are walking up the court house steps a mysterious man with white hair similar to Clay Shaw is seen moving behind Garrison's left shoulder. Clay stalking Garrison?

17. During Willy O'Keef's testimony on witness stand, scene flashes back to a homosexual meeting of Shaw and O'Keef. Over Shaw's left raised hand in the upper right corner of the screen is seen an image of a human skull. By advancing frame by frame the skull opens its mouth in horror and then appears to explode.

14. Downward zooming shot of judge's desk shows judge's hand pounding gavel. Slightly to the left and up is a round ash tray that resembles symbolic Wickerman face shown on the cover of the 'Wickerman' video rental box. The theme of the Wickerman movie was symbolic ritual murder.

20. Doctor puts the remains of Kennedy's brain in supermarket style weighing scale basket.

21. In Garrison's final summation to the court, Garrison says: "So what really happened that day? Let's just for a moment speculate, shall we?" Man in black suit, white shirt slowly raises open umbrella in front of another man wearing a jacket with the word 'RIPLEY' emblazoned on the back. Hollywood science-fiction character 'RIPLEY' fought aliens, or perhaps its merely 'Ripley's Believe It or Not.'

22. Man aims rifle at Kennedy. The rifle has a telescopic sight. Camera zooms in for an extreme close-up. Scene shifts to the objective lens of the telescopic sight. In other words, the entire screen is filled by the front lens of the telescopic sight. A reflection of an emotionless face can be seen in the lens. This face then changes to another face with a wild-eyed, devilish grin. The face disappears and then light begins to emanate from within the telescopic sight. This light emanating from within the telescopic sight effectively changes the impression that this is now not a telescopic sight but instead has become the projection lens of a movie projector.

23. After James Tague is nicked by stray bullet, scene changes to Clay Shaw holding an umbrella over his head. Several frames later scene changes to a younger dark haired man holding umbrella over his own head.

24. Immediately after the shooting in Dealy Plaza patrolman Joe Smith stops and questions a man. The man produces a Secret Service badge. The questioning stops and the man moves off. Scene shifts to courtroom where patrolman Smith is testifying on the witness stand. He says: "Afterward it didn't ring true but at the time—we were so pressed for time." Immediately scene shifts to a tall young man wearing a dark suit. He has his left hand up to his ear as if listening to an ear phone. This man turns toward the camera and clearly gives the Masonic sign of distress of the first degree of Freemasonry. This sign is given by holding the palm of the left hand up and crossing it with the right hand palm down. This is done several times at waist level, with the hands held out about twelve inches from the body. This is the first sign of a Mason. It is the sign of distress in the Entered-Apprentice, first degree of Freemasonry. It seems that Freemasons as a group are selected for a subliminal charge of emotion.

25. After Garrison delivers his summation to the court there is another overhead downward zooming shot of the judge's desk. The judge is pounding the gavel. The round ash tray that appears to be a symbolic Wickerman face appears to be smiling.

Other notes about Garrison in the film:

In the first scene of Garrison in the movie, Garrison is sitting behind his desk. There is a German style infantry helmet on the top left of his desk. While standing in front of Guy Bannister's old office building Garrison is heard to say: "I used to have lunch with him (Bannister)." Garrison's young son, while waiting for his father to attend family dinner in a restaurant, says: "Daddy never keeps his promises." Garrison's baby then cries. The jive-talking lawyer, Dean Andrews, hired by Clay Shaw to be Oswald's attorney, and Garrison have been friends for years. They attended the same law school. Secret intelligence agent "X" says to Garrison: "Remember fundamentally people are suckers for the truth." ❑

America's Economic War Against Germany

Washington's Battle for Power and Profit

During the U.S. terror-bombers' Holocaust against innocent Iraqi women and children in the Persian Gulf, an anti-German campaign of the worst kind was pulled off by America. In Madison Avenue, as well as in the Federal German mass media enslaved by America, it was claimed that Germany had armed Saddam Hussein and was profiting from the harm that he was doing. In truth, however, the share had by German businesses in Iraqi armament imports was 0.08%. The United States, on the other hand, quite literally made a killing to the end with the Arab nation they bombed. The successful mass murders in Iraq are cause for celebration in the USA. In the land of limitless opportunity, Holocaust Commander Schwarzkopf is celebrated like a true war hero. The sluggish dollar rose again, and some hope that the USA could again become the world's greatest economic power—at the expense of the Germans.

Minister of Finance Waigel is presently paying Germany's so-called solidarity contribution to the Gulf 'War', to the last dime. Washington receives gifts of billions from Bonn. And for what?—For anti-German incitement and economic boycott!

The Wall Street Journal, so highly esteemed in the USA, recently wrote: "The Germans played a central role in the arming of Iraq." Business Week even went so far as to claim that Germany is Iraq's "secret ally in the striving for the atom bomb." And the chauvinistic American Senator, Jesse Helms, had the audacity to slip Federal Foreign Minister Genscher a list of 109 German companies, titled 'Saddam's Fifth Convoy'. Genscher let him get away with it.

But now, a German magazine has published secret documents which prove that the USA have led the entire world around by the nose. The documents prove conclusively that it was the USA who armed Iraq with its technology.

The USA Supplied It All...

The United States had been Iraq's most important trading partner for many years, and they profited handsomely from it—some $1.5 billion for highly explosive shipments: Hussein was supplied with helicopters, airplanes, sophisticated electronic equipment and masses of spare parts. Shipments included not only weapons, but also veritable munitions factories. The deals were always cleverly camouflaged. Shipments were declared as being of civilian nature. The U.S. government sanctioned it all, and at times even recommended the transactions. It is of course perfectly well known among the experts that any civilian helicopter, for example, can very easily be converted into a lethal weapon. Among other things, the USA also supplied the know-how necessary for the cultivation and development of deadly bacteria for use in warfare.

American firms relied partially on German sub-contractors in these endeavours. Thus it is that it could later be claimed that German firms, in fact controlled by U.S. capital, had armed Saddam Hussein. The anti-German agitation was purposefully stage-managed by secret services. This becomes apparent from a statement made by FDP economic expert Grünbeck: "Almost 80% of the information on alleged German exports to the MIddle East stems from secret service sources. This information has been launched into the world public by certain American circles with the aim of discrediting the German export economy and in order to gain a competitive advantage for American industry by damaging the German reputation.

This is, of course, just another way of saying that the USA are waging an economic war against an ally. Such is the true face of the Western Values Community that links us to our Big Brother on the far side of the Pond. Economic expert Dr. Jörg Huffschmid comments: "This defamation campaign against the Federal Republic of Germany is part of a global tactical strategy on the part of the Americans."

The Damage Done to Germany's Reputation

Huffschmid suggests that Washington's perfidious plan just might work. Germany is losing its good reputation among the Middle Eastern states. Our former Arab friends are writing Germany off as world political factor. It is American firms who are making the reconstruction profits following the horrible destruction. And those German companies who themselves have founded subsidiary firms in the USA are met with icy disapproval. Sales of German automobiles in the United States have sunk to an extreme low. Peter Moser, Chief Managing Director of the German-American Chamber of Commerce in Los Angeles, realizes that the 'good will' that has been built up with great difficulty in the USA could be destroyed overnight. Gerhard Rechel, Managing Director of the Bonn Federal Association for German Wholesale and Foreign Trade, states: "The American campaign is certainly one of the many factors that contribute to a decrease in German exports. The balance of trade will decrease greatly."

As the saying goes—anyone who can call America his friend needs no enemies; a lesson that Vietnamese politicians also had to learn, as far back as the 1960s.

FOR MY LEGIONARIES

The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $10.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

KILLING KENNEDY

Given the interest that readers of Liberty Bell have expressed in my article in the July issue, pp. 1-12, I now reluctantly return to the hackneyed subject of the assassination of Jackanapes Kennedy in Dallas on 22 November 1963, to clarify two points that I mentioned obiter in July.

I

My article dealt with the American Medical Association, which had mobilized two squads of tame physicians to discredit the widely shown cinema "J.F.K." and an almost concurrently published book by one of the physicians who had been on duty in the Parkland Hospital in Dallas when Kennedy's body was brought into the hospital. It was a desperate attempt to cover up the patent absurdity of the report on the assassination that had been contrived by a commission over which presided Earl Warren, one of the participants in the conspiracy that had expunged a President who had become a political liability.

The book in question is JFK: Conspiracy of Silence, by Dr. Charles A. Crenshaw, assisted by Jens K. Hansen, a professional writer and Vice Chairman of a Research Foundation, and J. Gary Shaw, the director of the JFK Assassination Information Center in Dallas, published in New York by the New American Library (a subsidiary of Penguin Books) in April 1992.

The core of the book is the personal observations of Dr. Crenshaw, then a man of thirty, who, although subject to his seniors, could be described, by analogy to military practice, as the executive officer of the hospital, since he was in charge of interns (among whom, by the way, his insistence on absolute accuracy gained him a reputation as a martinet) and of the treatment of persons critically injured in accidents or by gunfire. He was on duty when the bodies of Kennedy and of Oswald, the supposed assassin, were brought to the Parkland Hospital and he witnessed everything that was done medically while the bodies were in the hospital, participating himself in much of the work. His account is printed in a distinguishing typeface (Helvetica).

Mr. Shaw supplied, from the data accumulated in the Assassination Information Center over a period of twenty-seven years, the information concerning events of which Dr. Crenshaw had no personal knowledge, which are succinctly summarized in strict chronological order and limited to essentials.[1] Mr. Hansen's contribution, I suppose, was stylistic, so I think him responsible for the passages in which the writing descends to crude journalese.

The book cannot in any sense be regarded as inspired by the "right wing." Dr. Crenshaw, who is now Clinical Professor of Surgery at the University of Texas's Southwestern Medical School and Director of the Department of Surgery in the affiliated Smith Hospital in Fort Worth, is undoubtedly a highly skilled physician and surgeon, but his political naïveté is astonishing, almost astounding, when one remembers that he, by the time that Oswald was dead, was in a position to know that the assassination of Kennedy had been contrived by some part of the government in Washington. Nevertheless, even today, he denounces "extreme [!] political factions, like the John Birch Society," and reports that, on the morning of 22 November he was

1. He, for example, does not mention the reports that the corpse, presumably Kennedy's, was taken to the Walter Reed Hospital in Washington before it was transferred to the naval hospital in Bethesda. There had obviously been hanky-panky after the corpse left Dallas, if its condition when it reached the hospital in Bethesda was truthfully reported, and it does not really matter where the mischief was done. Nothing categorically excludes a possible substitution of cadavers, but an attempt to patch up the corpse to conceal vital evidence is much more likely. At Bethesda the physicians who conducted a rather perfunctory autopsy found the entry wound of a bullet in Kennedy's back, thus ostensibly showing that he had been shot from the rear—but by a bullet from a comparatively low-powered gun, since there was no corresponding exit wound in his chest—unless, of course, the enchanted bullet climbed up and exited from his throat, where the entry wound observed in Dallas had been enlarged to make it appear an exit wound. Kennedy's back had not been inspected in Dallas, since, in the absence of bleeding and an exit wound in the chest, there was no reason to suppose there was a wound there. Mr. Shaw does not speculate about the possibility that the wound in the back was added when the cadaver was worked over in Washington to provide some indication that Kennedy had been shot from the rear by that poor, lorn critter, Oswald, as the official cover-up required.

(and presumably still is) shocked by a full-page article in a newspaper that "viciously attacked the integrity of President Kennedy" and described him as a Communist and traitor. Unless he is referring to some handbill or fugitive publication that has not come to my attention, he must have in mind the full-page paid advertisement that appeared that morning in the Dallas Morning News and occupied page 14 of the first section, an advertisement of which a drastically reduced photograph appears on an adjacent page herewith. The big advertisement did not explicitly make the charges remembered by Dr. Crenshaw, but implied them in a series of questions which are here reprinted on pages 5 and 6.

Evidently Mr. Shaw neglected to tell Dr. Crenshaw that, although the advertisement, which was entirely correct in its implication, was paid for by patriotic Americans in Dallas, that was done on the initiative of an ambiguous individual who is suspected of having been an agent provocateur. It would thus have been a preparation for an assassination that could be blamed on patriotic Americans, as was obviously part of the original plan.

Dr. Crenshaw thinks that Kennedy was so generally disliked in Dallas because he "came across [i.e., was regarded] as royalty with his money, his lifestyle, his family, and his charisma." He does not even guess why Dallas was selected as the site for the assassination, and he thinks Kennedy could have been assassinated just as well in Chicago or anywhere else.

That so intelligent a man as Dr. Crenshaw could believe all that even today is an emphatic lesson for everyone who still hopes to break somehow the stupor of the American populace as it is herded to the precipice over which nations and races disappear from history.

Dr. Crenshaw is on solid ground when he explains, on the basis of his own knowledge, why he and the other medical men who knew what had happened at Parkland Hospital so long condoned by their silence the lies that were imposed on the public. A physician is particularly dependent on his reputation for survival in a highly competitive profession, and had he or any other physician disclosed what he knew about the assassination, he would have been deluged in slime from the Jews' liepapers and boob-tubes, excommunicated from

WELCOME MR. KENNEDY

TO DALLAS...

. . . A CITY so disgraced by a recent Liberal smear attempt that its citizens have just elected two more Conservative Americans to public office.

. . . A CITY that is an economic "boom town," not because of Federal handouts, but through conservative economic and business practices.

. . . A CITY that will continue to grow and prosper despite efforts by you and your administration to penalize it for its nonconformity to "New Frontierism."

. . . A CITY that rejected your philosophy and policies in 1960 and will do so again in 1964—even more emphatically than before.

MR. KENNEDY, despite contentions on the part of your administration, the State Department, the Mayor of Dallas, the Dallas City Council, and members of your party, we free-thinking and America-thinking citizens of Dallas still have, through a Constitution largely ignored by you, the right to address our grievances, to question you, to disagree with you, and to criticize you.

In asserting this constitutional right, we wish to ask you publicly the following questions—indeed, questions of paramount importance and interest to all free peoples everywhere—which we trust you will answer . . . in public, without sophistry. These questions are:

WHY is Latin America turning either anti-American or Communistic, or both, despite increased U. S. foreign aid, State Department policy, and your own Ivy-Tower pronouncements?

WHY do you say we have built a "wall of freedom" around Cuba when there is no freedom in Cuba today? Because of your policy, thousands of Cubans have been imprisoned, are starving and being persecuted—with thousands already murdered and thousands more awaiting execution and, in addition, the entire population of almost 7,000,000 Cubans are living in slavery.

WHY have you approved the sale of wheat and corn to our enemies when you know the Communist soldiers "travel on their stomachs" just as ours do? Communist soldiers are daily wounding and/or killing American soldiers in South Viet Nam.

WHY did you host, salute and entertain Tito — Moscow's Trojan Horse — just a short time after our sworn enemy, Khrushchev, embraced the Yugoslav dictator as a great hero and leader of Communism?

WHY have you urged greater aid, comfort, recognition, and understanding for Yugoslavia, Poland, Hungary, and other Communist countries, while turning your back on the pleas of Hungarian, East German, Cuban and other anti-Communist freedom fighters?

WHY did Cambodia kick the U.S. out of its country after we poured nearly 400 Million Dollars of aid into its ultra-leftist government?

WHY has Gus Hall, head of the U.S. Communist Party praised almost every one of your policies and announced that the party will endorse and support your re-election in 1964?

WHY have you banned the showing at U.S. military bases of the film "Operation Abolition"—the movie by the House Committee on Un-American Activities exposing Communism in America?

WHY have you ordered or permitted your brother Bobby, the Attorney General, to go soft on Communists, fellow-travelers, and ultra-leftists in America, while permitting him to persecute loyal Americans who criticize you, your administration, and your leadership?

WHY are you in favor of the U.S. continuing to give economic aid to Argentina, in spite of that fact that Argentina has just seized almost 400 Million Dollars of American private property?

WHY has the Foreign Policy of the United States degenerated to the point that the C.I.A. is arranging coups and having staunch Anti-Communist Allies of the U.S. bloodily exterminated.

WHY have you scrapped the Monroe Doctrine in favor of the "Spirit of Moscow"?

MR. KENNEDY, as citizens of these United States of America, we DEMAND answers to these questions, and we want them NOW.

THE AMERICAN FACT-FINDING COMMITTEE

"An unaffiliated and non-partisan group of citizens who wish truth"

BERNARD WEISSMAN,
Chairman

P.O. Box 1792—Dallas 21, Texas

MR. KENNEDY, despite the contentions on the part of your adminstration, the State Department, the Mayor of Dallas, the Dallas City Council, and members of your party, we free-thinking and American-thinking citizens of Dallas still have, through a Constitution largely ignored by you, the right to address our grievances, to question you, to disagree with you, and to criticize you.

In asserting this constitutional right, we wish to ask you publicly the following questions—indeed, questions of paramount importance and interest to all free people everywhere—which we trust you will answer...in public, without sophistry. These questions are:

WHY is Latin America turning either anti-American or Communistic, or both, despite increased U.S. foreign aid, State Department policy, and your own Ivy-Tower pronouncements?

WHY do you say we have built a "wall of freedom" around Cuba when there is no freedom in Cuba today? Because of your policy, thousands of Cubans have been imprisoned, are starving and being persecuted—with thousands already murdered and thousands more awaiting execution and, in addition, the entire population of almost 7,000,000 Cubans are living in slavery.

WHY have you approved the sale of wheat and corn to our enemies when you know the Communist soldiers "travel on their stomachs" just as ours do? Communist soldiers are daily wounding and/or killing American soldiers in South Vietnam.

WHY did you host, salute and entertain Tito—Moscow's Trojan Horse—just a short time after our sworn enemy, Khrushchev, embraced the Yugoslav dictator as a great hero and leader of Communism?

WHY have you urged greater aid, comfort, recognition, and understanding for Yugoslavia, Poland, Hungary, and other Communist countries, while turning your back on the pleas of Hungarians, East German, Cuban and other anti-Communist freedom fighters?

WHY did Cambodia kick the U.S. out of its country after we poured nearly 400 Million Dollars of aid into its ultra-leftist government?

WHY has Gus Hall, head of the U.S. Communist Party, praised almost every one of your policies and announced that the party will endorse and support your re-election in 1964?

WHY have you banned the showing at U.S. military bases of the film "Operation Abolition"—the movie by the House Committee on Un-American Activities exposing Communism in America?

WHY have you ordered or permitted your brother Bobby, the Attorney General, to go soft on Communists, fellow-travelers, and ultra-leftists in America, while permitting him to persecute loyal Americans who criticize you, your administration, and your leadership?

WHY are you in favor of the U.S. continuing to give economic aid to Argentina, in spite of the fact that Argentina has just seized almost 400 Million Dollars of American private property?

WHY has the Foreign Policy of the United States degenerated to the point that the C.I.A. is arranging coups and having staunch Anti-Communist Allies of the U.S. bloodily exterminated?

WHY have you scrapped the Monroe Doctrine in favor of the "Spirit of Moscow"?

MR. KENNEDY, as citizens of these United State of America, we DEMAND answers to these questions, and we want them NOW.

the occupation that was his only livelihood, reduced with his wife and child to indigence, and, if that did not suffice, murdered (probably suicided by a competent technician from the Secret Service, F.B.I., or C.I.A.).[2] Dr. Crenshaw begins by showing us the grinding routine of a resident surgeon in Parkland, which was not an ordinary hospital but instead an "academic hospital," operating in conjunction with the Southwestern Medical School and devoted to teaching and research. Two members of its staff have won the Nobel Prize in Medicine, and Dr, Crenshaw himself, in his first year at Parkland, "made medical history" with research directed by Dr. Shires which discovered "that death from haemorrhagic shock (blood loss) can be due primarily to the body's adjunctive depletion of salt water into the cells." Two other physicians discovered a means of averting irreparable damage to the kidneys of a patient in trauma—a "medical breakthrough" so important that, in the opinion of persons competent to judge, it deserved a Nobel Prize.

At the time of the assassination, Dr. Crenshaw was in charge of the four "trauma rooms" in the hospital, to which persons who had been smashed up in automobile accidents or critically wounded by gunfire were brought from all over the area around Dallas, since the hospital was specially equipped to treat such cases. It is sometimes

2. In this, Dr. Crenshaw is absolutely correct. Immediately after the assassination, when the information that appeared in the censored press made it seem certain that Oswald had killed both Kennedy and a policeman named Tippet, it was nevertheless obvious to anyone who considered the question objectively that the assassination had been the work of a conspiracy that had used Oswald as its tool. I accordingly stated that fact publicly in an issue of American Opinion, and since I had participated in the foundation of the John Birch Society and was a member of its National Council, my statement attracted attention; diseased pus spurted from almost every editorial office in the country and was lapped up by millions of nitwits. Cf. America's Decline, pp. 163 f. Since the Warren Commission ascertained that I had no personal knowledge of the facts and had only reasoned from published information, it was not thought necessary to murder me. The episode was an unpleasant experience, but I now regret it only because it preserved the Birch Society by forcing the panic-stricken Welcher to face facts. Had I remained silent, the Birch business would probably have disintegrated in 1964 or 1965, and I would not have had to resign from it in 1966, after I succeeded in discovering who then controlled it and supervised Robert Welch.

forgotten that Governor Connally of Texas, who was riding with Kennedy, was critically wounded by a bullet that entered his chest and passed through his body (and so necessarily had been fired by a marksman ahead of the automobile). He was treated in a "trauma room" of Parkland by a second surgical team, but Dr. Crenshaw was told in detail what was done. It is his opinion that if Connally had been taken to any other hospital, he would have died. As it was, he survived and recovered from his wounds, but was politically ruined by his enemy, Lyndon Johnson, who had acquired the powers of the Presidency.

Dr. Crenshaw gives an orderly and precise account, sometimes minute by minute, of what happened in the Parkland Hospital while the bodies of Kennedy and, later, Oswald were there. His report makes obvious how muzzy, incomplete, and evasive was the story told by the three physicians who obediently recited for the Medical Association and tried to bolster Earl Warren's hoax by such disingenuous claims as that they had been too busy to notice whether or not the bullet that entered Kennedy's throat and the bullet that blew part of his brain out of the back of his skull had come from behind him.

For the details of the condition of the body and the efforts of the physicians, see Dr. Crenshaw's book, and see the book also for a listing of important but long suppressed contributory evidence about the assassination, presumably compiled by Mr. Shaw.[3] I shall here call attention only to points that clarify or correct what I reported in my article.

3. He reports ascertained facts, but you should appraise them critically. Identifications made by persons not personally acquainted with the person identified are notoriously inconclusive when not corroborated by other evidence. As for the puzzling report by Rubenstein's former employee, Rose Cheramie, in Louisiana, remember that expert technicians planning an assassination in Dallas might well have taken the precaution of providing evidence of a seemingly independent conspiracy (e.g., by agents of Castro) that could be used to cover up their own, if something went wrong. The young woman, who seems to have been known only by what was probably a "professional" name, may have invented the story she told two days before the assassination. That she was in some way implicated is shown by the fact that it was deemed expedient to murder her later.

Kennedy, for all practical purposes, died instantly when the assassin's second bullet destroyed the entire right half of his brain. When he was brought into the hospital, "the entire right hemisphere of his brain was missing, beginning at the hairline and extending all the way behind his right ear. Pieces of skull that had not been blown away were hanging by blood-matted hair." Dr. Crenshaw and the other physicians knew, of course, that Kennedy was dead, but the action of the heart had not entirely ceased, and they made an effort to keep alive, not Kennedy, but his corpse. Had they succeeded, they would have performed a medical miracle and produced a living but mindless hulk of insentient tissue, something much more horrible than a zombie.[4]

Jacqueline Kennedy did not wander in incipient hysteria around the room while the physicians worked. She was doubtless shocked, but she never lost self-control and remained composed at all times. At Dr. Crenshaw's suggestion, she left the room before the efforts to preserve a semblance of life in her husband's body began and waited outside the room until she accompanied the priest who had been summoned to administer the rite of extreme unction.[5]

The disturbance in the trauma room was occasioned, not by Jacqueline Kennedy, but by an agent of the Secret Service, who ran about,

4. If I remember correctly, there is on record the remarkable instance of a man who survived a bullet that had passed through his head from one temple to the other, but had not destroyed any large or vital part of the brain. I feel certain that there would have been no precedent for maintenance of life in Kennedy's corpse, but I have not tried to go through the pertinent medical textbooks. This fact evidently gave rise to a theory about the assassination of which I had not heard before I saw it mentioned by Dr. Crenshaw: that Kennedy's cadaver is still kept obscenely alive in some subterranean vault under the Parkland Hospital!

5. Despite her composure, Dr. Crenshaw, who seems to have had a kind of sentimental admiration of the Kennedys, was convinced by her conduct that she was really consumed with grief and love for her husband. That is not impossible. The terrible finality of death excites strong emotions, belated regret for what can never come again, and an awed perception of the insignificance and evanescence of all human life. When Mrs. Kennedy returned with the priest, she kissed the big toe of one of Kennedy's feet, thus grotesquely imitating what obligatory etiquette had required of a concubine or odalisque of the Sultan of Turkey when summoned to serve her lord.

"waving a cocked and ready-to-fire .38 caliber pistol."[6] He may have been distraught, as he seemed to be, or he may have been detailed to make certain that Kennedy could not live or that agents of the F.B.I. were not allowed to see the wounds. He was persuaded to withdraw. There was an unexplained hostility between the Secret Service and the F.B.I. As Kennedy's body was being brought into the hospital, an agent of the Secret Service, armed with a sub-machine gun, used his weapon as a club to smash the face of an agent of the F.B.I., perhaps because the latter had wanted to accompany the body to the trauma room.

When Kennedy was officially pronounced dead, the agents of the Secret Service did not rush away with the wheeled table on which the body lay, presumably to have it packed for shipment elsewhere, as the American Medical Association's physicians implied in their recitation. On the contrary, a bronze coffin (not the wooden one in which the body was delivered in Bethesda) had been obtained, and Kennedy's body was properly and decently placed in it by the hospital's staff. The trouble arose when the physicians and then the Dallas County Coroner, Dr. Earl Rose, tried to prevent removal of the body before the requirements of the laws of Texas had been met, as could have been done, Dr. Rose estimated, in three-quarters of an hour. The Secret Service men were determined to prevent such examination of the body. They used their guns to intimidate the physicians, and finally their chief, a man named Kellerman, raised his sub- machinegun, pointed it at Dr. Rose's chest, and promised to pull the trigger if he did not step aside. The thug's cohorts were ready to draw their guns from their holsters. Dr. Crenshaw was convinced that they would have murdered Dr. Rose and then killed all the witnesses, had Dr. Rose not yielded to their violence.

A Justice of the Peace named Ward, either intimidated by the gunmen or politically corrupt, signed a lying certificate that an autopsy had been performed and an inquest held before the body was removed. The Warren Commission, however, did not dare to use that blatant falsification.

6. Obviously not a .38 Colt Cobra, the weapon preferred for shoulder-holsters, but presumably a revolver. The word 'pistol' is ambiguous, but .38 caliber automatic pistols were rare, and the .358 and .40 had not yet been introduced. The numerous agents of the Secret Service and F.B.I. at the hospital appear to have been armed with .38 or .45 caliber weapons that they carried in holsters at their hips, partly concealed by the coat-tails of their fashionable suits. Some also carried sub-machineguns.

It is now virtually certain that one of the principals in the assassination was a petty crook named Lyndon Johnson, who, doubtless counselled by his wife, a wealthy Jewess, had slithered up to the post of Vice President.[7] The death of Kennedy saved him from loss of that position in 1964[8] and boosted him into the Presidency, a position which he managed to retain until 1968. It is not remarkable that the Secret Service men guarded him sedulously, even the night before the assassination, when the men detailed to guard Kennedy went out on a glorious drunk.

While Johnson was flying to Washington with Kennedy's corpse, he was informed from Washington (i.e., by McGeorge Bundy or Commander Hallet in the White House) that "no conspiracy" was concerned in the assassination—this at a time when no investigation had been made (Oswald had just been arrested and was being questioned, but denied that he was the assassin). Obviously, Johnson was being informed that the high command had decided to make the assassination the work of a 'loner'—and had probably also decided that Oswald was a suitable patsy and must be eliminated before he had a chance to make a formal statement.[9]

The morning after the assassination, Johnson, apparently not trusting the efficiency of the conspiracy's agents and itching with

7. The best characterization of Johnson is A Texas Looks at Lyndon, by J. Evatts Haley, a real Texan, and published by his Palo Duro Press, Canyon, Texas, in 1964. It is said that about two million copies of this book were sold, but, so far as I know, it is now out-of-print. It is to be regretted that the book was not revised in a second edition which would have included the crook's disgusting performances in the White House.

8. On the political situation in November 1963, see the appendix below.

9. Oswald prudently refused to make a statement before he had a lawyer to advise him. It is probable that he was also awaiting instructions from his employers, who may or may not have been agents of the F.B.I. He was in touch with a local agent of that organization named Hosty, and about two weeks before the assassination had left with the Special Agent in Charge in Dallas a memorandum or report that was torn up and flushed down a sewer after the event. He was in any case acting for some covert agency of the Federal government. There is an unsubstantiated but not implausible theory that he was thus employed while in Russia. However that may be, it is likely that his activities on behalf worry lest crucial facts be somehow ascertained and divulged, telephoned Captain Will Fritz, chief of the homicide detail of the Dallas police, and ordered him to stop all investigation of the assassination. It is proof of the distance we have descended into dictatorship while the boobs were led to believe that the parts of the Constitution that had not been rescinded in 1865 were still in effect, that Captain Fritz did not reply, "You have no Constitutional authority to order me to violate the laws of Texas, you son-of-a-bitch." Instead he obeyed, and told his friends, "When the President of the United States called, what could I do?"

The Dallas police, however, did continue to interrogate Oswald and arraigned him, not for the assassination of Kennedy, but for the murder of a policeman, Tippet, who was killed shortly after the assassination for reasons still unknown.

When Oswald, still barely alive, was brought to the Parkland Hospital and physicians were trying to save his life,[10] Johnson himself had Dr. Crenshaw, who was in charge, called to the telephone, and of Fidel Castro's Soviet outpost in Cuba were carried out while he was in the employ of some agency of the government in Washington, and that he was directed to make his attempt to murder General Edwin A. Walker, the most prominent anti-Communist in Dallas. (Had the attempt succeeded, it could have been argued that American patriots in Dallas assassinated Kennedy in revenge for the murder of Walker.) His rôle in the assassination, like that of Rubenstein, alias Ruby, with whom he seems to have acted in concert, is still undetermined. A possible element in the puzzle is the fact that the C.I.A. is legally forbidden to operate within the United States, so that its domestic agents commonly operate as, and may actually be, agents of the F.B.I. All these speculations may seem far-fetched to persons who have no knowledge of the secret operations of intelligence agencies.

10. As is well known, Oswald, while handcuffed between two detectives, was murdered by a gangster from Chicago named Jacob Rubenstein, alias Jack Ruby, who thus acquired the distinction of being the first man to commit murder while being photographed by several television cameras. Rubenstein, who operated night clubs in Dallas, had been associated with Oswald in some transactions of which the nature is still uncertain. He had a criminal record and was a paid employee of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, but Earl Warren naturally covered up for him in his report. Rubenstein had obviously been instructed to eliminate Oswald before he could make a formal statement.

told him that he, the new President, wanted a "deathbed confession" of guilt from Oswald, and that his agent, a typical thug from the Secret Service, sartorially disguised in then fashionable clothing that emphasized the impressive pistol in his holster, was waiting to take that confession. The confession, needed to bolster the propaganda that Oswald was the real assassin, would doubtless have been faked in some way, but Oswald died soon after Johnson's telephone call, and the frustrated thug with his gun departed.

The only alternative to taking the nervous crook's telephone calls as tantamount to a confession of guilt is a desperate hypothesis that Johnson was impersonated on the telephone by some other member of the conspiracy.

Mr. Shaw believes that J. Edgar Hoover withheld evidence obtained by his Bureau because he was a friend of Lyndon Johnson. Informed opinion in Washington was to the effect that Hoover withheld incriminating evidence to prevent Johnson and "Bobby Sox" Kennedy from retiring him as head of the F.B.I. After Johnson was elected in November 1964, he replaced Kennedy with a Jew, Katzenbach, who had been officially Deputy Attorney General and, in all likelihood, actually Kennedy's supervisor, but Hoover remained the Director of the F.B.I. until his death in 1972. The evidence that he used to protect himself by political blackmail has not been revealed. It may be disclosed in 2039, when the files sealed by order of Lyndon

In Dr. Crenshaw's opinion, it might have been possible to save Oswald's life, if, within three minutes after he was shot, he had been given the treatment he received in the trauma room at Parkland; that, of course, would not have been possible, and the delay of fifteen minutes made death inevitable. Had Oswald lived, Johnson and his fellow conspirators would have had to devise some means of silencing him before he could talk. Mr. Shaw's summary does not mention the significant fact that Rubenstein in prison evidently decided to disclose some of the crucial facts to a female journalist, Dorothy Kilgallen, who delightedly told her friends that she was going to "blow sky high" the official story of the assassination, but was murdered before she could do so. Rubenstein was eliminated soon thereafter; the official story was that he had died of sudden cancer. It has been estimated that a total of some forty to fifty persons, witnesses to one or another crucial incident, were murdered to prevent them from contradicting the Warren Report. There are still many naïvely opinionated Americans who refuse to understand the character of the government that rules them.

Johnson may be opened—if, at that time, the rulers of the territory that is now the United States are interesred in events of what will then be a dead past.

II

In my article I indicated the major motive for the assassination of Kennedy: the need to abort the growing dissatisfaction of the American people with a government that was obviously acting in the interests of our enemies, the masters of Communist Russia—a dissatisfaction that had been brought close to the boiling point by the Indignation Meetings held throughout the country, which were sponsored by patriotic Americans in Dallas.

This purpose was achieved and the pro-American movement liquidated by the assassination, followed by a spectacular funeral for which the Army detachment had been diligently rehearsed in advance and at which Jacqueline Kennedy gave a brilliant performance. A well-contrived deluge of wildly irrational bathos in the press and over television sufficed to reduce the majority of Americans to the status of savages who beat their breasts and howl when their big chief dies.

Very many—perhaps the majority of anti-Communists exposed themselves as poltroons. On the morning of the twenty-second of November they had talked loudly of impeaching "that son-of-a-bitch" for high treason. That afternoon they should have said, or at least thought, "Good riddance!" But the next day they were tearfully protesting they had always respected and loved "our martyred President" and had only differed from him about some minor matters of policy, as was permissible in "our great democracy." They were a nauseating spectacle.

The assassination of Kennedy was thus a crucial event in American history, canceling what was the last reasonable hope that the American people could escape the doom prepared for them by their implacable enemies.

Various other motives have been suggested, all of which are trivial in comparison with what was accomplished. I did mention in my article the least nugatory, a report that has been widely current in "right-wing" circles in recent years. I quote it from what is probably the last issue of Racial Loyalty (May 1992), which quotes the Canadian Intelligence Service, which in turn cited other sources:

Kennedy...bypassed the Jewish Federal Reserve and issued government notes...as did President Abraham Lincoln a hundred years earlier and for which he, too, paid the ultimate price. ... On June 30, 1965, Kennedy signed Executive Order No. 11110, and further amended E.O. No. 10289 of September 19, 1952, thereby giving the President authority to issue the currency. He thereupon ordered the issue of $4,292,893,875.00. This was almost ten times as much as the $450,000,000.00 ["greenbacks"] printed by Lincoln during the Civil War. He evidently forced the then Secretary of the Treasury, C. Douglas Dillon, another name-changing Jew (Lapowski?), to sign the United States notes. Shortly thereafter...Kennedy paid the ultimate price and was shot, as was Lincoln. ... The first thing President Johnson did when he flew back to Washington was to reverse this order.

Now Executive Order No. 11110 is indexed in the Federal Register as pertaining to treasury notes and silver certificates, and the reported tenor of it was quite plausible. It was even possible, though unlikely, that the amount mentioned had been printed, although not put into circulation.[1] The report therefore was not invalidated by a mistake about Kennedy's intent and about the effect of Lincoln's issue of 'greenbacks.'

It must be remembered that in the autumn of 1963, Kennedy's popularity had been greatly impaired and he could not have been reëlected in 1964 without some heroic effort to regain the favor he had lost. (See the appendix below). It would have been reasonable for him to try some spectacular manoeuvre that would be commended by many of the intelligent Americans whom his conduct in office had alienated and angered—especially a manoeuvre that seemed to avert national bankruptcy and to limit the looting of the country by the Federal Reserve. His administration, furthermore, was riddled by fighting for power within it, and such an order, even if never carried out, would have sufficed to intimidate some factions.

1. A mistake about the issuance of the notes was facilitated by the fact that part of Lincoln's issue of 'greenbacks' was never withdrawn, and a very small part of that part is kept in circulation, as required by law. When the pieces of paper are worn out, they are replaced by freshly printed notes, which, of course, are signed by the Secretary of the Treasury in office at the time.

There appeared to be a real rift within the organization of our rulers (as distinct from dissent simulated to entertain the populace). A correspondent kindly informs me that he clearly remembers that, not long before Kennedy was expunged, Eisenhower appeared on television irately to denounce Kennedy for plans to tamper with the sacrosanct Federal Reserve, going so far as to regret that he had not campaigned for Nixon and thus assured his election in place of Kennedy. Since I almost never watch the Jews' picture-shows, I did not see that program. I do have vague recollections of very adverse criticism of Kennedy by the Super-Sheeny, Avraham ben Elazar, alias Dr. Henry Kissinger,[2] who was probably the Jewish satrap in charge of supervising the government in Washington. This seemed to indicate an internal struggle among our rulers, possibly a struggle between two factions of the ruling race.[3]

The issue, which still divides the "right-wing," can by summarized, if stripped to its barest essentials. Money in the strict sense of the word appears to have been an Aryan invention made in the seventh century b.c., when coins replaced barter in commercial transactions. It consisted of coins of gold, silver, and electrum (an alloy of the two), with tokens of bronze and copper for fractions of a coin of

2. The real name of Kissinger was disclosed by the Supreme Rabbinic Court of America when he was excommunicated from Jewry on 20 June 1976. The real reason for the excommunication has not been disclosed, and it would be a waste of time to consider conjectural explanations.

3. We must remember that although God's Race presents a united front against our race, which they both despise and hate, there are often violent disagreements about the expediency of some policy and consequently frequent, if not constant, quarrels between factions within the Self-Chosen People. For a good example, see Lenni Bremmer, The Iron Wall: Zionist Revisionism from Jabotinsky to Shamir (London, Zed Books, 1984). Needless to say, the "revisionism" mentioned in the title has nothing to do with the "revisionism" of honest historians who are now trying to expose the Jews' great Holohoax. Zionist "revisionism" deals with changes in policies for putting and keeping the goyim in their servile place. Bremmer particularly reprehends Shamir and his party of Zionists for attempts to enter into a military alliance with Adolf Hitler to expedite his "ultimate solution" of the Jewish problem in Germany by transferring the Jews in Germany to Palestine. Cf. Liberty Bell, March 1991, pp. 1-3; April-May 1991, pp. 108-114.

precious metals. It was supplemented by credit, that is to say, promises to pay a specified number of coins at a specified date or on demand. The precious metals thereafter served as a fixed measure of value.

In the later Middle Ages, when coins of precious metal were stored with goldsmiths (most of them Sheenies) for safe-keeping, the goldsmiths issued certificates of deposit for money stored with them, and soon learned that they could issue many more certificates than the gold they had on hand, since only a fraction of the certificates would be brought for redemption at any one time. With unimportant and ephemeral exceptions, the basis of all currency was coins of precious metal, and financial crises were caused by the issue of more certificates of deposit (bank notes) than the coins available to redeem them. The first serious attempt to replace the precious metals was made by the criminals of the French Revolution, who issued assignats in such quantities that the paper became worthless. The paper money issued by the Continental Congress during the American Revolution coined only the phrase "Not worth a Continental" and gave an impressive lesson in the use of currency that could be printed and multiplied by legislatures with the dishonesty that is normal in democracies.

The Constitution, therefore, contemplated only the issue of coins of precious metals, and until the Northern states attacked the Confederacy in 1861, the currency consisted of precious metals and the notes issued by private banks, redeemable on demand in real money, which were in general use because the weight of any fairly large sum of money (gold or silver) was more than an individual could conveniently carry on his person.

Since the latter part of the Nineteenth Century Americans have been faced with a choice between several kinds of currency, viz.: (a) gold coins and bank or treasury notes certifying that their face value in coins were on deposit and could be obtained on demand; (b) coins of both gold and silver issued on some fixed ratio of value between the two and similarly represented by bank or treasury notes; (c) the National Banks' paper currency based on debt, i.e., government bonds held by banks that collect interest on them, the bonds, however, being theoretically exchangeable for real money, so that the paper currency could likewise be converted to real money when desired; (d) 'greenbacks,' i.e., fiat "money," paper currency representing no real money and having value only by unconstitutional legislation compelling individuals to accept it in the payment of all debts, but having the advantage that the Federal government can issue them instead of borrowing from banks and paying interest to them; (e) the present system, perfected after Kennedy's time, whereby the Federal Reserve issues notes that are actually 'greenbacks' but collects interest on them as though they represented real money.

Americans who hope to regain possession of the country that once was theirs recognize, of course, that (e) is simply an outrageous system for exploiting slaves, but they differ greatly about the expediency of (a), (b), (c), and (d). That debate is irrelevant to our interests here, where we need only to consider Kennedy's reported intent to resort to (d) on a large scale, as was done by Lincoln's administration in 1862.

Abraham Lincoln, a shrewd backwoods politician though not without some principles,[4] was put in the White House by a scabrous gang of hate-crazed fanatics or degenerates, such as Thaddeus Stevens, and a pack of politicians greedy for loot, who called themselves the Republican Party, having stolen even their name from the American Republican Party, which the Abolitionists had been used to disrupt.

Lincoln, who is reported to have said that he was bought and sold several times at the Republican convention that nominated him, came to Washington knowing that his function was to destroy the American Constitution, for which he had little respect, and to end the American Republic by attacking the South.

Part of the deal was that he was to make a scabrous politician named Salmon P. Chase the Secretary of the Treasury in the interests of the then great banking house of Jay Cooke, who ensured Chase's obedience by giving him for "expenses" $100,000 (in real money; the equivalent of at least $20,000,000 in the Federal Reserve's pieces of printed paper that the White Slaves now use as a substitute for money). In return, Chase gave Cooke's banking house the extremely lucrative monopoly of underwriting the entire Federal debt. No one objected because everyone was delighted when Chase began to deface our currency with the silly motto, "In God We Trust."[5]

4. The "Great Emancipator" seems to have had one real principle, dislike of niggers, whom he wished to export from American territory. In the "emancipation proclamation" he made provision for shipping the niggers back to Africa or some more convenient place in the Caribbean or Central America, and he did export at least five thousand of them to Haiti. That is the number exported, at a cost of $50.00 a head, under contract by Leonard Jerome, a financier, thought to have been partly Jewish, whose daughter married Lord Randolph Churchill and became the mother of the notorious Winston Churchill. On Lincoln's character, see especially the article by Sam G. Dickson, "Shattering the Icon of Abraham Lincoln," in the Journal of Historical Review, VII (1986), pp. 319-344.

Chase suspended payment in specie (i.e., real money) at the Treasury, and the banks in the Northern states had to do likewise. With the way thus prepared, Lincoln, in 1862, obtained Congressional permission for Chase to issue $150,000,000 worth of paper currency which was made legal tender in open violation of the Constitution (which the suckers thought still in force), and after that first splurge it was easy to increase the fiat currency by increments of $150,000,000 every few months.

Was this, as naïve persons believe, a threat to the banking interests headed by Cooke? Far from it. The enormous cost of the invasion and conquest of the South was more than could be conveniently absorbed by credit from Cooke, Rothschild, and associates. The 'greenbacks' were simply preparation for two brilliant coups de bourse.

First, the looters gained control of most of the independent banks in the United States by inaugurating the bizarre scheme of basing currency on debt. As explained by Dr. Murray Rothbard,[6] "Cooke and Chase then managed to use the virtual Republican monopoly in Congress during the war to transform the American commercial banking system from a relatively free market to a National Banking System centralized under Wall Street control. A crucial aspect of this system was that national banks could only expand credit in proportion to the Federal bonds they owned—bonds which they could only buy from Jay Cooke." Neat, wasn't it?

Second, in addition to destabilizing the independent banks and thus bringing them under the control of Cooke and the Rothschilds, the 'greenbacks' provided the financiers with gorgeous loot. It must be remembered that in the 1860s, the Northern Americans, although crazed with homicidal righteousness, were not so befuddled that they would have tolerated the present system, by which the international bankers, through their Federal Reserve swindle, issue 'greenbacks' and collect cumulative interest on them. The 'greenbacks' had to be issued as Treasury Notes, which the populace, crazed by their unholy war, were forced to accept as legal tender, and which were not even backed by a pledge they would ever be redeemed in money. Naturally, the result was that there were three quite different kinds of currency: intrinsically worthless 'greenbacks,' the notes of private banks which promised redemption in real money (gold or silver) and might be so redeemed after the end of the war, and gold and silver coins, which had intrinsic value and were obviously safe and preferable to paper notes, so that cautious persons invested their savings in them. As was to be expected, the 'greenbacks' rapidly depreciated in value. The Southerners defended themselves effectively until they were finally overcome by attrition, and the outcome of the Northern states' war of aggression remained doubtful until 1865. Had the South succeeded in defending its independence, the 'greenbacks' would have become worthless, and they soon dropped to fractions of their face value in real money, i.e., gold and silver. Their value eventually fell to 35¢. The conspirators bought the trash wholesale, and when paper for which they had paid $0.35 was eventually redeemed for $1.00 in real money, they realized a modest profit—modest by the standards of international finance.

In 1963, the boobs had not yet been completely reduced to their present status as a helpless and enslaved proletariat. Although the American Lenin, soon after he began the systematic destruction of America in 1933, had forbidden his subjects to have gold money, they were still permitted to own silver coins that had intrinsic value, and which were also represented by silver certificates issued by the Treasury and still honestly redeemed on demand in 1963. Their masters intended, of course, to take those bits of real money from them, but the procedure by which that was to be done may not have been definitely determined. Furthermore, the publication of Gertude Coogan's The Money Creators in 1935 and several books derived from it had permitted any literate person to understand the Federal Reserve swindle,[7] but almost no one understood the great 'greenback' coup in

7. Some business men foresaw that the enormous quantity of trading stamps in circulation could never be redeemed in money. One man, who dealt in player pianos, each of which sold for several thousand dollars, offered his customers a 15% discount for payment in real money, i.e., silver, since the American serfs were forbidden to possess gold.

Lincoln's day, which was not mentioned even in college courses in (censored) American History.

The time was ripe, therefore, for a new 'greenback' swindle, which could also be used to revive the waning popularity of Jackanapes. The widely circulated report, which I quoted from Racial Loyalty above, was entirely plausible. And everyone knew, of course, of the sinister Executive Orders by which preparations have been made for the impositions of a Lenin-style dictatorship whenever it is deemed expedient to beat the White boobs into their styes. (What may be the worst of these, Executive Order 12148, issued by Jimmy "the Jerk" Carter on 20 July 1979, is reproduced in full, with apposite commentary, in a special twelve-page supplement to the Spotlight that was distributed with the issue dated 25 May 1992).

The apparently documented attribution of an Executive Order for fiat currency to Kennedy was so plausible that many intelligent Americans, ignoring the more obvious motive for the highly successful assassination that I have mentioned above, leaped to the conclusion that Kennedy had been assassinated to prevent the issuance of currency on which the country would not have to pay usury to the Federal Reserve. And the supposed purport of Executive Order 11110 is mentioned in the campaign speeches of the American candidate for the Presidency, Colonel James "Bo" Gritz, who, although you would never know it from the jewspapers and boob tubes, is on the ballot in some twenty states as the candidate of a Populist Party and could receive 'write-in' votes in all but seven of the remaining states. In his speeches he elaborates on what he said in Called to Serve, that Kennedy "prepared his own death warrant" because, inter alia, "he actually minted [!] non-debt money."[8]

8. The quotation comes from p. 512. In my review of Colonel Gritz's Called to Serve in Libery Bell, May 1992, I noted that his book contains a perceptive critique of the official lies about the assassinations of both Kennedys and what appeared to be an attempt to assassinate Reagan. This section (pp. 512-553) is well worth reading, and you will find it worthwhile to take a magnifying glass and read the documents photographed on the seventh, ninth, and eleventh unnumbered pages that follow p. 554. I wish Colonel Gritz could have had the benefit of Dr. Crenshaw's book, but he leaves no doubt but that the evidence for conspiratorial dirty work in all those incidents is overwhelming and incontrovertible. (There is a slight discrepancy between what is said about the position of Oswald at the time of the assassination on p. 525 and the statement on p. 531, resulting from an unresolved conflict in evidence.) My review warns you to discount the author's naïve acceptance

Unfortunately, the plausible report is a hoax. The person who contrived it was ingenious. He gave the numbers of Executive Orders that did deal with currency, and he provided the seemingly precise figure of $4,292,893,815,00 as the amount of 'greenbacks' authorized by Kennedy.[9]

Executive Order 10289, issued by Sheeny Truman, 17 September 1951, consists of three long sections, called "paragraphs," each containing a number of "subparagraphs." All authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to perform specified functions without further authorization from the President. Paragraph 1, which has eight subparagraphs, (a) to (h), deals exclusively with the collection of customs duties, port duties, American yachts, and hospital ships. Paragraph 2 has three subparagraphs pertaining to currency: (c) authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury "to issue rules and regulations (with respect to silver bullion) necessary or proper to carry out the purposes" of §1805 of the Internal Revnue Code. (d) authorizes him "to issue regulations prescribing the conditions under which gold may be acquired and held, transported, melted or treated, imported, exported, or earmarked for certain purposes." (f) authorizes him "to investigate, regulate, or prohibit, by means of licenses or otherwise, the acquisition, importation, exportation, or transportation of silver and of contracts or other arrangements made with respect thereto, and to require the filing of reports in connection therewith."

To give you an example of the incoherence of many Executive Orders, I remark that (e), sandwiched between (d) and (f), deals with the anchorage and movement of vessels in American ports

This order was first amended to affect currency by Kennedy's Order 11110, 4 June 1963, of which §1 added to the first paragraph of 10289 (which had nothing to do with currency) a subparagraph (j) which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury "to issue silver certificates against any silver bullion, silver, or standard silver dollars in the Treasury not then held for redemption of any outstanding silver certificates, to prescribe the denomination of such silver certificates, and to coin standard silver dollars and subsidiary silver currency for their redemption."[10]

Not a word about 'greenbacks'![11]

Kennedy's executive order is to be understood in connection with the Public Law 88-36 of the same date, 4 June 1963, found on p. 66 of the Congressional Record and expounded at some length on pp. 678-686. Silver certificates for $5.00 and $10.00 had already been replaced by Federal Reserve notes, but certificates for $1.00 and $2.00, redeemable in real money, remained in circulation. The net effect of the Act of 4 June 1963 was to provide for the gradual replacement of all silver certificates with notes of the Federal Reserve—a replacement which, it was said, would not devalue the dollar or be inflationary of Judaeo-Communist propaganda about the loveliness of "democracy," the horrors of "Fascism," and the Satanic work of "Hitler's mad dogs," which gravely becloud his inferences; in addition, he, like Dr. Crenshaw, has a sentimentally uncritical admiration of Kennedy. But when he discusses the mechanics of the assassinations, he speaks as an expert. He has used all the weapons employed in such work; he has himself killed many men and observed the killing of many others. He knows, better than any physician, how men react to the bullets that kill them, and he knows how to organize covert operations and ambushes. I am sure that if Colonel Gritz and his Green Berets had disposed of Kennedy, they would have done a perfect job and left nothing for Earl Warren to cover up. His scenario of the assassination of Jackanapes is more complex than my summary account, which, using Occam's razor, I reduced to the bare essentials, and incorporates much cogent evidence that I did not mention. — I wish we could hope that Colonel Gritz, a true American and a national hero, would win a number of Electoral votes in November. Needless to say, if there were any chance whatsoever of his attaining the Presidency, we would have already had another "puzzling" assassination, covered up in what has become the Occupation Government's habitual way.

9. In what follows, I am deeply indebted to Dr. Walter F. Claussen, who generously undertook research in libraries in which I no longer have the stamina to work, and who had the patience to look through the enormous and numerous volumes, consisting principally of congealed hogwash, of the Federal Register and its derivatives to find the text of the Executive Orders and of Congressional legislation relative to them.

10. §2 revoked subparagraphs (b) and (c) of Paragraph 2 of 10289.

11. And so, needless to say, it was not revoked by Johnson after the assassination made him President. Kennedy's last Executive Order 11127, 9 November 1963, concerned a strike on the Florida East Coast Railway. Johnson's first orders were 11128, giving Federal employees a holiday on Monday, 25 November; 11129, extolling Kennedy and renaming the Atlantic Missile Range in his honor; and 11130, appointing the Warren Commission.

because the Federal Reserves notes were theoretically backed by suppositious reserve of 25% gold (which no lowly American could obtain) and actually based on the Federal debt, i.e., bonds on which the taxpayers pay interest to the Federal Reserve! This law, however, still permitted the boobs to have bits of real money, half-dollars, quarters, and dimes of alloyed silver.

(At this point we must bear in mind a fundamental distinction. Real money, silver coins and certificates that such coins are on deposit in the Treasury, naturally create no public debt. The international bankers who own the Federal Reserve operate their swindle by printing Federal Reserve notes and using them to obtain interest-bearing government bonds, and the interest is then paid by more interest-bearing bonds, so that the interest is really compounded each year. And no matter how grievously the taxpaying animals are afflicted, the inevitable result of the swindle must eventually be bankruptcy of the Federal governmment and domestic chaos.)

Now Kennedy's Executive Order 11110, by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to continue issuing silver certificates and minting silver coins, including silver dollars, could be construed as countering the Act of Congress of the same date, for, on its face, it certainly does not conform to the policy of gradually taking silver certificates and silver dollars from the boobs. If that was his purpose, it was certainly commendable. But we must note that the actual issuance of real money was left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, a Jew who called himself Dillon, and one cannot be certain of the intended effect of the order without a detailed knowledge of the secret tensions and intrigues within the Administration.

The final despoilment of the boobs was effected by Johnson on 22 July 1965 with the Coinage Act, Public Law 89-91 (pp. 270-275, 2299-2313), which, coated with a lot of persiflage about a need to "conserve" silver, instructed the Treasury gradually to replace the bits of real money still in the hands of the boobs with counterfeits made of copper and nickel.

That did it. That enabled the Den of Thieves in the Capitol to steal ad libitum from every American who owned bonds, had a pension or insurance, or any equity payable in dollars, while squandering the revenue they extorted from taxpayers to drive the country into banruptcy so that the consortium of international bankers, Jews and their White stooges, could multiply their worthless 'greenbacks' while collecting usury for them. The American boobs were at last launched on the last stage of their toboggan slide into the ecological niche prepared for them, where taxpaying animals will be raised in pens, like their intellectual peers, thoroughly domesticated cows.[12]

Such are the facts about the fiction that credited Jackanapes with the issuance of usury-free 'greenbacks.' The contriver of the hoax was, as I have said, clever. I do not know his motive. He may have been one of the fairly numerous "right-wingers" who think that such hoaxes will enable them to attract a following and become "leaders," or who imagine that a clever hoax will call the boobs' attention to some crucial fact, such as the Federal Reserve's great swindle.[13] They do not perceive—or perhaps do not care—what damage they do to the cause they presumably wish to further.

APPENDIX

The political situation in November 1963 may be summarized as follows. Kennedy would probably demand to be renominated by his "Democratic" Party, but would jettison Johnson, whom he disliked

12. There will be an intermediate stage in which each animal will be given a computer card, such as is now being tried out and perfected in Southest Asia and elsewhere, which will record their serial numbers, their vital statistics, and the credit they are each week allowed for work, from which will be deducted the 'cost' of the trinkets they will be allowed to 'buy.' When it is discovered that the cards can be lost, the data will be imprinted on their skulls with radioactive particles, which will have the same function as the 'chips' in your computer.

13. One of the most audacious hoaxes was devised when the filthy mongrel called Eisenhower was President. The hoaxer printed letterheads of a Mamie Stover Foundation, headed by the Communist Kike on the Supreme Court, Felix Frankfurter, and sent out on that letterhead form letters that solicited contributions to establish a memorial for the mulatta who was Eisenhower's mother. The hoaxer thought that a good way to call public attention to the fact that "dear old Ike" was part nigger (as well as part Jew). Although he covered his track so well that the F.B.I. could find no valid evidence against him, he very seriously embarrassed the publisher with whom he was then associated.

and perhaps hated,[1] and replace him with a less despicable candidate. In any event, it was most unlikely that Kennedy would be reëlected in 1964.

Kennedy had been elected in 1960 by a very narrow margin (less then two-tenths of one percent of the popular vote) over Richard Nixon, and had owed that election to his wit, youthful appearance, and visage that many women thought handsome. He may have owed that narrow margin specifically to Nixon's blunder in engaging in debates with him over television. Kennedy's cosmeticians made him seem more youthful than he was, and his ready wit enabled him to give immediate replies, often sophistry or mere verbiage, but he had the advantage that even persons who perceived something wrong with his answer did not have time to think about it before they had to watch and listen to what followed. No one ever thought Nixon handsome, but his cosmeticians made him seem older than he really was, and the producers of the show manipulated the lighting to his disadvantage. He was a man who does not think quickly and who considers every statement before he utters it, so that he appeared hesitant and embarrassed.[2]

Kennedy in office quickly lost much of his narrow margin of popularity. For one thing, he was of Irish ancestry, the first president since Herbert Hoover who was not sanctified by a large admixture of Another hoax involved quotations from a book supposedly written by a Jew, but of which no trace could be found. When the hoaxer was confronted with this fact, he defended himself by pleading that "Any stick is good enough to beat a Jew." He evidently could not understand that a stick that breaks in one's hand is not only useless, but dangerous and likely to wound the hand that wields it. To the extent that he was believed by persons on our side, he had done—unintentionally I hope—the work of an agent provocateur.

1. The antagonism between the two men was so notorious that some months after the assassination a wag on the staff of one of the small 'off-beat' newspapers that "intellectuals" enjoy, devised an obscenely ludicrous account of the way in which Johnson, whose sexual proclivities were well known, abused Kennedy's corpse when it was on the airplane en route to Washington.

2. At the request of some stalwart Republicans, I witnessed on television a debate between Kennedy and Nixon. When the show was over, I told my hosts, "Gentlemen, you have just lost an election."

Jewish ichor in his veins, and consequently the jewspapers were not zealous in protecting his reputation. His betrayal of the anti-Castro Cubans was not outweighed by an obviously phoney 'confrontation' with the Soviets.[3] His cheap grandstand ploy when he visited Berlin and made the patently absurd statement, "Ich bin ein Berliner," seemed contemptible to many. His shipment of American troops to Vietnam in preparation for another fake "war," such as the one in Korea in which so many American lives had been wasted to disgrace the United States, alarmed even persons who had no conception of the Judaeo-Communist conspiratorial drive for "One World," and he was considered responsible for the assassination of the Americans' supposed ally, Ngo Dinh Diem, which was so badly managed that it quickly became apparent that it was the work of "our" C.I.A. There was great sympathy for the widow, Madame Nhu, a very attractive and highly intelligent Oriental woman, during the twenty days that elapsed between the C.I.A.'s murder of her husband and its deletion of Jackanapes Kennedy in Dallas.[4]

Kennedy's boyish charm was evanescent. He, like all of his clan, was wealthy, but the wealth has been acquired by his father, a parvenu enriched by financing bootleggers during the Prohibition Era, and his superfically civilized manners often wore thin and revealed a "low-brow, shanty-Irish politician from Boston." His notorious

3. Khrushev obligingly had a few rockets, or cardboard models of them, loaded on a ship for Americans to photograph from the air, but it was soon known from reconnaissance flights over Cuba that all of the ballistic missiles with nuclear warheads, which had a range of about 1800 miles, were still in place and ready for action against the United States, only ninety miles away.

4. One of the last American journalists, Westbrook Pegler, with whom I am proud to have been associated, sent a public telegram of condolence to Madame Nhu: "Please accept my sad apology for the murder of your husband and your brother-in-law by the corrupt, Pro-Communist government of the United States, probably directed by the Central Intelligence Agency. ... The President is an uncouth double-crosser and his treachery to Senator McCarthy was a betrayal comparable to the kiss of Judas. We, too, are having a revolution attended by bloodshed in the Southern States which the Kennedys' Communist henchmen fomented. Loyal American generals and others in the Pentagon may yet mount a coup and storm the White House. ... You have won many friends in the United States whose unspoken support may hearten you in this dark hour."

philandering[5] was widely disapproved and a tape recording of his session in bed with one of his numerous females was in circulation. He seemed, at best, a lascivious playboy. Jacqueline Kennedy and Princess Rådziwill were notorious leaders of what was called the "Jet Set," among whom "[marital] faithfulness was simply not playing the game." Jacqueline's cruises on the yacht of the Onassis whom she later married aroused comment, but Americans especially disapproved of her widely reported affaire with her husband's brother, Robert Kennedy, known as "Bobby Sox," whom the C.I.A. deleted some years later, but not in time to save the life of the two brothers' common playgirl, an actress known as Marilyn Monroe. The régime of "beatified adultery" was freely reported in the press and gossip magazines under such headlines as "The Night Jackie Almost Lost Her Husband." Many Americans disapproved of the "Jet Set" and their morals.[6] And, furthermore, it was reported that, despite all that fashionable permissiveness, Jack and Jackie hated each other. That gave rise to the quip that circulated in Washington immediately after the assassination: "Christmas has come early this year. Jacqueline already has her present, a Jack-in-the box." A widely circulated booklet of cartoons portrayed the Kennedy clan as avian raptores, e.g., Mrs. Kennedy was portrayed as a chicken hawk, called the "high-flying Jackie bird," whose cry was "Gimme! Gimme!"

The Kennedys' notorious 'lifestyle' alienated many Americans who had no perception of political realities.

5. I use this unfortunately polysemous word in the sense in which it is most commonly used today, i.e., as a literary allusion to Ariosto's Orlando furioso. The word in its less common but etymologically correct sense would imply that Kennedy was a homosexual, and that certainly was not the case. According to the then prevalent gossip, he appears to have been compulsively concupiscent, and to have been like the hero of Choderlos de Laclos's Liaisons dangereuses, who lost interest in a woman soon after he seduced her, but prided himself on the number of his seductions. It is doubtful, however, whether any of Kennedy's bedmates needed to be seduced.

6. For a report on the tenor of life in the White House, see the article by A. F. Canwell, "Those White House Guests," in American Opinion, December 1963, pp. 43-49. He distinguishes between the "Jet Set", who were wealthy, profligate, and thoughtless, and the "Rat Pack," which consisted of Communists (Jews and traitors), thieves, and degenerates who hated Americans.

Kennedy's domestic policies alarmed intelligent Americans. He sent hordes of vicious goons, dressed as Federal Marshals, into Louisiana and Arkansas to pollute American universities with niggers. He appointed his brother, Robert, Attorney General and so head of the Department of Justice, a post for which he had no qualifications, and Robert ("Bobby Sox") used his authority over J. Edgar Hoover to begin to fill the F.B.I. with thugs, many with criminal records, known as "Bobby's Boys." They were detested by the older agents, who had some pride and belief in the integrity of the F.B.I. If you asked a veteran agent with whom you were acquainted about "Bobby's Boys," he usually made a grimace of pain and disgust and replied, "Well, I'll be able to retire in another two (or three or four) years."

Kennedy's foreign policy, based on a supposed "cold war" with the Soviets, always resulted in another Communist triumph, most commonly because "Foreign Aid" (and the C.I.A.) had been used to overthrow civilized or semi-civilized governments and replace them with barbarous outposts of the Soviets' ever more formidable military machine. Americans capable of distinguishing between a politician's screen of verbiage and his acts asked the questions that were posed, the very morning of the assassination, in the advertisement of which the essential part is reprinted on pages XXX f. above.

(In 1983 there were a great many Americans who had not been narcotized by the Jews' press and schools, and who remembered what the United States had once been. Most of them have died in the almost thirty years that have passed since the assassination, and have been largely replaced by typical products of the tax-supported boob-hatcheries.)

For these various reasons Kennedy had become unpopular in many circles before the Indignation Meetings throughout the country, organized by patriotic Americans in Dallas, awakened bitter resentment at his stripping of our Air Force to supply our latest and best aircraft to the Communists in Yugoslavia.[7]

7. It is not impossible that these planes are still in service and are being used in the slaughter in Hertzogovina, Croatia, and Slovenia now in progress. Serbia is, of course, still controlled by the Communists put in power by Tito, and it is not a coincidence that their acts were endorsed publicly by the notorious Holohoaxer, Wiesenthal, and some of his fellow tribesmen.

I do not know whether moral or political considerations were paramount in the mind of the senior physician at Parkland Hospital who echoed the sentiments of many Americans when, on the morning of the assassination, he was asked whether he would go to see Kennedy parade through the streets of Dallas, and replied, by a prophetic coincidence, that he would see "that son-of-a-bitch" only if he came to the back door of the hospital (i.e., in an ambulance, as Kennedy was brought that very afternoon).

In November 1963 it seemed highly unlikely that Kennedy could devise anything to regain the popular approval he had lost, and the "Republican" faction was anticipating an almost certain victory in 1964. What was much worse, there was a rising tide of American patriotism which had to be stopped—and was stopped by the simple device of putting a bullet through Kennedy's skull.

ADDENDUM

Since the foregoing was written, the issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association for 7 October has come to hand. The cover reproduces a portait, drawn with mediocre skill, of a hairy hook-nosed man in an Oriental costume, sitting with his hands on his thighs. It is entitled "The Praying Jew," and a full page of the magazine is devoted to a lavish encomium of Moyshe Shagal, known as Chagall, and his wonderful paintings, usually "crowded with colorful images that obey neither the laws of space nor those of time." Chagall's incoherent parodies of art, like the daubs of his fellow Sheeny, Picasso, are collected by wealthy suckers who are devoid of an aesthetic sense.

The cover is therefore appropriate for an issue in which the Medical Association continues to certify the truth of Earl Warren's famous hoax. The editor, Dr. Charles D. Lundberg, loudly proclaims again (pp. 1736-1738) that there is no possible doubt whatever that the Warren Report is ultimate truth. (He admits, incidentally, that the autopsy on the body delivered at Bethesda disclosed no evidence of the severe and potentially fatal Addison's disease from which Kennedy was known to have been suffering, but he offers no explanation of a fact that is medically incredible.)

In the articles I discussed above, I noted that Dr. Pierre Fink, the only trained forensic pathologist present at the autopsy, had not been consulted, and that precautions had been taken to discredit his testimony as unreliable, should he dissent. The Medical Association sent a Dr. Dennis L. Breo to Switzerland to interview Dr. Fink, who decided to sing in the chorus and was rewarded with three large photographs of his withered countenace and five pages of flattery (pp. 1748-1754), embodying his assertion that the autopsy in Bethesda confirmed the transcendental verity of the Warren Report, which proved, for all eternity, that "Lee Harvey Oswald, a political fanatic and the lone gunman" assassinated Kennedy all by his lonesome.

The disgrace of the Medical Association is somewhat alleviated by the publication (pp. 1681-1684) of letters from six alert physicians who refused to be bluffed by Dr. Lundberg and his chorus, and who pointed out fallacies and inconsistencies in the official fiction. I wish I could quote all of them, for each pointed out some damning discrepancies in the testimony in Warren's hoax, but I dare not add much to an article that is already excessively long. I can only heartily congratulate Dr. Wayne S. Smith of the School for Advanced International Studies of the Johns Hopkins University for his cogent letter, which begins by remarking, apropos of the articles in the earlier issue of the Medical Association's Journal, "I do not recall ever having seen so many erroneous statements in so few pages." He concludes his able critique with a fact that is conclusive in itself:

> The articles note that panels of experts, basing their analysis on the autopsy photographs and roentgenograms, have consistently upheld the Warren Report. Yes, but the two naval medical technicians who took those roentgenograms and photos have now revealed (in a press conference on May 29) that the photos and roentgenograms sent to the Warren Commission and examined by all subsequent panels were not the ones they took. They are fakes! So much for the conclusions of the panels of experts and the irrefutable nature of the evidence.

And so much for frantic efforts to repair a thoroughly demolished imposture on the public! The British expert, Dr. Cyril Wecht, who made a thorough study of the the Warren Report, concluded that libraries should put the twenty-six volumes in the fiction section of their stacks, alongside Huckleberry Finn and Gulliver's Travels. I suggest that the poisonous trash should be shelved with "Hitler's Diaries" and the "Diary of Anne Frank." ❑

FOR MY LEGIONARIES. The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Cornelliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $8.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince M. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's take-over and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. THE ANTI-HUMANS, by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Cornelliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented 'Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. HERETICAL VERITIES: Mathematical Themes in Physical Description

Professor Ben Kriegh

The readers of Liberty Bell are well aware of "establishment" orthodoxy in such fields as history, sociology, economics, etc. But, they may be surprised to learn that there is a similar "establishment" orthodoxy (perhaps it should be called "politically correct thinking") in the hard sciences, particularly in Physics and to some extent in Mathematics. The ogre behind this orthodoxy in physics is the so-called theory of relativity.

The point is dramatically illustrated in a remarkable book by Thomas E. Phipps, Jr., HERETICAL VERITIES: Mathematical Themes in Physical Description, (Classic Nonfiction Library, Box 926, Urbana, Illinois 61801). Mr Phipps studied nuclear physics at Harvard, and worked in various research groups in the Navy Department, the Pentagon, and Department of Defense. In his book of some 630 pages of text, much of which requires of the reader a substantial background in physics and mathematics, he undertakes the rather startling task of examining in detail some of the logical and practical difficulties inherent in Einstein's special theory of relativity and then shows how those difficulties might be overcome by laying the groundwork for what he calls a "true theory of relativity."

In Mr. Phipps' words, "The purpose of this book is ... to develop alternative physics leading to confrontations with existing theory, resolvable by experiment." In particular he is referring to Einstein's special theory of relativity which he terms "the holiest of holies." In addition, he introduces a profound modification of the equations which are at the foundation of electromagnetic theory (Maxwell's equations), and suggests some new ideas in the field of mathematics, while chastising both physicists and mathematicians for their failure to reject theories which lead to illogical impasses and seek logically sound alternatives.

Mr. Phipps writes, "Increasingly, physics has come to depend on mathematics. The mathematization of physics has gone ridiculously too far. The subject has been taken over by unfrocked mathematicians as their 'private property'. Traditionally, the fresh breeze of amateur criticism is required to expose big mistakes (the failure of theory to conform to observation). Mathematically honed experts, though bounteously provided with imagination, seem to have what in music is called a 'tin ear' for physical description. Innovative physics is a calling, not a profession. It requires a special talent—call it intuition—not among constitutionally guaranteed rights of the citizen. Nevertheless, people who lack this talent fill the literature with wonderful imaginings—their mathematical hobby horses clattering and neighing off key and out of tune, stampeding after each fad, producing such a thunderous cacophony that any real 'signal' present is sure to be drowned out and the signaler trampled beyond archaeological excavation."

While Mr. Phipps' work is too significant to be dismissed lightly by the theoretical physicist, even the nontechnical reader can grasp its significance with the aid of a little preliminary groundwork. To prepare the way, we need to review briefly the classic motivation for the theoretical physicist, a task which Mr. Phipps includes in the beginning sections of his book.

The goal of the theoretical physicist is to find mathematical equations which describe natural events as accurately as possible and substantiated by experimental observation. For example, Sir Isaac Newton found that the equation $F = kmM/r^2$ describes the gravitational force of attraction between two masses, m and M, at a distance r from each other, where k is a constant detetmined by experiment. Such a formula is said to describe a physical law.

However, the physicist seeks more than the mere expression of a physical law as a mathematical formula. His description of a physical law should be as "universal" as possible. That is, if the law is properly described, the description (formula) should be independent of the reference frame; i.e., it should be the same for someone on a rotating earth as it is for an astronaut in a spaceship or for someone on the moon. When a formula reflects this property, it is said to be invariant under a transformation from one refetence frame to another. On the other hand, if a formula transforms in such a way that each of its terms is altered in the same way, the formula is said to be covariant. These two concepts play an important role in Mr. Phipps' demonstration of inadequacies in Einstein's theory of relativity and in the development of his own new approach to relativity.

There are several types of reference frames. For example, one frame might be related to another by a translation, that is, a change from one reference point, or origin, to another reference point. Or, one frame might be speeding away from another (where the observer is located) with a constant velocity; or it may be accelerating or rotating relative to the observer's reference frame.

Sometimes, the formulation of a physical law is invariant under a transformation from the observer's reference frame to another which is moving with a constant velocity relative to the observer, but is not invariant under a transformation to an accelerating frame (it might be covariant, for example, or neither invariant nor covariant). When this occurs the physicist should feel that the expression of the natural law is inadequate and seek a new formulation that will be more comprehensive, that is, that will temain invariant under a wider class or group of transformations.

When Einstein put forth his special theory of relativity in 1905, it appeared to explain certain physical phenomena that Newtonian mechanics could not explain, e.g., the advance of the perihelion of Mercury. Fot that reason, relativity rapidly became accepted, after several years, as a great advance in physics, even though it created logical paradoxes. Furthermore, it abandoned the classical physics concept of seeking descriptions of physical laws that were invariant under transformations, with the contention that since all physical relations were relative the best that could be hoped for was that physical laws could only transform covariantly.

In his Introduction, Mr. Phipps demonstrates "the central role the invariants play in the physical description." It is therefore of primary importance to correctly identify the invariants of kinematics, for example. Because of the overwhelming importance Einstein's theory gives to covariance, it might appear that there are no invariants in relativity. But, as Mr. Phipps shows, both "proper time" intervals and "proper space" intervals are invariant in the special theory. Why, then, does the relativist not seek invariant formulation of the laws of nature?

Mr. Phipps' answer is that "manifestly invariant formulation of physical laws has never so much as crossed the mind of the special relativist ... all relativists have chosen the path of covariance. ... The reason (is that they) have incorrectly identified the invariants of kinematics. Having chosen the wrong invariants, the relativists need a compensatory mistake at the methodological level—and this is provided by the ideology of covariance." As Mr. Phipps shows, "proper time" intervals and "proper space" intervals are not suitable invariants on which to base kinematics. Instead, Mr. Phipps' development of kinematics is based on the invariance under arbitrary changes of state of relative motion of object length and particle proper time.

While some physicists questioned the validity of the assumptions of relativity because of the paradoxes which arose, they seemed to be overwhelmed by the mathematical theoretical physicists who often tried to explain away paradoxes with arguments which often ignored the details of logic or which led to more obscure paradoxical situations.

In order to understand Mr. Phipps's criticism of relativity and his proposed remedy, we need to understand the principles which provide the basis for his ideas. To begin, he realizes that there is often a vagueness or confusion arising from poorly stated concepts or definitions and that some problems in an existing theory originate in semantics. Accordingly, he is meticulous with definitions of such terms as inertial system, covariance, invariance, field, etc. Then, as suggested by the foregoing discussion, he has stated his guiding principles. They are:

(1) SUCCESSIVE APPROXIMATIONS. Theoretical physical science is the mathematical description of nature which is never final or exact but is a progressive process typically achieved through a succession of ever more finely honed approximations.

(2) FORM INVARIANCE. The aim of fundamental physics is the discovery of mathematical relationships that rigorously preserve their forms under an ever wider class of reinterpretations of the physical meanings of their symbols.

(3) COVERING THEORY. A theory is sought to insure the adequacy of parametrization (the variables in terms of which the fundamental equations are stated). Whenever difficulties arise in applying the form invariance principle, one should suspect the inadequacy of the parametrization and examine the operational procedures by which the symbols of the theory are defined and then determine, consistent with the form invariance principle, a suitable "covering theory" that yields all the results of the unsatisfactory theory from which one starts and which also yields additional results subject to observational testing.

With these principles in mind we shall see how he applies them in tackling some of the problems of the theory of relativity.

To illustrate the type of difficulties which the special theory of relativity encounters, Mr. Phipps cites the Ehrenfest Paradox. One of the results predicted by relativity is the so-called Lorentz contraction of a rigid rod or measuring stick moving in the direction of its length. When informed of this consequence of the theory, Paul Ehrenfest, a German physicist, posed a question (Phys. Zeits. 10, 918 (1909)). Consider a circular disc rotating about an axis perpendicular to the disc through its center. Each small segment of the rim of the disc constitutes an idealized rigid rod which should undergo a Lorentz contraction when set in motion. Therefore, what happens to the disc? Does the rim contract?

So fragile is the theory of relativity that, according to Mr. Phipps, at least six different "explanations" of the paradox have been offered by the physicists. Some said the disc buckles into the third dimension. Others said the geometry of the disk becomes non-Euclidian, i.e., its flat space becomes curved. (But how can a curvature of space arise in a flat space?) Still others said it cannot contract. In fact, this contention indicates that the Lorentz contraction is not as universal as claimed. Mr. Phipps says, "The Ehrenfest paradox suggests that since the Lorentz contraction of extended structures cannot occur universally, it may not occur at all." Indeed, this is one point which leads Mr. Phipps into a reevaluation of premises upon which relativity theory is based.

This illustration is but one of several which Mr. Phipps discusses in illustrating his contention that paradoxes or logical inconsistencies arising from relativity theory are usually explained away by "explanations" that give rise to other paradoxes. He asks, "Should not any theory that lives by logic be allowed to die by it?" He continues with the observation that "The type of mind to which contemporary relativity appeals is characterized as 'ancient Greek,' a type well represented among us today, particularly in academia. The ancient Greeks were giants; they could readily have stood on each others shoulders had they had a clear inkling of the humbling idea of 'progress.' But they believed in the stroke of genius, the leap to 'truth' with minimal need to crib from observation. They had plenty of time to make it work if it were going to work. It didn't for them and it won't for us."

A second illustration of the problems which arise within the scope of Einstein's theory of relativity concerns Maxwell's equations which are the foundation of electromagnetic theory. In Mr. Phipps' words, "they are considered sacrosanct because they are an elegantly compact mathematical summation of everything about electromagnetism that had been observed in the laboratory during the previous half century..." (The equations led to the discovery of electromagnetic waves.) Unfortunately, two of the four equations proved to be noninvariant under a Galilean transformation, a troublesome fact for the relativists because this meant that the equations were valid only in a "preferred" absolute reference frame.

According to Phipps, only one physicist, Heinrich Hertz (German) realized that if Maxwell's equations were not invariant under a Galilean transformation, and if a relativity of some type was an experimental fact, then Maxwell's equations were in conflict with experimental fact and needed to be changed. Hertz then discovered the modifications needed to make Maxwell's equations invariant under a Galilean transformation and published his own version of Maxwell's theory. In fact, it was Hertz who saw that Maxwell's equations implied the existence of a wave equation, hence the physical existence of electromagnetic waves, and confirmed this prediction in the laboratory. It is one of the sad stories of science that Hertz's discovery of electromagnetic waves elevated Maxwell's equations to a position of deification in the minds of other physicists who chose to ignore Hertz's own improvements on them.

The correction to Maxwell's equations discovered by Hertz was really a simple matter of reparametrizing the equations, i.e., changing one of the variables, a process Mr. Phipps shows in detail. He further illustrates the strange logic of the "establishment" physicists by noting, "When Maxwell's equations made definite numerical predictions that were experimentally disconfirmed, the interpretation that led to this result was discarded and the equations preserved. When Hertz made definite numerical predictions that were experimentally disconfirmed, nobody thought of preserving his equations and discarding his (ether based) interpretation that led to this result." Yet, Hertz's equations are far more significant than Maxwell's because they provide a "covering" theory that includes the valid results of Maxwell's theory while extending that theory to include invariance under Galilean transformations.

These examples are but two of several which Mr. Phipps discusses in detail. He writes, "...the terrible cost to physics that relativity's narrow channelization of the human imagination has exacted in terms of lost gains and missed opportunities for alternative development" is like "the dominance of a single species that kills off all others..." He continues, "Newton's third law the equality of action and reaction throughout the universe is one of the grandest conceptions of the human mind... It can be said that no physicist has ever gone into a laboratory and failed to confirm Newton's third law. That is, there exists not a shred of evidence against it." Yet, "The third law has long since been junked by theorists, ... because the failure of Maxwell's equations ... to exhibit Galilean invariance, and related peculiarities of the Lorentz force law, introduced into physics velocity-dependent and delayed-acting forces, which caused action-reaction force vectors to become theoretically nonparallel, thereby 'disproving' Newton's third law. ... From start to finish, nobody contemplated the alternative that Newton's third law and empiricism are still and eternally right, and that the disability of Maxwell's equations in respect to first order Galilean invariance, the shrinkage of the mechanical invariance group ushered in by special relativity, etc., are all parts of one grand unified package properly labeled DEFICIENT THEORY."

Mr. Phipps' discussion "has emphasized the sabotage of physics wrought by space-time symmetry and the Lorentz transformation, ... they have destroyed freedom of concept ... in respect to distant simultaneity. ... In short, relativity has swept through physics like a forest fire, leaving only blackened stumps of concepts. By cutting off physics from its past, it has left it without a future. ... Can physics, as a social enterprise, ever recover from the holocaust of 1905?"

Up to this point, we have considered some of the problems inherent in Einstein's theory of relativity. Mr. Phipps does not intend to suggest that there are no valid consequences of the theory. Instead, he is suggesting that the theory is not well founded on observational concepts. Furthermore, he is not content with merely pointing out flaws in the theory; he offers a viable alternative which we shall now examine briefly.

In accordance with his stated guiding principles, Mr. Phipps suspects that the paradoxes of relativity and the failure of Maxwell's equations to be invariant under Galilean transformations indicates deficiencies in the foundational concepts of the theory. He therefore goes back to examine the principles on which relativity if founded, with the intention of investigating their logical consistency, uniqueness (are there other possible alternatives?) and the parametrization of its equations. The consequences of his investigation are truly surprising.

In order to convey the significance of his ideas, we shall have to use a little mathematical symbolism, primarily to provide a basis for a "visual" comparison of his ideas with those of relativity theory. In Mr. Phipps' words, "Let us review the situation with respect to Einstein's theory. Because of the overweening significance it accords to covariance, one might suppose that theory contains no invariants. Not so. Both timelike ("proper time" interval), dT, and spacelike ("proper space" interval, dS, invariants are present in the special theory. Given this information the attentive reader ... will ask at once why the relativist does not seek invariant formulations of the laws of nature, i.e., expressions having the functional form $F(dT,dS) = 0$."

The mathematical expression for the Einsteinian invariants are, for the "proper time" interval

$$(dT)^2 = (dt)^2 - \{(dx)^2 + (dy)^2 + (dz)^2\}/c^2$$

and for the "proper space" interval,

$$(dS)^2 = (dx)^2 + (dy)^2 + (dz)^2 - c^2(dt)^2.$$

(The quantities appearing in these equations designate "infinitesimal differences" or differentials between the space time coordinates of two points on the worldline (trajectory) of a single particle.)

Mr. Phipps proceeds with the observation that "The central problem of kinematics overlooked by Einstein and his followers is how to transfer the metric standard ... from S (a Galilean inertial system) to S' (a Galilean inertial system in motion relative to S) while maintaining its integrity as a metric standard. ... He (Einstein) missed a tempo through deriving coordinate transformation equations before specifying a means of calibrating coordinate axes in relative motion. ... The resulting motion group omitted the acceleration essential for intersystem transfer of material metric standards ... an omission fatal to both logic and physics."

(As far as I can ascertain, Mr. Phipps gives the first kinematic definition of "inertial system" as "any material collective all constituent parts of which share the same state of motion and in undergoing any changes of state do so at equal proper times." For example, a train speeding down a straight track would represent an "inertial system," but a rotating disc would not. He then defines a Galilean inertial system as "any closed (inertial) system in which Newton's mechanical equations are valid to first order in all velocity dimensional parameters." These concepts have an important bearing on the consequences of Mr. Phipps' version of relativity.)

Mr. Phipps continues with an extensive argument to show that observational evidence supports the physical invariance of dT but not dS. His analysis leads to the conclusion that object length must be an invariant under arbitrary changes of state of relative motion. This surprising result is a significant departure from Einsteinian relativity which predicts the contraction of length in the direction of motion. He says, "The choice of objects rather than events as the basic descriptive elements of kinematics is no accidental feature, but will turn out to be perhaps our most profound departure from the Einstein I world formulation." It is significant that in Phipps' system, the Ehrenfest paradox disappears.

Thus, as a result of his deliberations, Mr. Phipps postulates, "the invariants of kinematics for arbitrary physically permissible relative motions are object length and particle proper time." The mathematical expressions are, for object length, $$(dL)^2 = (dx)^2 + (dy)^2 + (dz)^2,$$ and for particle proper time,

$$(dT)^2 = (dt)^2 - \{(dx)^2 + (dy)^2 + (dz)^2\}/c^2$$

where d denotes the differential of a quantity delimited by points lying on two separate particle trajectories. Note that care must be taken to distinguish between "the length of an object" and "the distance between events." For example, one of Mr. Phipps' theorems is "The length or distance of separation between two events is invariant under inertial transformations if and only if the events are simultaneous."

Relative simultaneity is an important part of Einsteinian relativity, so naturally it comes under the scrutiny of Mr. Phipps. He says, "Having discarded the metric half of Einstein's kinematics, we must reappraise all his deductions" including "his most famous qualitative perception, the relativity of simultaneity. ... According to this perception as quantified by the equations of the Lorentz transformation, the synchronization of distant clocks cannot be so defined as to be an invariant property for all inertial observers. Such a sweeping claim of impotence invites refutation by counterexample, of which only one need be given." And give a counterexample he does, by what he calls the V*transport method (which is too elaborate to be detailed here). In so doing, he gives meaning to "distant simultaneity of events" a concept not realizable in Einsteinian theory.

Einstein rejected all environmental effects on the propagation of light in a vacuum, a simplistic view which leads to complexities in the treatment of matter (notably, the Lorentz contraction). Mr. Phipps takes the opposite view, postulating simple matter (length invariance) and complicated light (environmentally influenced). The two theoretical approaches, he contends, submit to crucial experimental testing which, in the final analysis, determines the viability of any theory. As a result of this approach, Mr. Phipps shows that the speed of light is not always constant! He calls this "the most important single theoretical result" in his book. (Recall that the cornerstone of Einsteinian relativity is the assumed constancy of the speed of light.)

One other significant consequence of Mr. Phipps' theory should be mentioned. It concerns the "twin paradox" of Einsteinian theory. Suppose a stationary observer on earth has a twin who boards a spaceship and travels away from earth at nearly the speed of light and then returns after an earth time lapse of, say, twenty years. Einsteinian relativity predicts that because a clock going with the "travelling twin" slows down, he will not age as fast as the "stay at home" twin. But, since relative motion is considered symmetrical, the "travelling twin" might be considered stationary while the "stay at home" twin, along with the earth and the solar system, is travelling away at great speed. In that case, the "stay at home" twin should "return" younger than his "travelling" counterpart. So, which is it to be?

Now it has been confirmed by various laboratory experiments that a group of radioactive mesons moving in a circular orbit at high speed decay much more slowly than a group maintained "at rest." That is, the stationary group decays 29 times faster than the moving group. This phenomenon indicates that the slowing of a clock in motion relative to a stationary one must be an experimental fact. (This result apparently has been confirmed by flying a clock in a jet for a length of time and finding that it actually does slow down.) Hence Einstein's prediction is confirmed. Yet the theory must be deficient since it does not explain away the symmetrical relationship between the relatively moving systems. The deficiency appears to be in the theory's failure to properly define "inertial systems."

Within the context of his definition of "inertial system," and as a consequence of his definition of "distant simultaneity" Mr. Phipps concludes that all "genuinely inertial clocks go at the same rate." Hence, if the "traveling" twin is in an inertial system, his clock will be going at the same rate as that of the "stay at home" twin and when he returns home, he will be at the same age as his "stay at home" counterpart. But, does this conclusion contradict the experimental evidence? No, because, as Mr. Phipps concludes, noninertial clocks go slower than inertial clocks, a fact supported by the meson experiment, and one which relativists have failed to identify because they failed to distinguish between inertial and noninertial systems. (Refer back to Mr. Phipps' definition of "inertial frame".) It turns out that a reference frame associated with a rotating (or orbiting) object is not an inertial frame. Thus, if the "traveling" twin tcould journey to a distant star and return without accelaration, his age would remain the same as that of his "stay at home" twin. (From the practical point of view, one can orbit the earth at only a fixed speed far less than that of light, so we would not be able to detect a difference in aging between astronauts and earthbounders.)

A substantial portion of Mr. Phipps' book is devoted to the development of the mathematical consequences of his basic ideas. There are detailed discussions of experiments on which he relies to support his thesis, which amounts to a new approach to the theory of relativity, one which is not plagued by the logical difficulties inherent in Einsteinian relativity. Moreover, Mr. Phipps' theory is a "covering theory" of relativity in the sense that valid consequences of Einsteinian relativity are preserved in the new approach.

There are several chapters devoted to the development of some original ideas in mathematics which may prove to be useful in extending the theoretical results further. However, there are certain points in his mathematical discussion which need clarification, if unfortunate misunderstandings are to be avoided.

It is an unfortunate fact of life that the community of physicists, for the most part, are so taken with Einsteinian relativity that they do not appear interested in exploring new approaches. It is clear that Mr. Phipps has encountered great difficulty in having his case heard. Nevertheless, in the final analysis, the test of any theory is how well it conforms to experimental fact as well as to logic. In that sense, Mr. Phipps' theory seems far more coherent than Einstein's and, in time, I believe Mr. Phipps will be vindicated. "I love it!" ❑

"The Mountain Has Fallen...."

by Winston Smith

On August 16th, 1992, a giant departed from among us when Robert Miles died at the age of 67, three months to the day after the death of his beloved wife, Dorothy. The gap which he has left in our ranks will not easily be filled.

For over forty years, Bob Miles played a leading role in the White resistance movement in North America, his courage and vision earning him worldwide renown among every friend and foe alike of Aryan man. Bob endured repeated assault; a life of grim poverty and unremitting hardship; six years of false imprisonment on perjured testimony in the worst hellhole of America's prison system as well as a disgraceful attempt in 1987 to imprison him yet again on bogus sedition charges; decades of spying and harassment; the imprisonment and murder of friends and family members; and an avalanche of media abuse and defamation without parallel in the annals of gutter journalism.

They never broke him. Bob Miles met and overcame every attack, every ordeal which this evil regime inflicted on him, and he did so with a calm courage, a quiet dignity, and an irrepressible charm and humor which, more than anything else Bob did or said or wrote, drove the Jews and their lick-spittle lackeys in the United States government to enraged distraction.

Bob Miles clearly understood something which many in our movement have lost sight of, which is that death is no big deal. It is an inevitable fact of existence, to be accepted philosophically and met with dignity when the time comes. What matters is how one lives, what one leaves behind in the way of accumulated knowledge, experience, and moral example. For all of us today and for comrades of the future, role models don't come any stronger or more admirable than Bob Miles. More than any White racial nationalist patriot in contemporary times, Bob lived his simple, powerful philosophy, which he sometimes referred to by the Irish Gaelic name of Sinn Fein, "Ourselves Alone." To Bob it was all very straightforward. Aryan man is the pinnacle of God's creation; we don't need anything which any other race or culture can offer us in exchange for admixture. All that is necessary to preserve our race and ensure a future for our seed among the stars is a simple recognition of who we are, and the spiritual willpower to "just say no" to every poisoned chalice, every rotten sweetmeat of which the Jew urges us to partake.

Bob understood the one basic principle which holds the key to our entire struggle, yet which seems so incredibly difficult for many of us to crasp; which, indeed, some of us never succeed in grasping. The Jews are not the problem, nor are the blacks or the Hispanics or the politicians or the interntational bankers or the Communists or any other grouping of our racial adversaries. WE are the problem. Our weakness, our laziness, our profound moral cowardice, our craven unwillingness to place our physical bodies and our creature comforts at risk, as Bob himself did without fear or hesitation. When we look in a mirror, there we see our enemy. But if we look hard enough, we can see Bob Miles standing behind us, a smile on his face and his hand on our shoulder to guide and uplift and strengthen us, as ever he did when he was with us here in life.

In ancient Celtic times, when a High King of Tara died, messengers were despatched in swift chariots riding the length and breadth of all Ireland, from Antrim in the north to Kerry in the southwest. At each village and crossroads and castle they came to, these couriers cried out, "The Mountain has fallen!" Our mountain has fallen, but his spirit lives on, and it is strong.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

RE: Further Update on North Idaho; A Peep Through the Keyhole of the New World Order.

Dear Editor:

Having followed Bo Gritz's and Jack McLamb's respective accounts about the murderous atrocities committed on the Weaver family, I have another report for your readers. Bo Gritz announced that an eyewitness came forward and gave him a sworn affidavit which confirmed Weaver's statement about what happened. Gritz is going to have the witness take a polygraph exam.

The 14-year-old boy, Samuel, was shot in the arm. The shot spun him around screaming and crying in pain as he started running back toward the cabin. The Marshals then shot him in the back with automatic weapons fire. The boy was hit FOUR times in the back! He fell dead along with his dog, also shot in the back. Only machine-gun fire could hit the boy in the back four times before he fell dead.

The next afternoon, both Weaver and Harris were wounded by sniper fire after going out to a shed to pray over the boy's body. As they scrambled through the door of the cabin, a government sniper shot Vicki Weaver between the eyes from 50 feet away! The Marshals have even admitted this. It was a non-white American who saw every feature on her face when he pulled the trigger of a .308 sniper rifle, probably even seeing the baby in her arms. The 10 and 16 year old girls watched this happen. This was the girls' testimony. The shot blew Vicki's brain out. The girls dressed their mother's body with herbs and placed it under the kitchen table where she laid for the next 10 days. The family didn't have enough water to cleanse her body for burial.

The new eyewitness stated that he saw Marshal Deagan shot twice from behind and then shot in the back of the head.

Sarah, the 16 year old girl, gave a statement to the Spokane papers. I quote her: "They'd come on real late at night and say, 'Mrs. Weaver, how's the baby, Mrs. Weaver?' "Also, 'Good morning Randall. How'd you sleep? We're having pancakes. What are you having?'" The Marshals did this knowing that Vicki was dead and laying inside the cabin with the children. They even named the military compound "Camp Vicki." All this after the government knew Vicki's head was blown off and her body was still inside the cabin with the children. They used loudspeakers late at night to torture them psychologically.

This means that THE MARSHALS AND GOVERNMENT AGENTS DELIBERATELY TORMENTED THE CHILDREN WITH THEIR DEAD MOTHER'S BODY!

Have you ever heard of such a cruel, inhumane, and disgusting act as this? They taunted the family whose mother laid dead under the kitchen table, in full view of the children, for 10 days with a 10 month old baby girl to feed, without her mother.

If this isn't tyranny, what is? The Weaver family has no recourse against the monsters who murdered these two innocents. Have you seen the pictures of those thugs who pointed their machine-guns at Bo Gritz's back? Beasts. How would you react if you saw your mother's brains blown out?

Now the U.S. Attorney has indicted the 10 month old baby and the two girls for aiding and abetting murder. They have literally charged a 10 month old baby girl with murder! Is this insanity or what? Do I detect the hand of Judah behind this insane fury of frenzied hatred? Could this happen in America?

It is tyranny, nothing else. Absolute tyranny. What does the Declaration of Independence and the underpinnings of the Constitution say about tyranny? It is our duty, and now it is time.

The shot that murdered Vicki Weaver is the opening round of what you know must happen. Are you ready?

Dear Landsmann:

I don't know if the media has been carrying the news nationwide, so I'll mention a bit of background. Last month a white cop shot and killed a Dominican druggie during a violent struggle. Naturally this was used as an excuse for another riot by colored vermin. The black racist mayor of Jew York rushed to the scene to commiserate with the family of the druggie and to promise them that the guilty policeman would be punished just the way Bush promised that the four cops who beat Rodney King would be punished, no matter what local courts found. Unlike Bush, Dinkins could not overrule the Grand Jury which found the policeman innocent of all charges of murder, but he could and did use city money, stolen from whites via taxation, to fly the druggie back to Dominica and to fly his family there (and back) for his funeral. The NYC cops, smarting under Dinkins black racist badmouthing, then held an off duty demonstration at City Hall where some cops had a few beers and got a little noisy and rowdy. A minor affair, but the Jewsmedia were aghast! Some 10,000 cops, mostly white, had dared to protest a black racist media campaign! After a period of shock that white pigs would dare assert themselves, the Jewsmedia pulled themselves together to start their usual hate campaign and demand the policemen be punished for their temerity. People here have polarized along racial lines. Coloreds support Dinkins while whites generally support the cops.

There is a lot of talk about how blacks are the main victims of black crime. This is true, but it doesn't stop blacks and other coloreds from nearly unanimous support of colored criminals. To coloreds, law and civilization are alien things imposed upon them by white police, and revulsion against these things is universal.

In this case, investigation proved that colored witnesses deliberately lied about the killing hoping to spark a riot so they could do their drugs freely in a "liberated" area. This is mayor Dinkins constituency and he is acting in accordance with their desire when he promises to punish white cops, make the police force majority colored, and set up a civilian review board staffed by liberals and colored racists to further cripple such law enforcement as remains in NYC.

White police, however, have found a deadly way to strike back. The NYC government exists mainly to collect revenue for Jewish usurers. One of the ways they get it is through use of fines to rob people. Out-of-towners may not know it, but simply parking in the wrong spot can cost them a $200 fine. Police steal your car and hold it for ransom. To get back at Dinkins, police have slowed down or stopped issuing summons. This will cut into the Jews' income stream and thus should produce results in short order.

Another famous incident in this area is the Amy Fisher case. Amy is an under-age Jewish prostitute who used her sex to exploit various men and make them do what she wanted. She was supposedly having an affair with a white man and decided to kill his wife because she was in her way. After trying to get various men to do her dirty work, she shot the wife in the face. The wife was crippled but didn't die and Amy was arrested and charged with attempted murder. Now I don't know what the facts are of this case except that Amy is proven to have done the shooting. I can, however, pretty well predict the outcome of the case. Amy is a member of three over-privileged minorities: she is Jewish, female, and a minor. The husband of the injured woman is a white man, a member of the lowest class of Americans. His wife is a white woman, almost as low in status. It can thus be taken for granted that the Jew/Liberal (in)justice system and the Jewsmedia will try to get Amy off and punish the white husband and wife.

I hate the murdering thief, Bush, with a passion but the vile Clinton and his evil, Jewish wife is no improvement. The one candidate who stands out since the attempted murder of Randy Weaver in Idaho is "Bo" Gritz. It is clearly the intervention by Gritz that prevented the murder of Weaver and his whole family by Federal marshals. Gritz's action in arriving on the scene and facing the Federal murder gang shows that his medals in Vietnam were no fluke. This is virtually the first time I can remember that any politician stood up to the Feds while they were making an "example" of a white daring to resist Jewish policies. As in NYC, the white public in the area actually dared to protest rather than taking their beating quietly as usual. But too many whites seem to be happy that Weaver was just arrested rather than murdered like his wife and child. The Feds plan to send Weaver to jail for life and his under-age children too! Not only should Weaver and the others attacked by the Federal murder gang be released with apologies, they should be awarded millions in compensation and the seven marshals and the officials who sent them should be tried for murder. If Randy Weaver and his friends and family are sent to jail and the marshals who murdered his wife and child are not punished, whites should riot in every city and town in America. What! Are blacks to be allowed to burn down entire cities in racist temper tantrums while whites suffer oppression and murder in silence?

The Jewsmedia have been denouncing the NYC police demonstration for blocking traffic, and rowdiness. What they should have done was burn Gracie Mansion to the ground and tar and feather the racist Dinkins and his moronic staff. That is the sort of things colored mobs have been doing with impunity. Don't white have equal rights?

PS: The unspeakable Jew, Congress thief Weiss, died last week of a "heart attack." Every faggot on the lower east and west sides of Manhattan was in tears over him. And well they should be! AIDS has probably spread to most of them. Weiss was the author of the NYC "Gun Control" law that disarmed the public and turned NYC over to armed criminals. He was also the creator of the idea of a "Civilian Review Board" which seems to have been designed to cripple the police so criminals could operate more freely. This was necessary so that the colored morons could steal enough money to buy drugs which guess who was selling them.

Dear Mr. Dietz:

In the July issue of Liberty Bell there is an article by G.S. from New Mexico. I'm p....d off again at some jerk writing in Liberty Bell trying to tell me not to listen to rock-n-roll music. Let me tell you G.S., rock-n-roll is not a "monstrous music fad," it's been around since the fifties and will probably continue well into the next century.

At first, rock-n-roll was nigger music until Elvis came along and made it popular with White people. Since then, the niggers have been all but driven out of rock-n-roll, with a couple of exceptions. Whether you like it or not, G.S., rock is now White man's music.

Now, G.S., you think rock music fills my head "with Satanism and individualism." Well, if Satanism is against Christianity, then I must be satanic. I have absolute total contempt for Christians and Christianity. If listening to rock-n-roll helps destroy Christianity, then I'm turning my stereo up! You're right about individualism. I am a rare individual, a National Socialist in the heart of Nigger land. If I wasn't an individual thinker, I wouldn't have been able to take the pressure of parents, preachers, teachers, and the jewsmedia to think and act like the rest of the herd. I wouldn't be racially aware and I wouldn't be reading Liberty Bell. I'm enough of an individual to pick and choose which rock bands I want to listen to and which ones I don't want to listen to.

When I listen to Metallica or Van Halen or Bad Company I get fired up! The music makes me feel good. When I go to a rock concert I see a couple of niggers or gooks and thousands of White people. Nice percentage.

I thought by waiting a month before writing this letter my anger at G.S. and other anti-rockers would have subsided; it hasn't. So what do you dig, G.S., Card W? Is Charlie Pride your favorite musician? Maybe Liberachi is more your type? Perhaps the big band sound of Benny Goodman is your preference? How about Bach or Beethoven performed by the New York Philharmonic, conducted by Leonard Bernstein? So, you anti-rockers, get the point I'm trying to make? Nothing is black or white, bad or good, in the music industry today. If it was up to me, I would outlaw jazz, disco, and rap. This is the most un-White music yet recorded. I am not saying that rock-n-roll is all good, but it's not all bad either. There are many tunes that get airplay that are pro-White or anti-government, just listen to the lyrics. I'm sure a Skin reader could send in lyrics from Skrewdriver, No Remorse, Bound for Glory, Haken Kreuz, or the Mid-Town Boot Boys that would silence the pens of these anti-rockers (I don't have any tunes from these groups). So, all of you old people that don't like rock-n-roll, don't listen to it. But don't tell me to get off my rock!

Sieg Heil!

Gentlemen:

Greetings...I am writing this letter for I am in dire need of your help. I am currently confined in Z.O.G.'s military prison. I have been in this particular prison for two and a half years. During this time I have seen 1500 people come and go. Yet even so, there is one thing incessantly common amongst the many young Aryans which arrive here. ZOG has finally imbedded a message of unity and equality into the minds of these impressionable young men. The guilt complex instilled upon them since childhood is reenforced here.

The establishment here offers some type of program to every minority imaginable. All that is except the most deserving "minority" of all—the vanishing White Man! Whites here had to take this discriminating institution to court in the hopes of being allotted the same privileges given to the "oppressed" minorities. Of course, the government sided with itself.

That is why we're asking the help of your organization. If the government won't help us in being proud of our heritage, then we need to find others, such as yourself, that will. Unfortunately, soldiers sentenced to confinement here are stripped of all "pay and allowances," thus leaving us devoid of money. The need to educate these young Aryans, as well as older Aryans, still exists however; and if anything, it becomes more urgent with each passing year.

Some of the men coming to us are unaware of basic facts such as the usurious "Federal Reserve System", and the "Kosher Food Racket".

We're currently receiving reading materials from contributors like the Noontide Press and Church of the Creator. We fully understand our undesirable position, and do not wish to become too burdensome to any one of the fine, patriotic groups which assist in our education by giving us literature. Obviously, it is not the want of the White man to ask for a "handout". It is better, however, to ask for help than to leave a potential source of information left untapped.

Please help us in our quest for complete racial awareness by sending any publications you can—imperfect copies, damaged materials, or just plain overstocks—the condition does not matter. Racial awareness does!

Our thirst for this knowledge of the plots and plagues facing the beautiful White Race today is unquenchable. I assure you, sir, that any and all materials you are able to send to us will be readily absorbed by many. With this knowledge we will become better prepared for the upcoming troubles ahead.

Dear Mr. Dietz

It seems to me that the tables can easily be turned on those who enjoy talking about "Human Rights." My suggestion is that Whites begin to vigorously advance the concept of Human Rights Number One (the most basic of all human rights)—The right to live in a society comprised of, and determined by, ONE'S OWN PEOPLE.

Dear George:

Having finished my first reading of the September Liberty Bell—as always, it was excellent—I feel compelled to offer this response to a fellow L.B. reader's not-so-prudent remarks concerning the Christian Identity faith.

In one of his two September letters to the editor, Public Prudentis referred to Identity as "a creeping cancer" and labeled the religion's adherents "ignorant" white "dupes." Now I myself am not a believer in the Identity doctrine, nor am I a Christian of any sort or variety, but I am nonetheless offended when any of my Brothers are publicly insulted. To refer to Identity Christians as "dupes" is to insult the majority of the best leaders and soldiers our race has produced in the last twenty years. If one feels the need to intellectually oppose a religion then so be it. But when the religion being argued is the religion of such stout-hearted men as Robert Matthews, Gordon and Yorie Kahl, Randy Weaver, Ernst Zündel, Robert Miles, William Potter Gale, Richard Butler, and countless others, I believe the argument should be put forth with due respect.

Furthermore, whether we like it or not, the White militia needed to fight when at last the storm breaks will be made up largely of Identity Christian patriots. We are hardly in a position where we can afford to risk any further factionalism within the White Right. If a White man is in favor of an all-White homeland, a Folkstate, and is willing to sacrifice all for the folkstate, and conducts himself in an honorable fashion, then that man is my Brother no matter how much we may differ in other areas.

As responsible Aryans we would be wise, to avoid further dissension, by adopting a policy of respectful speech when addressing or referring to fellow Kindred regardless of how strongly we may feel concerning their personal beliefs. To do otherwise would make honest and productive interaction impossible.

PS: I am glad to inform you that I will soon be economically able to pull my own weight. I am now receiving a donated subscription which provides me with much high quality food for thought. Being in prison, I cannot reach the type of funds I would like to contribute. Please accept $10 bimonthly starting later this month as my subscription dues.

Dear Landsmann:

I was disturbed to see the violent letter and accusations against "Bo" Gritz in the recent Liberty Bell [see Liberty Bell, September, page 37]. So what if Gritz pinned on a marshal's badge and took a deputizing oath? He previously took the oath of a commissioned officer in the US Army, which is a much more serious matter. Neither the Army nor the Marshals Service are inherently evil. It depends on what use they are put to and how their members behave.

I am not among those who are thrilled by the surrender of Weaver and his family, but what alternative was there? The normal practice of the Feds in these sieges is to burn the building and kill everyone inside, especially if one of the police has been killed. This is what was done at Whitbey Island, Annendale, and, to be fair, at the siege of the Symbionese Liberation gang, and the Philadelphia Move cult. This is what would have been done at the Weaver house as well had not Gritz intervened. No other candidate even mentioned the tragedy; Gritz took a big chance appearing at the scene because the Feds are looking for the opportunity to kill him too, and the confusion and gun fire at the site provided a good chance to do so. The only thing that prevented the planned murder of Weaver and the rest of his family was the glare of publicity upon the planned crime and that is what Gritz's intervention provided. Thus, I can hardly see his action in getting Weaver to surrender as anything but defusing the confrontation.

The surrender of Weaver and Harris is a victory in that their planned murders were aborted. The Jew flunky government clearly intents to jail them for the rest of their lives. There are only two ways this can be prevented. First by having enough political, financial and military power to force the government to back down. This is no option. Whites have no power in this Jew owned country whatever. We are lower than pig tracks. All financial and political power is in the hands of the Jew. There are not even 200 Whites in this whole country willing to fight government racism with arms. Whites even tremble at defending themselves from nigger mobs! Thus, the only chance for Weaver and Harris is to bring a glare of publicity on the frame-up trial the Feds are planning. Naturally, the Jewsmedia will black out the trial the same way they are blacking out Bo Gritz's candidacy, so it remains to be seen if the feeble White nationalist movement can muster enough outrage to bypass the media monopoly and make the Feds' crime a national issue. This wasn't done in the trial of Gordon Kahl's son and his friends, who got 120 years in prison merely for being targets when the Feds opened fire at a police roadblock.

The things the government is doing are outrageous by any standard of law or justice. The Jew control over their American cattle depends on their keeping hidden and not openly oppressing their victims enough to stir up real hostility.

If the pathetic white nationalist movement can reach enough of the public with the facts of this outrageous government action, the Zionist Occupation Government will have to back down and let the Weavers and Harris go. We will see if this can be done, and this should be our agenda for the immediate future.

As for horror and the warriors of our race, non-stop hate propaganda has turned them against their own race and people. In WW II Americans had no trouble with murdering SS prisoners, civilians and POWs after the war. They were just told such people were evil and must be destroyed. A whole bunch of imaginary crimes were concocted and blamed on the designated victims to stir hatred against them. You saw it again in the Gulf War where Americans massacred fleeing Irakis on the roads, and buried alive thousands of Irakis trying to surrender. They then went home with a clear conscience and the public received them with cheers!

The American people accepted that Hussein was evil to take over his lost province of Kuwait but that Bush was virtuous in invading Panama! Such nonsense simply strengthens the conclusion that average people have no critical facilities and that we Americans lost control of our country when we permitted alien Jews to come in and steal our country and buy up its media. Now we are paying for our weakness and foolishness, and the cost will mount constantly until there is a change. Right now the main change we can make is to embarrass the Jew government by spreading the truth about their murder plot against Randy Weaver and keeping them from railroading him and Harris into prison for life.

Sincerely, S.R., New York State

Dear George:

I feel compelled to respond to the letter that appeared in the September issue of Liberty Bell over the name of "Publicus Prudentis" which was highly critical of Bo Gritz for methods he allegedly used in saving lives of the surviving members of the Randy

Weaver household in Idaho. Either Mr. Prudent has a very fertile imagination or is, himself, a highly placed federal functionary. How else could he have been in a position to witness behavior that others closest to the scene were unable to see?

Because I had friends near the Weaver siege line throughout the entire affair I was able to receive first hand reports from the area on a regular basis. My friends, Identity Christians who were also acquainted with the Weavers, had nothing but praise for the way in which Bo Gritz and Jack McLamb defused the murderous situation. I can agree with Mr. Prudent to the extent that sooner or later many of us may be forced to face our maker for unpopular beliefs but, hopefully, the issues will be clear and the women and children will be well to the rear. Dying as glorious Aryan warriors for a worthwhile cause is one thing, but to expect or, indeed, allow wounded men, teen-age girls and a nursing baby to be murdered by a hyped up mob of brainwashed law enforcement officers for no good reason is quite another.

I don't know who is representing himself as Mr. Prudent but his message is one I hear all too often: This or that White patriot is a liar, a crook, an opportunist, a profiteer, a traitor, a con man, a CIA agent, a spy or, if nothing else, just a plain old son of a bitch. To all such destructive criticism I say, "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead." We must stop giving aid and comfort to the enemy by publicly criticizing our own, would-be leadership and by spreading damaging rumor and innuendo among ourselves.

Whatever else may be his faults, Bo Gritz is making a valuable contribution to the cause by reaching thousands of people with a message that needs to be told. If and when we ever get our own act together then will be the time to take care of crooks, opportunists and traitors, if indeed they do exist. But for now, we must seek reconciliation and solidarity among ourselves. We must adopt the rule, if we can't say something good about another White man, let's not say anything at all. We must stop fighting each other and concentrate on fighting an enemy who demonstrates daily that he is one hell of a lot smarter, better organized and more determined than we are.

For a lesson on how to do it, I strongly urge everyone to read Ivor Benson's book, The Zionist Factor. In it he describes a group of people who have their own racial religion; do not air their dirty laundry in public; train, try, educate and discipline their own, and generally set themselves apart from the rest of humanity. We could learn a few lessons from a people who place success above everything else in life. Unless we succeed in learning how to work together, we will die as a race. If we die as a race, then civilization will die with us.

Sincerely, J.M., West Virginia

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congolds unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

HIGH IDEALS

John Reed, a crackpot and perhaps a mattoid, was born in Oregon in 1887. He is the subject of several laudatory biographies, but I have never thought it worthwhile to ascertain his ancestry or follow his career. I do not know whether he became a Communist before, during, or after his years at Harvard, from which he was graduated in 1910. In the following year he began to compose bait for stupid proletarians as the foremost contributor to a periodical bucket of garbage called The Masses. Having thus proved himself, he was, as one would expect, employed as a "distinguished" foreign correspondent by the Jews' New York Times.

It was in this capacity that he was in St. Petersburg and Moscow when the Masters of Deceit captured Russia in 1917-1918. He witnessed, of course, the Bolshevik seizure of power by terrorism, and his vicious mind doubtless gloated over the slaughter of civilized Russians. Exalted by the savagery of the Judaeo-Communists, he wrote a paean of praise for the glorious victory of the proletariat and the triumph of "human rights" and "social justice," which was published in New York and London in 1919 under the title Ten Days that Shook the World.

As one would expect, the poisonous book was fulsomely extolled as a revelation and new gospel by our domestic enemies, who used it to confirm and activate the faith of the simple-minded dupes of Marx's pseudo-atheistic reformation of Christianity. Even today, Reed's filthy concoction is often described, even by people who must know better, as "the best eyewitness account of the revolution." It thus serves to obscure and discredit veracious accounts of what actually happened.[1]

1. I have looked at two standard reference works, Webster's Biographical Dictionary and the Columbia Encyclopedia. Both devote a generous amount of space to Reed and ignore Robert Wilton, an honest journalist, who faithfully described what he saw happen in Russia, and whose report of the sadistic murder of the Russian royal family by a pack of Jews has now been fully verified from the Soviet archives that have been opened by Yeltsin.

The nest of Sheenies in Hollywood naturally produced, in the 1930s, a cinema version of Reed's book, entitled "Reds," in which, if I am not mistaken, Reed's rather beautiful mistress, Louise Bryant, appeared as herself, while the part of the late John Reed was taken by an actor named Warren Beatty. Louise was, of course, the heroine of the film, which was, equally of course, blatant Communist propaganda colored and flavored to suit the degree of fatuity that had been thus far induced in the American public.

Even writers who admit that Reed's book was a fraud on the public continue to credit him with a noble soul and "high ideals," and to attribute his lies to misinformation that he accepted because he was blinded by his high-minded passion for "social justice" and similar nonsense. He was, we are assured, mistaken, but righteously so, given his lofty inspiration of love for "the poor" and the downtrodden masses.

Now Boris Yeltsin, the clever actor who is currently playing the stellar rôle in the comedy that convinces gullible Europeans and Americans that "Communism is dead," instead of being more deadly than ever behind its new mask, shrewdly helps create the desired illusion by opening the archives of the Kremlin to expose the deeds of the Soviet régime that has supposedly been supplanted by lovely new freedom and light. He accordingly instructed the Russian historian, Rudolf Pikhoya, to go through the secret archives and turn up data that will impress the credulous West.

The file on John Reed and Louise Bryant discloses that in 1917 Lenin's Bolsheviks paid Reed the equivalent of $1,500,000 in current American currency to write Ten Days that Shook the World. Reed's vaunted idealism did indeed come high.[2]

Reed was Lenin's apologist and hired liar. He returned to the United States to promote his book and plant Communist cells, enlisting the usual assortment of idealistic nitwits and blood-thirsty misfits driven by organic hatreds. Protected by powerful influences within Woodrow Wilson's government, he escaped prosecution as an enemy agent and returned to his employer in the Kremlin. He died,

2. For the information about Yeltsin's disclosure of Reed's venality I am indebted to the July-August issue of Hilaire du Berrier's H du B Reports (P.O. Box 786, St. George, Utah; 84771. $75.00 per annum).

reportedly of typhus, in 1920 and was given a spectacular funeral and burial in the wall of the Kremlin as a great "hero of the revolution."[3]

So we at last see that Reed was a worthy precursor of Walter Duranty, another "distinguished foreign correspondent" of the New York Times, who was, in the terms used by his latest biographer, "Stalin's apologist" and whose systematic and rhetorically embellished lies are credited with having facilitated Franklin Roosevelt's treason in imposing on the United States diplomatic recognition of, and lovey-dovey relations with, the Soviet that was ruled by his collaborator and fellow conspirator, Stalin. Duranty's achievements as a liar won him a Pulitzer Prize for excellence as a journalist and the reward of being able to indulge his psychopathic urges securely in Russia, but he was also well-paid by Roosevelt's dear "Uncle Joe."[4] Perhaps Yeltsin will soon let us know just how much the scoundrel received.

THE ATHEIST

The scabrous stooges who are destroying Canada for the Jews succeeded, on their second attempt, in having James Keegstra convicted of "hate," that is, of having mentioned certain historical facts to his students in a high school. When he made the blunder of telling the truth, he was a teacher in the high school of Eckville, Alberta, and the mayor of the little town. The Sheenies squawked, and the pusillanimous White inhabitants of Eckville obeyed their masters by removing Mr. Keegstra from both positions and forcing him to earn his living as a mechanic in a garage.

3. M. du Berrier's article includes his reminiscences of Louise Bryant, whom he "inherited" in Paris in the "early 1930s," after her marriage to and divorce from William Bullitt, who became Roosevelt's ambassador to Russia and later to France and helped his master arrange the catastrophic war that began in 1939. She had become an alcoholic, and M. du Berrier tells us how "she tossed down double gins on the terrace of Le Select," while he drank hot chocolate to avoid immobilizing himself. When sufficiently inspired by gin, she often confided to him that Reed had intended to break with Lenin, who accordingly disposed of him by having him infected with typhus and then giving the heroic liar a state funeral. When sober the next morning, Louise denied what she had said when enspirited. In spiritu frumenti veritas? It is not impossible that Reed became discontented, and it is, of course, normal procedure in Judaeo-Communist circles to discard worn-out tools.

4. See Liberty Bell, February 1991, pp. 10-11, where I cite S. J. Taylor, Stalin's Apologist (Oxford University Press, 1990).

At his second trial, Mr. Keegstra, impoverished, had to act as his own attorney and was doubtless inept, lacking knowledge of legal technicalities and, above all, of the techniques of persuasion and cross-examination. The jury that convicted him cannot have been entirely composed of invertebrates, for they argued among themselves for eighteen hours before returning a verdict of "guilty." His conviction naturally was followed by obscene rejoicing by his and our enemies. One of them had the effrontery to say that "all Canadians" rejoice that they have been muzzled and forbidden to displease the aliens who have captured and occupied their government.

One feels compassion for another martyr who sought to defend our fatuous and self-doomed race, but I am sure that Mr. Keegstra, who professes a belief in Christianity, will be astonished when he realizes, on reconsideration, that he was convicted of atheism.

Intelligent Jews, needless to say, do not believe the absurd myths told in the Jew-Book, but they nevertheless maintain their racial identity and solidarity by an unshakeable belief in their race's enormous superiority to goyim, whom they despise for the very qualities that we honor, and in their race's manifest destiny to preside over the whole earth and impose their godly whims on enslaved subjects. That confidence they summarize in the neat maxim, "God is the Jewish People."

The late Jack Bernstein, a Jew[1] who went starry-eyed to Israel and returned embittered, asserted in his first booklet[2] that the present ruling class in Israel is composed of atheists, meaning, no doubt, that they did not even pretend to believe their race's mythology. In his second and more valuable booklet, My Farewell to Israel, the Thorn in the Middle East,[3] he quotes significant passages from the Babylonian

3. Detroit Lakes, Minnesota; Pro-American Press, 1985. I do not know where copies may be obtained. Letters to the Press are unanswered. Part or all of the stock of Bernstein's first booklet fell into the hands of a Christian dervish, who distributed copies to persons who contributed funds to his business. If the second booklet likewise came into his possession, he probably destroyed something so damaging to the Self-Chosen People, whose patronage he must retain. Part of the second booklet is a narrative of Bernstein's experiences in the "police state" of Israel, Talmud and from the Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion (of which he does not doubt the authenticity, having seen its program carried out in the normal operations of the Zionists), and he also sees that they are not inconsistent with atheism as he uses the term. Indeed, it is no exaggeration to say that the atheistic Jews are determined to become gods to the goyim.

"God is the Jewish People" appears at first sight to be a paradoxical statement. But is it not logically implied by the otherwise amazing statement in the Talmud[4] that when God has a problem, he consults the learned rabbis and follows their advice?

That the Yids identify their race with God is apparent from the work of a singularly candid and honest Jew, Maurice Samuel, who tried to explain, as courteously as he could, the impassable, unbridgeable gulf between his race and our own in his You Gentiles,[5] a book that you simply must read, if you hope to understand the Jewish problem.

Mr. Samuel tells us frankly (p. 74) "In the Jew, nation and people and faculties and culture and God are all one. ... The feeling in the Jew, even in the free-thinking Jew like myself, is that to be one with his people is to be thereby admitted to the power of enjoying the infinite." [My italics.] He later discusses the religious emotions of atheist Jews, which must come from the religion that identifies their race as a living god in this world, a divine reality, unlike fabulous supernatural beings of whose existence there is no proof.

from which he succeeded in escaping in December 1976. He earned our gratitude by taking our side in the clandestine war against our race. He died, of a suddenly developed cancer, in the Veterans' Hospital, Martinsburg, West Virginia, on 4 May 1987. Shortly before his death, he asked Liberty Bell (the only periodical that would dare to print what he had to say) to send a reporter to whom he could recount his observations of Zionist subversion and sabotage of American interests in the Philippines, from which he had recently returned, but unfortunately it was impossible to fulfill his request before he died.

4. I noticed this passage of impudent arrogance, astonishing even in Jews, when glancing through that horrendous collection, but I seem to have failed to make a note of precisely where it occurred.

"God is the Jewish People." And that god has ordained, for purposes of his own, that the livestock on his plantation are to venerate him and believe whatever he tells them, no matter how absurd. The animals must have a Faith that paralyses such powers of ratiocination as they may possess.

Keegstra, you see, was convicted of doubting God's Word.

WANT TO BUY A BIBLE?

If you have paid any attention to English drama, you have read the Duchess of Malfi, by Shakespeare's greatest contemporary. You may even have seen one of the rare productions of that deeply moving tragedy. And you remember the horrible scene in which a group of madmen, placed in an apartment next to the one in which the Duchess is confined, so that their uproar will prevent sleep at night and obtund her ears by day, are sent into her presence and rave, each yelling out the revelation he wants to communicate to the world. One of them, you remember, proclaims, "We are only to be saved by the Helvetian translation." (The episode ends when the Duchess mistakes for one of the madmen the assassin whom her brothers have sent to strangle her.)

You recognized the allusion to what is called the Geneva Bible, and recognized that allusion as another gibe at the Puritans, such as a madman's earlier disclosure of the scatological composition of the syrup that a clever apothecary sells to the Puritans to soothe their throats when they become hoarse with perpetual ranting and exhortation.

Although the Calvinistic translation of the Bible was extremely popular in its day—a bibliographer found in two English collections a hundred and forty editions (reprintings) of it published between 1560 and 1644, and there were probably scores of printings that escaped the collectors—you would probably have to go to a large library to see a copy of it today, although everyone knows one passage in it, the passage in Genesis in which we are told that when Adam and Eve discovered they were naked, "they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves breeches," thus anticipating today's feminine styles.

That is apt to give the impression that the "Breeches Bible" is just a curiosity, like the very rare and expensive copies of Bibles in which Yahweh commands "Thou shalt commit adultery" (thus anticipating the creed of so many evangelicals today) or predicts, with unwonted accuracy, "the unrighteous shall inherit the kingdom of God," or states a sad truism, "The fool has said in his heart there is a god."[1] But that is to ignore the importance of the Genevan Bible in the long and gloomy history of Christian fantasies about their superstition.

I was astonished the other day to discover that the Geneva Bible is back in print in a photographically enlarged reproduction of an edition of 1599, which contains the text of the translation and the accompanying mass of marginal notes that interpret the text in strictly Calvinist terms. The republication, said to weigh $6^1/_2$ pounds, may be obtained for $120.00 from the National Christians (P.O. Box 1839, Ocala, Florida; 32678), who describe it as "certainly the cornerstone of our forefathers[']] faith and of our heritage." So, if you are interested in the sad history of Western Christianity, here is your chance to own a very significant edition of the Bible, which, you may be sure, your Christian friends have never seen.

The advertisement for this new edition, however, is simply breath-taking. It begins

> In 1557, a then unknown clergyman, John Calvin, undertook to translate the complete Bible into English. Calvin's Bible, which came to be known as the Geneva Bible, was printed from 1560 to 1644 in over 200 different printings.

This is so typical a consequence of religious fervor that I must comment on it

(1) In 1557 Calvin was the most famous heresiarch in Europe. He was the virtual dictator of Geneva, which he had made a theocracy, ruled by God, who, however, was busy elsewhere and had named Calvin as his Vice-Regent. From this fortress of holiness he launched verbal lightning-bolts against the Anabaptists, the Lutherans, the Roman Catholics, and all other servants of Satan, and he had attained even greater and extraordinary celebrity in 1553 by covertly exposing the pseudonym under which Michael Servetus had concealed his

1. There are many more curiosities of this kind. You may sympathize with Seventeenth-Century printers and proof-readers, but it was in the 1920s, as I recall, that a highly reputed publisher issued a large edition of the Bible with supplemental material, including a list of the degrees of kinship within which marriage was forbidden by the Church of England. This included a surely unnecessary prohibition: "a man may not marry his grandmother's wife."

authorship of Christianismi restitutio, insuring his conviction by supplying as a specimen of his handwriting a letter that Servetus had written under the impression that in Calvin he was addressing a friendly fellow Protestant, and when Servetus escaped from prison and passed through Geneva on his way to a refuge in Germany, having him arrested and burned at the stake.[2] In 1557, Calvin may have been the most famous man in all of Europe.

(2) Calvin never translated the Bible or any considerable part of it into any language.[3]

(3) Calvin never wrote anything in English, a language of which he was totally ignorant. He was born Jean Cauun (the spelling of the name in legal documents)[4] and French, his native tongue, was the only language he used in addition to Latin. Having received a good education, he decided that the family name should be Chauvin, which he then Latinized, calling himself Iohannes Calvinus, since he was something of a Humanist (his first publication was a commentary on Seneca's De clementia) and wrote by preference in Latin, the language in which he published, under the cover of a pseudonym, his Institutiones Christianae (1536), which outline the theological fantasies from which he never subsequently deviated.

(4) The guess about 200 printings may be substantially correct—the only plausible statement in the quotation.

The advertisement goes on to assure us that

> The Geneva Bible was the Bible of choice for William Shakespeare and John Milton. The 1599 edition was the Bible the Pilgrims were holding when they stepped on Plymouth Rock. ... This Bible [is] the foundation stone upon which our Christian American Republic was laid.

Welladay! Christians are incorrigible, so we must note that Shakespeare (whether he was the actor or the Earl of Oxford), like Webster, whose opinion I indicated above, and everyone connected with the theatre, detested the Puritans and all their works, since attending theatrical performances was high on those fanatics' list of deadly sins for which Yahweh ordained drastic punishment. I do not recall having read anything in which Milton expresses an opinion about translations of the Bible, but he was a Puritan. The Pilgrims probably did have a copy of the Geneva Bible, which was extremely popular in England, where it was proscribed by law and possession of a copy was sometimes treated as a felony. Many of the founders of the United States (e.g., George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin—assuming that he was not really an atheist) were Deists; many more were, at least nominally, Anglicans, who would have spurned the Puritans' seditious version of their holy book; and even many of the influential descendants of the Puritans in New England (e.g., John Adams) had abandoned Calvinism. The American Republic, which lasted until 1861, was based on political abstention from every variety of religion.

The Geneva Bible is an English version made by William Whittington[5] and two of his friends, Puritans who, perhaps resisting a temptation to become glorious martyrs at an early age, hied themselves

2. Calvin's admirers make much of the fact that he was so tender-hearted that he suggested (but did not command) that Servetus be decapitated instead of roasted alive. Servetus was a man of some scientific attainments, having evidently been the first to discover the circulation of blood in the human body and a number of other facts, but he unfortunately shared the current infatuation with religion, took the Christians' story-book seriously, and tried to imagine ways to explain away its innumerable internal contradictions.

3. It is true that a dishonest printer once published under Calvin's name a reprinting of a Huguenot translation into French by a certain Pierre Olivétan.

4. Some contend that the name was originally Cohen. There is no proof of this, which may be only a surmise based on the fact that Calvin devised a thoroughly Judaized form of Christianity.

5. Not to be confused with Richard Whittington, who is the subject of an astonishing folk-tale, which is an instructive example of the mythopoeic power of the popular mind. Everyone knows the story of 'Dick' Whittington, a poor lad who was a scullion and whose only possession was a cat, and who was leaving London in despair when he heard the Bow bells and fancied they were urging him to return; by dint of most extraordinary good luck he became rich and eventually the Lord Mayor of London. The facts are that Richard Whittington was the son of a prosperous landowner, Sir William Whittington, and, being a younger son, elected a career in commerce, which he began with sufficient capital to participate in a loan to the city made by leading merchants. Perceiving that contemporary conditions would make wholesale trade in textile goods highly profitable, he became a mercer and accumulated such a fortune that he could personally lend money to Kings Richard II, Henry IV, and Henry V, and entertain the latter at sensationally lavish parties. One of the wealthiest men in England, he was frequently elected Lord Mayor. During his lifetime and, since he died to Geneva, perceiving that the climate in England was not healthful for them during the reign of Queen Mary. Their translation of the "Old Testament" was based on the English version approved by King Henry VIII (often called the 'Great Bible' or 'Cranmer's Bible'), revised with the aid of three Latin translations, especially that by Sebastian Münster (1534), and Calvinistic ideas; the "New Testament" was Tyndale's version, revised with the aid of Beza's Latin translation (1542).[6] It is unlikely that there was any real consultation of Hebrew and Greek texts. Calvin doubtless approved the Geneva Bible, although he could not have read it. Its strident Calvinism depends largely on the marginal annotations, many of which were translated from Calvin's writings.

There are innumerable English translations of the Bible, but in all of them the stories are essentially the same, differing only in diction and in details that concern only theologians who use them to whet their own axes. The Bible is not like another famous story-book, usually called the Arabian Nights, of which the four commonly used English translations differ enormously in content.

If your appetite for Bibles is not satisfied with possession of the very important Geneva Bible, you may also obtain from the National Christians the translation, purportedly made directly from Hebrew, Aramaic, and Greek, by Ferrar Fenton (1903), for $30.00. You may also make a contribution toward the publication of the whole of the Aryan Translation, on which Dr. Oren Fenton Potito has been without issue, after his death much of his wealth was devoted to public benefactions (building a library, founding a college, etc.). No one knows how the folk-tale was generated, more than a century after his death in 1423.

6. This translation has the great merit of being in decent Latin that can be read without discomfort. I obtained my copy, dated 1949, from the British Bible Society, which, when I last heard, was keeping that edition in print. Beza was a learned man, but nevertheless so godly that he believed that all vile heretics (i.e., everyone who was not a Calvinist) should be burned at the stake to prevent them from leading others to eternal damnation; when he succeeded Calvin in Geneva, however, he relaxed some of the rigors of theocratic despotism. He presented one of the most important Biblical manuscripts, the famous Codex Bezae, to Cambridge University, giving a disingenuous and perhaps mendacious account of how it had come into his possession.

working for thirty years. His Aryan Translations of the gospels attributed to Matthew, Luke, and John are already in print and may be had for $12.00 each. I have not seen them, but Dr. Potito's views on race, National Socialist Germany, the Jews' impudent Holohoax, the repulsive mongrel Eisenhower, and similar matters, as shown by his published comments, are eminently sound and deserve our support.

COMING HOME

The Manchester Guardian may have been a liberal publication when it was founded in 1821. When I first began to glance occasionally at copies of it, a hundred and thirty years later, it had already become an evangel for "Liberal intellectuals," telling them what to think—or to recite without troubling their consciousness with thought. I am, by the way, becoming very tired of putting quotation marks about a phrase that designates a horde of chatterboxes who are neither liberal[1] nor intellectual. "Liberal intellectuals," as Joseph Sobran once dared to say publicly, to the displeasure of his editor-in-chief,[2] are only slightly disguised Communists, i.e., votaries of the Marxian religion, although some may be too ignorant to know it.

As one would expect, recent issues of the Guardian's weekly supplement, which is widely distributed in this country, are filled with passionate yelps that the "rich nations" (that means you, sucker)

1. In political terms, a liberal necessarily desires a society fit for liberi, free men, and, heeding George Washington's warning that "government, like fire, is a useful servant, but a fearful master," he will strive to reduce governmental control of individuals to a very minimum—the very antithesis of the slavery desired by the self-styled "Liberals," who perpetually agitate for more Soviet-style legislation and more degradation of their own race, which they take pride in denigrating and betraying. And they have already imposed on us Marx's dictatorship of the Sheenies and their thugs who control a mindless proletariat. The last American liberal was Albert Jay Nock, whose Our Enemy, the State (New York, Morrow, 1935) should be read by everyone who is at all interested in politics in the true sense of that word—the sense in which it was used by a constitutional lawyer, who was fond of remarking, "Never try to discuss politics with a politician: he couldn't understand it, and wouldn't give a damn, if he could."

must reduce their own standard of living so that they can give trillions of dollars to the "poor nations" (and that means billions of niggers, wogs, and other biological détritus) to help them "save the planet" (by breeding faster). (That is the hogwash purveyed by the Gore who is now, incredible as it seems, a candidate for the office of Vice President.)[3] There is naturally no mention of the only pollution from which the planet needs to be saved, the horrible overpopulation by billions of vocal anthropoids that are multiplying like guinea pigs, thanks to the fatuity and subconscious death-wish of our own ill-starred race.

Occasionally, however, the Guardian Weekly prints something worth reading. In the issue for 21 June 1992 there is an item by Ralph Whitlock, which, I hope, may have reminded the paper's habitual readers that there is much that neither they nor we can understand about our fellow creatures, who have as much right to this planet as we do, although our race, long bemused by a pernicious superstition, thought that they were made for our swollen-headed species to use and abuse. It is worth quoting.

Mr. Whitlock says that last May he and a neighbor were commenting on the late return of swallows and house martins when

> Over the meadows before his house, dipping and diving toward us as they hawked insects on the wing, were four or five martins. Suddenly they were with us, and, losing their interest in flies, they made straight for the sites of their last year's nests. Without hesitation and with no exploratory reconnoitering, they flew directly to the vestiges of the nests that had survived the winter's gales, and clung to them twittering. It was as if they were saying, "Well, here we are Home again! and so glad to be here!"
>
> And I fell to marvelling at the unerring instinct that had brought them all those 7,000 miles from their winter quarters in South Africa, 14,000 miles if you reckon the autumn journey. When the time came to begin the journey the birds must have had a clear picture of their destination, and a detailed programming of their route. ... And there was no mistaking the impulse which guided them, for, the next day, they were busy laying the foundation of a new nest under the house eaves, using what remained of their nest of the previous year.

In the martins and many other species of birds, as I remarked when commenting on Dr. Rhine's imposition on the credulity of the public,[4] we have a genuine instance of "extra-sensory perception." Their astonishing journeys are certainly not explicable in terms of the five senses that we possess. The most plausible theory is that they somehow perceive the lines of force in the earth's magnetic field and, perhaps, the angle of the sun's rays. But whatever the explanation, we have here a phenomenon of what can be called a "spiritual force" and is much more worthy of our attention than absurd religions about supernatural beings, whether old and outworn superstitions or newly invented by the hucksters of marvels for the gullible.

The same inexplicable power of perception is present in various species of mammals. If you ride a horse over winding trails in the foothills, which he has never visited before, the instant his head is turned homeward he will know it, although you may not, if you have not consulted a map. There are apparently unquestionable reports that if a baboon is carried, in a vehicle from which he cannot look out, a hundred miles along the two legs of a right-angle triangle, he will, when released, start homeward across the hypotenuse.

We lack that power of extra-sensory perception, although some have claimed that vestiges of it are to be found in the most primitive species of talking anthropoids, Capoids and Australoids. However that may be, as the late Robert Ardrey has insisted in several of his books,[5] all of the higher mammals, at least, including us, possess an instinctive sense that connects them with a specific place, a home. And all of them, if not degenerate, will fight to the death to preserve that home.

We all have that instinct, although "Liberal intellectuals" and other nitwits try to deny it. I have met a highly intelligent woman, who holds a quite responsible position in a large city, but maintains, at considerable expense, a house in the town in which she was born, a thousand miles away; she refuses to rent it, and has it maintained by a hired caretaker, although she can visit it for a few days only once or twice a year. "Without that home," she said, "I would feel lost, a mere bit of flotsam adrift in the human sea."

4. I noticed this passage of impudent arrogance, astonishing even in Jews, when glancing through that horrendous collection, but I seem to have failed to make a note of precisely where it occurred.

5. New York, Harcourt-Brace, 1924; reprint available from Liberty Bell Publications, $6.50 + postage.

The perspicacious lady is right. We are truly human only when we own some plot of ground with a house that is our home, from which we may wander, but to which we can always return. That is why the World Destroyers are imposing real-estate taxes, usually for socially pernicious ends, such as "Welfare" and the monstrously overgrown boob-hatcheries, that reduce "ownership" of a home to renting it from the tax-collector; and use the Communist devices of income and inheritance taxes to make it admittedly impossible for most of the younger generation of Americans ever to have, even provisionally, a home of their own. That is why they have almost succeeded in liquidating families and making marriage a purposeless farce. (Although holy men rant about marriage as a magical "sacrament," the social function of marriage is to ensure the inheritance of property by the owner's legitimate children. One cannot speak of another possible result of marriage, the lifelong devotion of a man and a woman to each other, without exciting shrieks from the harridans of female "liberation," who are currently concerned with the danger that their "liberated" sluts might live with one man long enough to become accustomed to him.)

Much effort has been devoted to reducing Americans to "flotsam adrift on a human sea," individuals as rootless as rats in a sewer. In this, they have had the coöperation of the large corporations, which have become another device for destroying private property. In 1945, all the businesses in a typical American town, with the possible exception of a branch of the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company and perhaps one of United Cigars, were owned by local "capitalists." Today the town has only "outlets" of huge corporations, managed by hirelings who are shifted about the country from state to state like tumbleweed on a desert, precisely for the purpose of preventing them from staying long enough in any one place to acquire property, form family connections, and put down roots.

Our enemies have created a generation of isolated individuals, as unconnected with others as billiard balls and half-mad with the terrible loneliness of a man in a crowd. In this work of devastation they are abetted by mattoids and rancorous misfits, such as H. G. Wells,[6] who realize that there is only one way to produce a "warless world" and that is to abolish humanity and replace it with zombies deprived of their racial instincts. The dehumanized animals will be herded by God's People, of course.

The territorial imperative is inherent in our racial inheritance—and no doubt, with variations, in other races, which need not concern us. The blind forces of biological evolution have so formed our species that we are fully human only when we are attached to property, a home, and, if possible, a family that has a known past and could have a future. The great majority of Americans became so befuddled that they, having at first accepted Marx's income tax in the spirit of the girl who was not worried by becoming "only a little bit pregnant," have been brought by their unappeaseable enemies, step by step, to a plight in which almost the whole of their lives is a continuous revolt against nature.

The laws of nature are absolute and from them there is no appeal. They may be violated for a time by individuals, nations, and races, but never with impunity. The ultimate and inescapable penalty for all is death.

SILESIAN INFERNO

I have several times expressed regret that Silesian Inferno, which was published in English by the German Informations- und Dokumentationszentum, was out-of-print and copies had become rare. The book has now been reprinted by a new publisher, the Landpost Press in Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, which is producing a series of reprints of the very highest quality. Cloth-bound copies may be obtained from Liberty Bell Publications, $22.50 + $3.00.

The German original, Schlesisches Inferno, is a documented compilation of survivors' reports of the ferocity of the Red Army when it occupied the Silesian part of Eastern Germany after the withdrawal of German troops in 1945. The collected reports from parts of Silesia are supplemented with geographical tables and reproductions of pamphlets and other printed material issued at the time. The compilation was made by Karl Friedrich Grau, and Professor Ernst Deuerlein added a concise introductory survey of the historical background. The book was translated into English by Ernst Schlosser, who had a command of English that is rare in persons for whom it is not the mother tongue.

The accuracy of the survivors' factual reports is guaranteed by two documents, of which I have copies in my possession, which were written by survivors of the Red Army's occupation of Central Germany and Austria for the information of their descendants. The ghastly events narrated in this book will harrow your mind, but you must read it for two vital reasons.

First, you will be at first tempted to call the soldiers and commissars of the Red Army beasts. That is a fundamental error, encouraged by Christian mythology, from which you must redeem yourself, if you are to think rationally about the world in which you live. All quadrupeds are morally superior to hominids. Beasts kill only to obtain food and to defend themselves; they never intentionally torture or debase their prey. Only species that are called human take a sadistic delight in killing for the joy of killing, in torturing for the joy of witnessing agony, and in defiling for the joy of degrading their betters. You must learn that with most of those species such conduct is instinctive and natural, and that although we belong to a race that instinctively reprehends such conduct, there are Aryans who are no better than the races that are naturally savage.

You must not think of the horrors described in this book as extraordinary and exceptional, as events that occurred during a war in a distant part of the world and in peculiar circumstances. You must understand that the harrowing accounts describe only what is normal and to be expected wherever and whenever hominids of various species have an opportunity to obey their innate and unalterable instincts. Only when you have learned that lesson will you succeed in understanding our plight today in the world and especially in the country that once was ours.

Second, in 1941 we were a nation and had a country of our own—at least one of which we could quickly have recovered possession. We have now permitted ourselves to be dispossessed, but we Aryans have inherited the guilt of our fathers.[1] Remember that the savage creatures that perpetrated the atrocities of which you read in this book were armed with American weapons and financed by the American people, who had permitted their great War Criminal to herd them into the Jews' war against our race and our civilization and make them revert to barbarism. That they were deceived does not palliate their guilt, because they, infected with dire superstitions and moral cowardice, were willing to be deceived.

When Euripides remarked that the gods always visit the sins of the fathers on the children, he did no more than state a fundamental truth, historical, social, and biological.[2] From that law of nature there is no escape. That may not be just, but the real world knows nothing of justice, a human invention; it obeys only causality, the inexorable nexus of cause and effect that the Greeks called heimarmene. You may not err as did your fathers in 1941, and it may be said of you, as Horace said of his friend, delicta maiorum immeritus lues: you, though guiltless, will expiate the crimes of your ancestors. Your own innocence may be to you some spiritual consolation when you pay the inevitable penalty for their folly, and it may even give you the will to fight for a probably lost cause. But your innocence will in no way deflect the blind and ruthless mechanism of the universe.

The Silesian Inferno will enable you to foresee what Americans have, so far as we can now tell, doomed themselves to suffer, probably before the end of this millennium. At present, it looks as though the White population will first be driven from Texas and all the territory that we took from Mexico when we were still a viable and virile nation in 1848, and which the hordes of mestizos who are daily swarming into the United States are determined to take for themselves.[3] The Americans of the Southwest will suffer as the Germans in Silesia and

1. Sociologically a man's life is divided into five stages of approximately fifteen years, videlicet: 0-15, childhood; 15-30, adolescence; 30-45, youth; 45-60, maturity, the generation that is always in control at any given time and must bear the gravamen of responsibility for what is done; and 60-?, senility, during which only the few men who have fortified themselves in positions of power can control events, but even they must largely depend on the acquiescence of the preceding generation, the men of 45-60.

2. For some reason, this statement of the obvious was thought profound when put in the mouth of the savage god of a race who had created him in their image; see the Jew-Book, Exodus, 20.5.

3. Of course, the invaders, whom our rulers welcome into the country that once was ours, have no conceivable claim to a territory that was first conquered by Spaniards, not the descendant of their slaves, mongrels who have only a small percentage of White blood. There is some uncertainty about California, where the ever increasing population of the Sudetenland suffered, but some survivors will probably be able to reach a temporary refuge in the Middle West and Northwest, the portions of the country in which our race is likely to survive a little longer. And the survivors will probable dictate memoirs like the ones you will read in this book. But by that time such horrors will have become commonplace.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

I have often referred to a fundamental study of theological technique, Joseph Wheless's Forgery in Christianity (1930), and regretted that it was out-of-print. I learn that it has now been reprinted by Health Research (P.O. Box 70, Mokelumne Hill, California; 95245) in their standard format of sheets approximately 6"×9", slotted and bound by a plastic spiral. The price is $25.00 + postage. I have also cited once or twice F. Cornwallis Conybeare's attempt to explain the contradictions within and between tales in the "New Testament," Myth, Magic, and Morals (1910). This has been reprinted in the same format, $17.50 + postage. The postage for one or two books is $2.50.

GOD IS WHERE YOU FIND IT

The Skeptical Inquirer for Spring 1992 contains an article—or, more exactly, preliminary notes for a very interesting article—by Martin Gardner, whose robust scepticism I have frequently mentioned in these pages. He adumbrates a puzzle that he does not solve, the career of the noted British geneticist, John Burdon Sanderson Haldane (1892-1964).

It would have been well to note that the geneticist was the son of John Scott Haldane, once well-known for his studies of respiration and ventilation, and the nephew of the statesman, Richard Burden Haldane, who was raised to the peerage as a Viscount, and who is now remembered as the British envoy who (probably on instructions from Mongolians and Mongoloids may act in unison and take that state or the greater part of it for themselves. If our masters involve us in a war, Florida may be taken and its Aryan population massacred even before the mongrels from Mexico "reclaim" the Southwest. All this, needless to say, is merely conjectural, for we know neither what our masters now intend to do nor what they will decide to do when the time comes.

his superiors in the Liberal Party) refused to consider a treaty of reciprocal neutrality with Germany and thus did his part in involving Britain in the disastrous war that began in 1914.[1] He ended as a colleague of Ramsey MacDonald, whom several British writers have identified as a crypto-Communist.

The geneticist, therefore, was the great-great-grandson[2] of John Alexander Haldane, a Scottish evangelist, whose elder brother, Robert, after a distinguished career in the Navy, had his head turned by the rodomontade of the blood-thirsty world-improvers of the French Revolution, and then, not unnaturally, contracted analogous hallucinations about Jesus ben Yahweh. He squandered a fortune, large for the time, in efforts to bring Anglicans and Roman Catholics to True Christianity, and to afflict his god with a multi-racial Heaven, including hordes of niggers from Africa. There is a curious analogy with the career of the geneticist, and there may have been a vein of mental and emotional instability in the family.

The man in whom we are interested here is reputed to have been one of the most brilliant British geneticists at a time when such studies were not subject to political pressure and coercion. I accept a valuation which I cannot criticize, since I have not read more of Haldane's work than a few popular essays, from which, however, it is clear he, of course, accepted the Darwinian doctrine of biological evolution, and that, like many scientists of his generation, he was also a well-educated man.

He became an "instructor"[3] in biochemistry at Cambridge. In 1925 his relations with a female named Charlotte Franken, whom he

1. Viscount Haldane was an author of some repute, having written a biography of Adam Smith and a work of popular philosophy entitled The Pathway to Reality, which I wish I had read. He was one of the translators into English of Schopenhauer's Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung. He was also one of the earliest promoters of Einstein's Relativity.

2. There are too many Roberts in the genealogy, and I am not sure whether the geneticist's father was the great-grandson or the great-grandnephew of James Alexander.

3. The word is Martin Gardner's and I do not know what academic position in the English university it represents. That might make a great difference in estimating the gravity of the scandal that moved the University (and presumably his college) to expel him.

eventually married, involved him in a nasty scandal. It must have been a particularly nasty one, since Cambridge expelled him from the faculty, although it reinstated him, at least for a year or two, when influential Englishmen intervened on his behalf.

It is at this point that we crave enlightenment. As everyone even superficially acquainted with the history of our race well knows, the great influence of women on events long antedates their attainment of the privilege of participating in the political corruption that is dear to lovers of "democracy." What were Charlotte's character and antecedents? And, crucial here, was she a Communist when Haldane became involved with her? Which converted the other to the new religion? Or was it their faith that attracted them to each other?

Haldane, like many a wiser man, was evidently the victim of an illusory infatuation. At the beginning of the Spanish Civil War in 1936, the Communists, obviously operating as a conspiracy with a quasi-military power over its dupes, ordered the woman to Paris as a secret agent of some kind, and she obeyed. It would be interesting to know whether Haldane was distressed or relieved by his wife's defection.

Mrs. Haldane had an affair with an American nitwit who, possibly infected by some stupid or cunning professor of the pseudo-sciences in his college, enlisted in the Abraham Lincoln Brigade and went to Spain to fight for the enemies of civilization, who naturally used the American fools as eminently dispensable shock troops to be thrown into the path of the Spanish Army to delay its advance. Charlotte seems to have been fond of the dunce, for when he was killed, she resented her masters' use of him as cannon-fodder and eventually emancipated herself from servitude to feral barbarians.

According to Mr. Gardner, the woman's autobiography shows that she had "for years" wished to divorce Haldane, but was forbidden by her masters to do so, because the two suckers were so useful for their "propaganda value." If her masters did not change their minds, she must have defected from the conspiracy before she obtained a divorce in 1945.

Mr. Gardner's first problem will be that of determining whether Haldane, when he was an undergraduate at Cambridge, was a member of the nest of perverts and traitors who were hatched out in the 1920s by Communists in the faculties of the various colleges and the University, where they were tolerated, in keeping with Anglo-Saxon respect for divergent opinions and eccentricity, on the mistaken supposition that a Marxist faith was no worse than belief in transubstantiation or reincarnation.

The undergraduates who became traitors to Western Civilization while at Cambridge and later traitors to their country, when they infiltrated British government and neutralized even Military Intelligence, were all, so far as we know, members of our race and the children of respected and necessarily prosperous families of the middle-class, the gentry, and even the peerage.[4] They are an appalling phenomenon, but if we are to understand their conspiratorial network, we must first determine whether they began as Marxists whose hatred of our culture also found expression in homosexual perversion, or as perverts whose sense of guilt or degeneracy made them hate their betters.

Was Haldane a member of that Marxist clique while he was an undergraduate or did he get the new religion only some time after his ill-starred marriage? (He did not openly join the Communist Party until 1942, when it was safe to do so, since England was in the midst of her suicidal Holy War and allied with her implacable enemies; most of the Communist conspirators from Cambridge sedulously avoided all contact with the Party to keep their real allegiance secret and thus to facilitate their covert treason). That is a fundamental question, because we must ascertain whether he became converted to the dire religion before or after he attained competence in genetics, a strictly scientific subject. And it would be interesting to know when Haldane first read the gospel of Mordecai, alias Karl Marx, and got religion—or did he ever read Das Kapital?

As was doubtless obvious to men who can think analytically long before 1916, when Correa Moylan Walsh, in the great work I have so often cited, identified Marx's revelations as a "salvation religion,"

4. If Mr. Gardner undertakes to complete his article, he will find a good survey of the Marxist cult at Cambridge in John Costello's Mask of Treachery (London, Collins, 1988); there is an American edition (New York, Morrow, 1988?), which I have not seen.

similar to primitive Christianity, faith in Communist dogma is induced by glandular emotions, not by reason.[5]

Thoughtless individuals, of course, are taken in by Marx's profession of "atheism" and "materialism," and do not make the effort of considering the pretense critically. Thus they never perceive that his gospel is a denial of biological evolution, presupposing the existence of some god or other supernatural force that ordained the exaltation of the proletariat, the dregs of civilized society. Like the famous Jesus, Marx came to "make folly of the wisdom of this world" by promising that "the first shall be last, and the last shall be first."

It is a nice irony that while Marx's profession of atheism deceived many atheists, who were willing to tolerate and even support any movement that would diminish the power of superstition over society, it did not deceive many sincere Christians, especially those with what John Maynard Kaynes called "the strain of Puritanism" in their blood. A typical example is the student in Peterhouse at Cambridge who, according to his tutor, Herbert Butterfield, was "a Biblical fundamentalist of great seriousness. He was early converted to Marxism by regular attendance at meetings of the Student Christian Movement." That emotional boy represents thousands of Christians who perceived that the gospel of Marx differed from the gospel of Mark in only a few details, which they were willing to disregard. It is not a coincidence that the places where Marxists found it easiest to recruit dupes were Christian seminaries, and it is probable that most of the recruits in the 1920s and 1930s were young men who had believed, or at least wanted to believe, the tall tales in the Christians' story-book. More recently, of course, since the Marxian Reformation has been accepted by virtually all of the Christian Churches,[6] adherence to its absurd dogmas is just a requisite for advancement in a shabby business.

To understand Haldane as a significant phenomenon we need to know the biographical essentials. Was he imbued with superstition in his youth? And was the superstition specifically one about supernatural beings or the derivative one about human perfectibility? The facts could be ascertained, I am sure, from a published biography, but I am not trying to write here the article that I hope Mr. Gardner will write.

5. Cf. Philp Wylie, The Innocent Ambassadors (New York, Reinhart, 1967): "Communism is the most successful religion yet evolved."

6. There are some exceptions, which I listed in Liberty Bell, December 1990 and August 1991.

It is true that residual superstitions do not preclude scientific accomplishments. Everyone will think of Joseph Priestly, and there are fairly numerous other examples.[7] More to our purpose here is Joseph Needham, a biochemist at Cambridge, who described himself as a "Christian Marxist," having decided that "the Gospel teaching demanded Communist solutions to social problems." He was also one of the most active and successful recruiters of Communist agents at Cambridge in the 1930s.[8]

Whatever the determining factors, Haldane evidently became devout in his new faith. It seems that he, like all persons whose glands dictate to their brains, he was a True Believer, incapable of critical thought. Had Lenin declared that the earth did not rotate on its axis, Haldane would have believed it. He did believe something equally fantastic. He believed the biological nonsense devised by a Russian charlatan named Trofim Lysenko because Stalin endorsed it. Stalin, of course, had endorsed it because he, like the rulers of the United States today, saw that a doctrine of human equality[9] was a useful and

7. Examples must be weighted critically. It is a deplorable but much advertised fact that Sir Isaac Newton wasted much of his time on theological puzzles, but it must be remembered that in his time it was universally believed that the Bible was an historical record of events that had actually happened. In the Victorian Age, some English scientists were taken in by "spiritualists." Some of them, like Sir William Crookes (on whom see Is There Intelligent Life on Earth?, pp. 8-9), were doubtless more interested in the physical, than in the metaphysical, charms of beauteous spook-raisers, but others had witnessed with their own eyes phenomena which they regarded as valid data, since they were not astute enough to detect the magicians' tricks, and not hard-headed enough to know that inexplicable phenomena in violation of the laws of nature must be spurious.

8. According to Sir Herbert Butterfield as reported by Andrew Boyle, The Climate of Treason, 2d edition (London, Hodder & Stoughton, 1980), p. 77.

9. This kind of hokum, so dear to the racketeers who are working the education swindle today, has ancient origins. It was known to Plato, who toyed with it (you remember the slave boy whom Socrates taught to recognize a geometrical theorem). A noteworthy example in the Eighteenth Century is Helvétius, who claimed, and may have believed, effective weapon against civilization, but Haldane, like many Communist dupes, was too naïf to understand that.

Lysenko, on the basis of some faked experiments with wheat, denied the well-known laws of heredity and claimed that characteristics acquired (e.g., by 'education') could be transmitted to offspring. (Of course, similar results can be produced over a long period of time by selective breeding, as is obvious from the course of biological evolution, but that is not what Lysenko had in mind.)

That a geneticist could believe such irrational twaddle is evidence of a mind seriously impaired by some malfunction of the psyche.

That Haldane suffered some mental alienation is evident from a statement that Mr. Gardner tells us was seriously meant. Haldane had suffered from chronic constipation for fifteen years "until I read Lenin and other writers, who showed me what was wrong with our society and how to cure it. Since then I have needed no magnesia." It is a pity that he did not succumb to an older faith and get cured at Lourdes—or in the ruins of the ancient temple of Sequana, who was in the business of miraculous medicine centuries before she had to meet the competition of the fabulous Virgin. That form of superstition would have been less dangerous to him and to society.

The statement that Mr. Gardner quoted is a prime datum. I need not remark again that in speaking of Communists we must recognize an absolute dichotomy between (1) simple-minded folk who believe in their religion and, of course, never attain any position of importance in the conspiratorial apparatus, and (2) the men who do attain positions of some power and are, of course, too intelligent to believe the bunkum they use to recruit and manipulate their living tools. Haldane's absurd claims and other antics are evidence that he belonged to the first class.

that "l'éducation nous faisait ce que nous sommes," and asserted that by education he could endow the simplest peasant with genius.

10. Such dichotomies are not limited to the Marxian cult. Anatole France once thought of writing a treatise on the great theologians who were atheists.

We need not wonder that Haldane, while he labored mightily for his True Faith, writing voluminously for both British and American editions of the Daily Worker, expressed himself with so little discretion that, as Mr. Gardner says. "he became one of England's comic eccentrics."[11] Nor yet is it more than natural that when his faith in Messiah Stalin (not in the Gospel) was at last a little impaired, he hied himself (with a new wife) to India, became an Indian citizen, and went native, on the model of the sleazy agitator named Gandhi, whom the British had stupidly failed to shoot in the 1920s.

Haldane's work as a geneticist was, I assume (since I know no better), commensurate with the scientific reputation he attained.[12] He is, therefore, a prime example of a disastrously common phenomenon, a combination of scientific talent with an extraordinary credulity and capacity for auto-hypnosis. A genuinely psychological study of the causes of his mental deformation or deterioration would therefore be of great interest and of considerable value in diagnosing the most virulent epidemic disease of our time. So I recommend the subject to Martin Gardner as one on which he has made a good beginning. ❑

11. The British laughed at him, but they should have hanged him. As Martin Gardner seems not to know, Haldane was a Soviet spy, one of a group of spies who were supervised by a female whose cryptonym in Soviet intelligence was "Sonja." She was a Jewess named Ruth Kuczynski, who acquired British citizenship by marrying an Englishman and, of course, discarding the fool after he had served her purpose. She had a brother, Jürgen Kuczynski, who crawled into England as a "refugee" and naturally went to work to undermine and destroy the nation of nitwits who had admitted him to their country. The British, you see, had become so muddle-headed that they, first, permitted Klaus Fuchs to work on development of an atomic bomb, and, second, when his treachery became unmistakable, failed to hang him and his accomplices.

12. This is subject to the caveat that our enemies always tout the abilities of such Communists to bestow on them an illusory prestige and fictitious distinction, which imposes on persons who are too ignorant or busy to examine the propaganda critically. A preliminary investigation of Haldane's real achievements is therefore in order.

The following is the text of a letter I sent on behalf of Ernst Zündel, 6 September 1992:

Mr. Howard Hampton
Attorney General of Ontario
720 Bay Street Toronto
Ontario, M5G 2K1

Dear Attorney General:

The book of Ecclesiastes 3:8 states, in part: "A time to love, and a time to hate;". God did not say "... and a crime to hate." It remained for mortal man to attempt that.

As an American, directly descended from signers of the Declaration of Independence, I have taken a keen interest in the decade old Ernst Zündel affair. The most disturbing feature of this apparently endless legal matter, is the careless abandonment of logic and precision in regard to the use of language. Since the "false news" law has been struck down by the Supreme Court, it would serve no purpose to demonstrate the illogical structure of that archaic law. All high school sophomores should have learned that any conjunction is false if either of its conjuncts is false. I was perplexed when I failed to notice that your courts failed to address this issue irrespective of the Zündel proceedings. In my opinion, the case against Mr. Zündel should have been dismissed at the start because, as subsequent events have demonstrated, the charges were leveled out of pure malice by an obviously influential and rancorous minority who have taken it upon themselves to decide what Canadians should say, or not say. The "false news" law was ludicrous and its demise should serve as a cause for celebration for all Canadians. Even if that law were other than ethereal, and logical analysis applied, and not the emotional nonsense that ensued, Mr. Zündel could hardly have been found guilty of anything.

I am at a disadvantage because I do not have access to all of the facts. In this regard, I beg your indulgence. However, there appears to be running rampant, an irrational connection between a diminished view of Jewish suffering, during the Hitler era, and the charge of being an "anti-Semite". Even so, is anti-Semitism a crime in Canada as it was in the Soviet Union? Suppose I gave a small talk and elaborated my belief that 90,000 or so Japanese were not killed in an atomic assault upon Hiroshima. Would any group of Japanese be justified in calling me anti-Nipponese? If I deny the fact that the Allies deliberately terror bombed the defenseless cultural city of Dresden, in February 1945, and that 100,000 Germans were burned alive, would Germans be justified in calling me an anti-Deutcher? If I vocalized my belief that no cows were ever killed in the Chicago stock yards, would it axiomatically follow that I am anti-bovine? If this sounds inane, and it is, then pray tell, why is anti-Semitism equated with doubting any part of the concentration camp episodes? The answer to this would probably issue from a psychoanalyst's couch.

Mr. Zündel is called a hatemonger—a peddler of hate. If we are to deal with haters, then what of those who hate hate? Could it be possible to hate those who hate hate and not be a kettle calling the pot black? Or simply be illogical? What, pray tell, is hate, in the first place?

Hate is an emotion and using printed symbols to portray emotions is an extremely difficult, if not impossible, art of which only rare humans have been able to demonstrate and then, only in a precarious manner. I send a post message: "I hate you." Was I laughing when I wrote it? Or was I seething with anger? Who can say? One thing is certain, however, hate lies in the mind of the reader. Are we then, as civilized and logical beings, going to forcefully cater to the opinions of all who unhappily interpret the printed words of others? To do so would be to invite the types of tyranny which have bloodied far too many pages of our history.

I have always disparagingly marveled at the thought processes of those who equate negative criticism with a desire to inflict harm. Moreover, it appears to me that only the mentally unstable would equate a singular, or minority, opinion, that was in contradiction, with an intent to annihilate or cause harm. Suppose, for example, that I calmly and deliberately espoused my belief that the tales of black slavery were simply concoctions to discredit wealthy Southerner plantation owners. What bizarre and nebulous threads would connect this belief to feelings of hate for black people? The answer, again of course, lies within the domain of psychoanalysis; fit for academic study and not courtroom exercises.

It is my understanding that Mr. Zündel's home was bombed and that he is a continual target of obscene threats both to his life and limb. I have observed, on television, physical assaults against his person and that of his attorney and friends—on courthouse steps, no less! One might well ask who Mr. Zündel has threatened or assaulted. We could continue by asking whether it is Mr. Zündel or his antagonists who possess the greater hate and represent a greater danger to public consonance and calm. Mr. Zündel has demonstrated no behavior, which in no conceivable fashion, could be interpreted as a menace to anyone. He incites nothing and advocates nothing remotely akin to violence or disorder. Mr. Zündel merely has opinions that are not shared by everyone. It is high time that legal energies be spent harnessing those who perpetually demonstrate violent and threatening behavior instead of those who merely have opinions that are not pleasing to all.

Not all violence and mayhem is rooted in hate and hate does not automatically lead to violence. While serving in the U.S. Army, 17th Airborne Division, 514th Infantry Battalion, I observed fellow soldiers engaged in killing merely because they found great pleasure in it. Fellow schoolmates, serving with the 8th Air Force killed massive numbers of civilians during bombing raids, not out of hate or pleasure, but simply as a duty, which implies a considerable portion of indifference. Criminals often kill their victims, not out of hate or any other emotion, but for petty and practical considerations—the advantage of having no witnesses. If I kill one of my neighbors purely because I love killing my neighbors, would this be a "love crime"? Should we have "love crime" laws? If I kill my neighbor because I was curious about the efficacy of my home-made weapon, would I be guilty of a "curiosity crime"? If these queries appear ludicrous, then it would be to our advantage to examine "hate crime" notions.

As an American with established roots and a fervent believer in the principles held by the Founding Fathers, I feel it should be the Crown's duty to protect Mr. Zündel from those who seek to harm or silence him. Let Mr. Zündel babble what he wishes. If you don't agree with him and he proposes no threats and advocates no violence, then where is the peril? Should we persecute and prosecute every person topped out on LSD for vocalizing his hallucinations? Is it the duty of any government to ensure that I, or anyone else, be free of disturbing mental thoughts? Should we attempt to protect all vocal paranoids from their inner conflicts? Should we also outlaw dreams if they cause mental anguish? What rubbish!

The fact that some people feel that the public should be protected from "news" they disapprove of, or other types of comment, is a rather sad one. It is also insulting to become aware that I am held to be an idiot incapable of determining truth or falsehood by myself. If Mr. Zündel believes that the Antarctic harbors flying saucers, does this logically lead us to believe that he hates penguins, UFOs, ice or frosty weather? Should donkeys be silenced because their braying causes someone "mental anguish"? When thought control leaves the realm of persuasion and enters the arena of enforceable law, we will all find ourselves in a hell on earth.

It appears that, as in Canada, certain elements in the United States are also attempting to set sail in the very dangerous and malignant waters of speech suppression. As a lover of freedom, I protest against your government's treatment of Mr. Zündel for the benefit of a handful of vexatious and arrogant Canadians who have voiced their contempt for the recent and related Supreme Court decision simply because it wasn't to their fancy. That alone will tell you more about Mr. Zündel's vindictive adversaries than it does about Mr. Zündel. Stop, once and for all, this blatant legal harassment of Mr. Zündel and let's pray that Canada will never be known as Canuckistan.

GAD A MIGHTY. I was minding everyone's business while handing out copies of David McCalden's comic book. An irate born-again type nearly collapsed on the sidewalk after reading the first 3 pages of Trial By Jewry. With a threatening finger gesture, he shouted down at me from his towering indignation, "Didn't you know that the Nazis exterminated almost a million Norwegians during the invasion and occupation? And that they cut down all of the forests just to supply the wood that was needed for the pyres?" I didn't know that.

He continued with a tale about how Jesus sent a UFO to spread "true news" to the earthlings (actually ZOGlings). The "all Hell will break loose" countdown began in August of this year. During September, Bush will position troops in certain areas of ZOGland. In October, the signs of calamity will be all about. Re-elected Bush will be assassinated in November, Blacks will start their killing rampages, Quayle will take-over and, in December, Federal troops will be slaughtering all of the Whites that the Blacks missed in November. I didn't know that.

MONKEY SEE, MONKEY DO. I was recently reminded that the Soviets launched men into space orbits before the Americans. This indicated that the German scientists who they kidnapped were somewhat superior to those who we kidnapped. If the greedy usu-rers and envious capitalists hadn't obliterated the new Germany, it was highly probable that German men would have planted their feet on the moon before 1953. Oh well. If you can't compete, then stomp them to death.

The Soviets used dogs as the first space pioneers. Once it was determined that dogs were safe, it was only reasonable that human cargo come next. Not much difference, though, because it has been said that Soviet citizens lead dog's lives anyway.

The Americans used monkeys in the first launches possibly because Americans love to monkey around. Anyway, nostalgic urges are hard to overcome, so it was a natural choice to continue to use apes as biological cargo. The latest shuttle carried a black ape and a yellow monkey as baggage.

The next time you see a Cheeta driving a Lincoln pimp-mobile with 1948 style whitewalls, remember that Henry Ford was not related to Sammy Davis Jr. or Jesse Rainbo Jackson.

POPULIST PURITY. The latest flak concerns a fellow named Weaver who enjoyed a brief span of notoriety during the recent standoff/shootout at the ZOG corral in Idaho. Populist prez candidate Bo Gritz (rhymes with "toe mites" and not with "blow shits") emerged, from the cabin under siege, with the remaining objects of our government's latest "Mountain Storm" effort. The papers and jew-tube were full of (whatever passes as news these days) the details, both real and imagined, and I will not cover it here. I am more concerned with Rambo Bo.

Bo is obviously a very brave man who has short-comings that nullify the effects of his soldier-like prowess. My opinion, and it is based entirely upon a story which might not be true, leads me to believe that this man should stay in the business of shooting gooks, of which he is accomplished. If what I understand of the Weaver episode is true, we don't need "leaders" of this sort.

Bo Gritz (I'll call him BOG) apparently was working hand-in-glove with ZOG. He, and an accomplice, gained access to the Weaver cabin under false pretenses and, contrary to his word, disarmed and rendered helpless the occupants thereof. The surrender walk immediately followed. BOG justified his betrayal of a racial comrade on the grounds that "lives were saved". What macho bullshit! In moments of conflict, we deceive our enemies and this clearly indicates that BOG felt that Mr. Weaver was an enemy. That action alone should tell us all we want to know about the Populist Party's insect candidate. Mr. Weaver is a strange duck in his own right who apparently had a faulty ruler when he sawed off that shot-gun. Mr. Weaver believes he is a "true jew" and I'll let the articulate Mr. Thomson carry things from here with the article WHO ARE THE TRUE JEWS [found on page 36 of this issue].

C.C.C.P. I was invited to speak at a meeting of the Concerned Citizens of Corfu and Pembroke. I was not sure what they were concerned about but I supposed that it was about the welfare of the beleaguered Aryan. Apparently someone didn't read my lips. I was not their kind of goy. I'll bet my last glazed donut that I'll not be invited back.

The group was a collection of ex-Birchers and the tax protesting bunch. They all had one thing in common—a desire to cling to their possessions no matter what—like the greedy, trapped monkey with his hand tightly clenched about the goody within the gourd.

The room was filled with "experts", all with recommendations concerning off-shore funds, living trusts, non-living trusts, dying trusts, trusts of trusts, etc., blah, blah. I pointed out that all of those nice paper trips were based upon an assumption that conditions will favor the honoring of those paper rules. What good did all of those deeds, titles and papers do the Hunt brothers when they decided to corner the silver market? Or the clowns that trusted paperwork when Castro took over? Or the Russians when the Jews seized power after the revolution? Or the white nincompoops who voted for black rule in Rhodesia? One must never forget that man-made rules—lawyer belching—only work if everyone agrees to abide by those rules. Ultimately, all rules are interpreted by the guy holding the gun. That's why the rules were changed when the Hunts thought they had it made. One sad fellow had $100,000 in property seized by the ZOG. He shouted: "They can't do that. It's all here in the Constitution!" The man then offered stacks of court citations, books and copies of this and that to "prove" his case. I made the simple observation that the ZOG perhaps shouldn't have seized his assets, and that they not only could, but they did! "Imagine", I told them, "that a mugger stuffs the barrel of a .38 up your nose and demands your wallet. How effective would it be if you cited the law that 'forbid' him from robbing you?" The government in this land adheres to the rules only when it suits their purpose. When it doesn't, they stuff a gun barrel up your nose.

As kids, we played a game with marbles. We had a set of rules. All wanted to use his skills to capture as many marbles from the "pot" as possible. Super shooters always went home with the most marbles. We played by the rules and tried to improve our skills. One day, however, an oaf of a kid showed up and wanted to play. The rules were explained and a game began. The oaf, Norman, had the marble shooting skill of a constipated moose. One could see pain expressed in his face as he lost marble after marble. Then, unexpectedly, he knocked two of us to the ground, scooped up all of the marbles and departed saying "F— your rules. I want the marbles!" You see, rules are interpreted by the guy with the larger muscles. Today, that's the ZOG and if you forget this, you'll end up babbling to yourself and wondering where the yellow went.

Included, in this group, were a set of hypocrites who are trying to legally shed their United States citizenship but retain State citizenship. It all has to do with the shucking of certain taxes and whatever. They wanted to slip out of the Social Security system and yet required the "system" to guarantee their "right" not to be a part of the system. Rinky, dinky, yo-yo time. One read aloud the content of a letter from some twit who now resides in Belgium. This winner (the goy living in Belgium) actually and legally discarded his U.S. citizenship but became irate when he was denied re-entry into the U.S. on the grounds he was now an illegal alien, and subject to a different set of rules.

I left this "eat, meet and retreat" session with a thought in my head: Those that can, don't have the means. Those with the means, won't. That, friends, is definitely not a formula for success.

The female member, of a beautiful Aryan-looking couple, smiled and said: "It's risky, but you should remember that these waters are the sharks' feeding grounds and they have a right to it."

An ugly non-Aryan male was also asked the same question. His response was: "All sharks should be exterminated. They are a danger to me when I want to go skin-diving." May he rest in jaws.

An Aryan attitude is always in harmony with nature.

DUKISODE. I've given the thumbs down gesture to Buchanan, Perot and Duke. Of the three, I have ruffled the greatest number of warts among the Duke crowd. So, I'll reveal the content of a personal letter and leave you with the question of whether a character of this sort is what you desire in a leader. I quote:

Odd that Wally would devote so much space to bashing the bedsheet-bunglers of the KKK, which is simply a person with a stutter trying to pronounce "kook". Pretty boy David Duke left a legacy of mischief up in Canada when he visited as a "KKK representative". Of course, there is no historical nor reasonable basis for the KooKs in Canada as there is, unfortunately, in the Jew-ass of A. A certain Wolfgang Droege was infatuated with Duke and his K-K-Kook group, which Duke, according to form, later abandoned. As a journey-man printer, he made good money and helped Duke and his KKK mischief-makers in Toronto and in British Columbia (also known as British California). Wolfgang supported a young mestizo named McQuirter who wanted to out-Duke Duke. Their Toronto "klavern" also included a brain-damaged Latvian named Siksna and another very dark mestizo named MacFarlane. McQuirter came from a long line of petty criminals and, like Duke, was a "lady-killer" with good looks, a gift of gab and the ability to create an aura of mystery which swept the girls one finds loitering around Dairy Queen, right off their number 9 size feet. Like Duke, McQuirter usually zeroed in on the moronic wives of his supporters. Both are hung up on bed-sheets. They drape them over their heads when they aren't playing jump-jump on top of them. This Duke clone would sell out his own mother for another go at a bang-bang party.

The rule is simple. Pay attention to what a man does and not what he says. Character is the basis for everything. It is like my father said: If a man's word is no good, then neither is he.

✠ ✠ ✠

DEBT DOUBT. The young lady, in the TV commercial, happily exclaimed, "Not only do I have a new Chevy, but I also have credit!" This was one of those ads that "sucker in" first time car buyers. After the frosting is licked off, her remark can be translated. She was given credit. With that she secured a new Chevrolet AND a debt. She no longer has the credit. She used it. The statement should have been: "Not only do I have a new Chevy, but I also have debt." This debt exceeds the value of the automobile. If you doubt this, then immediately try selling the car for what you just paid for it. This loss is, however, of small import. The sad thing is that the young lady had chained herself voluntarily to the wage-slave system that gravely diminishes freedom.

In the 1950s, I wielded a pick and shovel for the New York Central Railroad, as did several of my friends. We were paid the same wage. Jim Canty used his money to purchase a new car on the installment plan. He never had enough money left over for gasoline. He spent most of his time seated in a parked car. I took another route. I bought a used 1940 Hudson for $150 and always had excess money for gasoline. I traveled and traveled and traveled. Jim sat and sat and sat. To each his own.

Somewhere I read that the average American family's "share" of the national debt is about $64,000. And that's not a question. Last month I was in debt a thousand dollars, give or take a fistful of dollars. I owed Sears $292; AMA $121; my butcher $87; etc. The point is that I know to whom I am indebted and where the payment should be sent. Why have none of the TV mouth-offs or the political yappers mentioned TO WHOM our wunnerful government is indebted? One explanation is that we owe it to ourselves. Bull droppings! Any debt requires the existence of two, at the least, entities. Our government isn't indebted to itself—it is indebted to the Federal Reserve—a private usury organization run by international banksters. These are the same pack of criminals who operate the "national" sounding Bank of England and other money-grubbing rackets around the globe.

If the national debt makes you lose sleep, then I have a solution. Elect an American government for a change, instead of those Zionist lackeys who have been selling you out for nearly a century. The first order of the day, then, would be to tell those paper shufflers to play drop-the-soap in the nearest shower. Tell them to take the national debt (the money we owe them) and stuff it into their lower orifice. Bug off and go get buggered. End of debt.

The banksters, of course, wouldn't want us to get away with this action. They would then mount a campaign to get the other debt-laden countries to launch a war against us, as they did when Mr. Hitler yanked Germany out of their clutches. If we remained massively powerful, in a military sense, we could then be instrumental in directing all of the other countries to exterminate (do I smell gas?) their usury racketeers. It won't happen because too many people support activities of gluttonous, gourmandistic greed.

Project Hate
90 Harbour Street
Toronto, ON M7A 2S1

Gentlemen:

It is my understanding that you intend to charge people with the "crime" of hate if they happen to express opinions that differ from those that you cherish. I am wondering if I qualify for your extravagant attention. Therefore, as a veteran of World War II, I am offering the following collection of personal opinions:

1) No man can walk upon water.
2) People cannot be turned into pillars of salt.
3) Diesel exhaust gasses are not safe to breathe.
4) Six million Jews were not exterminated by the Germans during WW II.
5) Forty percent of the American Congress consists of perverts.
6) It is physically impossible to cremate 2000 people per hour in one furnace.
7) Hillary Clinton is a dyke.
8) Saddam is not an Adolf.
9) The "ozone holes" in the welkin are not as dangerous as the holes in the heads of the experts that dreamed them up.
10) Hungarian jews, when burned, do not produce a different colored smoke than do Polish jews.
11) You cannot feed a thousand people with one loaf of bread.
12) Santa comes in a sleigh.
13) The Easter bunny has A.I.D.S.
14) Charles Manson is neither Jesus Christ nor Adolf Hitler.
15) Ernst Zündel owns a 40 foot flying saucer.
16) The Germans never intended to invade Nebraska in 1942.

Please send me a few of your opinions. If I do not happen to agree with them, and in the interest of balance, I'll be glad to charge you with a "hate crime"—whatever that is.

Tolerantly yours,
Robert Frens

Who Are The True Jews?

by
Eric Thomson

We are assailed from time to time by press reports announcing the capture of White or partially-White people who declare themselves to be "the True Jews", Israelites or Israel Identity adherents. These people have over-dosed themselves with readings and misinterpretations of the jew-book, which in itself is a relatively recent work of tribal legends which have been concocted, selected and edited over several centuries to proclaim (a) the cunning, treachery and savagery of jews, alias Hebrews, alias Israelites, alias Judeans, etc. and (b) the equally vicious and pernicious deity, Ja, alias Jaweh, alias Jehovah, etc. who has "chosen" those beings "in his image". As they say, it takes one to know one, so how can any White person recognize such a people and such a god as "his own"? That quality alone is sufficient to disqualify anyone from membership in the White or Aryan Race, for there is nothing Aryan or White in regard to the Jews and their "divine demon". Hitler was supposed to have said that the "jews are a race of the mind", while the Germans were "a race of the loins". If that is so, then the majority of those who are loosely classed as "humans" on Planet Earth are of "the jew-race", and, if one judges them by their behavior, the vast majority of those who appear outwardly to be White are also members of that parasitic and criminal bunch.

Aryan thinkers have long pointed out that gods, goddesses and religions are emanations of race. If these deities and principles have an independent existence, with or without mankind to believe in them, as religionists supposed, then they transmit signals which would appeal only to certain types of beings or, conversely, humans radiate signals which would attract unto themselves certain types of deities. On a practical, historical level, we have seen that the tri-racial Khazars of the Black Sea region chose Judaism over the two current slave cults of Christianity and Mohammedanism (a) because the two watered-down versions of Judaism were at war and the Khazars did not want to fight and (b) because Judaism is the "master cult" which rules over adherents to the other two cults. Why choose to be a slave when one could choose to be a master?

Why did the Puritans, the Calvinists, the Mormons, the Boers, the Amish, the Mennonites, Jehovah's Witnesses, Seventh Day Adventists and myriads of other groups, cults and sects choose to identify themselves as "the true jews" over centuries of recorded history? I confine my inquiry to those who have reverted to the so-called Old Testament, rather than to "Christians" and "Moslems" who claim to have made "legitimate" additions to the jew-cult, much as the jew "Lenin" did to Jewish "Marxism". Breathes there an Aryan with soul so dead that he could embrace these foul idols and perverted principles as "his own"? I do not think so. My own personal experience with so-called Christianity would be proof of this. It was as if I had been made to attend a Nigger rap concert every Sunday: the "Christian" church services beat upon my eardrums, but did not stir my soul in the slightest, unless I count the revulsion I felt at my first "holy communion" in which I was invited to "eat the body and drink the blood" of "my" deity. I had thought that I was growing up in a civilized society, but I was shocked to learn that millions of my fellow citizens were engaging in symbolic cannibal rites every Sunday. To this day, that feeling of disgust remains as my foremost souvenir of the Christian slave-cult. Because I knew myself to be less-than-angelic as a boy, I wondered why an "all-knowing, all-powerful, all-good" deity would choose to create everyone "in sin" before they were born, when he/she/it could just as easily have created us to be "sinless"? After reading the late David McCalden's excellent booklet, Exiles from History, which deals with the Jew-psychosis, I now see in "Christianity" all the earmarks of a typical jew guilt-racket.

To answer my question, why do so many dwellers in Western Civilization choose to be Jews? I can postulate (1) that adherents to any branch of Judaism cannot be White, regardless of their physical appearance, much like blond Jews of Khazar ancestry (alias Azhkenazim) who are, according to The Genetics of the Jews from 5% to 10% Negro. Or (2) that if Israel Identity adherents et al. are genetically White, then they are the products of dysgenics or racial down-breeding, as described by Prof. Pendell in Sex vs. Civilization.

The inability to think logically on the part of "true-jew" adherents is very much an indicator of (1) or (2), for logic is as Aryan a trait as one can identify. To become a "true Jew", one must disregard all absurdities and contradictions one finds in the jew-book at the very outset. The Bible cannot be read with clear-eyed sobriety for very long until the reader throws it down in a fit of laughter or disgust. So the prerequisite for reading the jew-book to completion is that one go into the sort of trance favored by visitors to the Auschwitz Museum of Frauds & Hoaxes, so that one believes that a potato cellar or mop closet could be a "death chamber" in which "millions were gassed". To read the Bible's tales of 'celestial swindlers,' 'holy whores,' 'messianic marauders,' divine gangsters,' etc. without triggering a mental immune system response is virtually impossible for an Arayn, but not so difficult for race-mixed non-Whites or Whites who are, for whatever reason, mentally defective.

Once a person has proved his or her racial and/or mental deficiencies by identifying himself or herself as a "true jew", further absurdities may be expected at any moment. After all, the Red Queen could harbor several absurdities before breakfast, so self-styled "true jews" can be infested with multitudes of absurdities since they put in much more time acquiring them. One common absurdity is the "true jews'" penchant for 'declaring war on the Zionist States of America' and denouncing its police, marshals, et al. as "minions of Satan". Then, after an armed confrontation, to meekly surrender themselves and their children to 'Satan's tender mercies and courts', when they had the means to "...roll over to (their rifles) and blow out (their) brains and go to (their) god like a soldier", to paraphrase Kipling. No Aryan, myself included, can understand such a failure of reason. It is not a failure of courage, for one would not hesitate to "save the last bullet for oneself" and use it, if one REALLY KNEW the nature of the Zionist enemy and REALLY BELIEVED IT. As an Aryan I can only conclude that these "true Jews" do not believe that which they proclaim OR I must conclude that they fear to meet their god far more than they fear to be in the grasp of "Satan". Such pathetic creatures should be put out of their misery as swiftly as possible, for they are burdens to themselves and to all Aryans. 'Thanks be to Z.O.G.' that they are being removed from this earthly realm or are at least being removed from circulation. It saves the White Race from doing the job ourselves, for we already have our hands full and there are too few of us as it is.

For White people who are wondering what "Israel Identity" is all about, I offer the inherent wisdom of the Aryan children's rhyme: jewish books are for the jews and jew messiahs too, so if you're not of jewish blood, what good are they to you? □

THE INQUISITION IN MEXICO

By
Allan Callahan

It had always been my assumption that the Inquisition had been a European affair, and mostly confined to Spain, but reeently I came across an account which showed that the Inquisition had operated in Mexico, also. It was written by an Englishman named Miles Phillips, who had fallen into its clutches.

Miles was a sailor making his third trip to the New World when his ship ran short of provisions in the Gulf of Mexico. Some of the men expressed a desire to be put ashore, even though it would be in a strange and maybe hostile place, rather than endure the pangs of hunger any longer. They felt they had rather take their chances with Indians or Spaniards than continue to suffer.

The man in charge, general John Hawkins, readily agreed, and had the captain make for land, where part of the men left the ship. This was on Oct. 8th, 1568.

After putting up with a night of drenching rain, they walked along the seacoast the next day. Attacked by Indians, who first thought they were Spaniards, they could hardly defend themselves at all, since they had very few weapons, and no armour. Eight of them were killed before the Indians realized their error, and broke off the attack. They did, however, strip stark naked all the white men wearing colored garments, except for black, and took the clothing with them, while leaving all those wearing black clothes alone. As they departed, they pointed in a certain direction and spoke the word "Christiano" several times, which the whites took to mean, "Go that way, and you shall find the Christians."

In due time they did find Christians (Spaniards) but almost wished they hadn't, because after being robbed of their money, they were made prisoners and informed that they were to be taken to the "city of gexico" (Mexico City), which was a considerable distance away. As they marched through all the towns and villages along the way they were gaped at by the townspeople, who looked upon them as great curiosities. At some of their stops they were well treated and well fed; at other places they were ill treated and ill fed.

When they reached Mexico City they numbered about 100 men. From then until 1574 they were either imprisoned, or made to do various kinds of labor outside the walls, sometimes even acting as servants for wealthy families. This was probably about the easiest work they did. This long stay in and around Mexico City was about like their first few months in captivity, as far as treatment was concerned. Sometimes it was good, and sometimes bad, depending on who was in charge of them at a given time, and what kind of labor they were doing.

Although the Inquisition had been operating in Spain long before Miles Phillips and his shipmates were made prisoners in Mexico, it had not yet reached that country, and many Spaniards there hoped it never would, but their hopes were dashed in 1574, with the arrival on the scene of four top men in which the main authority of the Inquisition was to be vested. They were a Chief Inquisitor and three other officials. They lost no time in conducting trials, and the first ones subjected to them were the English prisoners, whose numbers had shrunk to 68 by that time.

Placed in dark dungeons, where they could see only by candlelight, and never more than one or two to a cell (so there could be but little communication between them), they were at first brought before the Inquisitors one at a time. Here they were severely examined about their religious beliefs, and ordered to say the Ave Maria, the Pater noster, and the Creed in Latin. Since most of them did well to say them in English, this was the first black mark against them.

They then were asked various questions about the Sacrament, the Host of bread, and other matters, which the prisoners tried to answer as best they could, but never satisfying the Inquisitors. The Englishmen were accused of lying, and told that they would be set free if they told the truth. Not a man fell for this, though, figuring it was only a ruse to entrap them.

The Inquisitors returned the men to their dungeons and did nothing for some time, then subjected everybod to the rack. This naturally produced some confessions, which was what the judges were waiting for. The tortures were stopped, and a large scaffold erected in the downtown Market Place.

The night before the judgments were to be pronounced, church officers went to the dungeons and issued "fools' coats," called San Benitos, to all, which were made of yellow cotton, with red crosses upon them front and back. No sleep was allowed the prisoners that night.

The next morning every man was given a cup of wine and a slice of bread fried in honey for breakfast. Then a rope was placed around his neck, a large green candle placed in his hand unlighted, and he was marched off to the Market Place, with a guard on either side.

The assembled churchmen and other officials numbered about 300, many of them being Friars, and of course there was a great multitude of onlookers. A solemn oyez! was made, and the crowd fell silent.

The judgments then began. The first man was sentenced to have 300 stripes (lashes) on horseback, and then committed to the galleys for ten years. One by one the others were called; the stripes ranged from 300 down to 100, and the years to be served as a galley slave from ten years down to six. The ones who got off the lightest received no stripes at all, but were sentenced to work in a monastery, wearing a San Benito all the while. These sentences ranged from five years down to three. Phillips himself got five years.

Most of the prisoners had to suffer the lash. Naked from the waist up, each was mounted on a horse and led around to various places located on the principal streets of the city. Leading the way were a couple of "criers," who yelled as they went, "Behold these English dogs! Lutherans! enemies to god!" At each appointed place every unfortunate victim received a certain number of stripes with a long whip. Several of the Inquisitors went along too, and exhorted those applying the lash to "Strike! Lay on these English heretics! Lutherans! God's enemies!"

At the end, each man's back was a mass of blood and lumps. They were then taken from their horses, and carried again to prison, where they stayed until deemed fit to be sent to Spain to serve out their sentences in the galleys.

Of the 68 men, three were sentenced to be burned at the stake, and they were reduced to ashes the same day. Death at the stake was one of the most horrible of deaths, and you might wonder why Christian judges would sentence anyone to it. Well, they probably figured that, since God was going to burn the poor sinner in hell forever anyway, he wouldn't mind if they burned him for an hour or two ahead of time.

DEATH IN THE HOMELAND

by Harold A. Covington

Some months ago, agents of the Federal government of the United States decided they were in the mood to send a few "White supremacists" from the Aryan Nations group to prison on some bogus rap or other. After all, it isn't as if this country has any kind of serious problem with actual crime, is it? Certainly not a serious enough crime problem to justify taking any valuable Federal time, funds and manpower away from the vital task of suppressing political dissent and destroying the few remaining tattered shreds of the United States Constitution.

The first step in this kind of fun and games is to secure a Federal informant within the group targeted for victimization, and the best kind of informant is a petty criminal facing a bit of time on some charge or other. Lacking a petty criminal, our Federal hotshots simply create one by framing some poor sucker on a fabricated drug or gun rap or whatever. Then the 'droids in the three-piece suits let the patsy know that his only chance to avoid the great stripey hole is to "co-operate with law enforcement," i.e., spy for them, tell them what they want to hear, and finally get up on a witness stand in a court of law and swear away the lives of innocent people.

In this case, the garbage in Brooks Brothers threads thought they had found a patsy, a 44-year-old former Green Beret from Naples, Idaho named Randy Weaver. They tricked him into selling a shotgun to one of their lackeys, the barrel of which allegedly measured about one quarter inch shorter than the legal limit, and then hauled him in on a Federal firearms violation and tried to play Let's Make a Deal. Much to their surprise, Randy Weaver told them in no uncertain terms where they could take their squalid little proposition, and what they could do with it once they got there.

That got the Feds teed off. They weren't used to being defied by the White peasantry, and they didn't like it. Who the hell did Randy Weaver think he was, refusing to tell lies on a witness stand when he was ordered to do so, pretending he had rights, acting like he was somebody? Did he not understand that college-educated yuppies who wear three piece suits and carry little badges and photo-IDs from Washington are his natural superiors? Where the hell did Randy Weaver get off, not doing as he was told by men who draw government salaries five times what Weaver earned through the mere labor of his hands? This uppity racist had to be taught a lesson.

So the agents of the United States government taught Randy Weaver a lesson. They murdered his wife and his son. They shot down 13-year-old Sam Weaver and his mother Vicky, right before Randy's eyes. Now they are going to bury Randy Weaver alive as a punishment for having defied them, along with a young family friend named Kevin Harris who dared to strike back at the cowardly, blood-drinking Federal jackal who killed the boy. America the Beautiful.....

In the summer of 1991, RESISTANCE conducted a poll of its readers to determine their views on the best future direction for the Aryan racial separatist movement. Southern Nationalism and a new National Socialist Party had a number of articulate and enthusiastic advocates. The eventual favored option turned out to be a racial nationalist "think tank" to provide support, consultancy services, and ideological guidance to the growing White political and social upheaval taking place in North America.

But the second most favored scenario was the creation, through immigration and settlement, of an Aryan homeland in the five northwestern states of the U.S., and by extension the three western provinces of Canada and Alaska as well. In view of the great similarity of this concept to what the Jewish people actually did between the years 1890 to 1948, when they settled and then seized the land of Palestine, some refer to this plan as"White Zionism". Others call it the Northwest Imperative.

One of the points brought out in favor of the Northwest migration by its proponents was the undeniable fact that will we, nil we, a move to the Pacific Northwest on the part of White families and working people is in fact already taking place.

The vast majority of this movement into the five settlement states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming is completely non-political. White people who would never dream of supporting a "racist group" are nonetheless getting sick unto death of all the economic and racial problems of urban liberal America, and they are voting with their feet.

Even celebrities and big wheels within the Establishment are packing their grips and heading Northwest. A reporter recently asked macho actor Bruce Willis how he coped with the violence and tension in riot-torn Los Angeles. Willis replied. "I don't. I only come down here to work; I live on a farm in the Northwest." CNN nabob Ted Turner and his consort, "Hanoi Jane" Fonda, choose to make their home, between jet-setting junkets, on a huge ranch in Montana.

Needless to say, big stars and harassed yuppies and ordinary working Joes alike wax abstruse in their complex disclaimers when they are asked on occasion by nosy reporters to name the specific reasons why they have left Southern California and the cities of the east. They use code words like "less crime", "less stress", "better schools", "a more laid back lifestyle", and so on.

Of course, the real reason they have come to the Northwest is quite simple. The Northwest is the last remaining part of North America which is still overwhelmingly White, and all these people have moved to rural Washington or Billings, Montana in order to get away from blacks. It is the suburban "White flight" of the '60s and '70s on a continental scale.

Incidentally, a smaller version of this phenomenon may be observed on the east coast, where increasing numbers of White families with any money at all have some kind of "bolt hole" set up high in the Appalachian mountains of North Carolina or West Virginia, or the Ozark hills of northern Arkansas and Missouri.

It is no coincidence that Apalachian or Ozark, Rockies or Cascades or Sierra Nevada's mountain folk are 99.9% Aryan. There is something about the high ground, the misty valleys and crags and rushing mountain streams—"It's a White thing, you wouldn't understand".

To return to the topic at hand, although the debate within the racial nationalist movement over our ultimate strategic goal is by no means settled and will no doubt be pursued with vigor in the coming years, it is time we took notice of the undeniable facts which are being created on the ground.

The Northwest Migration exists. People are doing it. Politically motivated and non-political, Identity and National Socialist, working class and retiree alike. White people are packing their grips and fleeing to the lush green lands and the (relatively speaking) clean and safe towns of the Homeland. As bad as places like Seattle and Portland and Spokane have become, they are still infinitely more desirable places to live than Chicago or Atlanta or some god-forsaken mill town in the Rust Belt of Pennsylvania, where you have to drive seventy miles a day to get to a $4.25 per hour minimum wage job.

The Northwest Homeland is coming into being, not as part of some grand political master plan or conspiracy on the part of us horrible racists as portrayed on made-for-TV movies, but because the conditions of life in the rest of America are becoming unbearable and those who can get the hell out are doing so in growing numbers. Arguments about how "we mustn't give up one inch of America to the enemy" are increasingly losing force. The White man in North America has no territory to give up. The enemy owns it all; we are slaves here. Or hadn't some of us noticed?

In addition to this increasingly significant creation of facts on the ground which will eventually pre-empt the debate whether we like it or not, there is a growing moral reason for White racial nationalists seriously to begin considering a Northwest Homeland. That is, that this new nation has already been watered with the blood of martyrs.

Bob Mathews, John Singer, Gordon Kahl. And now Vicky and Sam Weaver, not to mention the dozens of men and women who are now in prison through assorted Federal fabrications and show trials. It is true that Kahl and Singer lived and died outside the designated geographical area of the Homeland, but their principles were essentially the same and we claim them as our own.

The spilling of blood has always been a sacrament of deep occult significance, going back to the days of literal human sacrifice, while the blood of a warrior who dies fighting and the innocent who die out of the tyrant's rage and hatred for a free people has always been held in the deepest reverence by our race. Randy Weaver and young Kevin Harris now join the roster of those who have rendered up everything they possessed on earth in order to follow the credo of David Lane's Fourteen Words:

"We must secure the existence of our people and a future for White children."

When those words were spoken during David Lane's final address to the jury which entombed him alive in the belly of Zion's beast, we gained a simple statement of purpose unmatched in all the millions of words ever spoken or written in defense of our cause. When those words were sealed into the earth and stones of the Pacific Northwest by the heroism of gallant men who preferred to die on their feet rather than live on their knees; when they were inked in with the lifeblood of a murdered mother and her child—then, my brothers, we were given a nation.

Someday, when we all understand the gift which that precious immolation has given us, we will claim that nation.

The Federal regime in Washington will be unable to stop us. They will resist, and there will be many, many more dead who will follow Bob Mathews and Gordon Kahl and Vicky Weaver. Let us remain under no illusion on that point.

Yet the Washington regime will fail. The reasons for this failure are many and complex; it's a book-length subject which one day I hope to address in book length. In essence, Washington's day is done because change is the natural order of things. Nothing lasts forever, most especially not human institutions of government.

There are certain signs which are infallible historical indicators that a society is doomed, and in the late twentieth century America now reveals every one of those telltale symptoms. A prime one, for example, is the open toleration and encouragement of homosexuality, something which no civilization since the dawn of history has ever survived.

The single most obvious sign of Federal weakness, the handwriting on the wall which foretells their eventual defeat in the Northwest, is the perfectly evident moral inferiority and the patent physical cowardice of the Federal agents who surrounded Randy Weaver's cabin. The yellow streaks which decorated the spinal column of every United States law enforcement officer involved were even visible to the CBS news reporters on the scene, who felt compelled to make a few tentative on-the-air remarks about "overkill".

Gone are the days when G-men of old like Melvin Purvis and Treasury agents like Appalachian rev'nooer "Big Six" Henderson strapped on a six-gun and went man-to-man, hand-to-hand in head-on shootouts with the likes of Baby Face Nelson and Pretty Boy Floyd. Present day FBI, BATF, and U.S. Marshals are bureaucrats and careerists remarkable for one consistent, common trait: a strong aversion to danger and a hefty reluctance to place their precious aerobically-fit bodies in the line of fire. (To be fair. the Secret Service and DEA do seem to attract a higher caliber of individual, but these agencies are almost never deployed as goon squads against political dissidents like the others.)

Indeed, the propensity of Federal law enforcement personnel quite literally to hide behind local police, deputies and state troopers during confrontational situations has become so notorious that it has leaked into the media and become a source of friction between Feds and local cops every time there's a fight in the offing.

In this case, although the original "surveillance party" of U.S. Marshals outnumbered the Weaver men three to one, (after they killed the 13-year Sam Weaver who was walking the family dog), at the first hint of resistance and the first casualty they took, the Feds went scuttling off the mountain with their tails between their legs, screaming for help.

They refused to approach the cabin again until they were accompanied by 200 more of their own kind, armedto the teeth, attired in body armor, and protected by a detachment of Idaho National Guard with artillery and helicopter gunships. All this to take out a party of six mountain people, four of whom were women, and the youngest a ten month old infant.

Those of us who were around during "Operation Clean Sweep" in 1987 will recall the use of over 100 agents, helicopters and SWAT teams to arrest the then 62-year-old Robert Miles at his farm in Michigan. They didn't even dare go onto Richard Butler's property, but lured him into town with a faked phone call before surrounding him with dozens of heavily armed agents in a local diner. Butler was an elderly Identity minister in his late 60s who subsequently had to undergo a heart bypass operation at Federal expense before they could subject him, along with his fellow defendants, to the ludicrous Fort Smith "Sedition Trial".

The point of all this is not merely to point the finger and yell "'Fraidy-Cat!" at tne Federal agents, cowardly scum though they are. There is an important lesson to be learned from these examples of observed Federal behavior. Let us ask ourselves this question: based on what we have seen in the Idaho case, during "Operation Clean Sweep", and in our own experience of dealing with Federal agents, do these people have what it takes to overcome and suppress a genuine, full-fledged rebellion against the government they serve? (Hypothetically speaking?) Do they have "the right stuff"? Do they have the guts, the moral fiber, the confidence in their chain of command and the belief in their system willingly to lay down their lives in defense of it all?

Could Federal agents handle the daily pressure of fighting a guerrilla war, in the cities, the towns, the mountains and forests of the Pacific Northwest? Could they stand the strain of saying goodbye to their families and stepping out of their doors every morning not knowing whether they would return? Could they handle living among an increasingly hostile local population, like the folks who gathered at the Idaho roadblock and jeered at them?

If Portland was like Belfast and the Idaho hills were like South Armagh, how many mornings could your average FBI man or ATF bitch check their car for bombs before turning their ignition keys, before the strain became too much for them? Could they deal with walking down a street or driving down some isolated back road, not knowing whether a telescopic sight was trained on the back of their neck? Could they handle going to more and more funerals, including the occasional funeral where the casket turned out to be loaded with fifty or sixty pounds of Semtex, as has been known to happen in Ireland?

True, in Ulster the R.U.C. and the U.D.R. stand up to these hideous daily stresses and strains as well as the actual I.R.A. attacks. But they are Irishmen themselves, mostly born and raised within a twenty miles radius of where they fight and die and where their wives and children wait. They are defending their homes against Marxist murder; FBI and BATF agents are merely earning their paychecks.

Did we see any sign of Ulster-style toughness or courage in the hesitant, trembling handball-players and target-range gunslingers who milled around the lower access roads in their heavy flak jackets, obviously scared shitless that some bureaucrat watching CNN in an air-conditioned Washington office would order them up the hill to face the rifle of the man whose wife and child they had butchered?

Bear in mind that we're talking white-collar cops, mostly middle-class mall rats who have never done any actual work in their lives other than maybe a summer of construction to supplement their college loans. These swaggering hullies are used to going into conflict situations only with maximum force and under optimum conditions, against poorly trained, poorly motivated criminal elements who are semi-literate, stoned and as cowardly as the Feds themselves.

In many cases their mental makeup and emotional stability are shaky to begin with. Let's face it, normal, healthy people who feel good about themselves and have nothing to prove don't become FBI agents. Female Feds especially have in recent years developed an unenviable reputation in law enforcement circles as neurotic and unreliable flakes, dangerous to themselves and dangerous to other officers who work with them. Jodie Foster's "Special Agent Clarice Starling" character from Silence of the Lambs is purely fictitious, a feminist wish-fulfillment fantasy.

(If I may be permitted a digression. I was once told by a man who was in a position to know that female FBI agents are not lesbians, as one might at first assume. Despite J. Edgar Hoover's well-known, lifelong homosexual relationship with Clyde Tolson, the Bureau still refuses to recruit faggots or dykes because of potential security leaks, possible blackmail, and also because homos lower morale by pawing and propositioning their fellow gumshoes. However, my contact informed me that, in his experience, almost all women FBI agents were frigid and incapable of reaching an orgasm. I can't speak from first-hand knowledge, worse luck, but it would explain a lot, wouldn't it?)

Returning to the central question, could such men and women fight a bloody guerrilla campaign for years on end, against an enraged, fanatical, determined, and lionhearted enemy who would crawl through a burning minefield for the chance to rip out the windpipes of Vicky Weaver's murderers with their bare hands?

How well could they function under such conditions? How effectively could they serve their paymasters in the face of constant fear and paranoia about what awaited them around the next corner? How long before their paycheck simply wasn't worth it any longer and they sought another line of work?

And in this (of course) hypothetical situation of armed revolutionary struggle for an independent Aryan state, when this first line of ZOG's defense crumpled, who would take over and shore up the collapsing Federal rule?

The National Guard of the various states? How reliable would such a force be, especially since any revolutionary movement worth its salt would have made it a top priority to infiltrate and subvert the Guard and thus gain access to weapons, training, supplies, etc. What if the Guard turned their guns on their own officers and went over to the Aryan rebels?

The U.S. regular military? Although it is majority female and non-White now, there would still be a high percentage of White troops, more so in the Marines, many of them drawn from the South and from the shrinking White urban working class, men who enlisted to escape the unemployment of the deteriorating American economy. How eager would such men be to fight and die for a government which robbed them of their future and consigned them to a life of affirmative action quotas and second-class citizenship?

And in the crunch, could even the Army and Marines suppress a true American revolution? Do they have "the right stuff", morale and loyalty aside? Not if the abysmal showing of the ground forces during Operation Desert Slaughter is anything to go by. Cutting through the hype, it is now known that the performance of every military arm except the Air Force during the Big Iraq Attack was downright pisspoor. High-tech equipment failed to function; whole brigades and divisions got lost in sandstorms; supply broke down and intelligence was often nonexistent; women troops were too weak and slow to keep up and slowed down operations; incidents of theft, rape, drug abuse, and general indiscipline were rife; so many reservists (mostly female and non-White) refused to report for duty or deserted while still stateside that the Pentagon refuses to release the figures.

In the end, the U.S. high command chose not to "...Cry havoc! and let slip the bitches of war," may the shade of Will Shakespeare forgive me. It's one thing to drop smart bombs on Iraqi baby formula factories and crowded air raid shelters from 30.000 feet, but were these weekend Ramhos and Rambo-ettes capable of facing the Iraqi Republican Guard man to man, or man to bitch, as the case may be? Judging from the assiduous care General Schwarzkopf and General Powell took to avoid any bona fide ground combat, they didn't think so.

Of course the wily Saddam Hussein strung them right along, knowing full well that a pitched "mother of all battles" on the ground was in no one's interest and that the Americans would avoid it if they could. Our illustrious President mistook the game. He thought he was playing poker, but Saddam knew the game was ches, and in the manner of Asiatic despots from time immemorial, Saddam willingly sacrificed a hundred thousand pawns and forced George Bush to a stalemate.

I trust that there is no one reading this newsletter who is so half-witted as to suppose that such a revolutionary situation exists today, or that any of the preceding is anything but an extrapolation of one of many possible futures. The fact remains that when all is said and done, Vicky and Sam Weaver are still dead and the lives of Randy Weaver and Kevin Harris are for all practical purposes at an end. In view of the open sympathy of the local population, their trial will presumably be moved to a place where they can enjoy the benefits of a "multi-culturally diverse" jury, and even if that fails and they are acquitted, there are always Catch-22 Federal "civil rights" charges.

What will happen in the long run? Whatever you make happen, people. Whatever you're willing to make happen.

MESTIZO AMERICA:
The End of Aryan Enterprise

by
Eric Thomson

Benjamin Disraeli wrote that "those who do not understand race will never understand history" and a European whose name I forgot predicted in the 19th century that "the U.S. would conquer Mexico and be destroyed." The Aryan conquerors of Mexico in the 1840s were much wiser than we are today, for they already knew the truth of Disraeli's statement. Thus did Aryan-ruled America annex the least-populated parts of Mexico, even though many Mexicans wanted them to annex all of the country to have done with mestizo misrule. But Aryan Americans wanted no part of populous Mexico with its ungovernable, unproductive, corrupt and prolific mestizo inhabitants. Thus was the European's dire prediction confounded until this century of the "Pox Judaica."

Now that the Zionist bankster government in the District of Corruption has decreed that North America, including Canada, the U.S.A. and Mexico will join in economic/political union whether we like it or not, it behooves us to consider the cost of adopting the entire mestizo population of Mexico in addition to the hordes already within our borders. One Zogling in the Pentagon's War College let slip the fact that Mexico nearly 'self-destructed' into chaos and civil war in the 1980s due to endemic corruption and mismanagement plus the omnipresent mestizo population explosion. He said the C.I.A. "had warned Americans of this danger." Well, he and his fellow Pentagonian Zoglings may have received the C.I.A.'s warning, but few other Americans did, to my knowledge, for the likelihood of another violent outburst of the kind which wracked Mexico from 1910 to 1929 hardly seemed "newsworthy" to the U.S. jewsmedia.

History, as Santayana warned us, is repeated by those who do not learn it. We should therefore consider what brought about the so-called Mexican Revolution of 1910 and the carnage that followed. Mexico under the Aztecs had a workable, albeit bloody-minded, system of birth control. Tribal wars were the 'national sport' and prisoners were taken for blood sacrifices.

Thus were the natives occupied when the Spaniards came and committed two cardinal blunders: they stopped the human sacrifices and they miscegenated, thus providing a crazy, mixed-up population which bred like 'piraña-bunnies.'

Porfirio Diaz, one of Juarez' mestizo generals, but atypical, ruled Mexico for 34 peaceful and prosperous years until he was forced to flee the country in 1910. He died of old age in France, whose armies he had fought under Juarez. Porfirio Diaz wanted Mexico to progress. He saw, wherever he looked, that Mexico's Indian heritage and population were preventing Mexico from becoming a wealthy and powerful country. Even having lost some two thirds of its territory to the United States, Mexico was large, rich in natural resources and well-situated for world trade. Its climate and soil were well-suited to a broad spectrum of agricultural production.

Except for the Indian factor, Diaz saw no reason why Mexico should remain a poor and backward country. Thus did he encourage the immigration of Whites into Mexico, along with U.S. and European investment capital. Under Diaz, most of Mexico's railroads and factories were built. Public works projects, such as water systems, roads, bridges, telegraph and telephone systems, public transportation services and other attributes of Aryan civilization were eagerly introduced throughout the country. In 1910, Mexico was becoming a modern, Aryanized state. In that year, Diaz was at the height of his achievements. Unlike most Latin American dictators, Diaz took care to keep the armed forces small, cheap and always under his watchful control. The Mexican Treasury had a large surplus, in gold, and it would appear that Diaz himself was not only patriotic, but honest, in comparison to all of his successors up to the present. Naturally, he was surprised when the inevitable explosion came.

What caused Mexico to self-destruct in 1910? The most important factor was the incredible mestizo population explosion. Diaz had undone himself to some extent by introducing water purification plants and hygienic water distribution systems in so many Mexican towns and cities. This otherwise thoughtful and patriotic measure drastically reduced the normal infant death rate and contributed to the population explosion. In those days, the United States did not serve as a safety-valve for Mexico's fast-breeding mestizo population. So the pressure built up quickly. Not only is Mexico still plagued by the problem of mestizo locusts, we in the U.S.A. are also suffering from the swarms which have invaded our living space.

Another fatal flaw in Diaz' Mexico was the adoption of the 'supply-side economics' or the 'trickle-down theory'. The idea was and is that if the rich can become very, very rich, some of the wealth will 'trickle down' into the hands of the less-wealthy. As the money pours into the hands of the rich, it is fondly hoped that some of their pockets will overflow or that a moneybag will burst and sprinkle some means of exchange throughout the economy. Ah, fond and baseless hope! Up until 1910, some Mexicans and foreigners grew quite rich, just as the Milkens and Boeskys prospered in the 1980s here in the U.S. But 'supply-side economics' did not bring about general prosperity, either in the United States of today or in the Mexico of 1910. Why did Diaz adopt such a disastrous policy? Well, he was, after all, only a mestizo soldier, so he respected economists who claimed to be 'up-to-date' and 'progressive.' Even Aryans have been fooled by glib conmen who are adept at economic jargon and are capable of performing marvelous feats of statistical 'jew-jitsu.' Non-Aryan Franklin D. Roosevelt called his 'advisors' "brain-trusters" and non-Aryan Diaz called his "los cientificos" ("the scientists"), regardless of the bad advice they gave their respective employers.

History teaches those of us who will learn that the two fatal flaws in 1910 Mexico were primarily the non-White population explosion and secondarily, a defective economic policy adopted by the government. These two fatal flaws will preclude any 'rescue operation' for present-day Mexico or the United States as assuredly as the iceberg and the enormous gash in the hull sank the Titanic. Unless we in the U.S. solve the racial/population problem and adopt sound economic policies, this country will go under, too. Our Zionist Occupation Government in the District of Corruption is merely running the (money) pumps faster and playing the music louder to distract us from the dark waves which lap around our ankles.

Enlightened self-interest is an alien concept to the mestizo mind. What is produced by the mestizos' shortsighted greed and rapacious reproductive instincts is a country from which rich and poor alike must flee; the poor to seek employment and the rich to protect and to enjoy their largely ill-gotten gains. The mestizos' nightmare is that they will find only other Mexicos in their flight. This nightmare becomes reality wherever the mestizos gather in sufficient numbers to overwhelm Aryan society, as has happened in parts of California, Texas and other states. The mestizo recreates Mexican corruption and poverty unavoidably, for they are inherent parts of his genetic makeup. He brings Mexico with him, no matter how much he wants to escape it and he imposes Mexican conditions upon us, much as swamps impose mosquitos on those who dwell nearby.

U.S. citizens fleeing San Diego, California, report that they cannot find jobs which pay even the minimum wage, because swarms of mestizos cross the nearby Mexican border every day to work in the San Diego area and U.S. employers can pay them less than the officially required minimum wage. This means survival in terms of Mexican living standards, but such low wages allow no one to partake of U.S. living standards.

Saye's Law & "Foreign Aid"

The mestizo mentality is, in regard to shortsighted greed, rife in the North American Business community which cannot see reality much beyond their quarterly balance sheets. In order to "reduce labor costs," U.S. businessmen and farmers import mestizo workers and/or move their operations into Mexico, the source of North America's "cheapest" labor supply. Although these policies may look profitable in the short run, they only serve to prove the adage that "there is no such thing as cheap labor." Mestizos erode the U.S. tax base and burden tax-payer supported social services, so it is the U.S. tax-payer who must make up the difference for what any employer "saves" by hiring mestizos. Mestizo labor is a large net loss for the U.S. economy and lowers the U.S. standard of living. Such employers only care about "saving money." They couldn't care less what it costs U.S. society when they import mestizos into the country and export jobs out of the U.S. A truly "national" government would stop these traitors in their tracks, but none exists right now to govern the U.S.A. There is only the Z.O.G. composed of criminal Jews and their Goy stooges.

Criminal folly is, however, eventually corrected, for there is an inherent justice in the scheme of things, no matter how criminally fools wish to behave. It is therefore only fair to warn those who want "free trade" with Mexico that there is ultimately no escape from Saye's Law which states that those who produce must be paid sufficient to buy the products they make, whether it be in a local or world economy. This means that if only Mexican wages are paid for products, these products must eventually and inescapably be sold at Mexican prices, not U.S. prices. Otherwise they will not be sold and there will be no point in making them. As for the unemployed in Canada and the U.S. who have lost their jobs to Mexicans, it is unlikely that they can buy these goods, even at Mexican prices. So much for "cheap labor."

The concentration of wealth into the hands of a rich minority has never produced prosperity, only poverty and instability, as we have seen throughout Latin America, Asia, Africa, Europe, and the U.S.A. The rich few cannot consume the products of world industry, even if they would like to. Thus they have a vast surplus of purchasing power which will not be spent to absorb the vast inventories of world economic production. The rich will only buy so many cars, houses, yachts and so much food and clothing. Although Imelda Marcos did her best to consume world footwear production, even her heroic efforts were unsuccessful. What can be done with the huge surplus of production?

For several decades, the rich have resorted to two short-term schemes to sell these products at a profit: money-lending and tapping the tax-payers. Because U.S. workers are generally paid insufficient real wages to buy the products of their labor, this wage-price gap has been "filled" by credit. Most U.S. workers must borrow money to meet the barest requirements of food, clothing, shelter, and transportation. If they have children or illness, it is a certainty that a median U.S. family with two wage-earners will be in debt. Prices and taxes seem to preclude saving money "to make ends meet" in today's Judaeo-America.

But even credit or money-lending to individuals is insufficient to absorb the excess productivity, so the rich lobby governments to use the tax-payers' money to buy the otherwise unsalable (at current prices) items. This is why the rich see nothing wrong in welfare states and 'foreign aid' programs, as long as they do not have to fund them. The same applies to war materiel and weapons production which profit the rich as they impoverish the tax-payers. When foreign countries want to buy products, but lack the money to do so, they are lent the necessary funds by the various tentacles of the world bankster community. These loans are often "insured" by the U.S. tax-payers, so the rich can only gain—in the short run. The late Roman Empire was similarly afflicted by such shortsighted economic policies and it is unlikely that many wealthy members of Roman society remained rich after the Empire's collapse, which they helped bring about more effectively than any barbarian invasion. History teaches us that contemporary rich people will face social collapse and chaos in "in the long run," which will probably occur within our own lifetimes.

The tax-payers are becoming unemployed or are earning less. Borrowing money at interest is becoming dangerous for the individual and the world economy, for either the lenders must stop lending or money will have no value. This is the inescapable penalty for usury, for the money lent and the interest charged do not represent productivity. They only represent the profit motive of the lender and the need of the borrower. If properly used and created, money represents the supply of goods and services in the economy, as a measure of value, like honest weights and measures. It is, or should be, a means of exchange, not a tool of speculation, just as no one is allowed to speculate on the length of a yard or the volume of a quart. Bankster-created inflation and deflation of our money supply is robbery. When a worker has earned the wages of an eight-hour day and is later told that his money is only worth that of a six-hour day, someone has stolen two hours of that worker's life and productivity. It is not too difficult to identify the culprit: "Find the jew," to paraphrase the incorrect French expression.

There is no substitute for saving, but nobody does that these days, largely because of our debt-based economy. Were we to adopt an economy based on productivity, as the German National Socialists did, saving would be both possible and desirable. Putting your jewish money into a bank, savings & loan, real estate, stocks, bonds, mutual funds, etc. these days is really gambling, not saving, and you will need all the luck you can get to keep the wolf from the door and the shirt on your back.

In the short run, our jobs are going south and what has passed for prosperity here in the U.S. is going with them. The mestizos will keep on coming north until the last vestiges of Aryan civilization in U.S. territory are destroyed. The European's dire prediction will be fulfilled when we have finally incorporated Mexico into the U.S. economy. In reality; we are witnessing Mexico's conquest of North America and it means disaster for all concerned. Race is everything. It is dangerous and uncomfortable even to be rich in a mestizo society. ❑

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

The Wilhelm Gustloff

by
Dr. Charles E. Weber

A nicely illustrated article in The American Philatelist of July 1986 (pp. 650-653) gives details of postal history related to the Wilhelm Gustloff. This ship was sunk on the night of 30 January 1945 in the cold waters of the Baltic Sea by a Soviet submarine. The resultant loss of life was one of the greatest in the history of navigation. The loss of life, in fact, was five times greater than that which resulted from the sinking of the Titanic in 1912. The Wilhelm Gustloff was carrying approximately 8,000 persons, of whom only 964 were rescued. Many of the passengers were fleeing the advancing Red Army.

Wilhelm Gustloff was the leader of the National Socialists in Switzerland and was murdered by a Jew from Yugoslavia. A little over a year after his murder, on 5 May 1937, the Wilhelm Gustloff was christened. The large ship (25,484 tons) fulfilled various functions before its tragic end. It was used as a cruise ship* and for the purpose of carrying the Condor Legion home from Spain in May 1939. During the war it served as a barracks ship for the German navy. The stamp shown here was issued on 4 November 1937 as part of a set of nine with surtaxes for the Winterhilfswerk. The ship is the Wilhelm Gustloff approaching Madeira. Note the aloe plants in the foreground.

Another German passenger ship, the Cap Arcona, was sunk on 3 May 1945 in the vicinity of Lübeck. As pointed out in the article in The American Philatelist, this ship was carrying 5,000 concentration camp inmates and was sunk by British Royal Air Force Typhoons. These facts are of special importance with regard to the Extermination Thesis. If there had been an intention and a plan to kill all of the Jews of Europe, there would have been no point whatsoever in wasting precious space on ships to save them, space that was sorely needed for the transportation of German citizens desperately trying to save themselves from the Red Army. Between 23 January and 8 May 1945 the German navy and merchant fleet carried 2,022,602 refugees and soldiers beyond the reach of the Red Army, as pointed out in the article in The American Philatelist. The fate of the Cap Arcona is thus important evidence against the Extermination Thesis.

*[The Wilhelm Gustloff was used by the KDF (Kraft durch Freude) organisation of the National Socialist Government as a cruise ship for vacationing working men and women; to the best of our knowledge, the cruise ship, on at least one occasion, was refused docking privileges at a British port for fear that the British worker would discover how low he was on the social totem pole as compared with his German counterpart. Ed. L.B.]

Nationalist Comment

WHAT WE THINK

on the month's news.

Kraut-Bashing Time Again

There is no sight quite so unedifying as the British in one of their periodic fits of anti-Germanism. We have received a reminder of this truth repeatedly over the past few weeks following the row with Bonn over the fall of the pound. The Germans have been blamed for pushing up their own interest rates in order to raise more money for investment in the lands of the former DDR, with the consequences this has had for our own currency. What it seems to amount to is that, in the eyes of our present rulers and many of our opinion formers, it is inexcusable for a German Government to act in German interests. When this happens, we are treated to an outbreak of infantile drivel about the jackboots tramping again and other such inanities. Rather fortuitously, all this has been happening just at a time when world attention has been focused on riots in some German towns in which the locals have been giving vent to their anger against the flood of immigrants pouring into their country. This, of course, provides just one more weapon for those who like to enjoy the time-honoured game of Kraut-bashing—popular in the Kaiser period, unfashionable for a while during the time of the Weimar Republic, revived and raised to new heights in response to Hitler, and then again placed in suspension during the post-war years of destruction, defeat, occupation and 'denazification.' Now the game is once more enjoying a boom, as it was bound to do when Germany's economic resurgence was followed by the unification which made her the biggest power in Europe as well as the richest. Truth to tell, the Germans can only win when they are losing!

This, of course, is the real reason for the current teutonophobia, and not the recent arguments over currencies and exchange rates, which are ephemeral, trivial and at their worst no greater than those we are frequently having with the French over lamb, apples, wine and the latest speech of Monsieur Delors. Underlying the recent outbursts against the Germans by the Prime Minister, Chancellor and Foreign Secretary, Nicholas Ridley, Mrs. Thatcher, Uncle Tom Cobley and all is a deep-seated British neurosis rooted in an inferiority complex that dates from a time of indeterminate exactitude but can be reckoned to lie somewhere between the establishment of the Second Reich in 1871 and the conclusion of the First World War. It was during those years that it began to dawn on the self-righteous and complacent British ruling and talking classes that our leading power status was under serious threat. That the threat came from across the Atlantic just as much as from across the Rhine seemed not to disturb such folk to anything like the same extent. Americans were somehow regarded as honorary Brits whose interests would never conflict with our own and who anyway shared with us a commitment to such popular abstractions as 'democracy,' 'freedom' and laissez-faire ways of doing things. The British felt comfortable in face of the rise of American power, notwithstanding that the realities of world geo-politics dictated a very different attitude; by contrast, there was a resentment at the rise of German power which had much less practical justification and which could only be explained by feelings as to an 'alienness' of German customs and culture which flew in defiance of the facts of kindred racial origins.

These anti-German sentiments which have obsessed the British ruling classes for the past century or so have of course been deliberately stoked up by propagandists representing interests quite distinct from the state interests of the British nation and people. Nevertheless, these British classes have been only too ready to provide fertile soil for such propaganda to take root, and this indicated a mentality among them which not only has led to continual miscalculations as to where the true national interest lies but is deeply depressing as a sign of petulance and jealousy which ill-become the rules of a great race.

To a healthy people, the emergence of a dynamic nation in global proximity which might under certain circumstance become a rival for pre-eminence should be the spur to a doubling of national effort, to a mobilising of all national resources towards the end purpose of maintaining and extending national strength and power—while not being too arrogant to absorb lessons from one's successful neighbor which might be of advantage in pursuit of those ends. Had the British political and intellectual classes reacted in this way to the rise of Germany, they would have done two things in particular: first, they would have matched Bismarck's achievement of Germanic unification by a similar political and economic integration of the scattered territories of their then vast empire; second, they would have striven to introduce into British society and the British political culture some of those Prussian virtues of discipline, order and Pflicht [duty] which had provided the foundation stones of German dynamism both in the workplace and on the battlefield. The latter would not even have required the import of alien folkways because there is quite enough in the rich panoply of our own long military and naval tradition from which to draw ample inspiration for such changes. But our dominant classes did not choose that positive and constructive response; instead, their reaction was wholly negative: what Germany represented must be opposed—and if necessary destroyed—by a coalition of all the world's similarly jealous nations against her. To mobilise mass sentiment in support of this crusade, the Germans had to be made the subjects of a collective psycho-analysis in which every great creative genius of that people, from Schopenhauer and Fichte to Wagner and Beethoven, from Goethe and Schiller to Nietzsche and Martin Luther, would be dissected to find crumbs of influence that might contribute to modern imagery depicting a ravenous monster bent on devouring Europe and menacing the stability of the world.

In this process, German Angst [Fright] has been demonised into a national vice which represents a sinister contrast to the lazy apathy of the Anglo-Saxon mind; and to this vice is attributed the striving for excellence and achievement which has lifted Germany out of the ashes of two world wars for her to turn the tables, not once but twice, on her former conquerors, and supersede them in economic development, education, cultural amenities and so much else—not least in which is included the tidiness and cleanliness of her towns by contrast with the rubbish tips that constitute urban Britain.

All this manifest superiority, which should, in the balanced mind, excite only admiration and the desire to emulate, is instead the focus of resentment, hatred and fear—which then find their expression in childish outbursts in which our own shortcomings and failures are conveniently laid at the door of a nation which has simply outperformed us in almost every sphere of human activity in modern times, including the sporting endeavour that is crowned with medals at the Olympic Games, as happened in Barcelona this Summer.

As patriotic Britons who want more than anything else to be proud of our country, we can only feel revulsion at this contemporary British vitriol and bile, which betray a mean-spirited twist in the national character that does not typify our people across history, and must therefore be ranked as a recent aberration which we should do everything possible to eradicate. In effect, the current wails and screeches against the Germans sound uncomfortably like the perennial protest of the inferior against their betters. Why the hell can't we shut up, put our own house in order and let our concrete national achievements speak for us to the world, rather than the envious whines of our frustrated politicians?

ELEVATED DANDER

Dis is one of doze times when I feel a non-biological urge to reduce the internal vapor pressure within my aging noggin. I'll vent randomly and then top it off by kicking my dog square in the ass.

I receive many letters (sermons!) from readers who detect that I am not a "true believer". I am not interested in discussing things of this nature as elements of logic are rarely present. I am not an atheist but I am very comfortable being around those who are. I also have several friends who thump Bibles more often than Chamberlain exercises his willie. For those who seem confused over my "position", I'll state that I believe that God deals with life and life alone. God isn't interested in the mega-bucks that are showered upon people like Billy Cracker and Pot Robberson. If you believe that making these people rich paves your path to heaven, then write out another check and leave me to my wicked ways. God does not violate His own laws. That's why people cannot walk upon water; naughty people cannot be turned into pillars of salt; you cannot get six million kilo-calories of food energy out of one loaf of bread and seas do not part— then, now or ever. If I am wrong, please send me a photograph (no eye-witnesses accounts please!) of the event and I'll do some more pondering.

God created trees. Man fabricated harmonicas. God cannot create harmonicas. Man cannot fabricate trees. God created the pure breeds (races). He created zebras but not mules. He created Bantus but not mulattos. God did not create mongrels of any kind. Human mongrels (mixed breeds) are not of God and cannot lay claim to being "children of God" or "chosen by God" regardless of what any raving preacher might claim. (Did you ever notice how physically ugly most of the TV evangelists are? And that many have kinky hair, fat lips and rat-like eyes?) Heil Paresis!

It's revisionist time again! We suffered through the Charlie Provan "proof" that Gerstein was right after all. Charlie stuffed his family and half the neighborhood into a phone booth and by extrapolation, "proved" that 800 people could be stuffed into a two car garage. He also found out that all sorts of gasses can kill people, even flatus. (I was going to say farts, but I didn't want to offend my sensitive readers). Therefore, it logically follows that the Nazis are guilty as charged. I am waiting for someone to suggest that the Nazis fed their captives kosher beans and then sealed them off in tool shed to suffer yet another form of gassing.

Enter Mitchell Jones–another practitioner of jewish science, i.e., start with a conclusion and then very carefully select the data which fits the conclusion. MJ has convinced us that Oily Weasel's "geysers of blood" are gosh-dang real enough after all. It is all explained scientifically. You see, the Evils (the Hebrew spelling of Nazis) buried a horde of bodies in October (probably a Halloween prank). Then came a quick freeze which sealed the mass grave tighter than a condom on a whale's jammer. During the long and cold White Christmas, the bodies fermented, decomposed, decomposed and fermented. And you'll never gas what was produced in abundance! You've gassed it! Gas!! Later, when the groundhog discovers he's being shadowed, Mr. Sol arrives with his warming rays. The ice layer that sealed off the septic tank clone has now developed cracks. The gas pressure now blows, Oklahoma or Yellowstone style (depending upon whether you are a lipophile or an hydrophile), the once dormant blood into the air producing the geysers that Mr. Weasel rants about. Houze bout dat?

The last I knew, gas rises to the top. You know—all of that gravity and density business that bored us in high school. When Mr. Jones' ice melted, the gas would have been the first thing to escape, und zo, Mr. Weasel would have been gassed by the gas produced from the deceased members of his gaseous tribe. When drilling for oil, gas "blows" long before the drill reaches any liquid. On the other hand, jew blood must be strange stuff. In that mass grave, with all of the decomposin' an' fermentin' goin' on, hows cum de blood didn't decompose? What's really behind the geysers of Yellowstone? What are the mechanics of an oil well "blow"? Did Mr. Jones ever watch the methane belching from a swamp (no geysers here)? Why do undertakers quickly drain the blood of the deceased? Why do all hunters, interested in eating their prey, quickly drain the blood also? Blood decomposes and FAST and its presence accelerates putrefaction! That's one reason why the "geysers" story is just another case of Hollywood gassing and Mr. Jones' explanation belongs in the same phone booth as Mr. Provan's hallucinations. OK Charlie! Here's your chance to show how Herr Dr. Professor Adolf Blutsparer developed a food additive that insulates the blood from the ravages of chemistry so that Oily Weasel would have something to warm his spirit at a later date and help Mr. Jones register at Al Zheimer's Motel. The bottom line is that after three days (ask any undertaker) of rotting, there would not be any blood left to geyser about, anywhere, regardless of conditions—even in those places of infinite miracles called "Nazi death camps". Don't you jerks ever get tired of acting like members of Congress?

Is there another revisionist debate on the horizon? If so, then please don't invite me. Right now, I am adding a few more measures to my "Revisionist Waltz" in the key of B flat(us) for the piano (with pre-tuned strings).

The problem with all of this revisionist and exterminationist (the R's and E's) hogwash is that it is mainly carried on between lawyers and historians, all of whom flunked math and science while in high school—if my experience is of any indication. When one has to "prove" things to a judge (another lawyer!), he merely presents the blather of some "expert" which is not comprehended by the judge in any case. If the judge is "convinced", he uses the power of the law to lower the boom. The judge merely has to be convinced—the truth of the matter is of no consequence. De judge got de gun, man, an yo bess mind yo manner or he blow yo ass off.

I'm not going to waste my time burping about the "meaning" of a Perot, Clinton or Bush (PCB) "win" any more than I would about describing the attributes of Pig manure, Cow flops or Bull turds (PCB). How do you want to die? Hanging, shooting or lethal injection? Which version of AIDS do you prefer? Liberace, Hudson or Johnson? 1992—the year of the three-way screw job.

NUTRITION NUTS

I attended a lecture on screwball nutrition only a few days ago. The talk was given by an expert (in America, "experts" outnumber us by a 6:1 ratio) who advised us on how to live to be 130 years old, on an all fruit diet. It was a case of one kind of fruit recommending another. Anyway, evil lurks behind every super-market check-out counter and the plot to poison us all continues unabated.

Foods were classified as "live" or "dead". Live foods—good. Dead foods—bad. Umgowa. Simba. Me Tarzan. You Jane. Dead foods are created by killing live foods and the greatest killer is the microwave oven. Aw shucks! I thought it was a gassing oven. Microwaves, we were told, zap your left over pizza with gamma rays and render the food radioactive for about 6 minutes. At this new bit of information, one fellow shrieked to the waitress, "Don't microwave my pie!" Apparently he believed that he just ordered a live apple pie and felt no murderous intention towards it. The expert further terrified us by explaining that the barcode (evil 666 symbol) reader at the check-out counter also zapped your food with gamma rays. Death is where you find it; it's all around you; everywhere.

When you toss a rock (or your uncooperative date) into a still pond, you make waves. The distance between the crest of one wave and the next is called the wave length (the length of a wave—get it?). Buzzing through the air are six million types of electromagnetic waves, most of which we are unaware of as with the other six million things circumnavigating the globe. The wave length of a typical AM radio signal is about 100 feet. If the signal is

FM radio or TV, it is approximately 1 foot in length. RADAR waves are short radio waves and are in the neighborhood of 1 inch long. Infra-red radiation (we experience this as heat) has a wave length of .4 inches. Red LASER beams .04 inches; ultra-violet light .0005 inches; X-rays .00000004 inches and gamma rays .0000000004 inches. The bar-codes are scanned with LASER beams, and you can see that these are about as close to being gamma rays as Steve Solarz is to being handsome, or Slick Willie is to being virtuous.

Initially, microwave ovens were known as RADAR ranges. This was logical since the energy produced by the oven's magnetron qualifies as a legitimate RADAR signal. For sales purposes, the name was changed, possibly because so many people failed in their attempts to detect UFOs with them. Again we see that the short radio waves that are produced in a microwave oven are far removed from gamma rays, which are the offspring of atomic disintegrations. If gamma rays had a wavelength equal to the thickness of a sheet of paper, a ray from your microwave oven would have a wavelength of about 120 miles! These two electromagnetic waves are so removed from each other that the only conclusion I can reach is that this "expert" was so full of manure that the whole world must appear brown to him. Sorry Greta, your food isn't being "nuked". Our expert apparently suffered from gammatosis—a severe affliction caused by a prolonged and close contact with the Greek alphabet. More revelations followed.

Oranges, when mature, aren't really orange in color. That's why they are called oranges. What a surprise this would be to Cortez, DeSoto and DeLeon, if they could join us now, or to my Uncle Paul Lee, who grows the damned things. We were then told: As the "oranges" roll down the chutes toward the showers, they are injected with a "chemical" that turns them orange in color and renders them sweet to the taste. Me thinks this fellow must have helped with some of those Auschwitz stories.

He wound down his talk with descriptions of "poisonous" foods and "miracle" foods. Ever since they found a few 100 year olds chasing sheep in the Caucasus Mountains, experts have pondered why they lived so long. It seems that they ate yogurt. Conclusion: Eat yogurt and live to be forever. Of course, the Amerindians ate a lot of corn but no one ever said that was the reason they never lived to be 120. Africans eat each other, as did the Aztecs. I am waiting for an expert to correlate this bit of info with life expectancy.

I mentioned to the lecturer, that the folks of 1700 ate fresh fruits and veggies like he recommended. No Twinkies or Coca Cola for them! They usually died before they were 55. Anyway, the answer mainly lies in the interaction of what's ingested and your genetic make-up. Dr. Oliver, in Liberty Bell, alludes to this in his recent article on perverts. More on this in a later issue when I explain why medical science will fall flat on its face.

YA-HOO, IT'S BEEN 40 YEARS!

I started yammering in the late 1940s, shortly after I was discharged from the Army, about that glop called "margarine". I said, over and over, that any artificial crap would cause severe health problems if you continued to eat it for extended periods. I savored the butter melting upon my tongue and mentioned that you'll regret listening to the morons who try to convince you that un-natural slop is better for your health. PAY ATTENTION! The massive increase of circulatory problems in this "nation" began in the 1930s when ignorant people started feeding themselves with un-natural mixtures like Crisco and oleo-margarine. If it is not a natural animal fat like tallow, butter or lard, don't eat it. The only vegetable oil you can consume in quantity is olive oil. If you adhere to that con-esterol vegetable oil baloney, you'll soon be a vegetable.

It is now gratifying to learn that the experts are coming to the same conclusion about margarine that I reached nearly five decades ago. Recently, the TV yappers have now "discovered" that artificial fats might be as hazardous as ozone holes. Margarine actually causes the problems it is supposed to avoid. The "experts" base their results on piles of data (or just plain piles). I base mine upon a very simple idea. Life continues naturally only when it consumes life. If God didn't create it, then it cannot sustain a long and healthy life.

I watch hordes of people buy that 2% swill that passes for "reduced fat milk". Keep sucking it up, folks, you'll never learn. I told you about butter, and Buchanan, and Duke and Dairy Queen. Keep suffering. Keep dreaming.

ELECTION TWADDLE

What a disgusting thing it is. People running for the office of president must first bow to an ugly jew, on national TV, by the name of Larry King. Why put up with all of this in-between crap in the first place? Let's elect Kissinger, as ugly and disgusting as he is, and do away with the phoney middle-men.

Ross Perot has a losing formula: Tell the voters that they cannot get something for nothing and that they might just have to be responsible for their actions and work for a change. I cannot think of a better way to torpedo your chances of being elected. Ross also loses on another count because Americans like their leaders to be tall. It all has to do with the ability to pick pockets without raising the elbow. Moreover, the subservient voter doesn't have to bend over as far in order to get his nose in the right place. Secret ballots (and air-bags) are for cowards and I really don't care if the world knows that I am voting for Perot. If elected, he cannot possibly provide a cure for the suicidal race-mixing and greed which is at the bottom of our ills. At least, he is not a Cush or a Blinton. The Libertarian candidate, Andre Marrou (sort of rhymes with Pierre Trudot) has a platform that I agree with to the tune of 80%. However, I hear jungle drums and smell roast missionary every time I see his running-mate. I expect nothing but I'll be damned if I'll vote for the black-meat lover Clinton or the genocidal Bush, even if Bush does look like he knows what he is doing. Quayle may be a bird but he is not the Anglo-Saxon GOR (dung). According to Maj. McClerkin, Bo Gritz is somewhat of a goof. The Populist Party always seems to nominate toads and the most popular, natural leader of this century died when 50,000 tired old men and boys couldn't hold back 2,500,000 of Stalin's finest during the battle of Berlin.

WARNING

After one year of FAEM publication, I can report that at $2 per month, this operation has lost money. I'll do what I can to sustain it for as long as I am able, but be advised that I might find it necessary to pull the plug. In that event, all excess donations will be returned. It's the Aryan thing to do.

PFENNIGS

In the middle 1960s, when the price of silver rose, a silver quarter was worth more, as metal, than its 25 cent face value. As a result, the nickel-copper "sandwiches" became today's dimes, quarters and half-dollars. The 92.5 percent silver coins disappeared from circulation and ended up in someone's sugar bowl. Based upon random samples in 1964, I predicted that the silver coins would vanish entirely before 1968. I was right on!

In 1981, copper pennies started their climb into extinction. It was a good year. The AIDS epidemic started about then as did Ernst Zündel's jousting with the freedom-loving jewish commune-ity. In 1982, a copper-clad nickel slug was introduced which weighed in at 40 grains. The long-used cent weighed 48 grains. All coins were now "faith" money and the face "value" exceeded the intrinsic metal value.

I have kept track, over the years, attempting to predict when the "coppers" would meet the same fate as silver coins. It's been 10 years now, and the coppers make up only about 25% of the circulation. I cannot predict when the end will come and this is due to: 1) most people don't know that the pennies have changed and 2) pennies are so valueless that not many people would horde them in the first place. When the market price of copper exceeds $1.40 per pound, then saving pennies for their copper content would be indicated.

Copper is a nifty war material (shell casings, etc.) and was not used for coin production in the middle of Roosevelt's homicidal destruction of Germany. Old duffers will remember that pennies were made out of steel, during those years. Moreover, nickel was valuable as a component in stainless steel, and it too was not used in coin production. Those WW II nickels were a silver alloy.

Screw money. Save beans. In times of stress and hardship (the near future) you'll find that you cannot wear it or eat it. Save beans. You'll be glad you did.

Strange happenin's are happening in the Santa Monica Post Office. I get mail returned with valid addresses and books I send out there, "disappear". At other times, I get lied to by people out to get something for nothing. So far, the crooks have called themselves "Christians". The jews who read FAEM are up front and have always paid for every issue. In both of the above cases, I lose money and time. I send out everything, usually on the same day, and if you come out on the short end, for whatever reason, please call (or FAX) (716) 835-7300. Don't call my home phone as this interrupts tutoring sessions, more often than not. Also, please use my PO Box number as so much junk mail comes to my home, I often let it pile up for weeks before using the shovel. Sometimes I spend so much time, here at the FAEM hole, that I don't show up regularly at home, even to feed the canary.

Greg Raven, the Prodigy forum revisionist, now works for the Carto bunch in their Orange County bunker. He discovered, probably while on a snooping cruise, that I am one and the same man. There's only me in here and quite contrary to the right-wing's snoop experts, I have never written anything under an assumed name. Crooks always assume that everyone else is one too. These ducks could save a wad of time by asking me directly—but that would diminish the "spy" aura of their business.

The other day, I watched a fellow, at the opposite end of a large market parking lot, dump his valuables into the truck of his car and lock, lock and double-check everything. What do these antics reveal to a crook who is "casing" the lot? There's something valuable in that thar car! I later learned that his Volvo suffered a dislocated door and trunk lid. Those 4 foot crowbars are handy! Wrecked car. Lost valuables. As for me, I never lock my car. I even try to have a window rolled down. Result? Only lost a pendant which was swinging from the rear-view mirror. Not bad for 25 years. Honest people still out-number the criminals. Trusting people is better than warm milk, when it comes to getting a good nights sleep.

ONLY YAHWEH NOSE

I continue to do my best, but lately I have been busier than Clinton's willie at a pickaninny ranch or Hillary at a castrating party. The November issue had an error or two which my astute readers pointed out. The reference to Diaz (page 6, para 4, line 1) should have been "atypical" and not "typical". On page 5, (top line) mysteriously, "Caucasus" became "Caucus". Oh well, I spilled grape juice last night and I'll bet that my fingers will again make errors. Moreover, the watchful Greg Raven informed me that he points his modem in the direction of GEnie, not Prodigy.

I was absolutely amazed when I continued to receive repeated compliments on my article to Canada's Attorney General, on behalf of Ernst Zündel. Mr. Zündel called me, as he did dozens of others, and requested that I do so. I FAXed my letter to him and he said it was "brilliant". Other people have expressed similar views with words such as "a masterpiece", "outstanding" and "absolutely exceptional". One fellow stated that my views and expressions were of such a caliber that I should be at the speaker's table at an IHR convention. Another stated that I was the first right-winger who could talk in a straight line and make things easy to understand.

One question continually popped from the letters I've read. A typical question was "How come Ernst Zündel chose to praise and print a letter from a swarthy jew, named David Cole, to the Attorney General, when yours (meaning mine) was clearly superior in an overwhelming sense?" (E.J. Texas). The answer is simply that David Cole is more useful to Mr. Zündel, at this time. Personally, I am not quite sure what Ernst has in mind. If reconciliation with the jews is now his agenda, then one might rightly ask what the past decade of courtroom circuses was all about. If your purpose was to get along, (the IHR is also singing the same song) then he should have never started the whole thing in the first place and saved his supporters tens upon tens upon tens of thousands of dollars.

The right-wing leaps from publicity stunts, babbling about history events to shoot-outs at the ZOG corral. Others operate mail order bookstores and get wealthy doing it. One more trial, one more book, one more revisionist debate, one more this and one more that. Don't you people recognize that you are hooked on a pie-in-the-sky daydream to the same extent the voters believe that the election of the "right" criminal will solve all of the problems of concern?

I am criticized for criticizing the "good guys", the David Dukes, the guys "on our side". It ain't nice, so I am told. So what? The right-wing leadership consists of a complete array of trigger-happy goons, religious twats, perverts, drug addicts, liars, money-grabbers, womanizers, lovers of themselves and people with a strong aversion to honest work. None of them will solve any problem. This country is a pigsty because we stopped demanding that our government express our will. We, because it was easier to let someone else do our thinking, allowed genuine assholes to convince us that chocolate and shit were the same because they were the same color. All blood is red, ain't it? Forget about the "our side" army, cause, Holocaust debate, courtroom charades, prayers, or white homeland which is supposed to lead us to the pot of gold. No army is any better than its individual soldiers. Get in shape first! Then it will be time for organizing. Individually, we screwed things up. Individually, we must grab a shovel. If you want butter and cream, you must learn how to pitch manure. To do things right, you must first stop doing things that are wrong.

ON NOVEMBER 3, THE SHEEP FARTED

The phone rings and rings. I am questioned about how I "knew" that Ross Perot would receive about 20 percent of the vote when the Zionist "experts" predicted about 8 to 10 percent, while the Perot-ites puffed and dreamed about winning all fifty states. 'Tis simple. About 60 percent of the American bipeds could be technically classified as white Americans (really, the only kind.) Of this 60 percent, only 30 percent are Aryan-minded, and hence, viable. Thirty percent of 60 percent is 18 percent. That is almost exactly what Ross received. I have said, over and over, that this country has only 30 to 40 million valuable humans in it. We are out-numbered 6:1 (the magik Talmudic number) and that is why we shall lose, and lose, and lose, under the present set of rules. Only a dreamer would believe that a Perot victory would change the course of the tragic events which will soon be forced upon a population so stupid as to believe that a bit of scribble, upon a piece of paper, can alter Nature's immutable laws. The bleating about "democracy" will soon end as will the utter nonsense about "equality". We—those who adhere to Natural Law—are the future, but this doesn't mean that our skins will escape the bruises of fate. America will absolutely be punished by an uncompromising Nature.

The Buffalo News headlined, November 4—"Clinton ends GOP reign with landslide victory". One wonders what these Zionist talking heads use for a dictionary. A landslide is an overwhelming majority. A majority means—over 50 percent. Clinton did not get a majority vote and so the question of "overwhelming" is superfluous and "landslide" laughable. In a land where college graduates cannot add nor spell, the distinction becomes only a parting burp. Unprincipled Clinton received 43 percent of the popular vote which consisted of the overwhelming support of perverts, Mestizos, jews, Blacks, bean-eaters, rice-eaters, termite-eaters, eaters of each other, the botched and feeble; goofs stricken with welfare-itis, fetus killers, druggies, criminals and all of society's flotsam and jetsam—the beggars! Never forget that nearly 3 out of every 5 voters DID NOT vote for this man and the term "landslide" is simply ludicrous. Moreover, San Francisco's third-world animal sacrificers, were Clinton boosters, almost to a butchering man. Normal people recoil in revulsion when these Satanic creeps dismember hapless critters while they are still alive—and call it religion. (I am now reminded of Kosher slaughter.) Clinton's sexual appetite exceeds that of the Kennedys' and knowing his preference for dark meat, one might accurately predict that he will be the first American president to contract AIDS. There is nothing "womanly" about Hillary, the dyke's and fetus-killer's champion. Let's hope that she kisses every AIDS carrier she can find. At this point in time, Nature demanded Clinton much in the same way the African plains demand rapid putrefaction and consumption of that which is dead and dying.

George Bush is on another planet—his mind wanders and he perhaps is not really sure where he is. In lucid moments, his patriotism appears and that is why he was excessively annoyed with the Viet Nam era antics of our new "leader". George occasionally lapsed into patriotic moods and made feeble gestures in the direction of America-first. This, of course, was irritating to his jewish puppeteers and therefore, he made himself expendable. Clinton will perform his kosher duties flawlessly. Do not expect Willie to ever forget his personal debt to the "chosen ones" or the fact that nearly 100 percent of his "advisors" are kosher cupcakes. Look for Clintstone to mumble and fuddle about and over the economy while the jews in Izzy-rail seize territory and kill Semites according to their divine mission—with goyim money. You cannot have "America first" AND be the parasite's host in the New Sixth-World Order.

The "family values" baloney that was burped by the Zionist Republicans demonstrated that they had lost contact with reality. A high percentage of the biological slop that pollutes American soil has no more regard for a family than do the jews for the goyim. Only an idiot could believe that standing up for family values would change a pig into a silk ribbon. In fact, criminals abhor honest people and certainly would never vote for one. Nearly all of the bad check writers were returned to office because masses of people will not tolerate a honest man directing traffic. One of my "secrets" for correctly predicting the outcome of any election is to select the most disgusting candidate available. If he lies, cheats and steals, he will likely be elected. Sooner or later, AIDS carriers and lepers will find themselves on the ballot. American people, in the main, do not want virtuous leaders. Period. Double period.

Ross Perot was a guiding light for those few Americans still retaining any speck of reason and decency. His V.P. selection was a first class patriot and made Gore and Quayle insignificant by comparison. Mr. Perot's wife appeared to be a woman and not a yuppie bitch—like you know who. Clinton's daughter has an almost jewish look and some have remarked that Willie hisself may have a Neger in the family woodpile. However, it must be remembered that Ross believes in the system and became rich by following its rules. With millions to give, did he ever give any to BRIGHT poor people instead of DUMB poor people? I think not. Nations are improved by giving the most to those who have the most potential. Only a simpleton would try and teach a penguin how to fly. Ross poured millions down sinkholes. His heart may have been in the right place, but his mind wasn't. Ross is apparently color-blind. All in all, he proposed solutions that would work—solutions which were used in that economic miracle called Nazi Germany. However, Hitler was fortunate to have only Germans to work with, whereas Perot would soon have learned that a batch of blacks can't compete with a batch of Japanese and a batch of Mestizos cannot compete with a batch of Koreans and that a batch of Aryans cannot swim very well with third-world baggage hanging on to their gonads. Ross would have awakened from his capitalist dream and it would be anyone's guess what he would do then. This would make him unpredictable and hence undesirable to the jews. Clinton, or God Himself, cannot make third-world America perform like a first-class Aryan nation ... not ever!

Clinton whined, "... the American people have voted for a new beginning." Emphatically, only 43 percent of the voters voted for his brand of something for nothing. A new beginning? The beginning may be new, but the result is a foregone conclusion. Biology will unalterably direct the demise of Clinton's "I didn't inhale" pipe-dreams as well as those of his supporters. A death's-row criminal also has a new beginning when he finally begins the walk following his last breakfast. As assuredly as 5 whites leave California for every wet-back that moves in, Nature will direct the closing scenes on the failed American experiment. Not all shall be saddened. As the pig wallows in shit, because it is his nature to do so, so shall millions of untermenschen swim in the sewer of race-mixing and degeneracy—and love every depraved moment of it—until AIDS do they part.

Race war in America is remote. This land is too spacious and migrations from 20 to 2000 miles are already underway. Where are the white people going? Merely check the Perot vote to find out. Where are the mongrels going? Check the Clinton vote to find out. The white people that stay in the "brotherly-love" areas are not Aryan-minded anyway and the sooner we part company, the better. Race-mixing really culls both populations. It removes degenerate whites as well as degenerate blacks from being burdens to their own kind. This, in itself, is a good thing except for the mass of mulattos it creates—those unfortunate critters who belong to no race and live to reproduce. Be objective. The fall of America will be of immense benefit to the entire world and, the sooner, the better. It's God's contribution to the environmental pollution problem.

HELLTH CARE

One of the dumbest noises I have heard is "health care". A healthy person doesn't need care. Sick people need care. It should be called "sick care". Better yet, why not call it "sickness compensation"? That's what it is. You get paid for being sick and healthy people pay the bill. It cannot be insurance at any rate. A person insures his health by eating foods from natural sources, exercising moderately and maintaining a tranquil mind. In short—a sound mind in a sound body.

I am classified as a "senior citizen". I SCUBA dive; take flying lessons; climb trees; take 80 mile canoe trips; have 32 sound teeth, 20/20 vision; and sprint across parking lots. I can no longer put my own body weight over my head and certain personal exercises are not of the intensity I once enjoyed. But that's life—all iron rusts. I have a 92 year old uncle who still climbs mountains in Arizona. My grandfather was still pitching hay when he was 81. I have a beautiful 66 year old cousin who still attracts eyes when she goes to the beach. Uncle Karl died last June at 101. You may believe this is all due to heredity. I think not. Our entire family entered life drinking their mother's milk and then graduated to fresh cow's milk, fresh vegetables and fresh meat. We ate little fruit. None of us smoked or used alcohol. We all swam in the nearest lake or river. We always had something to laugh about and trusted everyone until they broke that trust.

I sadly watch others of my age line up for their bottles and bottles of drugs. To them, health care is merely massive drug consumption. They wander home, swallow their pills and then weakly stare out of the window watching the grass grow. This is living?

Most of these people voted for Clinton. They want financial relief from the costs of drugging themselves into a shorter life. These seniors, of course, won't pay for this "care". Healthy people will—through increased taxes. The money will primarily be used to "save" AIDS carriers, keep welfareites fat, "rehabilitate" drug-heads, run the abortion mill and all sorts of other crap. This country was not built by people demanding "insurance" or "care". All drugs are poisons. They eliminate symptoms. They "cure" nothing. The bottom line again is typically American. Do what you please and if that lands your ass in hot water, then have someone else take the responsibility. Your health is your responsibility. If you choose to wreck it, then you must live with it. Should the sensible community pay for the problems that a cocaine user brought upon himself? Should anyone pay for the problems that others brought upon themselves by continual self-abuse? I think not. Please do not misunderstand me. There are very legitimate health problems in our population that were not caused by individual excesses and gung-ho living. There is a vast gap between the heavy alcohol user, the AIDS patient, the vegetable oil gulper and other hedonists, and older citizens who are experiencing health problems due to a long life of honest toil.

Slick Willie will solve nothing and will make things worse (great!). After all, he never earned an honest dime in his life and is a virtual stranger to work. Things have been set into motion which will cause the death of this sick country. As a people, we are now mad. The Gods destroy mad people. Honest people are on the defensive. The criminals have the advantage. We allow perverts to roam at will and even grant them privileges. Fetus murder is not only condoned but is evolving into a national pastime. Buffalo has no money but somehow a new palace for the ice hockey circus will be built. Healthy people are penalized for being healthy. Honest people are penalized for being honest. Absolute morons are given "scholarships" and animals who grunt while chasing balls, earn millions of dollars.

We may wistfully look to Willie for an economic miracle, but it will not come. Hitler's Germany was an economic miracle. Perhaps it would be appropriate to ask how Mr. Hitler would have handled AIDS Johnson, Michael Jackson, drug pushers, rapists, perverts, child abuse, irresponsible fathers, Howard Stern, and dead beats in general. Once you invite a pig into your home, grant it "equality", allow it to have equal say (a vote) and then admit more of the same, you have effectively committed suicide and will suffocate in the dung of the pigsty you allowed to come into existence. Every act of the American government is an act contrary to God's Natural Law. The expression of the American people is its government. Sick governments come from sick people. Sick people die. Clinton's Third-World Animal Farm (TWAF) is best viewed from a safe distance. Enjoy the spectacle, while it lasts.

ABOUT FACE

The advertisement said "David Irving—Uncensored—Unintimidated". He was listed as speaking on several topics including: Allied War Crimes, Churchill's Deceptions, The Future of Germany, Censorship in History, Blunders of WW II and Rudolf Hess. A co-speaker was also advertised: David Cole, Jewish writer and film maker. Mr. Cole was to show videos and speak about his findings at Auschwitz, Birkenau and Mauthausen. What youse see ain't what youse will necessarily get.

I have heard Mr. Irving speak on other occasions and, although he is a very dynamic and captivating speaker, I was not that enthusiastic about a re-run. I did, however, become interested when a college student I knew expressed interest in learning about the "other side". This was the stimulus that resulted in the consumption of a tank full of gasoline and a pleasant drive to Toronto. My young friend was eager to go to the presentation which was billed, "... the most exciting lecture you will ever attend."

We approached Toronto where I again was reminded that Toronto was much like Los Angeles where people never stay home—they spend their hours testing tires on the freeways. The packed concrete strips were little other than gigantic conveyor belts delivering their objects to one place or the other. Hansa Haus, a German club of some sort, appeared precisely according to description. This was the scheduled place for the "exciting lecture". Well, well and more well. There, in front of us, were police cars blocking the access road. A sober-faced officer turned us away stating that the owner did not want anyone on his property. "It seems to me I've heard that song before.." The melody fox-trotted through my mind. Again I was witness to a sell-out to fear, by Germans, who have the most to lose by being cowards. I cared little about its exact nature. However, I received directions to the Latvia House—the "back-up" joint. Damn! More of that Toronto traffic would have to be endured.

Ernst Zündel had kindly given me two tickets which Eric and I presented at the door. The ticket-taker appeared unhappy about honoring the tickets. He hesitated, glared and then finally grunted us in. We entered a sea of about 200 familiar and unfamiliar faces. There, according to a prediction I made earlier to my companion, stood David Irving, in the corner, busily hawking his books. I noticed two others, fumbling here and there, trying to properly place a projection screen. After twenty minutes of playing musical screens, they ended up where they started—with the screen placed at the feet of the first-row people! "Attention!" The show was about to begin.

The introduction was given by a man whose watch apparently ran in synchronization with the tides on the planet Mongo. On and on, he went, constantly interjecting that he could say more—and did! I sat quietly, mentally picturing that long hook which was used in vaudeville cartoons for whisking dead-beats off the stage. No such luck was to come our way in practice. A harbinger of the disappointment that was soon to come was found in this speaker's praise of the jew David Cole. At last, the jews have come to our rescue. Now is the time to sit down at the table, let bygones be away and join our hands in peaceful cooperation. David Cole was the Columbus of the new world of kraut and bagels. This theme permeated the entire afternoon. Picture, if you may, scenes of this same group shouting that the jews were their misfortune and if the jews were to vanish, so would their problems. Now, only a year later, the jews were heralded as a solution—not by disappearing, but by becoming partners! The old German woman, sitting next to me, poked my arm and proudly stated that a jew (David Cole) was a very good friend of hers. She continually bobbed, waved and smiled at him (long distance ass-kissing). David was relishing the swooning and fawning that enveloped him. "Was it another outburst of Christianity?", I asked myself. After all, Christ was a jew and we kiss images of his feet, don't we? Well, I don't. To each his own.

A fellow by the name of Ball was introduced. I wondered if this was the same drug-soaked dip who was an "expert" on aerial photographs. The one who was usually so disorientated that Doug Christie didn't want him for a defense witness at the Zündel trials. Anyway, I will not bore you with a lengthy boring description of the type of boredom this yahoo dropped upon us. Slide after 35mm slide was shown as an illustrative answer to a question that wasn't asked. We saw slides of aerial views of camps, cow pastures and Hitler's moustache—or was it a scrub brush? One photo had some specks, which looked like fly-droppings, but were claimed to have been put there by the C.I.A. to show platoons of jews marching to the guess chambers. How anyone could know that these specks were jews was anyone's gas. Walls became fences, fences became walls and coffee stains became cultivated fields—all courtesy of the C.I.A. On it went, speculation after speculation, until, what seemed like six million slides later, someone in the rear shouted "Where's Irving?" The incoherent presentation came to a close. I guess this is what revisionists do. Dig into some dusty archive and find a piece of something nearly unrecognizable and then "prove" things by analyzing the scratches and old-age wrinkles—something like tea leaf reading. I went to photographic school at Fort Monmouth, NJ, and believe me, this turkey would have been drowned in a vat of photographer's hypo the first time he "analyzed" anything.

The Master of Boremonies assumed his familiar position. "God help us!" shouted the worm in my head. God answered the prayer. The jew hero was then introduced.

David Cole, who sat next to my companion, rose amid loud applause and shuffled to the podium, blue jeans, dirty sneakers and all. I looked over and scanned (computer talk) his paramour. I couldn't place her features, or race or anything. Her skin was swarthy, her hair was dark even though she had tried to hide the fact with red dye. The most distinguishing feature was the ring in her nose. Yas! You hoid me! A gold ring was standing out from her left nostril. David has never tried to hide the fact that he is ghetto-minded. I leaned back expecting a video presentation, as advertised. Woe and mo woe. What did we get? A lisped reading of a canned speech. About Auschwitz? Bergen-Belsen? Mauthausen? No. It was repeated praise of Ernst Zündel, "my friend", the one "with whom I am now working closely". Interspersed were oceans of jewish moans about how he (David) suffered. God, what suffering! He suffered ostracism from his family, the jewish community and his friends for the mere exercise of free inquiry. God, what suffering. I wondered if he would survive that suffering. Oi vey. Such a deal. Anyway, when David was through, he received a standing ovation which was not repeated for David Irving. Clearly, a jew hit responsive chords that the others speakers missed. (Was this a closet synagogue?) I was sure that Mr. Cole would be re-elected by a landslide. Astounding! Here, in the middle of a batch of Germans and Germanophiles stood a tiny jew as the center of the "lecture". They had been saved! Perhaps there was indeed something to the rumor that Hitler was a jew. It all makes me glad I am an American.

A fud slide show. An Academy Awards ceremony. No video, but now, the frosting—David Irving. I expected too much. I expected Mr. Irving to talk about the topics listed on the brochure. I wanted to experience the "... most exciting lecture you will ever attend!" What did he talk about? He fumed on about his problem trying to cross the border into the United States, that's what! No love, no nothing, just indignation and anger. I guess the border guards didn't recognize his importance. David was hauled into court and will be in court again. He will fight and he made it very plain that he was "well-healed" and that anyone who messed with him would suffer financial losses—like the soul that tried to sue him for libel. The outrage lasted only a few minutes. David had books to sell. No Hess, no Churchill, no War Crimes, no Goebbels, no nuttin'. What a zilch nuttin'.

The podium was then grabbed by Paul Norris who mounted an emotional appeal for funds to help this "well-healed", ego-centric historian. I wondered, "If it were my ass that was in hot water, would Mr. Irving donate a little something to help me?" Then again, why does a man, who bragged about his financial resources, need an appeal for money anyway?

Before we left, I posed this question: "Why should we believe this jew, David Cole?" Is anyone familiar with the All Vows (Kol Nidre) Prayer? The Talmud, Book of Nedarim, 23a-23b, has this to say about the prayer: "And he who desires that none of his vows made during the year shall be valid, let him stand at the beginning of the year and declare 'Every vow which I make in the future shall be null.' (His vows are then invalid.)" The prayer is almost a "confession" in reverse. If a Catholic lies, he confesses it and then the whole thing is cleaned up. The jew gets this service before he lies. Nice work if you can get it. Poor Protestants. They have to live with their lies.

What a gross disappointment. Home again, home again, jiggity jog ... revisioning all the way.

HEY HEY HEY

Please buy your copy of The Holocaust on Trial (the Zündel trial) from me. A recent review of this book, by Mark Weber, appeared in the IHR Journal (Institute of Historical Review). I sell them for $15 postpaid (while the meager supply lasts), which explains why I am poor. Willis Carto (Spotlight, IHR) sells them for $29.95 plus postage, which explains why he lives in a penthouse. I don't have any jewish friends. Willis has loads of them.

I also understand that Mr. Metzger (W.A.R.) will start selling McCalden's Exiles From History. I don't know the price or even what they look like. Anyway, everyone should get in on the act. I am dedicated, but poor. Carto isn't dedicated, but rich. If I had his money, (it sho'nuff rolls in!) I'd send out free copies.

AMAZING CRAZE

After 10 years of court battles, trips to Europe, demonstrations galore and the expenditure of tens upon tens upon tens of thousands of dollars for the Zündel decade, isn't it interesting that Holocaust Memorials are still being built, dissidents are still going to jail, Holocaust studies are becoming a way of life and the bagelization of America continues? One might well ask if the expense of keeping one man out of a Canadian jail was worth it. Now that Mr. Zündel is "reaching out" to the jewish community, via a squeaky little jew called David Cole, we might wonder if we should chalk our donations up to entertainment and go on to better things. Please note, that Mr. Carto is also in bed, via Bradley Smith, with kissy-kissy David. The goyim never learn—or do they know something we don't?

BUFFALO DOIN'S

Blasphemy! Burn the bastard!

A certain Mr. McCormick, a member of a suburban school board, has been accused of the most foul deed imaginable. It far exceeds anything perpetrated by Charles Manson, or Al Capone. He stands accused of uttering an anti-Semitic remark! How terribly foul and criminal can one man be? He should be gassed.

It appears that this hate-filled naughty auntee-seemite had a little altercation with a member of God's chosen mongrels. The reference was to an understanding why jews were stuffed into pizza ovens by Nazi bakers. Lo and behold! the sky fell in. Outraged parents demanded that the Commissar of Education, Thomas (the jew) Sobol, remove the man from his post. To make things worse, Mr. McCormick did not recant, apologize or otherwise kiss a bagel-shaped rear. In fact, he shouted on jew-vision that the jews killed Christ. Gad. How wild can one get? Only an American would have the guts to do this.

Pay attention. If people let this interference of First Amendment rights pass without complaint, then we are on the road to a Soviet America where anti-Semitism will be a crime. They pray for this daily in the synagogues. Mr. McCormick has a right to voice any opinion he wishes. He threatened no one. He did not physically abuse anyone. If I can have you punished because you said something which gave me "mental anguish", then things are damned bad—mighty bad. Watch for this—the bastards are out to abolish all criticism of their deeds. Good deeds don't need censorship.

I had wished, that for every jew-worshipping Christian who confronted the school board, there would have been five lovers of freedom that rallied to Mr. McCormick's defense. This I advocate. Open your mouth! If someone can profane God and not be struck by lightning, then why should a jew be privileged to inflict punishment for a lesser, mostly imagined affront? Do jews view themselves superior to God?

Neger gangs are terrorizing students on the campus of Buffalo State College. Packs of 10 to 20 have used razors to inflict injuries. So far, (and the night is young and they are definitely not beautiful) it is hard to predict when the cultural enrichment will end. Of course, only whites have been assaulted—it's not racially motivated, you know. Remember, that Clinton received most of the black vote and his victory (our defeat, temporarily) was "their" victory. Look for more of the same.

I look upon this whole scene as a learning experience. Those brain-dead coeds need a little reality injected into their indoctrination courses. Who knows? After a few more rapes, muggings and killings, they might even learn how to add, spell and be able to tell a watermelon from an acorn.

The campus at Alfred, NY, is also in the middle of brotherly-love and tolerance activity. A black rapes a white. Four whites retaliate by Rodney Kinging a black. Six blacks get carried away while defending themselves from the attack of a single white, and nearly killed him. Abolish hate, I say! Kill every hater you can find—in love, of course.

And so it goes. Stay tuned. In the next issue, I plan to set fire to that "northwest passage" crap about a "white homeland" and explain why "medical science" will accomplish less and less, proportionally.

AN OPEN LETTER

MILITARY FEMINUTS

A Musical Tribute to Paula Coughlin and Her Pals

by Major Joseph Stano, USAF-ret.

ONE: WATER LILY?

There was a young lady named Alice,
Who peed in the Archbishop's chalice.
It was not from relief, as was the belief,
But purely from Protestant malice.

Another young female named Paula,
A muscular broad and a maul-a.
Claimed she's been molested, by guys hairy-chested,
And sailors don't do what they ought-a.

Dear Paula did copy sweet Alice,
In a punch bowl instead of a chalice.
Something highly unthinkable, dreadfully stinkable,
But typical feminut malice.

We've all heard it—ENDLESSLY!—how a delicate and fragile flower of femininity, Lt. Paula Coughlin, was set upon by some beastly naval fighter jocks...and...M O L E S T E D !

In fact, according to our glorious news media, scores of innocent young maidens were also "sexually assaulted." Now, that is serious when we remember that Willy Smith, a member in good standing of the zipperless Kennedy Clan, was charged with "sexual assault" and that meant RAPE! In this case it apparently means fondling. Or, thinking about it.

Oh! The unspeakable horror of it all! This was a crime so dastardly that it required the punishment of the entire United States Navy! Well...at least the punishment of all the males in the Navy.

Heads rolled! The Secretary of the Navy was forced to resign! Though he actually knew nothing about the horrors that had been inflicted on the unfortunate Paula.

Admirals were fired! Though they had nothing to do with the torments of dear Paula. Thousands of naval promotions, of thousands of Naval officers, are being held up by a Committee of Congress, chaired by Sen. Sam Nunn, in a groveling genuflection to the National Organization of Women. FEMINUTS OF THE WORLD...UNITE!

In the Congressional game of "Can You Top This," the House Appropriations Committee joined in the fun to punish the United States Navy by slashing 10,000 positions from Naval Headquarters in Washington. This incredible act of stupidity was cooked up by Democrats John Murtha, Chairman of the Committee, and one Steny (Steny?) Hoyer.

These two congressional buffoons never gave a thought as to the damage this might do to the Navy. They never gave a thought as to the sections or whole units that would have to be disbanded to meet a reduction of 10,000 personnel. They didn't care as to how this would effect the ability of the U.S. Navy to function in combat. In short, these congressional clowns didn't care how many needless casualties they might cost the Navy in combat, as long as they had a chance to pompously posture on the aptly named "Boob

Tube."

As always, the buffoons of Congress are the great butchers during wars.

(MR. MRS. MISSISSIPPI.)

Now we don't mind the hardships,
We've faced them in the past.
But we wonder if our Congress Clowns
Have had forties up their a.. .

We had to fight to save the Gulf,
That's what the bastards said.
But when you check the casualties,
You'll find no Senators dead.

Chorus:

Oh, I was called to risk my a..
And save the U.N. too.
But all I got was a crock of s...
From you and you and you!
(and especially you, Senator Nunn.)

There is not a scintilla of justice or fairness about group punishments; in point of fact, it violates the basic principles of justice in any civilized nation on this planet. But when has that great DUNG HEAP on the Potomac, the Congress, ever behaved in a civilized manner?

In truth, this massive male punishment was ordered by our groveling Pols to satiate the "naughty" needs of every FEMINUT in the United States. For one, brief, shining Feminut moment...there wasn't a dry pair of "Femi-knickers" to be found from the rocky coast of Maine to the sandy beaches of California! Three-thousand damp...soggy...miles of...MENTAL CLIMAX!

The sexual life of a camel,
Is stranger than anyone thinks.
In moments of amorous passion,
He tries to make love to the Sphinx.

The Sphinx's posterior orifice
Is clogged with the sands of the Nile,
Which accounts for the hump on the camel
And the Sphinx's inscrutable smile.

The sexual life of a Feminut
Will always win a queer prize.
Sometimes it's him, and sometimes it's her,
But mostly it's just NEUTERIZED!

A Feminut never gets married,
She's loath to have herself mated.
So instead of becoming a Mrs.
She has herself...hyphenated!

A hitched Feminut incognito,
Is Cynthia Smyth-Regaleto.
And the ultimate Feminut quid pro quo,
One Shirley Lipshitz-Congo-Bongo.

Beware of the broad hyphenated,
A female reluctantly mated.
Not female or staid, she's mentally spayed,
A bar-sinister broad double-gaited.

As of this writing, [21 September 1992] the Navy has only been able to identify two of the beastly fighter jocks: an Australian and a black U.S. Marine. Therefore, the massive punishment of thousands who had never laid a hand on the celestial "BOD" of the virginal Paula are gross violations of our U.S. Constitution—the same Constitution all of our worthless politicians were sworn to defend. These punishments are also gross violations of our system of statute laws and even common law—the laws all our shyster politicians are pledged to defend. Lastly, these punishments are gross violations of "The Uniform Code of Military Justice": our system of military law.

But, what the hell, we certainly can't expect—at this late date—members of our Congress to understand our Constitution or any other civilized system of laws—they never have in the past. Especially when using the Constitution for toilet tissue will get them a whole ten or fifteen seconds being stroked on the Boob Tube.

Any American who has spent his life defending this nation understands that the Congress has different priorities than the professional soldier. The patriot puts the interest of the nation above all else. The Politician puts his own butt above all else. The patriot looks for the most efficient weaponry to defend this nation. The politician will give you the least efficient piece of junk if it's manufactured in his district. The patriot will put his life on the line for his nation. The politician will cheerfully put your life on the line for ten seconds on the Boob Tube.

OUR BOMBER FLIES 10,000 MILES.

Our bomber flies ten-thousand miles,
The Congress just sits back and smiles.
But a bomb like a cherry, is all it can carry,
We'd be smarter to bomb them with piles.

Oh this is the Congressional plan,
An aircraft is just like a ham.
The Air Force must take it, they cannot forsake it,
Old pork barrel in a new can.

Now we know what we're saying is true,
Cheney will confirm it for you.
We love the blue yonder, but sometimes we wonder,
Who's giving the finger to who.

In this symphony of unbridled congressional lawlessness, we must take note of a LOUD menopausal EXPLOSION emanating from a leading Feminut in the House of Representatives. A Congressperson possessing all the scintillating intellect of a large...green...vegetable. Of course, I refer to ol' "Cabbage Head" Pat Schroeder—Feminut par excellence and Democrat from Colorado.

Schroeder is famous for proclaiming: "I have a brain and a uterus, and I use both!" Unfortunately, the Great Vegetable seems to be constantly issuing asinine proclamations from that orifice immediately adjacent to her brain: HER UTERUS!

Schroeder recently came close to going into her infamous "Cabbage Patch" routine, a truly appalling sight that has even made hardened professional soldiers—men who have faced death countless times in combat and experienced all the bloody butchery of the battlefield—CRINGE IN HORROR!

The incident that brought on Schroeder's threat to unleash her ULTIMATE WEAPON and set military officers to scouring military museums in search of "Burnished Bronze Shields" was a limerick that was performed during a skit at a Naval Air Base by Navy fighter jocks.

It seems that ol' Cabbage Head was the subject of the limerick and her menopausal SCREECHINGS resulted in the firing of three fighter squadron commanders and two other officers.

Few enemy pilots in any of our wars have shot down so many highly skilled naval fighter pilots as has ACE Schroeder. When one considers the millions it has cost the taxpayers to train these men and all the years of skill they had acquired and all the priceless combat experience they have, one is drawn to that old military maxim: "Know your enemy." Clearly, any list of the enemies of the United States would certainly have to include ol' Cabbage Head Schroeder.

Alas, a sense of humor requires an intellect greater than one finds in a large, green vegetable. Presidents have been the subject of some rather rude military skits and limericks and, without exception, they all have had the intelligence to appreciate the humor in the skit or limerick—or the common sense not to throw a tantrum and behave in a childish fashion.

The Secretary of Defense and the various Secretaries of the Armed Forces are quite often the subject of these military skits or limericks, as are the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It's a military tradition.

At a fighter party, the commander may have selected the tune and tasked each flight to come up with appropriate lyrics. Or he may just have required an appropriate limerick.

To use a "Brit" expression, the results are usually "quite rude," and the commander may find himself the butt of these remarks. Like a "roast," the better the fellow is liked the more "rude" the result. Regrettably, a sense of humor requires a certain degree of intelligence, and that's something a hyper-sensitive Feminut doesn't have. One of the reasons why these dizzy broads simply don't belong in a tactical fighter outfit.

There are literally thousands and thousands of songs and limericks that were written by airmen about men long dead; about places long forgotten; and about battles remembered by only those men who fought in them. And lest we forget: about aircraft. Aircraft that were cursed and aircraft that were loved.

GIVE ME OPERATIONS.

Don't give me an 86 D,
with rockets, radar and A'B (Afterburner).
She's fast, I don't care,
she blows up in mid-air, (True)
Don't give me an 86 D.

Chorus:

No! Give me operations,
Way out on some lonely atoll;
For I am too young to die,
I just want to grow old.

Don't give me an F-84,
for she's just a ground-lovin' whore,
She'll whine and she'll wheeze and make straight for the trees,

Don't give me an F-84.

Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

Members of Congress have also felt the barbed wit of the military skit or limerick. Everyone seems to have mustered the intellect required to appreciate the humor in these skits or limericks.

Until...the great leafy one—who thinks that coleslaw is a form of genocide—became the subject of a limerick rhyming with those unspeakable words: "Hickory Dickory Duck!" Ol' Cabbage Head became quite hysterical over a military limerick and rapidly turned into a very large tub of KIMCHI! Ergo the great STINK in the House of Representatives.

☆ ☆ ☆

Patsy Schroeder is one of the great heroines of the SQUATS. The SQUATS are those who SQUAT, who always vote for those who also SQUAT, based solely on the fact that they SQUAT! In short: the dizzy, dippy broads who vote with their bladders instead of their brains. Hell, I'd vote for an army of broads before I'd vote for clowns like Kennedy, Cuomo or Clinton. But the SQUATS care very little about patriotism, they vote for candidates based solely on the plumbing they use when nature calls on them to "tinkle." Now, how bloody stupid can you get?

EARLY ABORT. (MacNamara's Band.)

Oh, my name is Patsy Schroeder,
I'm the leader of the SQUATS.
Of Feminuts and Nancy boys
And perverts with the trots.

Just let me run the Pentagon,
I'll rid the sky of males.
We'll fly with macho Butches and Fems and perverts with sore tails.

Chorus:

Early abort, avoid the rush,
early abort, avoid the rush,
Early abort, avoid the rush.
Oh, my name is Patsy Schroeder,
I'm the leader of the SQUATS.

☆ ☆ ☆

The GREAT VEGETABLE is quite famous for pandering to PERVERT POWER. If she could, Pat Schroeder would fill the U.S. military with every freak she could find. With Patsy Schroeder, almost anything goes!

An Argentine Gaucho named Bruno,
Said screwing is one thing I do know.
All females are fine, and sheep are divine,
But Llamas are numero uno.

Now, the Navy of Feminut Patsy,
Would be one of the strangest you did see.
A Love Boat at sea, with he screwing he,
And she much enamored of she.

Our Patsy, a leader most regal,

By edict would make it quite legal.
Connubial bliss at sea—whatever the gender might be,
While Feminuts bugger our Eagle.

Brucie will couple with Willy.
Sweet Wendy will wed wanton Wanda.
While Bruno, that wily old stoat,
Will marry a great horny goat.

Under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, the military are actually not permitted to make fun of the President, or the Secretary of Defense, or the Secretaries of our Armed Forces, or the Congress as a whole; however, none of the aforementioned has ever complained when it happens. This is due, in large measure, because it would be childish and stupid to complain—two traits that have never stopped ol' Cabbage Head from her uterine utterances.

One should take special note of the fact that although the military is not allowed to criticize the Congress as a whole, it is perfectly legal for the military to criticize individual members of that noxious body. Like Pat Schroeder!

So it would seem that the naval pilots who were punished for taking part in, or watching, a skit that mentioned the Great Cabbage, were actually punished in violation of the U.C.M.J.

The freedom of every citizen is in serious jeopardy when our "great lawmakers" in the Congress can, on a spur of the moment, punish citizens for a non-offense in order to appeal to some pressure group—like NOW. It would seem that the only criterion for a "crime" today is not being politically correct. Not surprisingly, most of our great "lawmakers" in the Congress, who have such a roaring contempt for any semblance of civilized justice, are themselves, lawyers. Like Pat Schroeder!

The French have a good word for it: "Elan." A certain dash, a devil-may-care attitude. In past wars soldiers with elan held a cavalry saber in the right hand and the reins of a horse in the left. In the twentieth century, the right hand was on the "stick" and the left hand was on the "throttle." The "beast" has changed, but we still mount from the left side.

It should be noted that only the upper five percent of the population actually possess the mental and physical ability to mount the modern charger. When one considers that military aviation is extremely dangerous—one can easily be killed in peace time as in war time—a retiree from a career in military aviation is really a survivor. One can remember a great many friends and comrades who were killed in the world's most dangerous profession.

The most dangerous part of military aviation is done by the Navy and Marine boys who fly off carriers. The U.S. Navy routinely loses an average of eighty personnel and one-hundred aircraft to carrier operations each year.

I WANTED WINGS.

Chorus:
I wanted wings till I got the god damned things,
Now I don't want them any more.

Now, I'm too young to die in a lousy PBY,
That's for the eager not for me.
I don't trust to my luck to be picked up by a duck,

After I've crashed into the sea;
Yes, I'd rather be a tarrier than a flyer on a carrier,
With my hand around a bottle, you can keep your god damned throttle, Buster...

Chorus:

They feed us lousy chow but we stay alive somehow,
On dehydrated eggs and milk and stew.
The rumor has it next they'll be dehydrating sex,
And that's the day I'll tell the coach I'm through;

For I've managed all the dangers, the shooting back of strangers,
But when I get home late, I want my woman straight, Buster...
Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

All things considered, an American with a high degree of mental and physical ability has to be slightly crazy to willingly embark on a career in military aviation. He could do far better financially and probably live much longer as a civilian. However, it's a rather selective madness that makes a good military pilot. In fact, the more of these special "crazies" a nation has, the better chance it has of winning a war in the air. The real crazies that somehow manage to survive in combat tend to inspire the less crazies and even the slightly nuts to achieve success in air warfare. Frankly speaking, one would have to be a certifiable nut case to attempt some of the tactics that have proven successful in air combat. Why, a normal level-headed—SANE—human being would say, "THAT'S CRAZY!" and never try it.

This select brotherhood of crazies knows no borders. That's why airmen from different nations get along rather well—they tend to recognize a kindred spirit in the other fellow. In fact, one could get quite drunk with the other fellows at the bar and even develop a friendship with the other guys as drinking buddies. And then kill him in air combat if the fortunes of one's nation leads to a war with his nation. Or...he may very well kill you.

German "Aces" of the Second World War are always shunned by the American media when they come to this country. Of course, they get a standing ovation from American airmen when they speak before military organizations. Those applauding the loudest may even have been shot down by these same German "Aces" or had friends killed by these men. It's a fine madness that the American media will never quite understand.

When they interview airmen, the bloody fools of the media are tossed the usual "War Is Hell" bone to gnaw on—so they can thoroughly enjoy emoting on "man's inhumanity to man." They just love it.

TRUTH: WAR IS FUN! SAC IS HELL!

I confess! I admit it! I thoroughly enjoyed combat! Or as some fighter pilots during World War One would have stated it:

'Twas a hell of a war as I recall, Parlez vous.
'Twas a hell of a war as I recall, Parlez vous.
'Twas a hell of a war as I recall,
But a whole lot better than none at all!
Hinky Dinky Parlez Vous.

Yes, indeed! With crazy airmen you get booze, broads, silly games and...filthy songs and limericks. IT'S TRADITION!

What better way to address the subject of beastly pilots run amok, than a modest rendition of some of the songs and limericks (truly filthy ones excluded) the beastly fellows have been known to sing—with glasses raised on high—in freezing Quonset Huts or tropical Hootches 'round the globe. How can we expect ol' Cabbage Head Schroeder and the Congress to fully appreciate the true horror of this torrid tale of Paula Coughlin without background music? Given the fact that the American news media is more Hollywood than history, music is most appropriate.

BIEN HOA LULLABY. (My Bonnie Lies Over The Ocean.)

I went off to South East Asia,
To fight my own war in the air.
I've spent half my tour in a bunker,
I don't think that it's really fair.

Chorus:

Roll in, roll in,
My God how the rockets roll in, roll in.
Roll in, roll in,
My God how the rockets roll in.

Each day I go off to fly combat,
Then have a cold beer on the ground.
I usually finish the first one,
Before we get the first round.

Chorus:

And now that my tour is all over,
I'll go back to the life that I led.
My wife thinks that it's rather silly,
To put sandbags all 'round the bed.

Chorus:

TWO: PINCUS PAULA.

When dealing with the infamous American News Media, the intelligent American must always remember the infamous "Pincus Principle."

The "Pincus Principle"? Well...for those who have never heard of the Pincus Principle, let me explain:

The Pincus Principle was created by one Mark Pincus in an article he wrote for the Columbia School of Journalism. In this article, Mark, the Creator sayeth: Brothers and sisters of the media! Ink-stained wretches of journalism! Electronic "Anchor Pairs", Tweedle DIMS and Tweedle DUMBS of the TUBE! Lend me your ears! We need not lie to the American public to make our news politically correct. No, brothers and sisters, we need only leave out those unpalatable facts that are not politically correct when reporting the news to make the news politically correct.

In short, what the professional liar Pincus was saying is this: 5 plus 5 plus 5 plus 5 plus 5 equals: 5! That is, if one leaves "5 plus 5 plus 5 plus 5" out of the addition. If the story doesn't add up to POLITICALLY CORRECT, one can always leave out the facts that have produced this unpalatable result.

A professional liar named Pincus,
A media crud most salacious.
Invented a Dragon that peed in a flagon,
Three Trolls and a goat quite fallacious.

He said that his creatures were true,
The TUBE will confirm it for you.
And a media liar, has the right to conspire,
In sticking it to...YOU KNOW WHO!

The Pincus Principle is not new. It used to be called, "Distortion by omission," or "All the news that fits," the motto a former editor of the New York Times said should replace that monumental FIB on the paper's masthead: "All The News That's Fit To Print."

Unfortunately, the long-suffering American public is condemned to ingesting only the choice bits and pieces of news after they have been vetted by the media as politically correct. Let's give credit where it is due. Our "Great American News Media"—that's what they call themselves—is a charming bunch that is considered by most reputable historians on the planet as the greatest collection of professional liars in history.

Like the infamous Rodney King video, the truth of the matter is all those juicy bits and pieces that were discarded as not politically correct by our glorious media. The jury got all the facts—they saw the whole video—added them up and said: TWENTY-FIVE. For months our media mathematicians had been telling us that the Rodney King video only added up to FIVE.

BLESS 'EM ALL.

Bless 'em all, bless 'em all,
The needle, the airspeed the ball.
Bless all the instructors, who taught me to fly,
Sent me up solo and left me to die.
So if ever your blow jet should stall,
You're in for one hell of a fall.
No lilies or violets for dead fighter pilots,
So cheer up my lads, Bless 'em all.

Bless 'em all, bless 'em all,
The long and the short and the tall.
Bless all the Pols, the ass-kissin' ones,
Bless all the media and their rosy chapped buns.
Cause we're sayin' good bye to them all,
The long and the short and the tall.
We'll never get justice, from the gutless and nutless,
So cheer up my lads, bless 'em all.

We need not despair. In the case of Paula Coughlin, one of the few remaining facets of the media that is not yet part of the MEDIA MONOLITH managed to do an interview with precious Paula and actually published a great many juicy bits and pieces that had been judiciously discarded by our politically correct media.

Paula Coughlin did an interview for the Navy Times that was published on 6 July 1992. It shows our precious and delicate WATER LILY in a whole new light. And although this interview is Precious Paula's self-serving rendition of her unspeakable horror, some of the juicy bits and pieces in her interview come crashing to the steel deck of our ship like a truck load of ANVILS.

THREE: THE PERILS OF PAULA.

Let's take a trip through the media's melodrama featuring our fragile heroine and the beastly fighter jocks. However, this time we'll make some additions to the media's script. We'll just add a few choice bits and pieces from our Paula's interview in the Navy

Times, along with a few drops of George Orwell's "Heresy of all heresies" in this media tyranny: COMMON SENSE.

DRINKIN' RUM AND COCA COLA.

Chorus:

Drinkin' rum and coca cola,
Go down to Walhalla.
Both mother and daughter,
Workin' for the Yankee dollar.

Out in Vegas, it's mighty clear,
Navy broads don't go for gin or beer.
They won't play and they won't sin,
And you're gonna lose your good conduct pin.

Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

Let me see now... According to Paula in her Navy Times interview: Our brave Paula decides to leave her hotel and go over to the Hilton where some fighter squadrons are having a party on the third floor. Or, if you're a "navel," the "third deck."

So Paula takes off her uniform, throws on a "tank top" and a "jean skirt," and sets out to crash the parties at the Hilton. It's about 2300 hrs. (11 P.M.)

Sounds O.K. so far. Of course, a tank top and a skirt was a bad choice, in that, it's almost "The Uniform of the Day"—AND NIGHT—for the hordes of hookers working in Vegas.

Our precious Paula arrives on the third deck where all the parties are going full blast. She mills about at the parties and goes out on the patio looking for someone she might know.

Wait a minute. It's kinda strange, isn't it, that our delicate flower didn't feel the least bit offended by the rowdy parties that were going on?

Well, why should she? Our fragile flower had been to the Tailhook Convention in 1985—when she was going through flight training—and she had even visited the third deck where the fighter squadrons always rent suites and host late night drinking parties.

Now, the Tailhook Convention of 1985 was much the same as the unspeakable Tailhook Convention of 1991. Uh...with this notable exception: In 1985 our Paula joined in the partying with her pals where she said she "drank beer" and "had a good time."

Yeah, I know, the question that absolutely begs to be asked: Was there a "Gauntlet" at the parties in 1985 where females were playfully pawed? You can bet your butt on it!

The unspeakable "gauntlet" is something of a tradition at Tailhook parties; wherein, those females wanting to join the open house and open bar had to run the "gauntlet." That is, unless they were married, or escorted, or pain in the ass PARTY POOPERS.

It would seem that in the heat of battle, the Navels and the Gyrenes misread our Paula and tried to play games with one of the great POOPERS of all time: a WET BLANKET large enough to cover the entire Pentagon!

LET'S HAVE A PARTY!

Chorus:

Parties make the world go 'round,
World go 'round, world go 'round.
Parties make the world go 'round...
Let's have a party!

Now, we're gonna tear down the bar in the officer's club.—Boo!

We're gonna build us a new bar.—RAY!
It's only gonna be one foot wide.—BOO!
But it's gonna be a mile long.—RAY!
There's gonna be no bartenders at our bar.—BOO!
There's only gonna be barmaids.—RAY!
Our barmaids will wear long dresses.—BOO!
Out of Cellophane.—RAY!
You can't take our barmaids to your bunks.—BOO!
They take you to their bunks.—RAY!
You can't sleep with our barmaids.—BOO!
They don't let you sleep.—RAY!
Soda's gonna be ten bucks a glass.—BOO!
Whiskey...FREE! RAY!
Only one to each pilot.—BOO!
Served in buckets.—RAY!
We're gonna throw all the beer in the river.—BOO!
And then we'll all go SWIMMING!—RAY!
Now no girls are allowed in the USO hall.—BOO!
With their clothes on.—RAY!
There'll be no lovin' on the dance floor.—BOO!
And no dancin' on the...LOVIN' FLOOR!—RAY!

Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

In 1985 our Paula joined in the party with her pals and had a "good time." However, in her 1991 sortie to the third deck, she couldn't find anyone she knew so she couldn't have a good time.

Our glorious news media has described the third deck as a cross between a Bacchanalia—replete with orgies—and a gang rape! Easy enough for them, THEY WEREN'T THERE! But, that's standard practice for our "Make-believe News Rooms."

Now what did our fragile flower say about the festivities? Well, according to the celestial word of Paula: "It was a mob scene. It was a big, huge cocktail party....Loud music, a lot of people standing around with cocktails and beers."

WHAT! No rape? No circus? No Christians being thrown to the lions? No gladiators hacking away at each other? Sounds like any other convention. Er...Southern Baptists excepted.

Not finding anyone she knew, our Paula went back towards the elevator. On the way she looked down the hall and saw, "...a group of Naval and Marine officers talking. Some of them had beer in their hands....I thought it was just the overflow from the suites. So I thought, well, I'll go down there, check it out and see who's there." It was at this point that our Paula walked into the "Gauntlet" and apparently encountered the world's largest...GOOSE! WHOOOOOOPS! Our gal was goosed with the force of a steam catapult flinging a fighter aircraft off the deck of an aircraft carrier! She...she..became..AIRBORNE! As she stated it, the man "just grabbed my behind and lifted me off the floor."

Paula's response to being launched into the blue: "What the 'blank' do you think you're doing?" In fact, she does quite a lot of "blanking" in her interview. Whatever the "blank" a "blank" means?

She also did a lot of kicking and biting and fighting. Our Paula is far from being a fragile flower. As she stated it so eloquently in her interview, "...I'm strong as shit. I can do 100 pushups without stopping." So our Water Lily—in the PUNK hair-cut—is really a Cypress.

GEORGE ORWELL REPORT TO THE BRIDGE!

Paula continues: "I knew I was in serious trouble. At this point I really figured I was going to get gang raped." W H 0 A ! How about a little Orwellian "Common Sense" in this media scenario.

Paula, dear Paula, how in hell were you going to get "gang raped" in a crowded hallway with men and women tromping back and forth through the so-called "gauntlet"? As you said yourself, "I thought it was just the overflow from the suites." Got a bit carried away with your torrid tale, didn't you?

The "gang raped" bandwagon got kinda crowded at the Tailhook, with dizzy broads yelling: "Me too. Me too. Me too." after they had been asked by our salivating news media if they "thought they might be gang raped." Of course, most of these broads admitted that they had not been touched by anyone—so it was kind of a "mental gang rape." No doubt I'll be accused of giving them a "mental back-hand"—even though I wasn't there. I guess they figured: well, after-all, somewhere, someone must want to gang rape me.

As recounted in a Fox T.V. interview on "A Current Affair": It seems that two gals named Stacey and Kim walked right through the infamous "gauntlet" of beastly pilots and "neither of them felt they had been treated inappropriately." Nor did they see any other females subjected to what they considered abuse. According to Stacey, "It was definitely the most rowdy party I had ever been to."

Stacey, dear Stacey, that is precisely what it was supposed to be. Fighter parties are rowdy parties. Always have been. Hopefully, they always will be. That is, unless our great chorus of Congressional CASTRATOS go a cappella with the feminuts and write even more asinine regulations than they already have written.

AIR FORCE LAMENT. (Battle Hymn of the Republic.)

Mine eyes have seen the days of men who ruled the fighting skies,
With hearts that laughed at death and lived for nothing but to fly.
But now those hearts are grounded and those days are long gone by,
THE FORCE IS SHOT TO HELL!

Chorus:

Glory flying regulations,
Have them read at all the stations.
Burn the ass of those that break them,
THE FORCE IS SHOT TO HELL!

We were cocky, bold and happy when we played the angel's game,
We split the blue with buzzing and we rolled our way to fame.
But now that's all verboten and we're all so gosh-dern tame,
THE FORCE IS SHOT TO HELL!

Chorus:

So now mine eyes are dim with tears for happy days of old,
We loved to take our chances for our hearts were young and bold.
From now on we have no choice but live to be quite old,
THE FORCE IS SHOT TO HELL!

Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

In the course of her friendly tussle with the fighter jocks, our "Strong As Shit" Paula said that a young officer yelled "Admiral's aide, Admiral's aide." According to our powerful Paula, this guy was the "Master of Ceremonies," responsible for giving "wave offs" to abort the friendly fondling of broads entering the gauntlet.

Naw, you silly broad. You don't know crap about the Navy, do you? That guy was the LSO, the Landing Signal Officer, not some silly-assed MC.

Paula moans, "It was an organized sport, without a doubt." No shit Paula! Tell me what isn't organized in the military? You're in the military, not the Democrat Party, ya' know.

Another media delight made an appearance on CBS's "HARD COPY" as a certifiable "molestee." She was introduced as Susanne Hallet, "Party Victim." I guess that's something like "AIDS Victim," but instead of Elizabeth Taylor, you get Anita Hill. And, of course, the usual rock concert for all the other "victims."

Now, this dizzy broad claims that there were two to three thousand men and less than a hundred women at the party. That would certainly require the use of a PARTY COMPACTOR to compress that many people into the halls and suites on the third floor.

One wonders who all these people were. The Tailhook Symposium had only three thousand people in attendance and most of them left immediately after the symposium ended. However, a modest tenfold increase in any number on CBS almost approaches "accuracy" in today's television media.

According to "Party Victim" Hallett, women were routinely "violated".....with "stickers." Which means that various squadron logos were stuck or pinned on some women—none of whom complained about it!

It seems our Suzy wasn't "pinned." How very frustrating. Our gal and her pals specifically went to the party in hopes of meeting some young fighter jocks. As stated by our Suzy: "Deep down I'm thinking, maybe some day I'll marry one of these pilots and have a good life."

Clearly...this female...has been seeing too many movies. Guys at conventions aren't really looking to get engaged. Not even Southern Baptists. A lot are looking for another kind of girl...

There once was a hooker named Gail,
'Tween her tits was the price of her tail.
And on her behind, for the sake of the blind,
Was the same information in Braille.

According to her interview, after her ordeal in the "gauntlet," our Paula returns to the elevator and.... Wait a minute! I don't know how well you did in map reading, Paula, but in floor plan reading you flunk. If you went back to the elevator...you must have gone back through the "gauntlet." So we must assume that those terrible fighter jocks didn't bother this SAS (Strong As Shit) broad when she went back through the "gauntlet" to the elevator.

Our Paula gets in the elevator and she says two other women jumped in behind her. Naturally, they are both "Party Victims" of the beastly fighter jocks. So the three of them commiserate and.... Hell! I can't resist it!

THREE OLD MAIDS.

Chorus:

Oh, dear, what can the matter be,
Three old maids were locked in the lavatory.
They were there from Monday to Saturday,
Nobody knew they were there.

The first lady's name was Elizabeth Porter,
She was the Bishop of Chichester's daughter.
Who went to get rid of some old virgin water,
And nobody knew she was there.

Chorus:

The second lady's name was Elizabeth Humphery,
Who went for a pee and could not get her bum free.
She said, "Oh dear, this is really quite comfy,"
And nobody knew she was there.

Chorus:

The third lady's name was Elizabeth Bender,
Who went to adjust a broken suspender.
And got it mixed up with her feminine gender,
And nobody knew she was there.

Chorus:

FOUR: POST PARTY SYNDROME.

Having narrowly escaped being, as she said, "gang raped" on the third deck, did our SAS broad call the police? Naw, she walked around by herself, and then she....GOT IN THE ELEVATOR AND WENT BACK TO THE THIRD FLOOR! Where she...WALKED AROUND! SOME VICTIM!

This time Paula finds a friend, Lt. Michael Steed. They go out to the patio and sit on the grass, where Coughlin complains about the "gauntlet." Of course, the gauntlet is still going on, but our Paula doesn't take any action to stop it. She's Admiral Snyder's aide and if the gauntlet was so horrible, why didn't she try and get in touch with the Admiral and tell him about it? Steed is the aide to an even more senior Admiral, why doesn't she ask him to do something? SHE DOES NOTHING!

She and Steed go back to the elevator and down to the casino restaurant, where, according to Coughlin, they talk about the gauntlet. But she says that she never described the specifics to Steed. Why the hell not? Could it be that the infamous gauntlet was little more than an irritation at that time and it would have to stew in her ministration juices before it became a cause celebre?

After coffee with Steed, Coughlin returns to her hotel and goes to bed. The next morning, she calmly checks on separate flights for the Admiral and herself. She then calls Admiral Snyder. She says nothing about the party or the gauntlet until he asks, "How was the third deck last night?" This sets Coughlin off and she sweetly replies, "It stunk. I was practically gang-banged by a group of f.....g F-18 pilots."

"F.....g F-18 pilots?" Shocking, Paula! But now we know what all the previous "blanks" in your interview were all about.

About a thousand years ago, I spent a tour of duty in the U.S. Navy during the Korean War. I was stationed out of Norfolk, Virginia on sea duty and committed to those three great military disciplines: BOOZE, BROADS, BRAWLS. (Usually in that order.) So I cannot understand why those Navy jocks didn't instantly recognize the obvious refinement of an East Main Street Finishing School and realize that they were dealing with a "blanking" Ossifer and a Lady. And a SAS one at that!

Shocking language Paula, but since you insist:

BATTLE HYMN. (Battle Hymn of the Republic.)

We fly our f.....g aircraft at 10,000 f.....g feet,

We fly our f.....g aircraft through the rain and snow and sleet.
And though we think we're flying south,
We're flying f.....g north.
And we make our f.....g landfall on the fifth of f.....g forth.

Chorus:

Glory, glory hallelujah, glory, glory hallelujah,
Glory, glory hallelujah,
And we bust our f.....g asses when we hit the f.....g ground.

We fly our f.....g aircraft at 1,000 f..k all hundred feet,
We fly our f.....g aircraft through the trees and corn and wheat.
And though we think we fly with skill, we fly with f.....g luck.
But we don't give a f.....g damn or care a f.....g f..k.

Chorus:

We fly our f.....g aircraft at 1,000 f.....g feet,
We fly our f.....g aircraft through the rain and snow and sleet.
And though we think we're flying up, we're flying f.....g down.
And we bust our f.....g asses when we hit the f.....g ground.

Chorus:

It's not surprising that the Admiral doesn't take Paula's claim to have been "practically gang-banged" seriously. One would have to be a moron to believe that poor SAS Coughlin, or anyone else, could be "gang-banged" in the middle of a party while Naval officers and their wives calmly stood about chatting and sipping drinks.

Admiral Snyder does what anyone would have done. He tries to sympathize with Coughlin on the phone and he says that he will discuss it when they meet for breakfast. At breakfast Coughlin says, "They were so out of line I can't tell you how out of control. I mean I kicked and bit and fought my way out of that hallway."

According to Coughlin, the Admiral responds: "That's what you get when you go on the third deck full of drunk aviators."

ROGER THAT! If Coughlin went to a pool party, she'd probably complain if she got splashed.

Coughlin returns to duty and stews in her feminut juices for nearly a week before she launches her private war on the U.S. Navy. Well...at least it wasn't ten years like Anita Hill.

She says that she brought up the subject a couple of times and was "shot down" by Admiral Snyder. Once she said, "You know, Admiral, I don't want a witch hunt. Wait a minute! I want a god damn witch hunt! I'm going to find those guys and hang them. Those cretins should not be Naval Officers."

W R 0 N G ! Those fighter jocks are what the Navy is all about Coughlin. You're the one that doesn't belong in the Navy.

The mission of the United States Navy is the same as the mission of the U.S. Army, the U.S. Marines and the U.S. Air Force: DEATH AND DESTRUCTION. The only reason we have a military is to kill and destroy our enemies. That's it! It is death and destruction—or the threat of same—that makes any military of service to any nation. I think it's best stated in the maxim of the Air Force's Tactical Air Command: "Your mission is to fly and fight—and never forget it."

Coughlin, no one understands the mission of the military better than those fighter jocks.

YOU CAN TELL A FIGHTER PILOT.

(Battle Hymn of the Republic.)

By the ring around his eyeball, You can tell a bombardier.
You can tell a bomber pilot, By the spread around his rear.
You can tell a navigator, By his sextant, maps and such.
You can tell a fighter pilot, BUT YOU CAN'T TELL HIM MUCH!

NOW HEAR THIS COUGHLIN:

The mission of the United States Navy is not to provide Paula Coughlin with an interesting career of travel and adventure. The mission of the United States Navy is not to provide Paula Coughlin with a snappy uniform. The mission of the United States Navy is not to teach Paula Coughlin to fly a helicopter. The mission of the United States Navy is to visit death and destruction on the enemies of the United States of America. All the ancillary services, including your small effort, Coughlin, are to facilitate the killing and destruction of our enemies—and those fighter jocks are the leading edge of the weapon that will kill and destroy.

On the other hand, you are only in the Navy as a political expedient. You and all the other dizzy broads have been forced on the Navy by that great DUNG HEAP on the Potomac, the Congress.

But hell, Coughlin, You're now the heroine of the entire military hating news media. Aren't you? And you're loved by all the liberal creeps in the Congress who would cheerfully disarm this nation—as they have done so many times in the past—so we can return to that good old American tradition of sending Americans into combat with junk.

I well remember those days, Coughlin: Flying aircraft that were literally falling apart; having to "cannibalize" one piece of junk to keep another piece of junk in the air. What fun! And most of all I remember a lot of loyal Americans who died doing the dirty and dangerous job of defending this nation with junk. They willingly risked their lives out of a sense of loyalty to the nation, the people, and the Air Force. But you wouldn't know anything about that, Coughlin, would you? You've made it painfully clear that your only loyalty is to...YOU!

Well, you'll get what you want. When your adoring creeps in the Congress use your TANTRUM to slash Naval appropriations, you'll really get even with fighter jocks: you'll kill 'em, Coughlin! They'll die in worn-out fighters. "Aces" for Paula Coughlin!

While we're on the subject, since your only loyalty is to your own precious behind, maybe you had better think about getting out of Naval aviation. With all the "Coughlin Cut-Backs," even your job could get very dangerous. Now, a smart gal like you who takes good care of number one doesn't want to get killed flying a "chopper" that should have gone to the scrap yard years before. Right?

Hell, I can remember back to those bad ol' days when some of our old, worn-out aircraft developed a very nasty habit of blowing up in mid-air!

WILL YOU GO BOOM TODAY? (Ta-rah-rah Boom-de-Ay)

Chorus:

Will you go boom today, will you go boom today?
Two blew up yesterday, we haven't long to stay.

If you fly an 89,
You must be deaf, dumb and blind,
For your life ain't worth a dime;
What's your scheduled blow-up time?

Chorus:

If you fly a 94,
You should never holler more.
For your lot we do not pine,
It's better than an 89. (True, very true.)

Chorus:

If you fly an 86,
You'll have wings like broken sticks,
Suddenly you'll see a glare,
You'll be pieces everywhere.

Chorus:

If you fly a plane at all,
You're too high in case you fall.
Better just forget the plane,
Take a boat or go by train.

Chorus:

TAKE A TRAIN COUGHLIN.

☆ ☆ ☆

NOW HEAR THIS! NOW HEAR THIS...

Now...what was Paula Coughlin's famous quote? Oh, yeah. "I want to tell this story once. I want everyone to hear it, understand it, and then let's move on."

NO WAY, COUGHLIN! You created this mess and you will certainly wear it around your neck as long as you are in the military! You will be remembered by the Navy, the Army, the Marines and the Air Force. YOU WILL NEVER LIVE IT DOWN! You've already become part of the military lexicon, and every time one of your sisters in service goes into her monthly snit and shrieks "sexual harassment" just to get some attention, it'll be called "PULLING A COUGHLIN."

☆ ☆ ☆

With the able assistance of Paula Coughlin, Field Marshal, Air Marshal, Fleet Admiral Patsy Schroeder may even get her ultimate Feminut KNICKER-DRENCHER and force the military to accept females in combat. Where they will have to learn one of the primary rules of warfare: If you can't do your job we pay for it in casualties.

Rear Admiral Hill recently pointed out a real problem we will have with broads in combat. He noted that a helicopter squadron (Coughlin's job) had fourteen broads in it. Eleven of whom were pregnant! And only one of Coughlin's knocked-up counterparts was married!

Question: How many casualties will it cost us if that squadron had to be sent into combat short fourteen trained personnel?

Question: How in hell can anyone plan personnel needs when any female in the squadron may become pregnant at any time?

In the past, a shortage of clerk-typists didn't cost us one damned casualty, but the next military action we will certainly have a run on BODY BAGS.

During Jimmy Carter's four years of blundering, Gen. Singlaub had to drop everything and airlift a collection of Coughlin's hysterical service sisters out of Korea to Japan when Jimmy's blundering almost got Korean War Number Two started. It may astonish Field Marshal Schroeder, but those broads weren't the least bit eager to go into combat. Just the threat of a possible military action made them all quite hysterical. Fortunately, their jobs weren't the least bit important and they didn't cost us any needless casualties.

One can well imagine what will happen when all the Coughlins, with all their childish petulance, are caught up in a military action and all their petty tantrums turn to terror. It ain't gonna be nice. But it will sure as hell prove that broads don't belong in combat. After paying a terrible price in blood for the grand Feminut experiment, the American people will make sure that females will never be sent into combat again.

The worst thing that can happen to a soldier in combat is to be responsible for the death of his comrades. So it's a very nasty thing that Field Marshal, Air Marshal, Fleet Admiral Schroeder is going to do to the females in the military. But, what can you expect from a large, green vegetable?

The broads may wear the flight suits and think they can do the job in combat, but their past performance in military actions tells us they can't hack it.

"G" SUITS AND PARACHUTES. (Bell Bottom Trousers.)

Once there was a barmaid, down in brewery lane,
Her master was so kind to her, her mistress was the same.
Along came a pilot, as handsome as could be,
Alas he was the cause of all her misery.

Chorus:

Singing "G" suits and parachutes,
And uniforms of blue.
He flew a fighter aircraft,
Just like his daddy used to do.

The moral of this story is clear as it can be,
Never trust a pilot an inch above the knee.
The barmaid trusted one and he went off to fly,
Leaving her a daughter to help the time go by.

Chorus:

Singing "G" suits and parachutes,
And uniforms of blue.
She'll never fly a fighter,
Like her daddy used to do.

FOUR: FUN!

The Tailhook boys threw a wild party because its been a tradition with aviators that dates back to the First World War. I have a great many fond memories of some rowdy parties, wherein, the bill for the booze is always accompanied by the larger bill for the damages. So, far from being a disgrace, banning the Tailhook boys from further conventions and accommodations at the Hilton in Vegas may even be a feather in their caps. Indeed, they boast that at one convention they were thrown out of Mexico.

Small potatoes. The "Navels" have always lagged far behind the Air Force in organized rowdyism. Being tossed out of a hotel in Mexico pales into insignificance when compared to even a modest Air Force party. For example: One can truly take justifiable pride in the rowdiness of one's fellow aviators, when all officers and gentlemen of the squadron have been declared persona non grata...at a North African whorehouse. FOR LIFE! One's chest swells with pride over that accolade.

DRINKIN' RUM AND COCA COLA.

Since the Air Force came to Sidi Slimane,
The girls out there have gone insane.
Their mothers say, "Now girls, treat them nice,
Give them more at half the price."

Chorus:

Drinkin' rum and coca cola,
Go down to Walhalla,
Both mother and daughter,
Workin' for the Yankee dollar.

In French Morocco it's mighty clear,
A Frenchman gets just one can of beer.
But we are as lucky as we can be,
We get wine and women and VD.

Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

Party time in the military usually happens in places that would be OFF LIMITS to the broads now in the service. That's because the military is a brotherhood of soldiers and not some damned co-ed college. In war and in peace, the professional soldiers set up "operations" in run-down bars and brothels around the world. The continent may change, the whores may be different, and aside from the universal stink of urine, the smell may even be different; but I'll be damned if it's not the same hole you got drunk in on the other side of the world.

Parties in these places can be rowdy and rough; and even quite dangerous, since fights are inevitable.

Take this large bar and whorehouse in French Algiers: A popular place, it was smoky...and noisy...but relatively peaceful...for a bar and a whorehouse. Until some Aussies walked in and found some Kiwis; naturally there was a fight!

They were having at it when some Brits came in. So the Aussies and the Kiwis joined forces and thumped the hell out of the Tommies.

Having vanquished the Brits, they celebrated by tossing some Arabs out the window. This brought the French Foreign Legion to the scene. There could have been one hell of a fight, but the Legionnaires were all Germans, so they all sat 'round drinking beer. Everybody hates the Frogs!

It's laughable to think that Paula and her pals actually think that some day they will become real soldiers; become part of a profession that has probably changed very little since Roman Legionnaires walked the same streets as those German legionnaires in the French Foreign Legion. And chances are the Roman Legionnaires were also Germans.

Dizzy broads like Coughlin have forced themselves into locker rooms, board rooms and men's clubs, and now they want to force themselves into the world of the professional soldier. They'll never do it, because it's a world where they will never fit in.

Military operations during a war could be a tent, a shack, a hootch or a bunker. The "Crapper": a line of 55 gallon drums. The "Shower": a canvas bag of water—if you're lucky—or a helmet full of water. It will not work!

Still they persist. And like frustrated, spoiled brats, they attack what they can't become part of, and since fighter pilots so clearly represent a bastion of male dominance in the military, they're a natural target of the gutless in the media and the nutless in the military.

SAVE A FIGHTER PILOT'S ASS.

Chorus:

Oh Hallelujah, Oh Hallelujah,
Throw a nickel on the grass, save a fighter pilot's ass.
Oh Hallelujah, Oh Hallelujah
Throw a nickel on the grass and you'll be saved.

I was cruising down the Yalu,
Doing six and twenty per,
When a call came from the Major,
Oh won't you save me sir?
Got three flak holes in my wing tips,
And my tanks ain't got no gas,
Mayday, Mayday, Mayday,
I got six Migs on my ass!

chorus:

It was split S on my bomb run,
And I got too god damned low,
But I pressed that bloody button,
And I let those babies go.
Sucked the stick back fast as blazes,
When I hit a high speed stall,
Now I won't see my mother
When the work's all done next fall.

Chorus:

Then they sent me down to Pyongyang,
The brief said no ack ack,
But by the time that I arrived there,
my wings was mostly flak.
Then my engine coughed and sputtered,
It was too cut up to fly,
Mayday, Mayday, Mayday,
I'm too young to die!

Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

FIVE: AND GAMES!

It's kinda funny how appalled the media and the pols were over the Navy boy's game of "Gauntlet." Hell, there are scores of games that have been devised by airmen. And some of these games even date back to the First World War. Not surprisingly, games devised by airmen during wars are very rowdy, very rough, and at times even dangerous. Though, off hand, I can't think of any fatalities. And that includes a drinks "bounty" on rats killed in the bunker—with 45s.

Now a charming Air Force "drinks" game called "DEAD BUG" has been known to produce some injuries; and a few guys have been burned drinking "AFTER BURNERS"; but a few broken bones and some burns are all the casualties these games have cost the military.

Of course, our British counterparts in the RAF have their own games, like "Gully, Gully, Whompers," and I must assume that they have sustained about the same number of "losses" as the U.S. Air Force. As in: "I say chaps...I think I've broken my leg." He did!

Aside from the common language, the U.S. Air Force, the RAF, the RCAF, the Aussies and the Kiwis and the South Africans, have a lot more in common: the songs.

JOLLY JOLLY ENGLAND.

Oh, I don't want to be an airman,
I don't want to go to war.

I just want to hang around, Piccadilly, ON THE GROUND!
And live off the earnings of a high class lady.

I don't want to join the Air Force,
Don't want my buttocks shot away.
I just want to live in England, jolly, jolly England,
And fornicate me friggin' life away.

Media suspicions confirmed: It's not only junior officers who play the games and sing the songs. Oh the shame of it all! Air Force Generals and "Battle of Britain" Air Marshals have even been known to sing the "naughty" song and play the rowdy games—IN FULL DRESS UNIFORMS.

British broads have a far better sense of party humor than their American cousins. That's why so many airmen have British wives. In any event, the Brit broads are willing participants in Air Force and RAF fun and games. Games like...oh..."Footprints On The Ceiling."

This is a challenging game, wherein, one must imprint one's footprints on the ceiling of the club. Not an easy task, especially in Great Britain where the "O"-Clubs are in old buildings with extremely high ceilings. This naturally requires a great deal of planning, engineering, and a human pyramid high enough and strong enough to sustain the top man who must perform while inverted.

Of course, there is that other factor: this sizeable engineering feat must be performed by a motley crew of Brits and Yanks who have consumed a small ocean of beer and lager. An all important factor that has made this game notable for its many failures and few successes.

Like the French Foreign Legion that takes pride in its military failures—where Legionnaires have fought to the death—rather than its military victories, the game of "Footprints On The Ceiling" will always be remembered for the courageous act of one feisty British barmaid who insisted on planting her footprints on the ceiling of the "O"-Club. And in order to make this occasion a truly memorable one, this splendid female had secretly dropped her knickers before the attempt.

Although she failed in the attempt, she achieved immortality in the annals of the R.A.F. and the U.S. Air Force. Indeed, whenever her courageous attempt is mentioned amongst airmen, tradition requires that they stand at attention by their bar stools...and render a salute! GOD BLESS HER!

IT'S A SHYME.

We were comfy back in England,
Drinking beer and ale and wine.
When they slipped it to us greasy,
And shipped us out to the front line.

Chorus:

It's a shyme the whole world over,
It's a shyme around the map.
The civilians gets the gravy,
While the Air Force gets the crap!

Now, we were young and we were eager,
Ten more missions and we're home;
But they goosed us without warning, WHOOOPS!
Sent us flying cross the foam.

Chorus:

As we flew over Windsor Castle,
And saluted all the whores.
We got it up the ass hole,
And we're far from Britain's shores.

Chorus:

So we fly our stinking aircraft,
And we're risking our lives.
While the crud ass type our orders,
Are a-shacking with our wives.

Chorus:

So, as you sit amidst your family,
Blessed be the tie that binds,
Say a prayer for the Air Force,
What got it rammed up their behinds.
Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

It's only natural that airmen devise games that are challenging—and fight like hell to win. Fighting and winning are part of the breed, and it matters little if you're fighting the enemy or the guys from the other squadron. Indeed, "bouncing" a guy from another squadron and sayin' "GOTCHA!" on the radio is almost as satisfying as shooting down an enemy pilot.

The competition can get quite fierce when two fighter squadrons are forced to share the same field and the same "O"-Club.

On one memorable occasion a formal challenge was issued for a tug-of-war at the 0-Club between two fighter squadrons. There was cheating! I must admit that our bunch did tie the rope to a column in the club, while those cheatin' bastards in the other squadron actually tied their end to a Jeep in the parking lot. Now, how dishonest can you get?

This resulted in a great deal of groaning coming from the building, along with the stench of burning rubber as the Jeep spun its tires out in the parking lot. It was a tie.

BLESS 'EM ALL.

Bless 'em all, bless 'em all,
The long and the short and the tall.
Bless old man Lockheed for building this jet,
But I know a guy who is cursing him yet,
For he tried to go over the wall,
With his tip tanks, his tailpipes and all,
The needles did cross and the wings did come off...
Cheer up, my lads, bless 'em all.

Bless 'em all, bless 'em all,
The long and the short and the tall.
Bless all the sergeants and their bloody sons,
Bless all the corporals, the fat-headed ones.
I'm sayin' goodbye to them all,
The long and the short and the tall.
Here's to you and lots others,
You can shove it up, brothers,
I'm goin' back home in the fall.

SIX: PAULA COUGHLIN...WHERE ARE YOU?

A nice sunny afternoon in 1968 I was flying the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Laos as a Forward Air Controller.

A FAC called "in the blind" on the Control Frequency: "All NAIL FACs come up button two." I punched in the frequency and listened in. The FAC was running a set of Navy fighters and one of the wingmen was rattling on about all the bomb craters on the trail. These guys were obviously "diverts;" they had been diverted from an air strike in North Vietnam due to weather, so we used them on the trail.

The youthful wingman rattled on and on...

"Lead...look at those craters. Hot damn! It looks just like the moon! Hey Lead! Did you ever see anything like this?"

When he finally paused for breath, the flight leader came on. "Two."

"Yeah, go ahead lead."

"DON'T YOU KNOW WHERE YOU ARE?"

S I L E N C E !

Well, he was at "Delta 57," or the "Twin Peaks," a charming spot just a hop, skip and a jump down the road from an even more charming place: MU GIA PASS. That young wingman knew what his mission was and he performed it. He just wasn't quite sure where in the hell he was.

Paula Coughlin hasn't the foggiest notion as to the mission of the United States Navy, and to compound her ignorance, she didn't know where she was when she crashed a fighter jocks party.

Our Paula, a Lieutenant in the Navy, was an aide to an Admiral.

The Admiral, he rides in a Motorboat,
The Captain must ride in the Gig.
It don't go a god damn bit faster,
But it makes the old bastard feel big.

We had Paula's counterpart, a Captain in the Air Force and an aide to a General, at—of all places—our Air Commando base at Nakhon Phanom, Thailand.

Oh, there are no fighter pilots up in Wing,
Oh, there are no fighter pilots up in Wing.
Oh, the place is full of brass,
sittin' 'round on their fat ass,
There are no fighter pilots up in Wing.

If the pissed-off Paulas in the military find the fighter jocks at Tailhook rough and raunchy, the Air Commando Wing at "Naked Fanny" would be the ULTIMATE HORROR!

The mission of the Air Commando at N.K.P. (Nakhon Phanom) was the interdiction of the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Laos. Operations were conducted 24 hours a day, seven days a week....for years.

The "O"-Club at N.K.P. was our Officers Mess and our bar. We had "Happy Hours" three times a week and three times that day, since we operated on a 24 hour basis.

It was delightfully rough and raunchy. Not a bad building, but the Thai "Water Festival" had left the wooden floors like a washboard and the door to the office was never replaced. Some Navy guys had the gall to lock themselves in the office and sing the Air Force to sleep with the Navy song on the PA system. Ergo: one smashed door.

We didn't have much in the way of entertainment. The USO had banned us just because some fellow wanted a female entertainer to sing, "Road To Mandalay." Now, can you figure that one? And "Sunshine," the local stripper, was banned by the Chaplain just because a couple of guys got into her act.

Of course, we had the base radio and one could hear some nice music on it—and a lot of numbers. The music would swell to a peak, lofted by the string section...and then diminish to a murmur as a deep...melodious...voice would read a list of numbers.... "Five...twenty...three. Seven...eighty...seven."

These were the numbers of registered hookers who had flunked their weekly check-up with the Flight Surgeon and had some GOD-AWFUL CRUD! Nobody, but nobody, wanted to have a "winning number."

LEE'S HOOCHIE.

I'll mention a name, please remember it well,
The name is Lee's Hoochie, God damn it to hell!
There's a sign at the door says, "All welcome here,
And each Air Force man gets a nice souvenir."

I went to Seoul City, I met a Miss Lee,
She said, "OK, flyboy, you come sleep with me";
She stayed in Lee's Hoochie, a place with hot floors,
I left my shoes outside, I slid shut the doors.

She took off her long johns, she rolled out a pad,
I gave her ten thousand, 'twas all that I had;
Her breath smelled kimchie, her bosoms were flat,
Her middle was hairless, now how about that!

I asked to go benjo, she led me outside,
I reached for old smokey, he crawled back inside;
I rushed to the medics, "What shall I do?"
The doc was dumfounded, old smokey was blue!

When you're in Seoul City, whatever you plan,
Don't go to Lee's Hoochie, sit flat on your can;
Your can may get calloused before you get through,
But better the red ass than old smokey blue.

Into this rarefied atmosphere... Naw, into this RAUNCHY atmosphere, we got an Air Force version of Paula Coughlin.

She was a real "Stateside Reject," If any guy was still yearning to meet a "roundeye" he was cured of it. In addition to that misfortune, her brain was inversely proportional to her ass—and that was ponderous. Had these anatomical features been reversed, the Nobel Prizes for Science, Medicine and Literature would have been hers for the asking.

Like our Paula, this dumb broad hadn't the foggiest notion as to the mission of the United States Air Force. What's even worse, like Paula, she somehow imagined the Air Commando club to be a Country Club. Now, how about that?

As an aide to the General she didn't do much. Primarily because the General didn't do squat-all. So she was given some odd jobs to keep her out of trouble. Someone thought it safe to make her "Protocol Officer," since no one ever came to the base. It should have been "Snow Removal Officer."

Seizing the bit in her teeth, she apparently used a tire iron to leverage her ponderous butt into her Class A uniform. And then she posted her fat rump in front of the door to the club, so she could lecture all us Air Force slobs on the proper uniform we should wear to the Tea Dance—or whatever the hell she thought was going on in there.

Her first and last lecture was with an A-26 pilot who had been bombing and strafing trucks on the trail that night. She was absolutely appalled by his appearance. From south to north: Shower clogs. Blue jeans, ripped off at the knee and tied with a rope. T-shirt, with naughty words on it. Mirror sun glasses. And to complete this vision of sartorial splendor: a jaunty BUM-F..K hat. Hell, I thought he looked kinda spiffy.

Paula's counterpart thought otherwise. However, this chap kindly suggested—with two very succinct words—that she should treat her obvious mental irritation by immediately seeking sexual gratification.

This sent THUNDERBUTT shrieking to the Colonel. And, just like our charming Paula, she said that all pilots were absolute beasts and we didn't belong in the Air Force. She knew just about as much as Paula Coughlin as to the mission of the Air Force or the Navy.

The Colonel begged us to not annoy her. Not for her sake, but for his sake, as he would find it impossible to hold a straight face a second time.

Given the obvious loser status of some of the silly broads who join the military and try to fit their square pegs into all the round holes because they're Feminuts, it's little wonder most Americans find foreign females far more charming than the pushy broads who force themselves into the military where they don't belong and rely on politics to sustain them in a job they can't do.

Oh, there are no fighter pilots in the States.
Oh, there are no fighter pilots in the States.
They are off on foreign shores, making mothers out of whores,
There are no fighter pilots in the states.

☆ ☆ ☆

As a life-long bachelor I can claim a great deal of expertise on the subject of BROADS. With so many great looking broads running about, I always thought it was kind of stupid to enter into an arrangement where one had the same broad hanging around the place all the time. Variety being the spice...and all that. And now as I approach my sixtieth year, I can fully appreciate how very right I was—marriage is just about the only mistake I didn't make.

Broads, along with all of their delightful physical assets—they have few mental assets (most broads are pretty dumb)—also have a plethora of liabilities.

American broads, in particular, have a rather nasty habit of trying to change men. I have never met an American broad who didn't want to change...my military haircut, my clothes, my furniture, my life... My answer: TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT!

Unfortunately, these same dizzy broads now want to change the military and all the men in it. And all of the "alleged" males in the Congress—having nothing in their pants pockets but car keys and loose change—are more than willing to go along with it. These nutless nerds are clearly terrified that some muscular S.A.S. broad from N.O.W. might come stormin' into their office and slap 'em 'round the room! A real possibility with "Strong As Shit" broads who can do "one hundred push-ups without stopping." So, it ain't CHIVALRY that has caused the Congress to grovel before Coughlin, it's COWARDICE!

A word from an expert: Fellow pilots, avoid the American broad. And save your parties for distant shores. Where the women are real women and not pseudo-males.

Where women can actually think for themselves and not just quote Feminut slogans. Where men can behave like men and all pilots proudly stand when they PISS! Of course, there are some risks, but what the hell...

CIGAREETS AND SAKE.

Chorus:

Cigareets and sake and wild, wild josans,
They'll drive you crazy, they'll drive you insane.
Cigareets and sake and wild, wild josans,
They'll drive you crazy, they'll drive you insane.

Now, once I was happy, I had a dear wife,
I had enough yen for to last all my life,
I met with a josan, we went on a spree,
She started me smokin' and drinkin' sake.

Chorus:

I got into bed then, some sleep for to get,
She said, "No sleep, flyboy, I no tired yet."
Well, I woke the next morning a quarter past ten,
I was missing my wallet and ten thousand yen.

Chorus:

Now back in Chitose I'm limping about,
Me and the doctor are sweating it out.
He gave me some pills from a jug on the shelf,
Then he poured out a dozen or two for himself.
Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

It's an old military tradition amongst airmen to not mourn a comrade who has been killed in combat. No, we hold a proper Air Force wake and raise a glass to him.

In the Air Commando at N.K.P., a fellow wanted to be sure that his comrades had a proper wake if he was shot down. So one would put a check in one's personal effects or pinned to a bulletin board to insure a good party.

I kept a hundred bucks in "green" in my effects to insure a good party at the club. With all drinks a quarter and "two-fors" nine times a week, one could stage a hell of a good drunk with a hundred bucks.

One morning I came in at 0300 (3 A.M..) after a night flight on the trail and found a few A-26 guys sitting around. They were very, very quiet, so I knew something was wrong. It turned out that a popular guy, and a friend, had been killed that morning while flying an A-26 mission on the trail. As more guys filed in from flying night missions, they were told our comrade had "bought the farm" and they all sat around quietly drinking.

HELL! That was all wrong! So I went over to the bar and rang the hell out of the bell hanging there and bought a round of drinks in memory of our dead comrade. We toasted him as we should, with glasses raised on high, and the bell rang long and loud until the sun came up that morning.

Our dead friend had a fine wit. And, as a passionate Southerner, he was always giving us damn Yankees hell over the Civil War. So we all laughed as we remembered each and every time he verbally kicked the hell out of us damn Yankees. He was a great guy and he was sorely missed by all the guys at the club.

Our toasts to our dead comrade were getting kinda rowdy by the time the sun came up, and about that time Paula's ponderous counterpart came in for an early breakfast. And, like our Paula, she was a very nosy broad, so she came over to the bar to see what was going on and why we were "celebrating." When she found out...she ran shrieking out the door! Like Paula Coughlin, she didn't understand. And like Paula Coughlin and all other Feminuts, she never will understand.

STAND TO YOUR GLASSES.

Forgot by the land that bore us,
Betrayed by the ones we held dear,
The good have all gone before us
And only the evil are here.
Chorus:
So stand to your glasses, steady,
This world is a world full of lies,
Here's a toast to those dead already,
And here's to the next man who dies

We looped in the purple sunset,
We spun in the silvery dawn,
With a trail of black smoke behind us,
To show where our comrades have gone.

Chorus:

Echoing through the low rafters,
Resounding from the walls so bare,
You can still hear the tears and laughter
Of the dead, for they really are there.

Chorus:

☆ ☆ ☆

SEVEN: IF YA GOT 'EM... FLAUNT 'EM!

In the Garden of Eden sat Adam,
With his hand on the butt of his madam.
He chuckled with mirth, for he knew on this earth,
There were only two balls, and he had 'em.

The Feminuts want it both ways. They want to be females one day and males the next. Kinda "neuterized." With all the advantages of both and none of the disadvantages of either.

Fortunately, most of these silly broads retain large quantities of "The Wild Blue Yonder," 'tween their ears. In short, they're bloody stupid, so they can't defend their silly position.

In point of fact, there is no greater example of this mind-boggling stupidity than their very own "case" for women leading the world.

According to all the leading Feminuts, the world is in such shitty shape because men run things. And the reason men have screwed things up is because men are aggressive. Whereas, all the women of the world are "peaceful." And according to all the leading Feminuts, men will never be peaceful because the aggression in the male is directly related to the male hormone, "Testosterone." In fact, the Feminuts point to scientific studies that make that very connection.

RIGHT ON! I could not agree more! An aggressive attitude is certainly considered as rather anti-social in many professions. Like, hair dressing, interior decorating and too many more to mention. And the Feminuts should know all about that, in that, these professions are usually female professions.

However, an aggressive attitude is a definite asset in the military profession. In fact, if you lack aggression in combat, you will probably end up dead and cause the death of others.

Now, we all know where this nasty aggressive hormone comes from—don't we?—so our leading Feminuts have presented an airtight case for keeping all females out of combat. In short, if you ain't got 'em sister, you sure as hell don't belong in combat!

So Paula and all her Feminut pals—and poor Bates—had better stick to the safety and security of the rear areas during a war, where their lack of aggression will not cost us needless casualties. Who was Bates? Don't you know?

There once was a pirate named Bates,
Who was learning to rumba on skates.
He fell on his cutlass, which rendered him nutless,
And practically useless on dates.

During the Vietnam War that nasty ol' male hormone absolutely infuriated all the N.O.W broads. Along with the undeniable fact that they were all supporting those nice commies in South East Asia.

That nasty male aggressiveness didn't make us very popular with our glorious American News Media, who were also supporting those nice commies in South East Asia. During the war, the commies were the "good guys" and the Americans were the "bad guys," so never a "good word" about the "bad guy" Americans, and never a "bad word" about the "good guy" commies. Naturally, all of us "Yankee Air Pirates" were the BADDEST of the bunch.

Of course, we agreed with them. We were all SHIT HOT BAD ASSES! And just to make the media happy, the nasty Yankee Air Pirates—oozing Testosterone from every pore—wrote this song for them:

STRAFE THE TOWN
(Wake The Town And Tell The People.)

Strafe the town and kill the people.
Drop your napalm in the square.
Do it early Sunday morning,
Catch them while they're still at prayer.

Throw some candy to the orphans,
Watch them as they gather 'round,
Use your 20 millimeter,
Mow those little bastards down.

Strafe the town and kill the people,
Drop your high-drag on the school.
If you happen to see ground fire,
Don't forget the golden rule.

Run your CBU down main street,
Watch it rip off arms and hair.
See them scurry for the clinic,
Put a pod of rockets there.

Find a field of running Charlies,
Drop a daisy-cutter there.
Watch the chunks of bodies flying,
Arms and legs and blood and hair.

See the sweet old pregnant lady,
Running 'cross the field in fear,
Run your 20 mike-mike through her,
Hope the film comes out real clear.

One would think that the media would be deliriously happy with our little tune—it more than confirmed everything they were saying about us. Naw, they suspected that we were trying to make fools out of them. That would be redundant, Mother Nature beat us to it. However, they were right, "Strafe The Town" would be considered a "nonsense song" to anyone with a knowledge of aircraft and weapons. And common sense: How many "old pregnant ladies" do you know?

EIGHT: REQUIEM.

I'm sorry for the Navy jocks. Not only are they lumbered with the likes of Paula Coughlin, but they seem to have a collection of senior officers who are manufacturing just about as much testosterone as SAS Coughlin. All the fighter jocks can do is to pray for the survival of the United States Navy. Fortunately, the United States Air Force has already written a prayer for the Navy that just might do...

A NAVY PRAYER.

Our father, who are in Washington,
Bush is thy name. The Navy's done, The Air Force won,
In the Atlantic, as in the Pacific. Give us this day our appropriations.
And forgive us our accusations,
As we forgive our accusers. Lead us not into temptation,
But deliver us from Clinton and Schroeder. For thine is the power,
The F-15 and the Air Force, Forever and ever.

Airmen.

☆ ☆ ☆

Speaking for myself, I would like to leave this fine, old Air Force toast to all the Feminuts, all the two-bit politicians in the Congress, and all the vermin of the Great American News Media....

AIRMEN'S TOAST.

HERE'S TO ME IN MY SOBER MOOD—
WHEN I RAMBLE, SIT AND THINK.
HERE'S TO ME IN MY DRUNKEN MOOD—
WHEN I GAMBLE, SIN AND DRINK.

WHEN MY FLYING DAYS ARE OVER,
AND FROM THIS WORLD I PASS.
I HOPE THEY BURY ME....UPSIDEDOWN.
SO THE WORLD CAN KISS MY ASS.

Yuletide Greetings

To Faithful old Friends...
To cherished new Friends
Our Best Wishes

During the year, in the rush of events, we tend to overlook the important friendships that are the true basis of business relationships. One of the great pleasures of the Holiday Season is the opportunity to exchange cordial greetings with those whose friendship and goodwill we value so highly.

In this spirit it is our pleasure to say "Thank You" and extend our sincere appreciation for the very pleasant association we enjoy with you.

May a bright and prosperous New Year bring happiness to you and to yours.

With deep appreciation

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academiclans who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congolds unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

SUFFER, LITTLE CHILDREN

A reader of Liberty Bell has sent me, apropos of my article on the sexual molestation of children in the August issue, a copy of the November 1991 issue of Inside News, a periodical published in Australia (P.O. Box 311, Maleny, Queensland, 4552; A$55.00 for twelve issues + A$18.00 for airmail).

That issue is devoted to describing and elucidating a scandal in the United States that the jewspapers have evidently succeeded in concealing from the public. Although it is merely typical of the normal functioning of the "democracy" that Americans love, it has some instructive aspects that will justify a concise summary of it here,

When the Den of Thieves, commonly called the Congress, made arrangements for the looting of Building-and-Loan agencies,[1] their intention, no doubt, was to provide enormous plunder for sacred Sheenies and their accomplices, further to afflict the tax-paying animals, and to hasten the catastrophic collapse of the United States. It appears, however, that the swindle also served ancillary purposes.

According to Inside News, which is my only source of what follows, the Franklin Federal Community Credit Union in Nebraska[2] had assets totalling $2,600,000 on its books when it became bankrupt in 1988 and it was discovered that $40,000,000 had disappeared down that rat hole. That is only commonplace now, but, according to the editor of Inside News, "private investigations have established links between the Franklin Credit Union and wholesale embezzlement of government funds, drug-money laundering, involvement in C.I.A. covert operations, and a link to the Iran-Contra scandal. In fact, everything about the Franklin affair smacks of C.I.A. involvement, perhaps even ultimate management." Well, there is nothing really extraordinary about that, either.

The Credit Union, established professedly to benefit niggers and other carbuncles on the American body politic, was directed by one Larry King (race unstated), a person of great political influence and believed to be a personal friend of George Bush. After he magically made $40,000,000 vanish at the expense of the American boobs, Larry is said to have intended to appeal to his friend, George, but the Secret Service (which is charged with protecting the President, who was then Ronald Reagan) rushed Larry to a "mental hospital" for "psychiatric evaluation" and held him there, incommunicado, until his attorney had arranged to have thirty-seven indictments against him dismissed, in return for his pleading guilty to the three least serious charges, for which he was sentenced to a short vacation in prison. That, of course, is what usually happens, since American courts were effectively Judaized.

2. The Credit Union had its headquarters in Omaha, and must have been named in dishonor of Benjamin Franklin, since, so far as I know, there was no connection with the little town of Franklin or Franklin County, a rural area, with a total population of about 4500, on the southern border of Nebraska, southeast-by-south of Kearney. Nebraska is in the Middle West, which was once considered the most American part of the United States, but is now becoming as progressive as Tel Aviv-on-the-Potomac and New Jerusalem-on-the-Hudson.

The financial scandal, however, uncovered another one that had been concealed by the authorities of the State of Nebraska. Since 1985, at least, jolly Larry had been operating, with some assistance from his various lover boys, a doubtless lucrative business, that of procuring children of both sexes from foster homes, apparently established for that purpose,[3] from the Catholic "Boys Town," and from the "Girls' Club of Omaha," which had been founded and was run by the great philanthropist, Larry King. The children thus recruited were flown from time to time to Washington, where King maintained a residence, and forced to submit to every kind of sexual molestation and perversion for the delectation of men of high rank in the government that rules us.

Inside News names as persons involved in the child-prostitution business in one way or another: the publisher of the Omaha World Herald, the newspaper with by far the largest circulation in Nebraska, who was the recipient of a special award from B'nai B'rith, the Jewish cowboys who ride herd on their American cattle; the society editor of the newspaper, who was later convicted of molesting children independently of Larry; a very wealthy owner of department stores, who was later convicted of "aiding and abetting (male) prostitution" after graver charges had been politely dropped, and fined the enormous sum of $500, which he was able to pay; the Federal Chief Public Prosecutor, who conducted hearings of the Federal Grand Jury, and, "a paedophil himself," threatened and terrorized the witnesses who had been victims of Larry's business; the Chief of the Omaha Police, who, according to an investigator's report reproduced in facsimile, shared in the fun (and the cocaine); the Mayor of Omaha, ditto; Bush's Secretary of Agriculture and Chairman of the Republican National Committee, and also Financial Officer of ConAgra, an enormous multi-national corporation with large holdings in Australia and elsewhere, which supplied the money to elect to the Nebraska Senate candidates who voted to drop investigation of Larry's educational efforts; the Chancellor of the University of Nebraska, who was thrown out of that office for perverting male students and then appointed by Bush as head of the Agency for International Development; the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Union Pacific Railroad, who was Secretary of Transportation under Reagan, and identified as participating in Larry's parties; an official of the Union Pacific who avoided prosecution for homosexual pandering when the railroad bought off the victim, and became the Foreman of the Douglas County Grand Jury that investigated Larry's activities; another executive of the Union Pacific; and minor moguls of government and finance.

Three children gave testimony about what services Larry had required of them and about the customers of his child-whorehouse in Washington. A girl, Alisha, though threatened some fifteen times by agents of the Federal Bureau of Intimidation, refused to change her testimony; she was accordingly hauled into court, where she was represented by an attorney who, it was later discovered, was an agent of the Federal Bureau of Intimidation, and the girl, then 16, was sentenced to seventeen to twenty years in prison for "perjury."[4] After having been thus taught how American courts work, the other two witnesses were cowed and silenced, especially after the Federal Bureau's Agent in Charge in Omaha, a pal of both the publisher of the Omaha World Herald and the Omaha Chief of Police (who was a side-kick of enterprising Larry King), personally intervened to threaten the two victims

4. An effort to obtain her release was being made, but Inside News reports that Alisha in prison was ill with symptoms which were such that "there is little doubt that she is being slowly, systematically poisoned." She may have died since November 1991.

with the vengeance of the F.B.I., if they persisted in their testimony, as Alisha had done.

The Federal Bureau of Intimidation, however, was unable to intimidate one of its agents in Omaha, who charged one of his superiors with molestation, sexual perversion, and a sickening display of insane degeneracy that might have given pause to the "Marquis" de Sade; the F.B.I. certified the snow-white innocence of the accused pervert, pacified the victim by paying him $1,500,000 extracted from the taxpaying boobs, and transferred the pervert to Chicago, where his amusements would attract less attention.

If you have noticed the normal operations of the Federal Government, e.g., to prevent disproof of Earl Warren's attempt to cover up the assassination of Kennedy, you will not be astonished by the record in even the little affair of Larry King's entertainments. Here is part of that record. King's partner, Craig Spence, was identified by the Washington Times, 29 June 1989, as having taken a group of homosexual prostitutes on a tour of the White House, and having among his clients "key officials of the Reagan and Bush administrations, military officers, congressional aides, and U.S. and foreign business men with close ties to Washington's political élite"; the newspaper also reported that some of the call boys were suspected of being agents of Soviet espionage. Before Spence could be forced to testify, he was found dead in a Boston hotel, a "suicide." The brother of Alisha, the girl who would not retract her testimony, was arrested on a minor charge and found hanged in his unlocked cell in the jail, leaving a "suicide note" that was not in his handwriting. The brother of another victim supposedly blew his brains out while playing Russian Roulette. One of King's lover boys was suspected of intending to give evidence; he committed "suicide," and his close associate died when he "fell" out of the window of a hotel. A man who organized some of King's homosexual parties committed "suicide." A Special Investigator, Gary Caradori, who had accumulated a vast amount of evidence about Larry King's use of captive children, was killed, together with his young son, when his small airplane exploded in mid-air, and his files were promptly seized and sequestered by the Federal Bureau of Intimidation. The woman who first called attention to the enforced prostitution of children in a foster home was killed in an "automobile accident." You see, your rulers are fairly thorough in covering up their spoor.

I have given you the essentials of the story; if you want details, see Inside News. I must add some comments adversely critical of that publication.

A Question of Race

One of the little girls taken to Washington to entertain our masters testified that at two of Larry's parties she had recognized a man who seems to have looked in at the revel without actually participating; he was escorted by two white punks when he arrived, and he departed in the company of a male nigger. That seems to indicate that Larry's festivities were multi-cultural and free from racial bigotry, thus corresponding to the ideals that have been injected into the dim consciousness of American boobs. But it is the only reference to race in the entire article, although there is an ambiguity in the description of a foster home that makes a suspicious reader wonder whether some, at least, of the children in it may not have been Congoids or mulattos. If the race of persons mentioned was thus concealed, as is done systematically in our jewspapers, that amounts to deception of the readers by omission of crucial data that would determine their appraisal of the entire narrative.

That the Australian publication, assuming that its American informant reported the facts accurately, was guilty of deception is shown by such information as I have obtained from other sources. A reliable source assures me that Larry King is a nigger, like his homonym in California, the vicious criminal who, you remember, was overtaken by the police and was then used by the Jews' television to incite a prototype of civil war in Los Angeles and to befuddle the American public by showing them a carefully edited and thus lying excerpt from a video tape that recorded the arrest.[5]

If the boob-tubes noticed the Nebraskan King's escapades, they could not conceal the color of his hide, but the jewspapers, so far as I know, never mentioned his race. This is in keeping with the policy that Americans approve and praise, telling themselves that if the race of criminals was not concealed, some awful racial bigots might think it wrong for sweet niggers to rape white women, mug and rob white tax-paying animals, loot stores, break into homes, and otherwise enjoy the wholesome exercise and soul-satisfying recreation to which that noble and oppressed race is entitled by virtue of its moral superiority to Aryans, the lowest of all races. It is not surprising that the liepapers' policy is approved by some fat-headed females stuffed with Christian love, but when an entire nation tolerates such systematic deception by publications on which it relies for information, that nation has obviously, if perhaps subconsciously, chosen to become extinct.

The Nebraskan King is a nigger. Most of his many associates, listed above, must be degenerate Americans (i.e., Aryans), but one wonders whether some, such as the Mayor and the Chief of Police in Omaha, are also niggers. Americans, you know, like to elect niggers to such offices to make sure that nigger rapists, robbers, and murderers will enjoy a maximum of protection from "racial harassment." That makes the white boobs proud of themselves.

5. See Liberty Bell, August 1992, p. 23. I notice that my implied prediction has been fulfilled. As I write, the Congress is about to enact legislation to put cable television under the control of the Federal Communications Commission "to protect the public from excessive charges." Now, if you are grown up, you know that when politicians begin jabbering about "protecting the public," the only question is what act of theft or treason they intend to promote. The intent this time is to prevent a courageous operator of cable television from exposing the enormous frauds of the Jews' electronic lie-machine. The public, obviously, is to be protected from information that might possibly induce rational thought in their lie-saturated and pickled brains.

Since Larry is a nigger, the tentative suspicion aroused by the ambiguity I mentioned above becomes a virtual certainty: many of the children he carried to Washington to titillate the sexual perversity of our lords were pickaninnies. That makes us drastically revise our estimates of Larry's crimes, because the sexual reactions of young Congoids differ enormously from the comparable reactions of Aryan children. That is obvious to anyone who considers the well-attested sexual mores of Congoids in their native habitat. But it is likely that, given the Americans' insane infatuation with "multi-culturalism," some of the victims were white children who had been forced to associate with young savages. If that is so, Americans generally were accomplices in Larry's criminal activity.

It appears, therefore, that Inside News was engaged in a scandalous cover-up of the very kind that it deplores. We may now consider its principal aberration.

A Question of Identity

As I mentioned above, one of Larry's childish whores claimed that she had recognized a man who, accompanied by white and nigger punks, had dropped in to watch the sexual games. That girl (race now in doubt) claimed that she, from pictures she had seen in the press and on television, recognized the man as George Bush, then Vice President.

Now no matter how much you may dislike our whilom War Lord, and even if you are convinced that he was responsible for all of the criminal and treasonable work of the C.I.A. in recent years, you perceive at once how very uncertain is that identification by an excited adolescent. You can do no more than say that it is not flatly impossible. Yet the editor of Inside News has chosen to regard it as a virtual certainty, to make it the subject of his headline and the summary in large type on his first page, and to focus his entire article on it. That evinces a singular lack of either candor or judgement that will make most readers of his periodical suspect his bona fides. I report his article here only on the assumption that he based it on valid information received from a correspondent in the United States.[6]

A Question of Faith

There is another serious deficiency in the Australian periodical's report. The recreations of Larry King and his pals are said to have included Satanism and appropriate rites, involving the sacrifice and dismemberment of at least one infant. The editor of Inside News regards those antics as evidence of real devil-worship and speculates rather wildly about occult powers and influences. That is probably a misunderstanding of a kind that frequently occurs.

The practice of Satanism need not presuppose any belief in supernatural beings. A case in point is the famous club founded by Sir Francis Dashwood (1708-1781) around 1752, before he became Baron Le Despenser. Often called the "Hell-Fire Club," this society for debauchery and venery was known as the "Franciscans" and the "Monks of Medmenham," since they met in the ruins of St. Mary's Abbey on Sir Francis's estate near Medmenham in Sussex. Sir Francis had had a large part of the abbey rebuilt, including the chapel, which had windows of stained glass portraying scenes of sexual intercourse, and probably statues of the appropriate gods, i.e., Priapus, the Egyptian

6. The account is validated by the report in the Spotlight, 1 June 1992, pp. 14-17, of a similar enterprise in California. As for progressive Larry's other activities, the press has reported that he is now enjoying a forced vacation at public expense in recognition of the sleight-of-bookkeeping that made $40,000,000 vanish, and that the prosecuting attorneys declare that they magnanimously refrained from prosecuting him for "selling drugs, belonging to a national child-abuse ring, and for being deeply involved in an Iran Contra money-laundering scheme." It is not stated whether their magnanimity was excited by his racial nobility or by the fact that he was a satellite of the élite that rules us and is preparing us for total servitude in the New World Order for which the triumphant Kikes have worked for more than a millennium.

god Min, Aphrodite, Angerona, et al., such as adorned the spacious gardens and groves surrounding it.

The Friars (also called Knights) of St. Francis were rational and well-educated gentleman who had no belief in celestial or infernal spooks, but they delighted in advertising their superiority to vulgar superstitions. A barge on the Thames brought them to the foot of the hill, and, wearing the white robes of Cistertian monks, they marched in solemn procession up to the Abbey, carrying votive candles in their hands and chanting loudly obscene parodies of Christian hymns. Their women, whose reputations they protected with gentlemanly care, were awaiting them, each wearing a vizard over the upper part of her face to preserve a precarious anonymity and increase pleasure with a certain mystery. The Friars, being civilized men, indulged in no animal sacrifices or similar nastiness, but they celebrated a Black Mass[7] as a preliminary to their erotic sports. One such mass, indeed, is remembered and some attribute to it consequences that made it of great historical significance,[8] but their only faith was in the infinite desirability of women and in their own venereal prowess.

Today, when orthodox Christianity, with its belief in Satan, is the creed of an ever dwindling minority, mockery of its rites and sacraments is no longer an exhilarating sport. Contemporary Satanism is of several distinct kinds. In the McMartin Pre-School it was obviously a device to terrorize and ensure the mindless submission of the children who had been selected to provide sexual entertainment for prominent "actors, sports figures, politicians." It seems not to have served the same purpose in Larry's business, where it was probably a pretext for sadistic and sometimes murderous amusements, as it was in the Manson "family" that was notorious a few years ago. It is true that there is also actual belief in Satanism, as in the other superstitions that are increasingly popular in our age of epidemic irrationality. Minds that have been so weakened that they can believe in the equality of races can believe anything. It is, however, likely that the faithful votaries of Satan, like the adepts of the "New Age" hokum and the dupes of Maharishis, are almost all innocuous simpletons, although they are dangerous and prodigiously evil in the estimation of "experts" who like to receive generous fees for lecturing about them.

7. For a good description of a real Black Mass, see Joris-Karl Huÿsman's Là-bas. There must be an English translation.

8. Since this is a neat historical problem, I have summarized it in an excursus at the end of this article.

At all events, the editor of Inside News and his readers need not worry about rumored attempts to "control the planet by channeling, focusing, and directing occult forces." Control of this planet is being sought and attained by forces that are not in the least supernatural and can invariably be exorcised by well-aimed bullets.

EXCURSUS

The Friars were godless men, but there is a latent residue of superstition in our biological inheritance. One ceremony in the chapel, lit only by the wavering light of black and perfumed candles, was long remembered. One of the Friars, the celebrated John Wilkes, procured a baboon, dressed him in scarlet apparel with horns, and confined him closely in a chest behind the high altar, from which, by means of a concealed wire, he released the baboon at the high point of the Black Mass, when Satan is invoked. The enraged and frantic creature sprang from the chest with simian cries, gesticulating wildly and gibbering; the women shrieked and screamed as they fled; Lord Bute precipitately exited through the nearest stained-glass window; the Earl of Sandwich disgraced himself by falling on his knees and imploring a god to pardon and protect him; and the crazed ape lunged at Lord March, who either swooned or was petrified by terror. Other Friars of St. Francis were doubtless startled and may have been less conspicuously frightened, but they were soon laughing at Wilkes' prank and at the members who had been terrified by an apparition in which no rational man could believe. And beneath their jests there was an unspoken awareness that the first and most indispensable virtue of an English gentleman was courage.

There are several versions of this story, which vary considerably in details but not in essentials, and Raymond Postgate in his biography of Wilkes,[1] suggests that the story may be apocryphal, but has to admit that the Franciscans temporarily suspended their meetings in 1763, and that a "practical joke by Wilkes" may have been the cause. What practical joke is more likely to have had that effect than one that made at least three noblemen show the white feather? That would also explain why Wilkes evidently ceased to be a member of the Franciscans, and why Sir Francis, who was never suspected of cowardice,

1. That Devil Wilkes (2d ed., London, Dobson, 1956). (The title is taken from King George's references to Wilkes.) This is the first real biography of Wilkes, as distinct from essays about how wicked he was, and is basic to consideration of his career. There are several later biographies of Wilkes, of which the best by far is by Charles Chenevix Trench, Portrait of a Patriot (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1962), which embodies a great deal of research into both the political and the social aspects of Wilkes' career. The latest work that has come to my attention is by Louis Kronenberger, The Extraordinary Mr. Wilkes (New York, Doubleday, 1974). I have seen neither O. A, Sherrard's A Life of John Wilkes (London, 1930) nor I. R. Christie's Wilkes, Wyvill, and Reform (London, 1962) and know of them only through references in other books and articles. Wilkes was known to everyone of consequence in his time, and a vast amount of more or less reliable information about him, which no one has had the patience to collect, is scattered through the writings of his many contemporaries (Lord Chesterfield, Boswell, Gibbon, Horace Walpole, Lady Mary Montagu, and innumerable others), some of which I have read and remember. — Neither Chenevix Trench nor Kronenberger doubt the story of Wilkes' use of an ape or baboon at a Black Mass, although they follow different versions; but neither writer sees that the episode may have inspired resentment and hostility on the part of the noblemen whose latent superstition and cowardice was exposed by Wilkes' prank, even though they know that the ceremonies of the Monks of Medmenham were temporarily (not permanently) suspended thereafter. The conduct of Lord Orford, who seems to have been the High Priest on this occasion, is variously reported, but he was a man of no political importance.

and who maintained outwardly friendly relations with Wilkes, seems to have borne some grudge against him.

Lord March and Lord Sandwich are known to have been Franciscans. The members usually brought friends to their rites as 'acolytes' or guests, and Lord Bute was a guest (he is mentioned as such, with an obscene double entente, in the Essay on Woman), as was Benjamin Franklin when he visited England.

Wilkes' apish trick is plausibly said to have been the origin of the three noblemen's bitter hostility toward him, and thus to have determined the course of his long and sensational political career. He probably owed to Lord Bute, who was the only trusted counsellor of George III, the King's antipathy, but that could be explained as directed against an able spokesman of the Whig aristocracy, who denounced Bute's policy of "peace at any price" and the Treaty of Paris.

The prosecution of Wilkes for owning and editing the North Briton was, of course, political, but even so one wonders at the reckless animus shown in his arrest on a warrant that was known to be unconstitutional and his arrest and imprisonment in defiance of the law that made members of the Parliament immune to arrest.

Although all governments are capable of astonishing folly, it is hard to believe that anything short of blind personal hatred by powerful men could have made the government subsequently take the outrageous step of persistently excluding Wilkes from a Parliament to which he was duly and repeatedly elected by a borough that was traditionally friendly to the ruling faction. Even if it was certain that Wilkes, though unprovoked, would join the vehement opposition, what could a single member of the House have done that was of political consequence?[2] And what conceivable political advantage could have outweighed

2. Chenevix Trench has pointed out that the Opposition, which primarily represented family interests rather than national policies, was largely ineffectual so long as the "reversionary factor," which had brought Bute and the 'Tories' to power, was in abeyance during the minority of the Prince of Wales (who eventually became King George IV).

the certain consequences of arrogantly violating the traditional constitution of the monarchy?

The electors of Middlesex elected Wilkes by a large majority, and the Ministry's faction in the Parliament declared the election void. Middlesex then elected Wilkes by an overwhelming majority, and he was again excluded from his seat in Parliament. At the third election, Wilkes was again overwhelmingly elected, but the Ministry declared that a rival candidate, who had received a few votes, was the new member of the Parliament. In other words, the King's Ministers, through their control of a majority in the Parliament, simply appointed a new member in open defiance of the wishes of the electors whom that member was supposed to represent. I cannot believe that a policy so utterly reckless and potentially disastrous could have been motivated by anything short of an unreasoning hatred of Wilkes as a man, probably by Bute and certainly by the Earl of March and the Earl of Sandwich, both of whom had high rank and great influence in the court party.

It is certain that the Earl of Sandwich, with the coöperation of the Earl of March, despicably bribed a printer to abstract a copy of the Essay on Woman, which Wilkes had had printed in a strictly limited edition of twelve copies as gifts for his friends, and then illegally prosecuted him for publishing [!] an obscene work. The resulting scandal did alienate from Wilkes supporters who had strict moral principles, but it alienated from the government all men who prized the traditional liberty of Englishmen—and not merely in the upper classes. The dishonest printer was paid about £230, but he was so despised by printers throughout England that he could never obtain employment anywhere and eventually committed suicide.[3] (The Essay on Woman was a highly obscene parody of Pope's Essay on Man, written by one of the Franciscans, Thomas Potter, the son of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and adorned with equally obscene critical annotations written by Wilkes in the manner of Bishop Warburton's pedantic notes on Pope's poem.)[4]

3. This persecution of Wilkes was too complicated and tortuous to be summarized here and some phases of it are obscure. For example, there is ample reason to believe that one of the Lord March's sleazy agents, the Reverend Mr. John Kidgell, was guilty of forgery, but it is not known precisely what he forged.

All the evidence known to me indicates that if Wilkes had not been so illegally and outrageously persecuted by personal enemies, he probably would never have been more than one of the members of Parliament who followed and supported his close friend, Lord Temple, the intimate friend of the Earl of Chatham, and opposed the policies of Lord Bute and the King. In his private life, Wilkes would have been only a gentlemen of leisure, a libertine (like his fellow Franciscans) noted for his insatiable mulierosity, a writer of ephemeral literature (like his friend and fellow member of the Franciscans, the Reverend Mr. Charles Churchill, who was highly esteemed as a poet in his day but is now unread), and a scholar whose editions of Classical authors, like those of contemporary clergymen and university men, were soon superseded. He would now be as generally forgotten as are almost all of his comparable contemporaries.

It is certain that the gratuitous persecution of Wilkes made him defend himself by seeking and mobilizing popular support, insisting on the right of English boroughs to be represented in Parliament by the men they chose, and the right of an English town to select its own aldermen. He further defended himself by denouncing the encroachment of the crown on the privileges of Englishmen, and made himself so popular that "Wilkes and Liberty" became a potent political watchword with which King George III and his government were, in the end, unable to cope.

4. I have seen only excerpts of the Essay on Woman, and, so far as I know, the whole text and commentary has never been published. I commend it, therefore, to the attention of our contemporary pornographers, who must be sadly in want of some novelty to stimulate the jaded appetites of their customers.

Speculative historians, who generally deprecate all conspiratorial or racial theories, sometimes see in the persecution of Wilkes the first in a row of dominoes that, falling one against the other, changed the course of history. Wilkes' opposition to the government of George III and his leadership of a politically potent movement based on popular support and open defiance of the Ministry and hence of the King, encouraged the disaffected elements in the American Colonies to undertake similar resistance to that government and to raise the issue of their right to be represented in matters affecting them. When American envoys, such as Benjamin Franklin, went to England, they were both impressed by the great enthusiasm for "Wilkes and Liberty," and encouraged to resist the government by all its political enemies, including the greater part of the Whig aristocracy. When the Colonies began open resistance, they had the support of not only Wilkes and the 'Wilkites,' but of all Englishmen who wanted to harass the government on which George III had set his obstinate heart. They, for example, made it virtually impossible for the government to recruit British troops that might be used to coerce the colonists, so that Lord North, who was merely the spokesman for George III, had eventually to resort to the expedient of hiring Hessian mercenaries.

Neither the Englishmen in the colonies nor the Englishmen at home who encouraged and abetted them thought of breaking the legally indissoluble union of the colonies with the mother country, until wily agitators, such as Samuel Adams (who not only arranged the famous "tea party" but contrived the "Boston massacre"—the "massacre" of four of the rioters whom he had incited to attack the British sentries[5]), appealing to the anti-monarchical Puritans of New England, descendants of the religious fanatics and regicides of the Commonwealth, converted civil resistance into an armed conflict that became the only Civil War in our history, a double Civil War, a war between two factions in each colony and, with the victory of the factions that sought independence, a Civil War between two parts of the Kingdom.

5. The divided state of sentiment even in New England at this time is shown by the fact that John Adams (later President) defended and procured the acquittal of the officer and soldiers who were prosecuted for the "massacre" of the four rioters.

The insurgents were encouraged and abetted not only by Wilkes, who had acquired a paramount influence over both the mercantile and the working classes that lasted until the Gordon Riots (1780),[6] but by all the disaffected Whigs, on the assumption that the Civil War would end in a compromise and restoration of the union. That would doubtless have been the result, but for the intervention of France.

The Colonists were, from the first, given massive support by a large part of the French aristocracy, captivated by Rousseau's delusions and manipulated by the Masonic lodges and Weishaupt's Illuminati,[7] and also given clandestine subsidies by the Foreign Minister, Vergennes, but even so it is probable that the American Colonists could never have prevailed in their war of secession from the mother country, if French enthusiasts, such as the Marquis de Lafayette, and Vergennes, anxious to cover up his own blunders, had not succeeded in bullying Louis XVI into declaring war on Britain, against his better judgement and

6. If you have contented yourself with one of the capsule histories of England, such as G. M. Trevelyan's, that go from King Alfred to the present in two or three volumes, you may have been given a hint of how bloody and destructive those riots were, but you will not have been told that Lord George Gordon, the neurotic third son of the Duke of Gordon, who was ostensibly the leader of the mobs, was so feeble-minded that he adopted the religion of the Jews, had himself circumcised by a rabbi, and observed all the absurd rites and practices by which that race emphasizes its separation from all others.

7. One must also attribute much to the shrewd American envoy, Benjamin Franklin, who captivated gullible philosophes by playing. with great histrionic ability, the rôle of a simple, homespun sage, uncorrupted by the civilization which Rousseau made responsible for all the sorrows of mankind. He even kept a poker face when the educated suckers accepted as true and pathetic narratives some of the humorous travesties he had published in his newspapers years before, which someone had found and translated into French.

over the protests of the Queen, and thus ruining France by burdening her, at a time of financial crisis, with a debt to usurers that soon drove her into bankruptcy. Britain was thus faced with a global war, since she had to defend her possessions in India, in the Caribbean, and elsewhere as well as in North America, and even so the Colonists' victory was made possible only by the military and naval power of their stupid ally, to whom they showed their gratitude by double-crossing her.[8]

It is undoubtedly true that it was the success of the American populace in resisting their King that encouraged disaffected Frenchmen to undertake a concerted resistance to their King, Louis XVI, which led to the French Revolution—a catastrophe that altered forever the history of our race.

Was Wilkes, then, the prime cause of the French Revolution? That speculation is plausible in theory and would lead to the bizarre conclusion that a night in Medmenham was one of the great climacterics of history. If Wilkes was such a cardinal point in history, his biographer, Raymond Postgate, draws from Wilkes' political passivity after 1780 the conclusion that he had no awareness of it. Wilkes, he says, "never reflected that just as the American Revolution arose directly from the agitation for Wilkes and liberty, so the French Revolution was the child of the American." It evidently did not occur to any of the biographers that Wilkes, who was shocked and dismayed by the Gordon Riots, in which many of his followers participated, may have been appalled by that demonstration of what mobs composed of normally

8. Louis XVI had been encouraged to hope that France could regain Canada at a peace conference, but the Americans, by secretly negotiating with England and, in effect, making a separate peace with England, frustrated that foolish hope, and France could only save face by negotiating the Peace of Versailles with England, by which she recovered only a few unimportant islands. The French King had been urged to declare war on England by Frenchmen, such as the Marquis de Lafayette, whose ulterior purpose was to arouse and encourage similar resistance in France.

peaceful individuals are capable when incited by rabble-rousers. He may have felt like the fisherman in the Arabian Nights who uncorked the jar and released a hideous and ferocious jinni before whom he was helpless. It is the great merit of Chenevix Trench that he recognizes the courage and resolution that Wilkes displayed at that time. He had had several terms as Lord Mayor of London, after which he retired to the virtually permanent post of 'Chamberlain' (i.e., Treasurer), and when the pavid Lord Mayor was paralysed by terror, Wilkes, as second in authority, took over, called for troops from the Army, and in the meantime armed a small body of militia and such irregulars as he could find, led them, sword in hand, against the huge mob of rioters, and, by the light of burning buildings, killed quite a few of them with well-aimed volleys, beginning the repression which cost the lives of about three hundred impassioned reformers and looters. He tirelessly led and commanded his small improvised battalion on the following days and nights, dispersing rioters and patrolling the streets, so that by the time the regular troops arrived, there was little for them to do except mount guard.

Wilkes knew, of course, that he was sacrificing his great popularity and the political influence it gave him. Some invidious contemporaries and almost all modern writers accuse him of having betrayed his principles; that is a gross misunderstanding. He was known as a 'republican,' but we must beware of giving to that word its current meaning. In the Eighteenth Century, the meaning of 'republic' was usually that which the word bears in the great work of Jean Bodin, Six livres de la République, which he wrote in both French and Latin, so that it was read all over Europe. Bodin takes monarchy for granted as the only feasible form of government for large states—even an 'absolute' monarchy, but not a tyranny, since the state must be ruled in terms of a settled constitution under which citizenship is accompanied by corresponding rights and duties, producing a stable society, the first requisite of civilization. Wilkes had no wish to overthrow the British monarchy; he had no wish to enfranchise the masses, much less to rouse a proletariat. He wanted only to preserve, especially for the upper classes, to which he belonged, a high degree of personal liberty, secure from arbitrary acts by the government. He had, I am sure, resorted to agitating the populace, especially the middle class and the upper stratum of the working class, only to protect himself from unconstitutional persecution. It is true that he thus initiated the first politically inspired mass movement in England, but I feel certain that when he saw to what an outbreak of fanaticism and insane violence a mass movement could lead, he was dismayed—as he was probably dismayed when the American Colonies, on whom he had urged "moderation," became independent, instead of acquiring political status (such as that of Scotland) within the British Empire.

It is true that Wilkes made an important, if not decisive, contribution to the American Revolution, of which the Americans showed their appreciation in ways that cost them nothing,[9] but the "domino effect," postulated by sciolistic historians who claim that "it just happened that way," is clearly absurd. In the French Revolution certainly and perhaps in some of its antecedents we can discern the power of a conspiracy that was occult only in the sense that it was secret and was covertly directed by the alien and hostile race to whose benefit it redounded, but it would require great subtlety to discern traces of that conspiracy in British politics before 1780 or to postulate that Wilkes was influenced by it—except indirectly through the aliens' gradual penetration of English society, made possible by our

9. Counties in two states, a town in Pennsylvania and several towns in other states, and many children were named in his honor, and the name retained such prestige that it was adopted as part of the name of the actor who was later hired to assassinate Abraham Lincoln by the bosses of the Republican Party to facilitate their atrocious exploitation of the defeated South.

race's millennial addiction to an irrational, grotesque and ultimately deadly superstition, from which he had emancipated himself.

Wilkes was only an ephemeral product of the profound and essentially biological forces that, like gravity, though unseen, inexorably shape the world and all life in it, and reck nothing of the agony of individuals, nations, and races that madly ignore reality and perish like moths in a flame.

UNAMERICAN CAT

In Liberty Bell, October 1989, I reported a zoölogist's observation of a coyote, who approached a well-baited trap and, instead of entering it, sat down, studied it, and disdainfully walked away, thus proving that he was more intelligent than Americans, who thoughtlessly jumped into the Marxist trap of the Income Tax in 1913 and have gaily rushed into every trap set for them since that time, so that they now find themselves entirely helpless and in the possession of their implacable captors. It now appears that intellectual superiority is also found in cats, at least in cats that have not been domesticated.

A British engineer reports to the New Scientist, 29 August 1992, p. 53, that he wanted to trap a "feral cat," meaning, I suppose, the kind of animal that in this country is usually called a "stray cat" or "alley cat." He obtained a mechanical trap, baited it, and watched from a concealed position:

The cat duly arrived, studied the trap suspiciously from different angles, retired, sat and contemplated. Then...she entered the trap purposefully, placed her paws underneath the trip plate, took the food, and backed out.

Americans, of course, never sit down to contemplate; they sit down to stare in an hypnotic trance at the Jews' boob-tube. Unlike alley cats, they do not belong to a viable species of mammalian life. ❑

BOOK REVIEW

John C. Ball, Air Photo Evidence / Auschwitz, Treblinka, Majdanek, Sobibor, Begen Belsen, Belzec, Babi Yar, Katyn Forest, 1992. Avalaible for 12 Canadian dollars, including postage, from Ball Resource Services Ltd., Suite 160, 7231 120th Street, Delta, British Columbia, V4C 6P5, CANADA.

by Charles E. Weber, Ph.D.

In 1979 The Central Intelligence Agency published a book with the title, The Holocaust Revisited: A Retrospective Analysis of the Auschwitz-Birkenau Extermination Complex. This book was based on newly discovered aerial photographs of various relocation and labor camps and purported to show that these photographs were proofs of the so-called "Holocaust," the thesis that the German government of that time was engaged in the massive extermination of the Jews of Europe. Historians who questioned the Extermination Thesis were quick to point out that the 19-page booklet proved nothing of the kind and indeed justified even further doubts about the Extermination Thesis.

The Central Intelligence Agency of the "American" government, a government in the habit of yielding quickly to the wishes of Jewish pressure organizations, no matter what the costs to the American people as a whole, had actually thrown a boomerang that gave itself a well-deserved knock on the head.

Now Mr. John C. Ball, who has been involved professionally as a mineral exploration geologist using aerial photographic techniques since 1976, has reëxamined the photographic materials pertaining to the relocation and labor camps in Poland operated during the Second World War by German authorities. On the second page of Mr. Ball's book we find a picture of him at the National Archives Air Photo Library in Alexandria, Virginia. His labors have resulted in a lucid, well organized book which merits the attention of all students of the history of the Second World War, and in particular those engaged in the investigation of the Extermination Thesis. This book offers one of the best disproofs of the "Holocaust" material, or perhaps even the best disproofs of all, with all due respect to previous investigations of other types of evidence (e.g., written documents, observations of buildings in the camp sites which survived the war, chemical studies, demographic data, trial records, etc.) pertaining to the Extermination Thesis. After all, the aerial photographs are the American government's very own records.

On the fourth unnumbered page at the beginning of the book we encounter two maps which show the locations of the camps, Katyn Forest and the Barbi Yar Ravine. These maps are helpful to the reader not familiar with the geographical aspects of the "Holocaust" material. The following page shows Mr. Ball at work examining aerial photographs with optical instruments. Pages 6 to 17 deal not with the relocation and labor camps, which are the main topic of the book, but with the firebombing of Hamburg in the summer of 1943 and the massacre in 1940 of the Polish officers captured by the Soviet forces that invaded Poland from the east. (After the grave sides were discovered in early 1943 by German intelligence, the Germans exhumed and identified 4,143 bodies during April to august 1943.) This section of the book provides a basis for comparison of the aerial photographs that are presented in the further parts of the book. Perhaps the availability of contemporary ground photographs of the objects caused Mr. Ball to use these areas as a sort of introduction to the interpretation of aerial photographs.

Be that as it may, advertently or inadvertently, the author thus makes another important point which is often overlooked in discussions of the Extermination Thesis; whatever happened or did not happen to the Jews of Europe took place during a war in which there was a clear and persistent threat of genocide. In the case of Germany, we need only think of the proposal of extermination of the German population by sterilization in the book by Theodor N. Kaufman, published in 1941, Germany Must Perish [available from Liberty Bell Publications, $4.50 + postage], the Bromberg "Bloody Sunday' (see our Bulletin 39, republished in the Liberty Bell of October 1989), the massive bombings of civilians, the Morgenthau Plan presented to and initialed by Roosevelt in Setember 1944, and the chilling Nemmersdorf massacre in East Prussia in October 1944.

In a section of the book (pages 40 to 48) with grave political implications Mr. Ball offers detailed evidence that photographs taken on 31 May and 13 September 1944 were altered by inserting marks on them. The top inscription of pages 40-41 reads "Marks on August 25th, 1944 photos said to be evidence of 'homocidal gassings'... are black in contrast to the grey shades in this September photo." This alteration of the records in order to promote belief in the Extermination Thesis should be utterly disgusting to any honest historian, but it is by no means unique. Much of the "Holocaust" material is based on forged documents and confessions obtained by torture. What else can we expect from a government that participates in the building of the huge, five-story United States Holocaust Memorial Museum to promote belief in the alleged massive killing of Jews in Europe, while it is content with little more than a simple wall to commemorate the deaths of nearly 58,000 of its own sons in Viet Nam?

Beginning on page 60the author introduces the 1944 War Refugee Report and the 1988 Leuchter Report. There follow many aerial photographs which discredit the former and confirm the latter. Many of these photographs demonstrate the fact that the installations around Auschwitz constituted a huge industrial complex of great importance to the German defense effort. To enhance the interpretation of the aerial photographs of Auschwitz, a number of ground photographs are reproduced from the Auschwitz Album: LilliJacob's Album edited by Sergei Klarsfeld (pages 34, 54, 55, 58, 63).

On page 113 Mr. Ball states conclusions he has drawn from his research as follows: "To conclude [,] there is no air photo evidence [that] mass murders and cremations occurred at or near the Birkenau crematoriums, which were visible from both inside and outside the camp, or the Auschwitz I or Majdanek detention camps. There is also no air photo evidence [that] mass murders, burials, or cremations occurred at the alleged Treblinka camp, which does not appear to have had any more than five buildings, or at the Sobibor or Belzec logging camps. There is also no evidence of mass cremations at Babi Yar ravine."

The book ends with a list of references, a list of the origins of the photographs and an index (pages 116-116). ❑

Weaver and Gritz

by
J.B. Campbell

There is evidence that the number one priority of the US government is to destroy the White Power movements in all countries and especially in this country. Any White person who resents even mildly our government's anti-White policy is a threat to government, whether or not he so considers himself, and he must be destroyed. This is made obvious by merely reading the papers but I have been told of this priority by a high-ranking, 28 year veteran of CIA who attempted to "go straight" and who is now sitting in prison for his efforts. We also have evidence from the January, 1991 edition of the FBI's Law Enforcement Bulletin in which deputy director Floyd Clark admits that the Bureau's ultimate goal is to destroy the White Power movement. So we may consider ourselves enemies of the state regardless of our having thought about it, up to now, one way or the other. Of course many of our people have been tamed by government propaganda in schools, television, radio, books, movies, etc. They will not resist government's next moves to obliterate the White race. But there is an apparently growing number of us who will not submit and the government has therefore targeted us for liquidation.

For the purpose of this article I have been asked to analyze the Randy Weaver incident of August, 1992. There are three parts to this complex story: Randy Weaver, the US government and Bo Gritz. The treachery of the government against Weaver is pretty well known by now and more comes out every day from the legal maneuvering in Boise, but there is obviously much more to the nightmare at Ruby Creek than a shotgun barrel which was 1/4 inch too short. Weaver had been ordered to spy on a part of the White Power movement known as Aryan Nations. Weaver, a veteran of the CIA's Special Forces, who was therefore expected to follow orders, refused. The short shotgun charge was intended as pressure to force compliance with the order to spy. It failed and this set in motion a murder plan which included the entire Weaver family. Six (and possibly eight) highly trained snipers of the US Marshal's Service, wearing camouflage, blackface and body armor and bearing a variety of fully automatic, high-powered weapons, stealthily approached the house without a warrant. One of these, William Degan, was the most highly decorated deputy in USMS history but he was evidently involved in an investigation of corruption in the USMS back east. It now appears that the corrupt ones wanted Degan killed by his own men and the blame for it placed on Weaver as justification for his death. Deputy marshals Roderick and Cooper, both snipers, have already testified that there was a danger of the snipers hitting each other during the backshooting of little Sam Weaver, age 13. Gerry Spence, Weaver's illustrious attorney, is reported to have a Jewish witness in protective custody who just happened to be in those woods on Friday, 21 August, and who saw deputy marshals deliberately shoot Degan twice, killing him with the second shot.

Regarding Weaver, it is reported that he, too, had been involved in an investigation of corruption while in Special Forces at Ft. Bragg, NC. He was reportedly a witness to drug crimes allegedly committed by a well known Green Beret officer and this may be related to the recent outrage committed against him and his family.

The thrust of this article, however, centers on the mysterious CIA functionary, Lt. Col. James "Bo" Gritz of the Green Berets. Gritz has been caught in a number of lies before and since his appearance at Ruby Creek. For example, at his bizarre trial in Las Vegas on the charge of "misuse of a passport," Gritz writes in his book, Called To Serve, that the wrong charge was brought against him—one that technically couldn't be prosecuted. But Gritz says in his public appearances that the jury acquitted him and that the jurors put their arms around him, saying, "Go get 'em, Bo!" On page 428 of his book he writes that Ross Perot was prepared to testify that Perot and George Bush agreed, in the Vice President's office, to send Gritz to Burma in 1986. Nowhere else in the chapters regarding the Burma (drug) trips does Gritz admit this, if it is true.

This leads one to think that a legend was being built around Bo Gritz—a legend that made him the implacable enemy of George Bush. The US Attorney for Nevada, William Maddox, thoughtfully told us on television that George Bush had called him on the telephone and told him to get Bo Gritz [but on the wrong charge]. One of Gritz' friends told me that Gritz was wrong on the reason he was "acquitted:" The passport charge should have been tried in the city where the "crime" occurred, namely, Los Angeles, and that that was the reason the judge threw it out. The US Attorney for Los Angeles refused to prosecute and Gritz' reputation grew mighty in the patriot movement under the mistaken impression that a jury had validated Gritz' MIA hunting on phony passports. The truth was that the passports had been supplied to him by elements of the US government.

In an attempt to clarify this matter I called William Maddox at his law offices in Reno. Oddly, he speaks well of Gritz who, he says, was "very brave to go into that looney's cabin in Idaho." He said, however, that he couldn't remember exactly the reason for Gritz' acquittal by the judge other than the fact that the wrong charge was filed. How about the venue? He agreed that the venue was probably incorrect, too—that it should have been tried in Los Angeles. Who originally brought the charge against Gritz? "One of my assistants—I can't remember his name. I took over the case because it was very sensitive and I have a high security clearance." Regarding the telephone call from Bush, Maddox laughed, "That was a joke! I was tired; I'd had no sleep for two days and I was trying to be sarcastic about this thing... I think there's even a video tape of me saying something about Bush, but I didn't say what they say I did..."

"Now, Bill," I said patiently, "I've seen that video tape and as I remember it, a reporter sticks a microphone in your face and asks if you regret bringing the charge against Gritz? And you shrug and say, 'George Bush called me on the telephone and told me to get Bo Gritz.' And the reporter says, 'So you're denying that?' and you say, 'I said, George Bush called me and told me to get Bo Gritz!'"

"Well," said Maddox, "I don't remember saying it that way... As I said, I was being sarcastic. I've never talked to George Bush in my life!"

"Okay, Bill," I said. "Now, were you fired because of this acquittal?"

"No, I wasn't fired because of it... There were [some politicians] who didn't want me as US Attorney—but I wasn't fired."

There is no doubt that Maddox was lying to me. There is little doubt that Gritz' trial was an intentional loser.

If you read Gritz' book carefully you will see that his original mission from Lt. Gen. Harold Aaron of DIA was to check reports that Americans were still alive in South East Asia—not to bring any Americans home. His strangely worded orders from Ross Perot were to go over there, investigate and then come home and tell Perot that no Americans were still alive. This was in the 1970s.

By 1981 Gritz wanted to train men for MIA hunting. He found a man, George Brooks of New Windsor, New York, whose son, Nick, had been missing since being shot down in 1970. Gritz got Mr. Brooks to fly them down to a ranch near Tampa which would be Gritz' "training camp." Gritz hinted that there was someone who would put up $200,000 but that he was dragging his feet. Mr. Brooks saw that he no equipment or other indication of training but there were fifteen or so men who supposedly would be trained by Gritz. Mr. Brooks then wrote Gritz a check for $20,000. At the time, the says, he was only making about $21,000 per year, but felt that any amount was expendable to recover his son. Then he went home, believing that the secret training would now begin and a rescue operation for not only his son but for other young men would be mounted. Soon after his return home he was shocked to learn that Gritz had invited a reporter for the Washington Post into the camp. The story was revealed and the "training" came to an abrupt halt. Mr. Brooks had promised the "trainees" that if anything went wrong, not having this sort of thing in mind, he would pay their fares homes. Well, they all wanted to go home and this cost him an additional eight thousand bucks.

Some have charged Gritz with deliberately interfering with sincere attempts to rescue American POWs. Bob Keplinger, a former Green Beret and longtime friend of Gritz, says that Gritz appeared on a television program and revealed Keplinger's mission to rescue two American pilots from Vietnam in 1992. The problem was that Keplinger was conducting the operation in Vietnam at the time! When Keplinger got home after nearly being caught and confronted Gritz with his deadly treachery, Gritz denied it. So Keplinger obtained a video tape of the program and sent it to Gritz for an apology, which was grudgingly given. Therefore, a picture is emerging of a dangerous, deceptive and treacherous individual.

A good indicator of Gritz' character and true loyalty is given to us by Gritz himself... In his second interview with Khun Sa, the Burmese heroin lord, Gritz listened as various US government men were named as receivers of Khun Sa's heroin. Gritz interrupted the secretary just after Deputy Defense Secretary Richard Armitage's name was read. Gritz admits in his book (p. 373) that he did this deliberately, fearing that the next name he might logically hear would be that of his boss, friend and mentor, Erich von Marbod, considering the tight relationship between Armitage and Marbod. Two of his associates later criticized him, he writes, for possibly preventing George Bush from being named.

It is possible that, from this attempt to shield Erich von Marbod and perhaps others from exposure, Gritz' entire campaign against Bush is a sophisticated form of damage control; that is, the drug allegation against Bush was likely to surface eventually and to make it less credible it may have been decided to have it come from a "discredited" source such as Gritz, whose stories change constantly. Our enemies have always controlled both sides of any sensitive debate which the public is allowed to hear. In this way the full truth will never be brought out by "our side."

I believe it is important to expose Gritz for the counterfeit patriot he is. I am convinced that he remains a highly motivated agent of our brutal and cowardly government, as he has been all his adult life. The basic premise of his supporters is that he earned his dozens of decorations in honorable service to the US government. But there is no such thing as honorable service to a criminal gang of bankers and secret society members which is the real leadership of our rotten system, which is known as "democracy." "Democracy" is a euphemism for a minority rule which masquerades as "majority rule." The minority which rules us under its banner of "democracy" is the Jewish minority. My father was certainly wrong when he joined the Marine Corps in 1917 to make the world safe for democracy. Gritz' father was certainly wrong to drop bombs on German women and children in 1943, thus making the world safe for democracy. My brother was certainly wrong in 1950 to fight to make Korea safe for democracy. Gritz was certainly wrong to go to Vietnam in 1963 and make that part of the world safe for democracy. It may not have been his idea but he certainly shouldn't, at this stage of the game, take credit for doing the Jews' work.

Gritz brags that General William Westmoreland (CFR) referred to him as The American Soldier. Gritz claims a body count of 400. Some of his Green Beret colleagues are puzzled as to how he arrived at that figure but I will assume it is accurate. Considering however that this killing was done in two of CIA's assassination programs, "B-52" and "B-36," which were ordered by that old OSS killer, Bill Colby (CFR), it is more than likely that those killing teams in fact helped to prepare South Vietnam for the communist takeover which OSS had planned from the beginning, that is, at the Teheran Conference in 1943. It was there that Ho Chi Minh was designated by the US government as the new leader of North Vietnam as well as future leader of South Vietnam, after an indecent interval during which millions would die. We now know that many of the thousands of key individuals murdered by CIA's Green Berets in the Phoenix Program and by these other killing teams were definitely not communists. They were simply considered enemies of OSS/CIA's future plans for Indochina.

The Green Berets were and are soldiers of the CIA's private army, the Special Forces. Special Forces was designed by CIA to perform illegal and destabilizing tasks which were beyond the scope of the regular army. Gritz' personnel file states that he is a highly trained saboteur and espionage agent. Plainly put, there is nothing in Gritz' career which indicates that he is on "our side." He in fact presents himself to the knowledgeable as a zealous, dedicated agent of the secret government. At best he has remained in that totally artificial world of pure, uniformed socialism. No matter how fervently a military man might believe that his mission is to protect American free enterprise, the reality is quite the opposite. The man in US uniform represents the interests of Jewish finance capitalism and the elimination of business competition around the world.

The military is a vast welfare program designed to absorb and neutralize the masculine elements of our feminized society. The recipients of this welfare must occasionally go abroad and kill people designated for killing by our rulers on Wall Street. Increasingly since the army's illegal race mixing operations in Little Rock, Arkansas and Oxford, Mississippi the recipients of our welfare are being directed against us. (For example, in the federal trash heaps left at Randy Weaver's home were found evidence that CIA-army killers from Gritz' old Delta Team were on the scene.) But most of the time they are paid to go about their meaningless routines on vast military bases around this country and in other countries. These bases are also laboratories for "social research" and behavior modification and the first behavior our Jewish controllers wanted modified was our natural tendency to separate ourselves from the colored races. American Negroes were sent to "occupy" Germany with the obvious intent of destroying the German race by encouraging those Negroes to take advantage of helpless, impoverished German women and girls. Soon our domestic military bases became integrated and Whites were conditioned by Jewish psychological specialists to treat the colored races as equals. Despite his Mormon upbringing Gritz in fact took a Vietnamese wife and father children by her. Perhaps this was a temporary madness for he eventually married within his own race.

Gritz has become very good at telling most people what they want to hear. When his conflict with George Bush became known he was invited to speak before Christian Identity audiences. Within a year of his first appearance before them Gritz announced that he was of that faith. He later denied this conversion when he announced his candidacy for president on the Populist ticket. His spokesmen now say that Gritz' religion is a combination of Mormon, Baptist and Identity teachings—a mixture guaranteed to lead to insanity if not widespread acceptance. Gritz will tell us what we want to hear on relatively tame subjects such as drug smuggling, MIAs and the Kennedy assassination but he sticks to the Jewish line on the dangerous subjects such as WWII revisionism, "the Holocaust" and the Jewish Question.

There is a number of troubling questions about Gritz which came out in the Weaver episode. The first is, did Gritz ever know Weaver in the Special Forces? Jack McLamb reported on Tom Valentine's radio interview,

"Now, Randy had called Bo Gritz the month before. They knew each other from Ft. Bragg when Randy was a Special Forces soldier. He asked Bo to come up and help him..." However, on the television program, "Inside Edition," Gritz said that the didn't know Weaver. He said the same thing at a 12 September campaign appearance in Tustin, California.

The next question is, who told Bo Gritz to go to Idaho? Again, McLamb says, "Well, Tuesday of last week [25 August], I was sitting at lunch with Bo when he described to me how bad he felt about not having gone up there when Randy called... I had no idea that Bo knew him..."

But in Tustin Gritz said that the FBI called him in Phoenix and asked him to go to Idaho. (I have this on video tape.) From then on Gritz was working for the FBI, as we shall see.

The third question is, did Gritz tell Weaver that he was wired for sound? Gritz admitted to his Tustin audience that he was wearing an FBI body wire the whole time. This brings up the FBI's overall reason for Gritz to intervene on their behalf. As we've all figured out by now, the Weaver family was meant by the feds to be a terror lesson for the rest of us. The whole family, beginning with Vicki, was to be liquidated. With a stunning combination of cruelty and cowardice the marshals' murder squad lost control of themselves and possibly of the plan. Not only did they backshoot a little boy as he ran from them but they undoubtedly hit their fellow snipers, Roderick and Degan, with their own panicky full-auto fire. There is the possibility that they deliberately murdered Degan, as mentioned above. The result of all this cowardice and lies was a declaration of emergency and martial law in two counties. Local residents were evacuated from their homes. This resulted in hundreds of outsiders and locals pouring into the federal staging area to protest the atrocity of killing little Sam. Of course, the media came, too, and suddenly the little murder plan blew up into an international scandal and PR fiasco of the first order. The FBI took charge at the scene and among the 400-800 "militarized police" were the FBI's mad dog killers known as the "Hostage Rescue Team," (HRT) and they were itching to HRT someone. The marshals' killers and the goons from BATF (IRS) were desperate to murder the remaining Weavers and Harris so as to silence all witnesses against them. At this prospect of another Gordon Kahl scandal, some cooler heads somewhere in government realized that this fire had to be put out and losses would have to be taken, for the risk in this liquidation business is that at any time some sufficient number of outraged Americans may say, "That's it! You thugs have gone too far!" and begin the righteous solution to our national problem. So, one of Gritz' friends called him and said, "Go put out that fire!"

Gritz' true role at Ruby Creek was to save face for the Federal government. He had to calm the protesters for the FBI. Anyone who watches his little performance in which he tells the gathered supporters of the murder of Vicki Weaver becomes nauseated at his cold and deceptive manner. "I've got good news and bad news," he begins. "The good news is that Kevin is badly wounded but alive, Randy is wounded but doing okay and the girls are all fine..." That was the good news. "The bad news is, and I want everybody to get close and hold hands—that's an order!—the bad news is that Vicki was shot and killed..." [Gasp!] "But the girls are fine and their spirits are hig (blah, blah, blah)..." Of course, he was performing for Gene Glenn, the FBI's special agent in charge of Idaho and of this operation, who was listening to everything via Gritz' body wire, unbeknownst to the supporters.

Now many people ask, "But if Gritz was working for the FBI, why was it so difficult for him to get permission from Glenn to talk to Randy?" The answer is that Gene Glenn had a dirty little secret he didn't want to get out. He didn't want anyone to know that Vicki had been deliberately murdered five days before. During the eighteen months leading up to the USMS murder team's terrorist attack on the Weaver home, the government's psycho-squad had made profiles on the Weavers. Vicki was tagged as a matriarchal figure who would have to be liquidated at first opportunity. An FBI HRT sniper named Lon Horiuchi was therefore tasked with her murder.

Gene Glenn was obviously planning a Robert Mathews-Gordon Kahl-style incineration of everyone and everything to destroy all evidence of the premeditated murder of Vicki until his superiors realized the thing had gotten out of control in terms of public relations. The big show of citizen's arrest warrants by Gritz, Lighter and McLamb gave the needed appearance of hostility between Gritz and the feds. It gave Gritz credibiltiy for a day or so with the Weaver supporters until it became clear to them that Gritz was on the other side. They began to realize, especially after his heartless and rather nasty manner in the announcement of Vicki's death, that Gritz really was trying to disarm them mentally, to the specifications of the FBI.

After the final surrender the FBI's Glenn could not speak glowingly enough of the invaluable help Gritz had rendered to the FBI, to the extent of placating the so-called Nazis and skinheads with a limp "Nazi salute." Gritz made the gesture, saying "And Randy wanted me to give you guys this...(saluted)... he said you'd know what it meant, Okay? Thank you..." At the Tustin meeting and elsewhere Gritz denied he'd ever done it! He claimed he'd fight to the death against being called a Nazi (blah, blah, blah). Its only significance is that it was another typical Gritz expediency and follow-up lie to redeem himself and confuse the issue.

Gritz was caught in another lie by, of all people, one of his campaign managers. Gritz was quoted in the Spokane Spokesman-Review as follows:

"Weaver himself is a punk," Gritz said. "Weaver is no hero. He doesn't deserve any medals. I don't think he was a very good Special Forces soldier. I wouldn't have wanted him in my command. He was very weak..."

Naturally this upset a lot of people and someone asked Gritz to explain during the question period at the Spokane appearance. Gritz said he was misquoted! What he'd really said was that he'd heard that Weaver was a punk and a criminal but now he doesn't believe that to be the case... So his campaign manager, who knew the reporter to be an honest type, figured the editor may have been playing with the quotation marks. He called the editor, who said, "Would you like to hear the tape? I've got four hours of Gritz telling me worse things than that."

"No," said the campaign manager, "I guess not." Nevertheless, we are going to get that tape.

Gritz received his derogatory information concerning Weaver from Steve Tanner of Bonners Ferry, Idaho. When questioned by me over the telephone on 27 September, Tanner said, "The government was doing God's work" in its attack on the Weaver family. It turns out that the two men whom Weaver claims set him up on the shotgun charge were Fred Kumnick and Steve Tanner! On 4 October, in a follow-up call, Tanner admitted to me that Weaver had indeed, as a favor, bought Tanner a Remington 870 shotgun with a 20 inch barrel from a local gun store. Weaver had done this as a favor so that Tanner could have a shotgun without the federal paper trail. In this age of federal tyranny that was no small favor. Tanner said that Weaver had probably done this fifty or more times for people, including Frank Kumnick, for whom Weaver bought a Harrington & Richardson 12 gauge. The federal indictment reportedly names these two shotguns as having barrels 1/4 inch less than the "legal" 18 inch length. The obvious question had to be asked. The answer would reveal the truth. "Do you still have that shotgun, Steve?"

"I don't know," replied Steve Tanner.

It is reported to me by a former Gritz supporter that Gritz has been illegally funneling campaign money to a friendly Florida radio talk show host. Tom Donohue's daily radio show is a Gritz-for-president cheering section. Donohue's former program director told me that the mysterious financial support of Donohue's show had the smell of CIA covert funding—via Gritz. This is a serious charge and should be investigated because, if true, it could prove that Gritz remains a tool of CIA and all of his strange, seemingly contradictory behavior would be explained. The former program director checked Gritz' Florida election records and found that Gritz is not on the ballot in that state despite his claim to be. He found that in January, '92 the campaign had $1900 in the bank. The next month Gritz announced on Donohue's program that his two associates, Lance Trimmer and Chuck Jones, were "touching live American POWs." Around this time the Florida records show that Gritz' campaign fund increased by $200,000. The record shows a $400 contribution from "Jeb Bush—employed by CIA..." with the genuine and confidential home address of the president's son. I do not understand the significance, if any, of this official listing.

When questioned, Jeb Bush replied, "I wouldn't give Gritz money to buy water if he were dying of thirst."

Gritz is reportedly about to be indicted for a violation of the Logan Act, which proscribes Americans from talking to foreign leaders about official matters. Gritz is accused of negotiating with Red Vietnamese officials.

Some of my friends who were skeptical of my theory on Gritz have said, "Well, the Weaver episode certainly didn't help Gritz personally..." But, according to Gritz, it did. He announced at the Tustin appearance that because of his actions in Idaho ("I'm a guy who makes things happen!") his campaign would be given two million dollars by a person or by persons he would not name. I will bet that the person's initials are C.I.A.

I believe that Bo Gritz still works for the US government—more specifically for CIA and FBI—against the White Power movement. For example, earlier this year the Napa (California) Sentinel published copies of cable traffic sent in 1992 from the US embassy in Guatemala City to the US embassy in Bangkok which identified "Jim Gritz" as an informant and operative of the US government. Bo Gritz is also known as "Jim," or "Jimmy." The mere fact that Gritz admits that he was called in Phoenix by FBI and that he wore an FBI wire is all the proof we need that he operates for FBI whenever he is told to do so. Gritz now says he is moving to Sand Point, Idaho, which is the heart of this country's so-called "White bastion."

In practically every radio interview or public appearance over the years, Gritz has repeated the peculiar phrase, "...when I put my heels to the square..." or, "...when I put my arm to the square...," referring to his taking an oath to defend the Constitution from all enemies foreign and domestic. Not having served in the US forces I asked a veteran friend if this expression were commonly used? He said he'd never heard it but that he'd been regular army and that Gritz was Special Forces. I pointed out that these expressions are used by Freemasons secretly to alert others in the Brotherhood of their membership. It is quite common, as well, for career military men to increase their possibilities for promotion by becoming Freemasons.

On 12 September, at the Tustin appearance, Gritz said suddenly, "I'm not a Mason," in reference to the diabolic and Masonic nature of the government's activities. But at another appearance in a different state Gritz admitted that he is a former Mason. I put this to another of his campaign managers, himself a Masonic dropout at the 4th Degree, whose pastor told him to get out. He told me, "Bo uses the Masonic handshake everywhere he goes." I asked him which level handshake? "I'm not sure but he rubs the other guys knuckle with his thumb, every time." I told the man that Freemasonry is a criminal conspiracy at all levels.

"Well, I'll tell you," he confessed, "I felt pretty bad, walking around the room with a bare chest and one bare leg in those rituals..." I told him there are no "former Masons" except the ones such as Jim Shaw, who spill the beans and expose the conspiracy—the penalty for which is death.

I quote Gritz' good friend and associate Gary Goldman in Called To Serve, (p. 431):

"It has always amazed me how tight the good ole boy net really is. Bo has got friends and associates in every office of the federal executive branch and throughout sensitive jobs in state and local governments... While it often seems hostile with all the threats from Washington, Bo is friends with all the in-betweens."

In the case of Randy Weaver we all must focus on our criminal government and devise ways to prevent such deliberate, brutal and cowardly aggression in the future. I believe the Weaver incident has helped to expose the dangerous and deceptive nature of Bo Gritz, who is being set up as the leader of the opposition to the New World Order, which I believe he serves. ❑

CLINTON VICTORY END TIMES ARE HERE

by
Hans Schmidt

Writing the headline above I was only being half facetious. I do not believe that our world has come to an end, that humanity will disappear from earth, or that for most of us "normal" life will cease. I do believe, however, that the Clinton victory will have tremendous (negative) ramifications for the United States, and possibly for the rest of the world.

There is the possibility that the assumption of the presidency by Bill Clinton come January will have as great an impact on the United States, as had Hitler's "Machtergreifung" on 30 January 1933 on the fate of Germany. Only this time the situation is exactly reversed. While then the 'staatsvolk', namely, the German people, regained the power to decide over its own fate, now the American 'staatsvolk', namely, Americans of European descent, the backbone of this nation, will become effectively disenfranchised. That this will merely be the culmination of a process that began in earnest soon after WWII (when the Jews, due to their newly acquired status as professional victims, made tremendous gains everywhere), will not make things easier for those who will suffer as a result. There is no doubt that the new administration will be a minority government, and, by that I do not only mean a government elected by a minority of voters but a government for and by the (currently) privileged minorities, namely, the Jews, the homosexuals, the feminists, and the Blacks (in that order).

First, I would like to state that neither of the aforementioned religious and racial minorities (Jews and Blacks) have so far shown any abilities to create a well-run state that can exist without foreign assistance. Neither Israel nor any of the African states (nor, for that matter, Poland) are viable in today's highly technological world. How then should one expect Jews and Blacks who will probably receive an inordinate share of high-paying jobs in the new administration, to run America better than the WASP-crowd just leaving office?

What can we expect from the New Crowd in Washington? Most certainly they'll try to give the economy a shot in the arm. An article in the Washington Post of 11 November 1992 told of the willingness of the notorious FED to ease the money supply. This will help the nation as much as does another dose of heroin helps a dope addict. But the final result will be a much larger deficit, and subsequently a greater debt burden for the entire nation that can eventually only be "repaid" through a hyper-inflation which will impoverish the entire American middle class.

(In this conjunction I would like to mention a thought that occurred to me recently: In the United States we have approximately 30 million Blacks, constituting nearly 12% of the population. I am not telling any secrets when I state that Blacks, as a group, do not contribute their 12% share to the well-being and betterment of society as a whole. (This thesis is not invalidated by the fact that a few (very few) Blacks are outstanding in their chosen field of endeavor). I discovered that the cost of Blacks to this society is at least twice as much as would be acceptable; in other words, they account for social expenses for at least 60 million people without a commensurate return in taxes or services. I'll mention some of the reasons: Blacks demand and receive almost the entire extra social expenditures coming from the huge foundations, from United Way, from the Red Cross, and other such organizations. Blacks ruin public housing faster than it can be built. Due to black criminality (from which decent Blacks suffer most), we need far more policemen, judges, states' attorneys or jailers than European states not yet overrun with Third World asylum seekers. Due to black anti-social behavior we have to spend far more money for public construction projects (for instance, for fences over freeway overpasses) than would otherwise be necessary. Also, the cost of the insane school busing across the nation must be incredible, as is the true cost of "affirmative action". FAR BE IT THAT I BLAME MAINLY THE BLACKS FOR THESE DISMAL FACTS. I WANT TO EMPHASIZE THAT WE WOULD BE FAR BETTER OFF IF BLACKS AND WHITES COULD SEPARATE ON AMERICAN SOIL, AND THE REMAINING WHITE STATES WOULD VOLUNTARILY ASSIST THE ONE OR SEVERAL BLACK STATES IN A FAIR AND EQUITABLE MANNER SO THAT PEOPLE THERE WOULD HAVE A REASONABLY DECENT LIFE. IT WOULD BE MUCH CHEAPER THAN GUARANTEEING THE CONTINUED EXISTENCE OF ISRAEL. I personally know that most Blacks are simple, nice people without unseeming demands, it isn't they who are the real cause for the unacceptable circumstances described in this paragraph.)

Getting back to a Clinton government, we can also assume that the withdrawal of American troops from Europe and elsewhere (including Germany) will be speeded up. In Germany this will result in the weakening of the Bonn stooges who very much depend on American bayonets to keep them in power.

A trade war between the United States and other major powers in the world (especially Europe, Germany, and Japan) is already in the making. I cannot see how this can be settled peacefully. In the long-run I foresee an almost complete breakdown in trade between the major power blocks.

The situation in the former Soviet Union is getting more dangerous every day. I wonder how Clinton will handle it. Remember when I stated in these Briefs that I didn't trust Yeltsin? It now seems clear that he as well as Gorbachev is totally in "Western" hands. Yeltsin's policies are bound to fail. In creating new societies we always have to take a people's psyche and characteristics into account. It is asinine to try to introduce American free-market ideas in a nation that for 70 years was under Communist rule. (Remember: I am by nature a promoter of the free enterprise system!)

Soon after Clinton won, several publications (among them TIME) claimed that he now had a "mandate". Let's look at the statistics: Clinton received 43% of the popular vote (vs. 38% for Bush and 19% for Perot). But only 55% of eligible Americans voted. That means that only approx. 23% of the entire U.S. electorate voted for the new president. That "ain't no mandate". Furthermore, "Billy" and George Bush each received about 40% of the white vote (meaning, of course, that Clinton was really elected by the minorities), and Perot got the other 20%. Since the Jews are being counted in the white vote, and since nearly 90% of them voted for the new president (by virtue of their being a minority), we can clearly state that Bush received more European-American votes than Clinton or Perot.

The liberal media also want to tell us that Perot hurt Bush and Clinton about equally. This is patently untrue. Had Perot not entered the race, Bush might still be president. That a political newcomer without a party can garner 19% of the vote on his first try (almost all of them "Aryan" Whites), says something of the mood of the American 'staatsvolk'. I am certain it gives the powers-that-be food for thought. I think American Whites are getting ready for a Führer. But is there a Hitler on the horizon?

Finally, a word about why Bush lost. Talking to many of you by phone just before and after the election, we all came to the conclusion that George Bush was obviously not doing his best to win this battle. As a matter of fact, many thought that Bush was doing his best to throw this election. Could this have happened? I'll go back to my thesis that the Bush-Baker team had for quite some time (perhaps as early as the spring of 1989) been out to curtail the inordinate power of the Zionists over the American Congress, and possibly even to reign in the 'loose' nuclear power of the Jewish mini-state. Douglas M. Bloomfield, a columnist for the WASHINGTON JEWISH WEEK wrote on 15 October 1992 as much: "The Bush-Baker team has tried to systematically undermine the long standing bipartisan relationship between the United States and Israel." I also would like to reiterate that Baker's outburst "F... the Jews!", and Bush's public expression of disgust over the misuse of Jewish influence in Congress on 12 September 1991 cannot have been part of a preplanned charade.

It was clear that the Jewish power structure was intent on defeating the Bush-Baker team once their "anti-Semitism", in this case the reluctance to acquiesce to all Jewish demands, became known. To reach this objective, the New York "Oberjuden" used all the means at their disposal but especially their great wealth and their near total control over the American media. If you ask me, it was the media almost more than anything that caused the defeat of the Republicans. This, especially since the media for more than a year tried (at the behest of the "Oberjuden") to keep this country in a recession. Well, the Jewish overlords succeeded beyond their wildest expectations. Now it seems that we are not only in a recession but in the beginning stages of a world-wide depression, caused by the planned slowdown of the American (economic) locomotive.

In all these "Betrachtungen" (contemplations) the role of H. Ross Perot is still not clear. You may remember that I had from the first assumed that he was "put up", possibly without his knowledge, by the Jews, since in my estimation the greater number of intelligent discontents could be found in the Bush camp, and I believed from the start that a Perot candidacy would mostly appeal to "Aryan" Whites. But then other information became available which caused some doubt about this theory, and I also noticed, by reading Jewish newspapers, that some of the usually well informed Jewish writers couldn't get a handle on the situation. Perot's off-again, on-again candidacy didn't make the matter any clearer. Then, about mid-October, a few things came together, and as a result I now came to a different conclusion:

- 1. On 16 October 1992 the NYT printed an article by David Rockefeller with the title "Why I trust Clinton", in which this "financier" unequivocally came out for the Arkansas governor. In this conjunction it must be mentioned that hitherto I had regarded Bush as belonging to the Rockefeller (WASP-) camp.
- 2. Just about this time James Baker III relinquished his job as Secretary of State, and returned to the White House, ostensibly to take charge of the president's faltering election campaign. But: From that time on one didn't hear or see much of Baker. I got the feeling that he was purposely being muzzled, or he himself had thrown in the towel.
- 3. Shortly before these happenings, General Powell, the head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and therefore the head honcho of all American armed forces, came out against sending American troops to Yugoslavia, thereby effectively blocking what I had thought would be a major part of the presidential campaign, namely, the tumultuous reception shown on TV by a grateful population of Serajevo of American Marines "liberating" their city.
- 4.The (unexpected?) return of H. Ross Perot into the political arena with the flimsiest of explanations...

Putting all this together, I didn't forget that Bill Clinton had been an attendee at the Bilderberger meeting that was held in Baden-Baden, Germany sometime in 1991. Since most of us know that the Bilderbergers as well as the CFR and the TC are part and parcel of the Rockefeller "power"-empire, the question arose to which of the two groups (WASPs or Zionists) Clinton must be counted? The answer to this latter question may be that the Rockefeller crowd knew already in 1991 that Clinton was one of the presidential candidates selected by the Zionist opposition (for, Mickey Kantor, Clinton's main handler, was already in place), and one just wanted to look him over (these things are being done all the time in "higher" circles). In other words, Clinton's attendance in Baden-Baden does not necessarily mean that he is part of the Rockefeller clique.

Contemplating Perot's role in all of this, it bears remembering that scientists and top salesmen in a technical field are (like doctors) usually lousy politicans. Whatever I write about Perot doesn't mean that I am denying the man's likely sincere patriotism. But there is no question that he was being used by someone. But by whom? And why? It came out that years ago Perot had made a business deal with Nelson Rockefeller when the latter was governor of New York. As a matter of fact, it seems that it was this deal which paved Perot's road to incredible wealth. The question arises, isn't it possible that the Rockefeller 'firma' now reminded Perot that he owed them something? This may well be possible but it still doesn't provide the answer why the Rockfeller clique would want to defeat one of their own, namely, George Bush?

Watching the Bush-Baker situation since mid-October, I became convinced that by then the president had received the unequivocal order to try his best to lose the election. It may well be that he readily agreed whereas Baker might have balked; since his plan, namely, the curtailment of Zionist power in America, had not been completed. I can imagine that Baker thereupon purposely went into hiding, not wanting to take part in this scheme. Assume for a moment Bush would have won the election, and the Zionist power over Congress could really have been broken (if Bush had won, more Republican Congressmen would have been elected). That would still have left one extremely important segment of the Jewish power structure in the United States intact: their control over most of the media. In this case, would the Jews have used this instrument of their power to get along with the Bush-Baker team, or would they have continued to fight tooth and nail for what they had lost? To put it simpler, would they have stopped their pessimistic reporting about the state of the economy (the kind of reporting that actually caused the continued recession), or would they have continued to do so even if it led to a real depression? I guess you know the answer to that. In other words, even after a clear victory on 3 November, President Bush would not have been able to get a handle on the declining economy. It would have led to an economic catastrophe under Republican auspices with damages caused for decades to come. This may be the real reason why the Rockefeller crowd ordered Bush to lose the election. One thing is clear, now the economy is in such shambles that "not even" a Bill Clinton with all the (already apparent) blessings of the Jewish-controlled media can get the wagon rolling again. I doubt that Bill Clinton will be in office for more than just one term.

The list of Jewish members of the new Congress shown below is taken from the B'nai B'rith Messenger. It is important that you keep it for future reference. I would venture to guess that the names of these people will especially crop up when legislation for a new "hate crimes" bill will be introduced.

In this conjunction it is worth mentioning that Peter H. Kostmeyer, the Congressman (D-PA) who last June introduced the bill for the funding of the "Holocaust" Museum until the year 2000, was soundly defeated.

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way, Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. For your copy of Which Way, Western Man? send $17.50 (which includes $2.50 for postage and handling for the softback edition (Order No. 22003).

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980—except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. For your copy (Order No. 03014) send $10.00 (which includes $1.50 for postage and handling). LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Landsmann,

Thank you for sending me LB so fast; I hated to miss any issue due to my move from Germany. As I spent most of this year in my native Germany, I got to enjoy one of the world's best health care systems. All the more angry I got to see that the Jewish AMA (American Medical Association) will never give up their position until the last person in this country is unable to pay his medical bills! It's so horrible; yet we could have the world's best health care systems if it wasn't for those by-money-only motivated doctors.

Another comment I'd like to make is on Mr. Clinton's position about having homosexuals in the military. I think it's absolutely shocking that this issue should be one of his first priorities upon entering the office of the president of the U.S.A. As I spent most of this year in Europe and did not watch so much of the Clinton speeches, I was surprised to say the least.

What is next? I think women should not be in the military and no homosexuals either. I consider myself a modern young woman, and I don't feel competing with men in a truly masculine domain is being emancipated at all, and I think it makes the military weak; not only that, it makes our men weak as well. Look what the White males have come to, they have no direction, and have no fighting spirit left in them.

In closing I would say men and women have to go back to their basic roles as nature designed, then we can begin again.

Sincerely,
C.S., Arizona

Sir:

For the past ten years or so I have been an admirer and critic of both David Duke and Tom Metzger. For the first eight years of this past decade I magnanimously assisted both men with about fifty dollars a year, perhaps less.

But two years ago something happened. Was it the swarm of negroes migrating to the lily white hamlet where I abode, or was it the new houses being put up by Asians, presumably with low interest government loans? Whatever it was, I came to realize that I could not continue as a bystander. I had to take matters into my own hands. This is a bold and dangerous thing to do but I knew in my soul that I had to get involved, the fate and future of the White Race depended upon me and what I do.

At about the same time the great David Duke was moving his machine on to a U.S. Senate seat. I decided to join the campaign and ultimately I put over a thousand dollars into the treasury. I also increased my money contribution to Metzger's camp, though by not nearly as much.

The past two years of activism have given me the opportunity to observe Duke in action, from up close. I have watched Metzger too but only through his WAR publications and the TV shows he as put together. Both of these brave men Have said and done thing that made me hopping mad. My respect for Tom Metzger was severely tested when I hear about tome lies that the media claimed he was propagating the night before Duke's race for Governor. I even threatened to withdraw my support from each of them if they did not straighten up. With great relief I report that both of these men kept on being themselves and I finally came to my senses.

The only man operating under more pressure than David Duke recently has been the Iraqi, Saddam Hussein. After the holocaust of the governor's race I will never criticize Mr. Duke again. Since the jailing of Tom Metzger for practicing his religious rituals on private property, since his refusal to cop a plea bargain, since his wife died on the ramparts literally defending our race, and because Tom Metzger refuses to give up, and even in spite of his alleged lack of elan, my respect for him also has increased exponentially.

Metzger and Duke have accomplished great things. These outstanding men fit the same description given by the SS man Leon DeGrelle for the front line combat generals in the German army. These officers would swim naked across ice cold rivers with a machine-gun strapped to their backs In order to be the first to carry the fight into the heart of the enemy. How much more could Duke and Metzger accomplish if they had a core group of only one thousand supporters that had the wherewithal to come up with ten dollars each and every months?

Many among us claim that the system Must totally collapse before we will be able to rally enough people to rebuild our society. What evidence do we have to show us that people can or will stand up when stripped bare of necessities? Most of the people that we think we need to awaken think only of their own comfort and the after life where they will live in nirvana with Jesus.

Should the hoped for breakdown occur, with the turning off of the electricity and water in certain areas, what will the now awakened people do? Without any sort of preparation there is nothing they can do. Suppose that there are many "survivalists and revolutionaries" out there replete with all the gizmos. What then? The idea of a revolution with arms sound romantic. The CIA plants even suggest that it is what we need. But in all probability the government has everybody in some sort of computer program that will be used to dispatch flying death machines to do ugly work if it looks like something is brewing. In other words, the first one to fire a shot will be killed instantly and everything he holds dear will be ruined. We need only look at Germany in 1945, or Iraq in 1991, for a preview of what Big Brother has in store for anyone who resists his plans with force. After the population sees and hears about a few of these deals they will eat dog poo poo and claim to like it. Everyone knows this.

Those of us in the intelligentsia should be alert enough to share our food and water with the front line soldiers. What other choice do we have?

Dear Landsmann:

Greetings from darkest New York. The tiny flicker of resistance to mayor Dinkins' black racism has already gone out. There was no more than a token effort to cut the Jews' revenues from unjust fines. Dinkins appointed a white traitor as police commissioner who has announced his top priority is to niggerize the police department by hiring more savages. He has further announced that black rapist Sharpton is one of his advisors! However, the black racist administration may soon run into a setback, not form the cowed whites but from the Jews who are furious at the acquittal, by a black jury, of the murderer of a rabbi during the Crown Heights riot. Whites have suffered form this kind of "justice" for years but Jews can do something about it. Thus, we can expect the replacement of Dinkins in the near future.

Clinton was put in as I expected; the latest insult to those who served in Vietnam. I knew he would be installed after I heard he was nominated by the bankers in Baden-Baden, Germany, in May 1991. Every parasite in the country voted for Clinton and now they are expecting goodies as if this were still the era of Lyndon Johnson They will soon be disabused. Clinton has orders to implement the strictest austerity measures in order to squeeze out more interest payments. From what I have been able to discover, his policies are as follows:

1. There is to be a cap on medicaid payments. The problems of the aged are to be handled through mercy killing and hospices, especially for the millions of black AIDS victims to come.

2. There is to be a drastic reduction in welfare payments. Whites will simply not be allowed onto welfare while blacks will be forced to have state funded abortions on pain of having their benefits cut. Forced abortion is to be sold to women as a "right" they have been too long denied.

3. Sales taxes are to be sharply raised. A national sales tax is to be passed.

4. Gasoline taxes are to be sharply increased, probably in conjunction with another lunatic Middle East war. The last war cost us about 37¢ per gallon. Clinton is to exceed that.

5. Export of American industry will continue under NAFTA and other pretexts so that the foreign bankrupts can earn dollars to pay interest to the Jews' banks.

6. The military and every other branch of government will be cut to free up more money for interest payments. There will also be massive government assets sales at low prices for the same, holy, purpose.

7. Since Clinton will be unable to hand out money to any parasites except the Jews, he will try to buy favor with special privileges and more oppression of whites. Faggots are to be made virtually a new nobility. Black racist judges, like Sands of Yonkers infamy, will be appointed and further laws passed to kick whites out of desirable jobs and turn them over to colored racists.

None of the above nonsense will do anything for the economy except to deepen the depression. Clinton can do nothing about the Jews' usury system or the fact that there is no money in circulation. The banks' answer to the problem is to cut U.S. living standards to pay their interest. This will make Clinton the most hated president in modern history. The bankers chose a Democrat because he can betray his supporters and impose austerity more easily. Four years form now they will install a Republican as president. They have already chosen Jack Kemp (the political "rabbi", as they call him) for president in 1996.

In the midst of all this scheming, AIDS is quietly doing its work. The faggots dancing in the streets at their man Clinton's election will be mostly dead or dying four years from now. Last week [beginning of November] the CDC suddenly added 90,000 women to the number of AIDS cases by changing the definition of AIDS a little. It seems they had deliberately gimmicked the AIDS definition so as to exclude female cases! A lot more of such surprises are due. Beware the Flu vaccination campaign. Everyone who has been vaccinated now tests positive for AIDS. The media claim it is a false positive but I wouldn't bet my life that they are telling the truth. I have long expected an attempt to poison the white population with AIDS via vaccine.

Yours truly,
S.R., New York State

Dear Liberty Bell Publications,

Greetings again from this political gulag here in Soviet-ona. I got the latest issue of Liberty Bell which I enjoyed very much as usual. I also got the slip that said that my subscription will run out in December. I would like to ask for another complimentary subscription like the one you so generously sent to me this last year.

Right now I am still in a super-max institution where we are allowed minimum movement and no types of jobs at all. I would very gladly pay the price for a subscription if I could; as it is, I barely get by on my drawing capabilities. If possible, I will gladly do any kind of drawing that you would want to pay for the subscription. I don't want to go without the Liberty Bell if I don't have to; it has definitely opened up my small world. No other publications gives me the type of information yours does. Hopefully, soon I will be able to get out on some kind of yard and be able to pay for the subscription. I hope to hear from you soon. 'Till then, Eine feste Burg ist unser Volk!

Dear Mr. Dietz:

...I do have an important request of you. I feel strongly that my enclosed "Gedanken eines Auslandsdeutschen über die Wiedervereinigung" may be of some assistance to Schönhuber, who is probably the only German at this time who may be able to bring about a resurrection of the German soul. Perhaps you can forward my comments which, I hope, offers some fresh perspectives to someone who has access to Schönhuber, to use in some manner in his political efforts.

The occasion of my 50th birthday this year was an opportunity to reflect on the fortuitous confluence of circumstances that brought about the reunification and with it the hope of regaining Ostpreußen, Pommern and Schlesien, including my birthplace, Breslau. I look forward to walking the streets of a free Breslau in a few years to see for Myself the sights of a town I know only from the stories of my parents and grandparents.

One of the anecdotes related by my mother about the war years follows. That was the first I had heard about Jewish partisans, supposedly from a former concentration camp:

In January 1945, the survivors of a refugee column spoke to my mother at a railway station in Freiberg, 37 kilometers southwest of Dresden. The column, consisting mostly of women and children, were attacked by other civilians, who identified themselves as Jewish former inmates of a concentration camp in the Dresden area. Identification was made with a few shouted words. The attackers appeared to have been well nourished. They tossed grenades and fired automatic weapons at the refugees.

The attackers numbered about 20, the refugees several hundred, many of them pushing baby carriages, carrying their few valuables in Rucksacks. As the column scattered in panic, some left their baby carriages with small children on the road. The Jews threw a few of them into the nearby drainage ditch, so as to be able to execute them in a group with fewer bullets. At least one grenade was thrown into the same ditch. The entire raid was over in a few minutes, and the attackers melted into the tree near the road whence they had come.

Parachutes were found hanging from the branches of trees in a nearby forest, an indication that the former inmates had received supplies, perhaps the weapons and ammunition used in the attack, from allied sources.

Also enclosed is a story of mine about the attitude of American toward Germans, and the anti-German propaganda on television and in our newspapers here. Perhaps Mr. Schönhuber will be able to make use of that as well.

No reply necessary since I know from personal experience how difficult it must be to keep your organization functioning with the few people on your staff. Please accept my warmest wished for the good health of your real and extended family, and the continued success of our common effort.

Mit landsmannschaftlichem Gruß,

W.M., Texas

Dear Mr. Dietz,

The article "Heretical Verities" by Professor Ben Kriegh was a special surprise and reflects the versatility of the Liberty Bell. You refuse to remain in any intellectual rut. The article was comfortably presented so that even those of us who have no special training in Mathematical Physics could appreciate the controversy caused by Mr. Phipps' book. There have been others, unrecognized, who have challenged some of Einstein's works.

Einstein's Theory of Relativity, which is apparently after all these years still a theory, has always aroused my suspicion. Being an Engineer, I can appreciate the genius of Henry Ford, Thomas Edison, the rocket scientists and others whose works evolved into our present complex industrial and technological state. How well off we are because of their contributions. What are Einstein's contributions to society? I do not know of anything material; and I can't even imagine how science can apply the formula $E = MC^2$. Did he contribute anything that is useful? Do engineers who design cyclotrons or atomic energy plants use any of his formulas? I would be interested in knowing. In my view, his genius reputation outstrips, by light years, his accomplishments. It was Einstein who promoted the development of the atomic bomb, so his real legacy is the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The mysteries of existence cannot be solved by man's logic system which was developed to explain physical phenomenon that affects man. To deal with "our physics" we have developed the ideas of dimensions and time. Dimensions seem valid, but "time" is man's inventions to define our personal and national histories. It is something that doesn't exist, yet we try to formulate things like the theory of relativity in terms of time. What we do have is, not time, but the "changing state of matter." Any mathematical formulation of abstract concepts that use the factor "time" is suspect.

Since we are matter and are surrounded by matter, all our logic explores matter and the shifting forces that affects matter and its inherent energies.

However, matter is not the mystery. The mystery of life is the absence of matter or nothingness. Religion nor science can ever define it or explain it. Where is the beginning or end of a void? Our minds lurch into neutral and will never understand a dimensionless and timeless universe. Man's current logic system will never fit the reality of our universe, no matter what it is.

Yours truly,
C.T., California

Mr. Dietz:

Because so few people listen to us, we might as well admit that we write for our own learning and entertainment. Therefore we need not worry about offending anyone.

It is surprise to find that the murderer of Vicki Weaver is a Mongolian. Most readers know that the communist jews in Central Germany employed these ape-like creatures to murder the unarmed population of that unfortunate land. The modus operandi, as we all know, was simply to machine-gun a crowd of Germans and then drive on to the next location, leaving the cadavers on the sidewalk. The locals were left with the task of burying the bodies.

Like so much of the jews' work, this boggles the mind.

And the American boobs are lost forever. But there must be a few of them who wonder why life is not as easy as it once was. Though I am certain they have not lost a moments sleep worrying about the 30 thousand people being killed each week in Croatia by the communist Serbs.

Respectfully,
H.D., Texas

Dear Sir:

In the October issue, page 53, you published a very excellent article by J.B., Bellefonte PA., in which he was very critical of "Publicus Prudentis" for his attacks upon Identity Christianity. He should have pointed out that your publication is many times more culpable than "Publicus Prudentis," for you are endlessly assailing all religion, thus denigrating the heroes and martyrs whom he listed, along with the one third to one half of all the patriotic American activists in this country who are also religious. Shame upon you! You should have more decency than to be endlessly impugning the integrity and intelligence of so many patriots, and more sense than to be thus promoting factionalism within the world of patriotic American activism. Why don't you get off this thing and stick to being constructive?

When it comes to discussion of nominal religious organizations, that is quite another matter, for many of them are not religious operations at all. Instead, many are outright subversive operations. One kind is these propagandists for international Judaism and for Israel, posing on the TV and elsewhere as Christian preachers. Another is what is now called the national Council of Churches that was set up around 1910 by the Zionist-Communist conspiracy to take over control of the "main line" Protestant churches. They now boast that they have control over some forty million Americans, and have extensively altered the Bible into subversive propaganda, This, indeed, should be exposed, especially for the benefit of the millions of people who are being gulled and misdirected and deceived.

This might be a good project for yourselves, including a list of all the church organizations that are thus affiliated and controlled. There was a book about this, Collectivism in the Churches, by Arthur Bundy, probably now out of print. Otherwise, I have never seen anything on this subject.

I am not religious myself, and just keep out of the whole thing, so long as no harm comes of it, which can result from someone injecting their religion into efforts at patriotic activism, and thus creating dissention with those who are not religious.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH — FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

ACADEMIC SLUMS, I

The grandparents or great-grandparents of most Americans watched in uncomprehending stupefaction while John Dewey and his gang of crypto-Communist racketeers took over the public schools and converted them into engines that manufactured the uneducated and uneducatable White rabble that fills the doomed country today.

When I was a young neophyte, intelligent professors in well-reputed colleges and universities comforted themselves with the thought that by imposing strict academic standards they could exclude from their campus the victims of the "Colleges" of "Education." That was an illusion.

Civilized Americans have for decades perceived there was no hope for the big and celebrated universities. That was proved by many incidents, such as that which occurred at Yale, once a highly respected university, when its guest, the distinguished Professor William Shockley, tried to give a scheduled lecture. The hall was filled with the anthropoid vermin that Yale nourished in place of students, and they yelled and howled to prevent the lecturer from being heard. To the vermin's dim minds that doubtless constituted scientific proof that there was no conceivable difference between races. Their trainers, of course, knew that Professor Shockley was right, but had to be howled down, if our race was to be exterminated and its civilization abolished to please the Yids with a New World Order of savages ruled by God's barbarians.

But Americans still entertained some hope of the small, privately endowed colleges, and it is quite probable that there still are a few that are, or try to be, educational institutions. But the number is dwindling rapidly.

Westminster College in Fulton, Missouri was founded in 1851 by the Presbyterian Church but eventually made itself independent. It has been for many years a relatively small and presumably conservative college with a steady enrollment of about 660 students and a faculty that increased during the past two decades by almost fifty percent—from about fifty to over seventy. It is known in some circles for its Churchill Memorial Library, to which is annexed a replica of an English church that was destroyed by German bombers in 1942.

It attracted national attention in 1946, when Winston Churchill made his famous speech about the "Iron Curtain," thus inaugurating what was called the "Cold War," in preparation for the squandering of American blood and treasure in Korea, Vietnam, and elsewhere, and for the demolition of American prestige by contrived defeats and contemptible precautions taken to ensure the maximum loss of American lives.

The College attracted attention again this year, when it paid Gorbachev $3000 to announce the end of the fictitious "Cold War" and to pontificate about the ambiguous end of the Soviet Union and a Russia that is now really as enigmatic as Chruchill had pretended it was in 1948.[1]

To recommend a college these days one needs to be acquainted with some trustworthy members of its faculty and to have informed oneself about the courses that are actually given, the composition of the student body, the general atmosphere, and especially the extent of its pollution by aliens and alienated witlings. I did not have the requisite information about Westminster, but I knew nothing to its discredit before 12 May 1992, when I read a report that began on the first page of that day's St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

1. Churchill, as the half-English Prime Minister of the British Empire that he helped to destroy, had served the team of Roosevelt & Stalin in contriving the Suicide of the West, and could not possibly have had any doubts about the character and purposes of the surviving member of that infamous and unspeakably evil partnership or the nature of the Judaeo-Communist régime that captured Russia in 1917-18 and has now only changed to a different masquerade costume.

According to that report, the President of Westminster, J. Harvey Saunders, at a closed meeting of the faculty a few weeks before, had made a proposal of college policy: "With the multicultural nonsense now sweeping the country, why don't we take a stand for Western civilization and Anglo-American ideals and sell the hell out of it?"

Dr. Saunders was obviously a rarity among academic administrators today. He was sufficiently well educated to know what civilization is, and sufficiently honest to want to educate young men and women instead of exploiting them. He appears a sympathetic character and one wishes one knew more about him.[2]

Dr. Saunders also had the talent requisite in such administrators: he was a shrewd salesman. The United States is cluttered up with approximately 2230 institutions that call themselves colleges and universities—you have only to glance at the horrendous list that occupies twenty-five pages of small type in any recent issue of the World Almanac—all competing for youngsters to keep up the body count and justify clamoring for bigger and bigger subsidies from taxpayers and alumni. With very few exceptions, the colleges all peddle the same kind of Marxian bunkum, slightly diluted with other courses below the high-school level, for victims of the intensive sabotage of children's minds that has been carried on for more than seventy years in the public boob-hatcheries.

2. I can tell you none of the essentials: only that he was born in Huntington, West Virginia, 22 February 1939, and was graduated from Marshall University, a revamped normal school in his home town, in 1962. He received the degree of Philosophiae Doctor from the University of Georgia in 1966. His major subject was American History, and his dissertation dealt with American diplomacy in Central and South America. He taught in the Northeastern Louisiana State College and Marshall University from 1966 to 1971, when he became Associate Professor of History and Dean of the Faculty at Millsaps College in Jackson, Mississippi. He became President of Westminster in 1977.

Just now, the competition is to see which college can surpass the others in the stench of pseudo-intellectual garbage that is called "multicultural" to disguise its uncouth antagonism to our race and civilization. But the stench of cultural putrescence has become commonplace and almost uniform. To attain any distinction, a college must stand apart from the horde of fattened and diseased lemmings that are all rushing to the same precipice.

Although it is true that the majority of Americans have lost the will to survive and have also lost the mammalian instinct to protect and educate their immature offspring, there is still a minority of Americans who are reluctant to send their sons and daughters into the pseudo-academic slums that are now commonplace. To these parents an institution such as Westminster, which is about the optimum size of a first-rate college, could appeal successfully for pupils and, eventually, endowments.

I am sure that the number of American parents who feel some intelligent affection for their offspring is more than sufficient to supply a hundred and fifty freshmen (including females) to Westminster every year, and if it had appealed to them as a college that proudly championed our civilization instead of denigrating and defiling it, Westminster would certainly have flourished as a bright oasis in the American desert, and would have profited accordingly. But Dr. Saunders' business sense seems to have been as far above the mentality of the faculty as was his interest in education as distinct from depravity.

Even conscientious administrators make mistakes, and what was probably Dr. Saunders' worst mistake was made five years ago, when a noisome alien, evidently imported from India or adjacent regions, named Vishvajit Pandya, was made Professor of Anthropology (and of what kind of anthropology, you can guess!). The report in the News-Dispatch gives no further identification, and India is, of course, the model for the stinking multi-racial Melting Pot that Americans are making of the country that once was theirs. Vishvajit could be almost any ethnic compound, but his name suggests that he may be a Dravidian.[3]

Simple-minded Americans do not perceive the contempt for them felt by racial aliens whom they admit to what was their country, a contempt that is certainly justified, and is greatly augmented when the aliens are subsidized by being given "welfare" and even more when they are given well-paid and responsible positions that would be reserved for Americans, if our people were not bent on suicide.

Vishvajit, incensed by Dr. Saunders' respect for Western civilization and the hated Anglo-Saxons, ostentatiously resigned in protest at such a "parochial [sic] attitude," and flitted off to another and doubtless more profitable perch in a "multicultural" morass.

Some malicious and knavish informant who had attended the closed meeting of the faculty "leaked" Dr. Saunders' disgraceful respect for Western civilization to the leading jewspaper in this benighted land, the New York Times, which reported his horrible deficiency in hatred of our doomed nation—reported it, of course, with the usual Yiddish yowls.

According to the News-Dispatch, the faculty of Westminster, perhaps embarrassed by the suspicion of academic integrity to which it had been exposed, unanimously asked Dr. Saunders to resign.[4]

3. The Dravidians are an anthropological puzzle that, so far as I know, no one has satisfactorily solved. They are of short stature, have the complexion of niggers, and the bony structure, especially in the skull, of Caucasians, perhaps specifically of the Mediterranean branch of our race. They inhabited southern India long before the invasion and conquest of the sub-continent by the Aryans, who, as is evident from the Rāmāyaṇa, regarded them as a useful species of monkey. (Rāma employed them in building a causeway from India to Ceylon.) The Dravidians of today profess a barbarized form of Hinduism and are distinguished for their hatred of other Indians, signalizing their sentiments by dynamiting crowded passenger trains and similar violence. The Jewish government of Canada is importing them in large numbers to terrorize the White boobs of that unfortunate country.

4. In academic institutions the vote is technically one of 'no confidence,' which,

The trustees of Westminster were reluctant to accept Dr. Saunders' resignation, but he insisted. And no wonder: who would want to coexist with such a rat pack?

Many decades ago, and before the general prostitution of American universities, there was an invidious ditty sung by undergraduates at various institutions, to each of which it was adapted, but containing lines that affirmed that "the dying mother said, 'Don't send my boy to Harvard; I'd rather see him dead.' " Well, I need not advise you; you will know how to react to a suggestion that you throw your son or daughter into the swamp at Westminster.

Westminster, to be sure, is a loathsome tumor on the American body politic, but it is only typical and commonplace. If you have been in the least astonished by what happened there, you have received a propaedeutic lesson in a subject that must be of interest to all Americans who hope that their offspring will not someday wish they had been aborted in the womb—a subject that calls for extensive treatment and to which I intend to return in future issues of this magazine.

RELIGIO RELIGAT

Everyone who thinks rationally about human society knows that the maintenance of a civilized state depends on its nomos, a regnant consensus about the conduct of its citizens and hence virtually unanimous agreement about their duties and rights. That, of course, is possible only in a racially homogeneous society, in which such few aliens as may be admitted to the country are metics, obliged to conform to the nomos of the society and accorded only such rights as the citizens may deem it expedient provisionally to give them. If members of an inferior race are imported as slaves, stringent legislation will be necessary to avert the like the comparable vote in the British Parliament, is tantamount to a demand for resignation. In so small a college as Westminster, I suppose that the entire faculty voted. In large universities the suffrage on such issues is usually restricted to full professors, who form what is called the academic senate. They are not more honest.

ever-present danger of miscegenation, and, if the emancipation of slaves is permitted, it must, of course, be made impossible for them and their descendants to attain citizenship by any trick.

The cohesion of a civilized society depends, needless to say, on an unquestioning acceptance of a common religion in the widest sense of that word, which does not necessarily imply belief in supernatural or praeternatural powers. The basic meaning of religio is given in the old etymology, religio, quod religat.[1] It is the spiritual tie that binds—binds men together in a civilized society. This includes, of course, respect for, and perhaps belief in, whatever gods that society recognizes, and hence the inviolable obligations imposed by the sanctity of such things as oaths, which are taken, of course, in the name of gods.

If our race is to survive in the United States or anywhere in the world it will have to obtain exclusive possession of the territory it occupies and to develop an effective nomos to replace what was eroded and lost when Western Christianity became incredible. That implies a religio in the widest sense of that word, a belief which is shared and accepted without hesitation, and acted upon without reflection, by virtually all members of that Aryan society.

1. I am aware, of course, that in the De natura deorum Cicero puts in the mouth of Balbus, who expounds Stoic theology, an etymological derivation of religio from relegare. That is what makes modern etymological dictionaries hesitate. I am by no means certain that Cicero accepted the Stoic definition of that word, but I cannot recall a passage in which he explicitly gives an etymology. To determine with certainty his opinion, it would be necessary to compare his use of the word in all of the many occurrences that will be found listed in the two concordances by H. Merguet and, for the letters, the index verborum by W. A. Oldfather et al. There is an excellent edition of the De natura deorum with exhaustive commentary by Arthur Stanley Pease (Harvard University Press, 1955). It is true that in Lucretius and perhaps in Epicurean terminology generally religio (rēligio) means 'superstition,' as in the oft-quoted line (I.63), tantum religio potuit suadere malorum. On Lucretius's use of the word, see Stanley Barney Smith's commentary in his edition of the poem (University of Wisconsin Press, 1942), pp. 206, 209-212.

So far as I can see, an Aryan religion must exclude belief in praeterhuman beings, since there is no valid evidence whatsoever for the existence of such figments of the imagination. To profess a religion of Odin and other deities native to our race is, of course, a means of showing one's emancipation from an alien superstition, but no one can really believe that Odin or any of the others actually intervenes in what happens in the world or could hear and answer prayers. To be valid, our religion must conform to reality or, at least, appear to do so.

National Socialist Germany avoided official promulgation of a religion that would conflict with the superstitions of a very considerable part of the population, although its leading writers gave here and there hints of what they themselves believed. Whether the Thule Bund made an effort to develop a specifically Aryan religion cannot be determined until the record has been cleansed of all the Yiddish slop, including, of course, forgeries, that our enemies have poured upon it.

The most intensive effort to found an Aryan religion in the United States was made by Ben Klassen, who was Pontifex Maximus of his Church of the Creator, with headquarters in Otto, North Carolina, and editor of a bluntly forthright periodical, Racial Loyalty, until his retirement in June 1992. Officers of the Church were pontifices or flamines and took the title 'Reverend,' to which they had as much right as the holy men of fantastic theologies. Whether the title, given its connotation, was demeaning is, of course, another question.

The creed of the Church was set forth by Mr. Klassen in a series of books, beginning with The White Man's Bible (1983) and ending with an autobiography, Against the Evil Tide, published in November 1991.[2] It is implicitly atheistic

2. The books are still available from Mr. Klassen at P.O. Box 400, Otto, North Carolina; 28763. The announced price of Against the Evil Tide was $12.00. I am not informed of the current prices of the other volumes. I do not know whether files of Racial Loyalty, which was published from June 1983 to May 1992, are available. It included excellent articles, some of which, by Mr. Klassen, were reprinted in his series of books.

and venerates Creativity, i.e., the spiritual force in the Aryan race which enabled it to create our ("Western") civilization from Mycenaean Greece (c. 2000 B.C.) to the present, and which must have been genetically inherent in our race in prehistoric times. It properly emphasizes the great intellectual and moral difference between Aryan culture and the beliefs and customs of other (and necessarily hostile) races.

Mr. Klassen regarded his Church as the "wave of the future" and is said to have spent a fortune in subsidizing it. Why "the White Man's religion" did not become a mounting wave that enlisted wide adherence is a question that could be answered only after an intensive analysis of the ways in which it was promoted and the actions and personalities of all who were connected with it, both before and after a terrorist attack on its headquarters by the local authorities in North Carolina, who evidently disapproved of any Church that did not love Sheenies and serve Jesus-juice to its members. Mr. Klassen's exposition of its creed deserves careful examination and consideration by all who still retain a hope that Americans may have a future.

So far as I know, Mr. Klassen was right in claiming that Creativity was "the first and only racial religion the White Race has ever structured for its own survival, expansion, and advancement in the last six thousand years of civilized [i.e., recorded] history."

I have recently seen an allegation that a similar attempt was made in the later part of the Nineteenth Century. I regard this assertion with no little scepticism, but think I should report it on the chance that it may attract the attention of someone with the time, patience, and resources to determine its validity.

Freemasonry

I have never ventured very far into the problem of Freemasonry, a labyrinth of violently conflicting reports, many by Masons who denounce one another, in which a man could lose himself for a decade, if he wished to read critically—or even to read at all—everything that has been published on that subject. The account that occupies a large part of the second volume of Charles William Heckethorn's Secret Societies of All Ages and Countries (2d edition, London, 1874; reprinted, New Hyde Park, New York; University Books, 1965) is, at best, no more than an outline; it does not even mention the rite with which we shall be concerned below.

According to many Masons, the secret society is a religion, devoted to worship of the Great Architect of the Universe (who must have been sadly incompetent, if he could design nothing better than the world in which we live) and to rebuilding the Temple of Solomon (a noted figure in Jewish mythology, who may or may not have had an historical prototype), which was left incomplete when its architect, an otherwise unknown individual named Hiram Abiff, was murdered by three wicked men whose names were Jebulo, Jebula, and Jebulum! Masons were repeatedly excommunicated as anti-Christian by the Roman Catholic Church,[3] but some ranking members of the hierarchy, including Popes, have been members of the Society.[4] Masons were also excommunicated by the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church in 1964.

The rituals of British lodges were published by the Reverend Mr. Walter Hannah in Darkness Visible (10th ed., London, Britons, 1963) and Christian by Degrees (4th ed., ibid., 1964). The rituals of American lodges were described by Captain William Morgan in Illustrations of Masonry, which was published the year after he was murdered in 1826,[5] and led to the formation of the Anti-Masonic Party (which was, incidentally, the first political party to publish a 'platform' stating its objectives). It elected quite a few candidates to state and local offices before it was merged into the Whig Party in 1834.

Freemasonry has frequently been charged with being a revolutionary conspiracy, similar to Weishaupt's Perfektibilisten (Illuminati), and more or less completely under secret Jewish control. The charge is denied by some Masons categorically; others admit and endorse it, but only with reference to the European Grand Orient lodges and perhaps a number of others, which are regarded as heretical.[6]

American Masons are no help. I have known, on terms of some confidence, three who attained high degrees in one or another rite. One of these regarded the society as harmless recreation for men who had retained a boy's passion for secret societies, dire oaths, and mystical mummery, and had a normal man's desire to escape for an hour or two from his quotidian life to an all-male society in which he could speak sub rosa. Another, who assured me he had attained the thirty-second degree, thought the lodges a machine for extracting money from suckers who expected to benefit financially from the supposed patronage of fellow members; he admitted, however, that the 33°, to which admission is by invitation only, might be a good cover for a political conspiracy. The third man, whose opinion I learned only by pledging never to disclose his identity and thus endanger his life, was convinced that the entire organization was manipulated as a covert but vicious subsidiary of the Revolt Against Civilization.

The most sweeping indictment of Freemasonry as essentially a conspiracy to impose the New World Order and concomitant slavery on the entire planet is contained in the books published by the indefatigable Juan Maler

6. On this subject, see La Franc-Maçonnerie templière et occultiste aux XVIII^e et XIX^e siècles, by René Le Forestier, with a learned introduction by Alec Mellor and addenda by Antoine Faivre (Paris, Aubier-Montaigne, and Louvain, Nauwelaerts, 1970). If you can read with due attention its 1116 pages without feeling a touch of vertigo, I envy you your stamina.

(Belgrano 165, Bariloche [a suburb of Buenos Aires] 8400, Argentina),[7] This most impressive series of thirteen volumes, all copiously and meticulously documented, began with Die große Rebellion (1969; reprinted, 1985) and may be completed by Eine utopische Weltordnung (1992). While the author is principally concerned with the countries of South America, his study embraces the whole world, including, of course, the United States and Germany. The latest volume has a long section on the Serbian attack on Croatia.

The persons whom the author identifies as undoubtedly agents of the Revolt Against Civilization are, most or all of them, Masons. I am only doubtful of his assumption that a customary use of the index finger (☞) as a gesture in speaking is a Masonic symbol and therefore suffices to show that the speaker is a Mason. (Masons can, of course, claim that the conspirators merely use the lodges as a cover for their nefarious activities.) It may be significant that although Herr Maler sedulously avoids expressions that might give offence to the Master Race, his books are generally denounced as "anti-Semitic," a term catachrestically employed to denote insufficient veneration for God's People.

Albert Pike

An important figure in the tangled history of Masonry is Albert Pike, whom the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite, Southern Jurisdiction, elected their Grand Commander in 1859, an office he evidently held until his death in 1891. According to the English Mason whose name escapes my recollection at the moment, but who wrote voluminously under the pseudonym of Arthur Edward Waite, Pike "raised the Scottish Rite from a comparatively obscure position, encompassed by many competitors, to its present unrivaled state as a High-Grade system of Masonry."[8]

Pike was born in Boston in 1809, but as a young man he migrated to less godly climes and eventually took up residence in Arkansas. When the South was invaded in 1861, he joined the Confederate Army and rose to the rank of Brigadier General. He seems to have been, like Sherman, an early exponent of total war, for he is said to have organized a corps of savages from Indian Territory, who operated with their native ferocity against soldiers and civilians alike; their atrocities so shocked Southerners, who tried to observe the rules of civilized warfare, that Pike was forced to disband his savages. He went to Richmond and published a pamphlet in which he accused Generals Hindman and Holmes of having ruined the Confederate forces in Arkansas by incompetence, with an underlying hint of sabotage. His facts seem not to have been disputed, but the publication was deplored as demoralizing.[9] After the war, he seems to have lived in Charleston, but he travelled to all parts of the South as the Masonic Sovereign Grand Commander.

8. New Encyclopædia of Freemasonry (reprinted, New York, Weathervane Books, 1970), Volume II, p. 278. Pike's importance is shown by the frequent mention of him in this work passim; see the references listed under his name in Vol. I, p. xxix. This elaborate work elucidates the many and various Masonic symbols, and describes so many Masonic orders, rites, grades, lodges, and heresies that it will leave you dizzy as well as bewildered. I suspect that few members of Masonic lodges have even an inkling of the complexity of Masonry and its history.

9. The record of General Hindman, at least, was deplorable, especially in his repeated failure to follow up victories over the Northern invaders and also in defeats suffered after he imprudently divided or scattered his own forces. but before we can convict a general of incompetence (or worse) we need to know the limitations within which he had to work and, above all, his estimate of situations on the basis of information then available to him. The question of Hindman's generalship has probably caught the attention of one of the many university teachers of American History who look anxiously for subjects of articles and books they must manufacture to win promotion or, if young, to retain their precarious positions. It is likely that one or more of them may have made a study of Hindman's career that has escaped my necessarily restricted attention.

In addition to his revision of the Scottish rite, which, according to Waite, guarantees that "his name will ever be green and of precious memory in all American Masonry," Pike is said to have founded, as a kind of inner sanctum, an even more select and esoteric order by reviving the Palladian Rite, said to have been founded in 1730 and early introduced to a select few in Charleston, but to have then become dormant until Pike revived it. Pike, we are told, revived the Rite in collaboration with Giuseppe Mazzini,[10] who took the office of Chief of Political Action, while Pike became the Grand Master of the Central Directory in Washington and the Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry, which was to be established by penetration and control of other Masonic orders. There is extant a considerable correspondence between Pike and Mazzini, which is conclusive evidence, if it is genuine.

The ultra-secret Palladian Rite, which was at least as exclusive as the 33° of other rites, had a theology which need not detain us here[11] and is credited (in 1880 or shortly thereafter) with a secret technology that anticipated some inventions of the early Twentieth Century. Its ceremonies were certainly spectacular. I quote a report Pike is said to have made to the Supreme Council in Charleston on 20 October 1884:[12]

> At Saint Louis, we operated the grand rites, and through Sister Ingersoll, who is a first-class medium, received astonishing revelations during a solemn Palladian session at which I presided, assisted by Brother Friedman and Sister Warnburn. Without putting Sister Ingersoll to sleep, we saturated her with the spirit of Ariel himself,[13] but Ariel took possession of her with 329 more spirits of fire and the séance from there on was marvellous. Sister Ingersoll, lifted into space, floated over the assembly and her garments were suddenly devoured by a flame which enfolded, without harming her. We saw her thus in a state of nudity for over ten minutes. Flitting above our heads, as though borne by an invisible cloud, or upheld by beneficent spirits, she answered all questions put to her. We thus had the latest news of our very illustrious brother, Adriano Lemmi.[14] Then As-

10. The famous romanticist writer and agitator of the Italian Risorgimento, who hatched out many conspiracies, all of which ended disastrously for the participants if they did not run in time, but who is credited with having created the national excitement that enabled Count Cavour, Prime Minister of King Victor Emmanuel II of Sardinia, to unify Italy (with the help of Napoleon III) and make his sovereign the first king of the kingdom thus created, to the chagrin of Mazzini, who was a fanatical democrat.

11. Like authentic Christianity, this theology is basically Zoroastrian, recognizing two principal gods who are at war with each other: Adonai, the god of the Christians, and his opposite, Lucifer, the anti-god of the Christians; the two form a necessary duality, like the two poles of a magnet or light and darkness. Lucifer, who is, as his name means, the bringer of light, is the God of Light and reason, opposed to the Christians' Adonai, the god of darkness and evil. Pike, to judge by the account of his theology that has come to us, was something of a scholar: he cites Zoroaster, the Gnostics, the Manichaeans, and the Templars. His doctrine is logical and, if one must believe in supernatural forces, will appeal to everyone who remembers the magnificent Satan of Milton ("What though the field be lost?" e.q.s.)

12. I quote from Lady Queenborough's Occult Theocrasy (Privately printed, 1933; reprinted by the Christian Book Club, Hawthorne, California, 1968; available from Liberty Bell Publications, $20.00 + postage), p. 223. (The lady means theocrasy, not 'theocracy.') She quotes from a work by a Dr. Bataille, who claimed to have collected Pike's correspondence with Mazzini and other documents relative to the Palladian Rite. I do not have access to that work. Dr. Bataille wrote in French, but presumably quoted his English sources verbatim, since Lady Queenborough does not indicate that her quotation is a retroversion.

13. One is apt to think of Ariel as the sprite who appears in Shakespeare's Tempest, but he is a mighty angel, whom you may remember from Milton as a companion of Lucifer. For more information about him and his colleagues in Milton's epic, see Harris Fletcher, Milton's Rabbinical Readings (University of Illinois Press, 1930). Professor Fletcher worked directly from the sources in Hebrew, Aramaic, and Rabbinic. See also Robert H. West, Milton and the Angels (University of Georgia Press, 1956), a learned survey of the angelology known to Milton and his contemporaries, but based on secondary sources. (Incidentally, most of the Greek quotations were hopelessly garbled by a writer or printer who did not even know the alphabet; don't waste time trying to make sense of them.) The extensive bibliography will give you a glimpse of how the theology of Protestant Christianity was confused and distorted by the flood of Kabbalistic hokus-pokus released by one of the historically most important figures of the Renaissance, Giovanni Pico, Count della Mirandola and titular Prince of Concordia, an amiable and wealthy young man whom the Jews in Florence fleeced royally while teaching him to read the Zohar and similar hallucinatory trash.

taroth, in person,[15] revealed himself, flying beside our medium and holding her hand. He breathed upon her and her clothes, returning from nowhere, clothed her again. Finally Astaroth vanished and our sister fell gently on to a chair where, with her head thrown back she gave up Ariel and the 329 spirits who had accompanied him. We counted 330 exhalations in all at the end of this most successful experiment.

Pike was obviously an accomplished showman, and a quite complicated system of wires, as well as other magical apparatus, must have been needed to hoist Sister Ingersoll and let her flit about, but we may be sure that the production could be reproduced today by any competent magician—certainly by the eminent James Randi. If Sister Ingersoll was, as we hope, a really beautiful woman, the

15. You may be astonished that this mighty spirit is masculine. The explanation, as succinct as I can make it, is that the Ugaritic goddess Anath was regarded as the virgin sister of Baal, but she was the Semitic goddess generally called Astarte, and the Canaanites evidently regarded her as the wife and consort of their chief god, Ya'u. The Jews took over this divine pair, worshipping them (together with three minor gods) in the fifth century B.C. as Ya'u and Anath or sometimes as a composite bisexual god, Anathya'u. She was one of the elohim who, in the less absurd tale in Genesis, created mankind in their own likeness and hence both male and female. Perhaps it was when the spelling of Ya'u was changed to Ya'weh that the god's wife was also called Asherah (a recently discovered inscription suggests, but does not prove, that asherah was the special name of a wooden image of the goddess). When the Jews became rabidly misogynous, they absurdly claimed that the word meant 'grove [of trees]' when it referred to their own country, and when it was connected with the Phoenicians, they, by the trickery that is so easy in a language in which vowels are not written, distorted the name to Ashtoreth to give it the connotation of 'shameful,' perhaps because the goddess represented the beauty that the strange race hates with such intensity, The distinction was emphasized when the Jews made their religion monotheistic in imitation of Stoicism. When Ashtoreth/Ashtaroth first appeared in Jewish and Christian demonology, she was made masculine, from either ignorance or contempt for females, and was usually represented as an Infernal Grand Duke, closely associated with Asmodeus, and their chiefs, Lucifer and Satan (who is often distinguished from Lucifer). Demons of high rank are, of course, served by middle-class and lower-class demons. For a roster of Ashtaroth's retinue of demonic servitors, see The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abramelin the Mage, purportedly written in Hebrew by Abraham the Jew, translated from a French version by S. L. MacGregor Mathers (London, 1890; reprinted, New York, Dover, 1975), pp. 115 f.

ceremony must have been far more edifying and enjoyable than vulgar religious services.

Such is the account of Pike's achievement, but the very mention of the Palladian Rite rouses the pseudonymous Arthur Edward Waite to vituperative fury, and he, as a pious Mason, would have us believe that it is all lies and forgery, forgery, forgery.[16] He admits, however, that Pike borrowed extensively from the Kabbalistic "philosophia occulta" of the pseudonymous Éliphas Lévi (Alphonse Louis Constant),[17] but he maintains that Pike could never have been so wicked as to be connected with a rite that not only had a drastically revised theology, but "androgynous" lodges, in which male members "adopted," from a parallel lodge of women, female adjutants.[18] Some parts of the report about Pike's Palladian Rite do give one pause, but they are no more fantastic than many apparently authentic reports about various rites and lodges, so, as is usual in the endless polemics about and within Masonry, a disinterested observer can only ask, as did perplexed Pilate in the 16. Op. cit., Vol. II, pp. 251-264.

17. So far as I know, Constant was a White man, but he was evidently besotted by the specifically Jewish rigmarole of the Zohar and its derivatives, with their panoply of angelic and demonic beings and inventory of the occult powers they will bestow, if properly invoked. The most noteworthy of the books he published under his pseudonym are Histoire de la magie (Paris, 1860), Le clef des grands mystères (1861), and La science des esprits (1865). These and the innumerable books like them remind one of Weishaupt's cynical exclamation, "O marvellous mind of man, what can you not be made to believe?"

18. A number of Masonic orders had "androgynous" lodges; see Waite's Encyclopædia. That naturally encouraged an assumption that the relations between males and females were more delectable than spiritual. There is singularly little information about the sexual implications of Masonry in the various rites and lodges. It is reported that King Edward VIII was a Mason and that he was censured by his superiors in the order and fell into disgrace when he took as his mistress Mrs. Simpson, whose complaisant husband was a Brother Mason. If that is true, some or all British Masons evidently adopted as part of their creed the code of gentlemen, who could not seduce the wife or mistress of a friend (as distinct from a mere acquaintance) without dishonoring themselves.

well-known legend, Quid est veritas? and wash his hands—and his weary eyes.

This long excursus on Masonry has been necessary to introduce consideration of a statement made by Dr. Robert Morey, said to be "an internationally recognized scholar," some of whose twenty books have been translated into many languages, including Suomi and Chinese. He is the author of The Origins and Teachings of Freemasonry (Southbridge, Massachusetts; Crowne Publications, 1990). I have not procured that book, but almost a full page of Christian News, 16 November 1992, is devoted to excerpts from it.

Dr. Morey, in a quoted passage, professes a high standard of objectivity, which I am sure he observes—so long as Jesus permits. He demolishes many myths that Masons have devised to enhance their prestige,[19] and insists that there is no evidence that any Masonic lodge existed before 1717, when "Freemasonry was established [in London] as a 'gentleman's club' which met from time to time in various Taverns. ... Hundreds of such clubs were established during this period. ... Such clubs were places where rich and powerful gentlemen could meet to talk, drink, smoke, play cards, or just sit and read the paper. ... All agreed not to debate such issues as religion and politics as this would generate strife."

I shall not dispute Dr. Morey's findings, but I note that, for example, the club to which Dr. Samuel Johnson and Boswell belonged had no need of a Grand Master or tremendous oaths and did not spread like wildfire throughout Europe in the following decade.

Dr. Morey insists that "The God of Masonry at the beginning was the Christian Trinity of Father, Son, and

19. E.g.: "It is a myth that Washington was a loyal Mason who faithfully attended his lodge. The plain fact is that Washington was elected to masonic offices, given various masonic honors, and even had his portrait painted in full regalia without his knowledge, approval or even presence! When informed of such actions, he would withdraw himself from the honors conferred."

Holy Spirit.[20] The triangle was used as a symbol for the Trinity." This was modified to content Jews when they were admitted to the club, but the introduction of references to other religious rites in Masonic rituals is a damnable heresy and must be suppressed.

This brings Dr. Morey to Albert Pike, who was so fulsomely lauded by Waite:

> Pike attempted to remold Scottish Freemasonry into an Aryan religion for the Aryan race complete with its own scriptures, ceremonies, and symbolism. He was deeply involved in such occult arts such [sic] as magic and astrology. Albert Pike does not deserve the praise that has been heaped upon him since his death. He was not a scholar but a plagiarist. He was a fraud and a con man to the end. He was a promoter of Aryan racism which led so many millions to their death. ... Pike found Freemasonry a Christian institution but left it a Hindu temple.

In what follows, Dr. Morey continues to quiver with righteous indignation, but it is directed against the "anti-Christian bigotry" of all who do not shut off their minds and have faith in the tall tales in Christians' story-book. He presumably believes the theologians who claim that anthropoids are made equal by being soused "in the blood of the Lamb," but we may ignore his vaporings about "racism." He is, I suppose, a White man, but he is a professional writer who naturally wants his books to pass the censorship and sell widely, so, whatever he may believe in his own mind, he has to make the routine obeisance to the Master Race by endorsing their great swindle, the Holohoax, and by spitting at wicked "racists," who do not prostrate themselves before their masters, the infinitely superior and ineffably sacred Sheenies.

20. That this was true of some Eighteenth-Century lodges appears from rituals that are mentioned by Waite, op. cit., Vol. I, passim. Other rituals of the same period, however, implicitly ignore or deny Christian myths. The "Architect of the Universe" seems to be the Stoics' animus mundi, vulgarized with Yiddish trappings. It is my impression that the mainstream of Masonic religion should be classified as a Judaized deism.

The Questions

Dr. Morey has nothing to say about the supposed Palladian Rite, of which he may not have heard. He speaks only of Scottish Rite Masonry, which, in the United States at least, is still, so far as I know, what it was made by Pike, who, according to Waite, raised it to "an unrivalled state as a High-Grade system of Masonry." What concerns us is Dr. Morey's confident allegation that Pike "tried to make it an Aryan religion for the Aryan race."

Is that true? Nothing in the very limited information available to me confirms or refutes the claim. To answer this question one would have to possess or attain a detailed knowledge of the rituals of the Scottish Rite from the first degree to the thirty-second, and preferably including the sublime 33°. I hope the question will be answered by someone who is in a position to do so.

Assuming that Dr. Morey is right, are the present members of the Scottish Rite aware that they are practicing an "Aryan religion"? If so, why have they done nothing, so far as we know, to defend their race? If not, how can they be made aware of their faith in our race and their obligation to defend it?

These are vital and urgent questions. I have seen no published statistics on the membership of the Scottish Rite, but the two estimates I have heard are that "about 800,000" or "at least a million" men have been initiated into the Scottish Rite and are, presumably, active members of their lodges.

If there is indeed a large body of men who can be mobilized to avert the suicide on which the American populace seems bent, that will greatly alter our prognostication of our race's immediate future in this country and throughout the darkling world.

The questions I have asked deserve an answer. ❑

Europe '92 Bites The Dust

by Hans Schmidt

Several years ago, some time before the fall of the Berlin Wall, I wrote in these Briefs the sentence "1992 will not happen". By that I meant that the "United States of Europe", a planned outgrowth of the European Common market, wasn't going to be realized. I based my presumption on my knowledge of European history, and, most of all, on the recognition that one of the strengths of Europe, namely, its great cultural diversity, would come to the fore once people realize how much they would have to give up in order to gain a fragile and artificial unity. Well, my prediction has come true. In this Brief I will explain what went wrong for the internationalists who promulgated the U.S.of E. idea. That the German parliament voted early December against the wishes of the German people (i.e., no referendum) to keep the plan alive, doesn't mean a thing. Sinking men are grasping at straws.

Before I continue with this theme, and the question of what is happening in Germany, I would like to delve, for a moment, into the matter of the American military engagement in Somalia currently under way. Why Somalia and not Bosnia or Liberia? Why now, and not many months ago when the extent of the catastrophe became known? Why mostly American troops and not those of Third World countries who could do the same job much cheaper? Here I would like to intersperse that I was not the only one who was at first flabbergasted by this development. Few of the nationally known American commentators gave a sensible answer, I must say, however, that the Jewish writers were generally for the adventure (probably sensing that "somewhere" there must be a benefit for the Zionist cause), while the few genuine American patriots whose columns we are still allowed to read expressed their skepticism.

I assess the matter thusly: We all know that George Bush is an internationalist and beholden to the "One World"-crowd. (It is these supergangsters who still dream of having the United States act as the world's policeman, albeit under the suzerainty of the United Nations.) We can also imagine that the American military, raised on a healthy patriotism, would balk at serving under UN command. For the behind-the-scenes powers it was clear that American generals and soldiers would ever so slowly have to get used to the idea of being ordered around by Third World officials in future UN actions. The Somalia situation, and the fact that George Bush is now a lame duck president, presented the unique opportunity to advance this idea. Bush probably was told what to do, and he followed the orders of his superiors, whoever they may be. For the internationalists it was also important to establish the precedent of militarily interferring into the affairs of another country without being asked by natives of that country to come to their assistance. This is the case now in Somalia.

(Conservative columnist Samuel Francis wrote in the Washington Times of 4 December 1992 as follows: "Mr. Boutros-Ghali's vision thing involves a revolutionary grab at world government. He wants U.N. intervention, uninvited by the Somalis or their bandit barons, to create conditions in which relief supplies can be delivered to those in need." But what he really wants is not 'peacekeeping'or 'relief'; it is empire enforced by other peoples' lives and money for the global glorification of his own Napoleonic munchkinocracy." I would like to add that Boutros-Ghali is an Egyptian wed to a Jewess. I doubt that he is one of the true world rulers. I think he is a stooge, just as Bush and Clinton are.)

The Washington Times stated the matter regarding United Nations rule over the American military clearly on December 3rd: under the headline "U.S.commanders liable to have U.N. oversight", the Times wrote that "A U.S. draft resolution on sending military forces to relieve the famine in Somalia seems almost certain to be accepted by the U.N. Security Council, but U.S. commanders had better get used to the idea of some oversight by U.N. officials." Somalia was picked because in comparison with Bosnia and Liberia it was easy picking, and it involves only a "humanitarian mission" (what general could complain about that?). The timing was chosen because "whatever happens later" Bush cannot anymore be called to account. But the main thing is this: A precedent was set. Some day soon American troops may be used in Germany or Russia (and the Ukraine) to "create order" there, against "the Neo-Nazis", and "save"—under the guise of humanitarianism—allegedly endangered lives of the allegedly endangered Jews.

A final word about Somalia: Who remembers that this ravished country was before WW2 a colony of Mussolini's Italy? At that time it had an orderly society and, we can be sure, most of the natives were in far better shape than they are now. Would Somalia be in the condition it is now if the Italians were still there? I doubt it. The British conquered Somalia at the beginning of the war, and ever since then it has been going downhill.

What IS happening in Germany? In October I spent a week there, and I was able to have a first-hand look at the fast-developing situation in the Fatherland. I assume that most of you agree with me that currently the American media is engaged in a tremendous anti-German hate campaign. Hardly a day passes when we do not hear, read (or see on TV) of German attacks against foreigners. A neutral observer could get the impression it is unsafe to be a foreigner in Germany. This is obviously not the case. Of all the peoples I know the Germans and the German-descent Americans are the least xenophobic. There are at least six million foreigners in Germany (out of a population of 80 million), and I didn't find one who felt threatened. However, I must admit that I did not speak to any Gypsies, to Blacks or to Jews having just arrived from Russia. Interestingly, the main vehicles of the anti-German campaign (or, should I call it "Jewish concerted action"), namely, the New York Times and the Washington Post, of late dropped the word "asylants" when describing the situation in Deutschland for the incorrect term "refugees", thereby letting all pretense of objectivity fall by the wayside.

Most of you are sufficiently wise to Jewish shenanigans to know that their concerted actions usually have little to do with the objective to be reached. "Judea" (anywhere) may want to see a law passed to give Jews even more legal protection than they have already. Therefore, a known troublemaker may be paid to attack a homosexual. This then gives "them" an opportunity to call —via their power over the media— for added protection for ALL minorities (including the Jews, of course), and nobody guesses who was behind the charade. Or, Israel is short of money. The Germans can always be played for suckers. During the Iraqi use of Scud missiles one does two things: 1. One uses the world media to create the (false!) impression that it was German technology which extended the range of the Scuds to reach Israel, and 2. One empties a poor area of Tel Aviv of the population and destroys at the right moment a great number of slum dwellings with ones own explosives (the Scuds were so inefficient they caused hardly any—or no— human losses). The guilt-ridden Germans naturally fell for that one and paid a billion marks. Now, the question arises, what is behind the present anti-German campaign which began, according to my estimate, last September 27th with a New York Times editorial, and hasn't abated since?

First of all we must realize that Germany is the heartland of European (white!) civilization. And, since it is Western civilization that still seems to call the shots everywhere (from fax machines to moon rockets), one can say that whoever rules Germany also rules the world. For centuries it must have been the Jewish (Zionist) dream to "own" Germany. They almost came close to it in the twenties and thirties. Had there been no Hitler and no National Socialist party, then Germany would have been overrun by millions of Polish and Russian Jews already in the early thirties, and who doubts that they would have instituted "their" Bolshevist government with all its attendant horrors before the year 1940. Hitler said as much in private talks before he became chancellor. In other words, that which is happening now would have occurred already sixty years ago, and a curtain of ignorance, of death and terror would have descended over the entire European continent. After that, Europeans would not have been able to lift this curtain for 500 or more years.

The current inundation of Germany with unassimilable immigrants (many of them the dregs of their society) can only be the result of careful planning and organization. The aim is to destroy the (still generally homogenous) German people through miscegenation. This crime against nature was already proposed by Stalin and by Americans in WW2, and we must regard the current campaign as the continuation of WW2 by other means. The arrival of the "asocial" Gypsies* is especially annoying to the orderly Germans. Gypsies are, as a rule, a lazy, dirty people with criminal tendencies. There is no way to make law-abiding citizens out of them. But is it the Jewish aim to populate Germany with Gypsies? I don't think so. I believe it is the goal of the "Ober-Juden" to retain the Germans (whom they envy and admire) somewhat intact, to use as the prime "service"cattle (or sheep). To me it seems that the "immigration" of the Gypsies is being arranged in order to soften the Germans to the point where they are willing to abandon the (American-instituted) "Article XVI" of their Ersatz-Constitution (which allegedly guarantees political asylum for everyone who asks for it), and permit the introduction of something Germany never had, namely, an immigration law. And if an immigration law is passed, then obviously provisions have to be made to allow the legal immigration to Germany of 100,000 ex-Soviet Jews yearly, as so-called "contingent refugees" (a word already being used).

And, that these Jews get all the special privileges ("Holocaust"-reparations (even if they were born after 1945), pensions, work permits, apartments, medical care, free education, free travel permits, etc.) not available to the average German, is taken for granted.

You may remember that last October or November the Bonn Government announced that a deal had been reached with the Rumanians for the payment of "resettlement costs" in the tens of millions of Deutschmarks, the Rumanian Government agreed to take back tens of thousands of illegal Gypsies. Soon thereafter there were deported Gypsies on every Lufthansa flight to Bukarest. However, before even one thousand Gypsies had been sent back, the action was quietly stopped. Why? The German Foreign Minister, Klaus Kinkel, had been called to Tel Aviv and was told in no uncertain terms that "sovereign" Germany was not permitted to deport anybody from its soil. Germany now belongs to the Jews. Naturally, Bonn obeyed the command of the masters.

"The key challenge (for Germany), though, is to say clearly what is at issue: not an immigration policy debate, not a fringe juvenile delinquent phenomenon, but murderous racism and the angry resistance of segments of a long ethnically based state to cultural pluralism that is now inescapable." [emphasis mine, HS] Washington Post editorial, 25 November 1992.

"Germany is one of Europe's richest and largest states; refugees are not the root cause of its economic difficulties, or its politics of hate. A Germany that seeks European and world leadership simply cannot afford to slip back into dangerous fantasies of ethnic purity." [emphasis mine, HS] New York Times editorial, 12 November 1992. JUDEA HAS SPOKEN.

By the way, did you know Germany was seeking world leadership as the NYT claims it does? I didn't. But if we assume what I (currently) suspect, that Germany is now almost totally in the hands of World Jewry, then we may take it for granted that they would like to use a new, economically strong Germany as an instrument of Zionist power, just as the United States has been used against Germany in two world wars, and ever since in behalf of Jewry.

The actions of young, nationalist or discontent Germans against some foreigners are purposely being overstated. The fact is that criminal elements among the foreigners account for an inordinate number of crimes in Germany. If you read of 2,000 attacks of Germans against foreigners, you may rest assured that in the same time span 20,000 crimes against Germans were committed by unassimilable foreigners "asylum seekers". It is just like here in the United States: the entire media "screams" when a White kills a Black, but nobody talks of the Whites murdered by Blacks. Mainly due to pressure from abroad, the German Government is now introducing repressive measures against all expressions of German patriotism, including the prohibition of so-called neo-Nazi rock music. I say the Bonn people are making a big mistake. When I was there in October I did not meet even one person who defended the government when I said something against these allied stooges. That fact by itself speaks volumes. At any rate, Weimar conditions are fast approaching. No doubt the German nationalists will gain more adherents as time goes by, and greater suppression will sharpen the wits of these (mostly young) people. Out of their ranks future leaders will arise.

(Someone from Germany suggested that the current anti-German campaign, whose sources are clearly discernible, may have been started in order to provide the greatest possible propaganda for the April 1993 opening of the gigantic "Holocaust" Museum in Washington. I think my analysis regarding the Jews' ulterior motive is the more correct one but this thought should also not be discounted. Clinton has already said he will officiate at the museum's inauguration, and Whiskey-chief Edgar Bronfman has invited the Polish pope. No doubt Richard von Weizsaecker will be there, yarmulke and all...)

On 15 November 1992 some of you may have watched the nationally televised football game. According to reports I have, in the intermission "they" took the opportunity to show a half-minute propaganda-spot (Skeletons, Hitler, swastikas and all) for the Holocaust Museum that ended with the now familiar admonition "Never again". Being informed of this, I again thought that the Jewish leadership is going crazy. They must know, as I do, that many of the millions of Americans watching a nationally televised football game are patriotic so-called "red-necks", i.e. the type of person generally not too endeared with the Jews. I can just imagine an American father watching the game surrounded by his children, and seeing this sickening "Holocaust" propaganda just when he is enjoying his favorite brand of beer. Does anyone seriously believe that at such a moment sympathies are generated for the plight of the Jews? Or, is it more likely, as I believe, that at the end of the commercial (right after "Never again"), Father Redneck took a deep sip of beer and said in a no uncertain tone of voice: "f... the Jews"? Something like that must have happened in very many households of America on the 15th of November, thereby negating years of pro-Jewish propaganda constantly being disseminated in the schools and by the media. Didn't the Jewish overlords know that?

A word about the huge demonstrations in Germany "against" "Neo-Nazis" and "Right-wing radicals", and "for" foreigners: Don't make too much of it. Most of it is a charade. Remember that Honecker was able to assemble hundreds of thousands of cheering citizens of the GDR a month before he had to flee...

PLANET OF THE GAPES

Dr. Revilo Oliver, one of the very, very, very, very few people whom I admire for their scholarship, has stated that he never watches television programs. It is a shame because he is missing some of the most humorous shows in existence. One only has to tune in to the TCT (Total Christian Television) channel in order to get laughs hardly realized since Joe E. Penner died. The thing is a wondrous view of what's wrong with America.

I cannot but wonder what a Christian's definition of a Christian is because I have seen a rabbi, beanie and all (no propeller, though), directing traffic, on more than one occasion, on this "total Christian" channel. This may not be a puzzle if we assume that a Christian is merely an idiot who practices Judaism while calling it something else. Aside from this instructor of the cattle, one has to be diligent in his selection of which cupcake he is to savor. I never watch any ignoramus who leaves me with an urge to flush a toilet. I watched one negro preacher who was quite instructive and have often wondered why it is that black ministers seem to be more down to earth than the ugly mongrel quasi-white types who holler and pass the plate. One southern California (weird state!) bellower recently caused my inner hilarity to become a state of amazement. His name was (perhaps still is) Benny Hinn.

Benny is the gapeworm that causes all of that gaping. Grey-haired (weird hairdo!) and a representative of the evil practice of race-mixing, he yammers on with an accent I cannot place. He began, on one remembered program, by explaining that the closeness you get to God is directly related to the weight of the gold you toss into his bucket. After he nailed down his income for the week, he launched into one of those "end-times" scenarios, which, for the past 2000 years, has been just around the corner. With a Bible quote here and a revival of the Roman Empire there, he bubbled forth with the usual message that you can also hear from other Zionist gapeworms such as Pat Robberson, Jimmy Whore-master and Jack Van Wimpy. Benny Hinn then went on to describe the heaven which awaited all of those who had faithfully filled his wallet on a regular basis. God had revealed all of the physical attributes of heaven to him. Whether it was a video presentation, I do not know, as he didn't mention the unearthly means of knowledge transmission that took place.

In heaven, we will look all alike. There will be no male, female or perverted types hopping hither and thither. There will be no hot weather nor cold weather. No rain, no snow, no sleet, no cyclones, no ozone holes, no greenhouse fun, no nuttin'. It took about ten minutes for Benny the Hinn to tell us what wasn't going to be in heaven. He never mentioned Adolf Hitler. Finally, Benny came to the things that heaven was, instead of things it wasn't.

Everyone (including Adolf?) was to live in a huge golden city which towered 1500 miles into the upper whatever. In order to accommodate this new abode, God would increase the diameter of our present earth by 6 (magic number) times. Mr. Hinn never revealed what the remainder of this gigantic planet was to be used for.

So there we would vegetate, faceless, and undistinguishable, living in a gigantic wart upon a planet with a goiter problem. I suppose that when our earth has increased 216 times in volume, God will reduce the density of earthly matter by the same factor in order not to make a liar out of Newton or Kepler and insure that the solar system keeps right on ticking after taking such a licking.

Jack Van Impe announced, on a later program, that an astounding "find" had been made. This bit of new information has pinpointed the "end-day" as being in October of 1999. I shall now write to Jack and ask that he sign over all of his property and assets to me as a Hanukkah present in 1999. If he is right, and his wife says he is, he won't have any need for it. I know he won't do this because, deep down, he knows that he is only a teller of tales which people pay big bucks to hear.

One thing that runs through all of these heaven scenarios is the commonality of a life without discomfort or problems. Life would have about as much whoopee as a tomato plant has in a greenhouse, if this were the case. The flavor of life is in the discomfort and exhilaration of struggle. God, but it is great to conquer something! As a boy of 14, three months after my mother died, I was stricken with spinal meningitis. My right arm and right leg became paralyzed. Experts told me I would never walk again. My sister cried at my bedside when I said "F—k the doctors!" I did (not literally, Magic). I was walking the next year. What a wonderful feeling it was to have beaten that negative projection.

I see our people clamoring for air-bags in their cars, cushions here and cushions there, "security" for this and that, care for this and that, more and more drugs to "cure" the whatevers, and in general, complete protection from life itself. They want their entire existence to be a succession of pleasurable episodes in orifice stuffing — from copulation to eating — and to have a world that is completely safe for cretins. My Uncle Karl, who recently died at 101 years, was a pilot in WW I and he said it was viewed as the mark of a coward if anyone went aloft with a parachute. The present American scene reminds me of a cow pasture and thank God — He will not allow the goyim to chew on their cuds much longer.

I have often noticed a marked similarity between the religious hucksters and revisionists. They both write books, discuss this and that, have sermons and play "pass the hat". They both use the bulk of the donations to enhance their lifestyle. They both offer a version of salvation. The religious belchers offer you a planetary clean-up, by some super-natural means, of the mess you find unbearable, as soon as Jesus comes. The revisionists offer you a planetary clean-up, by earthly means, of the same mess, as soon as everyone has learned the "truth" about the Holocaust. In the meanwhile, the religious crowd buys more property, private aircraft and stock investments. One revisionist is buying property in Holland and looking about in British Columbia. Another just purchased a new car and buys plenty of airplane tickets to fly from one revisionist "convention" to another. Then again, we have one who is now into the water-sports hobby. Commuting, with your girl-friend, between North America and Europe costs mucho dinero. Remodeling one of your houses costs money. Living in a California penthouse costs money. On and on and on it goes. Vot a bisyness! and it's enjoyed by people who otherwise have no visible means of support except the pandering to people who believe that these deceivers represent their interests. The day will come, my friends, when you will regret every cent you "invested" in these people for promises they won't, or cannot, keep. Get a life! Stop trying to carry water in a sieve.

I'll close with a few comments gleaned from my mail, which, unlike revisionists, I do answer. One lady wondered if the Mark Lane of IHR, Spotlight, etc., was one of the two jews who "survived" the Jonestown mass suicide event. (I believe so. Ed.) In regard to the revisionist's now dancing a jewish jig with David Cole, one fellow wrote, "IF ARYANS REFUSE TO BELIEVE ARYANS, BUT PREFER TO BELIEVE JEWS, THEN SUCH ARYANS DESERVE THE EXTINCTION THEY ARE SO DILIGENTLY PURSUING." Keep this in mind the next time you have an urge to write a check and ask yourself why jews are now starting to hop upon the revisionist money-making manure machine. Read the Protocols and make sure your Hanukkah gifts bear the jews-housekeeping seal of approval.

HI HO, HI HO, A-REVISIONING WE WILL GO

I should have taken a New Year's vow never to read another bit of revisionist do-do again. It's more than a sleeping dog. I'll start by saying that the Leuchter Report is about as nutritious as the undigested seeds in a horseball.

The reason I am poking about in this mess is because I enjoy the antics of people who seem to think that a document, or any piece of paper, somehow represents reality. (Revisionists dwell in the past and the "end-timers" dwell in the future. What we need is a few good men who will think about the present.) A diploma, for example, is supposed to represent that its holder is now qualified to think. (Remember the Tin-Man in the Wizard of Oz?) Hell, if you couldn't think before you spent your money, a diploma won't change things. Revisionists, lawyers, historians, etc. are only paper shufflers. They are believers in labels. If the label says "beets" then obviously the jar contains beets. Right? Wrong! I spent 10 years of my life witness to laboratory "documents" which "certified" that absolute crap (Japanese aluminum) was OK to build aircraft parts from. Any Boeing readers out there? The "papers" were not related to anything we call the truth. Mere papers. Good for fuel on a cold night. The sign above my desk read "Ministry of Truth". College educations are exercises in papers and the terrible thing is that graduates actually believe they know something about the real world. They don't. "Knowing" comes from experience, not books.

The latest Journal of Historical Review, Winter 92-93 has been "Leuchterized". Fred Leuchter was the fellow who left occupied America to visit occupied Poland. While there, he stole some Polish property in the form of bricks, mortar, dust, roach droppings and such, and brought them home as souvenirs of Auschwitz. Fred then rushed the samples to a laboratory for an analysis of the "cyanide" content. By the beard of the Holocaust, the findings were blown into a gigantic whoopee. Lotsa cyanide in some bricks. Notta lotsa cyanide in other bricks. Conclusion: No one died from being "gassed" at Auschwitz. Ain't science grand — and simple? Imagine visiting kitchen "A" and finding spaghetti sauce all over the walls. Following that, you visit kitchen "B" and find no spaghetti sauce on the walls. Would you conclude that there were no spaghetti suppers in kitchen "B"? A revisionist

My copy of The Leuchter Report fails to indicate the chemical composition of the respective bricks. Maybe there is a "real" report out there somewhere, but the one I am looking at mentions only "iron" and "cyanide". The iron content was determined by spectrographic methods. I did spectrographic analysis while employed by Carborundum Metals, for the Atomic Energy Commission, and so I have no need to pilfer descriptions from a used college book, as the paper shufflers do. This type of analysis consists of burning a sample in an electric arc and photographing the spectral lines produced by diffraction. The density of the image on the photograph (negative) is "fudged" into a percent composition. Results are often reported as parts per million. This type of analysis gives no indication of the chemical relation of the elements. In other words, there is no way to tell if iron is in elemental form or in chemical combination with something and if in combination, no clue whatsoever as to what it was in combination with. It is impossible to tell if the iron was from rust or Turnbull's blue, which is similar to Prussian blue, or as the revisionists say, Auschwitz blue, which more than likely, is a mixture of Turnbull and Prussian blue.

The "cyanide" analysis was done by "wet" methods, that is, it was carried out in solution by reactive observations and measurements. Sometimes a substance is measured by separating and weighing its filterable reactive product. This is called gravimetric analysis and it fails to be conclusive sometimes because the precipitation in itself, often alters the substance in question. One has extreme difficulty in measuring trivalent chromium, by precipitation, if the reaction even hints at forming hexavalent chromium, or it is in solution with hexavalent chromium. Magnesium reacts with chromic acid to produce a chromate which is a chemical mess. In its structure can be found two valence states for the chromium, which, for some unknown reason, varies due to any traces of fluoride ion. Chromate coatings are used to prepare magnesium surfaces for adhesive and paint applications. It's an old German trick. These complex chromates offer the same resistance to analysis as does the iron in the ferri-ferrocyanide/ferro-ferricyanide mixtures. In 1962, while being employed as the chief chemist at a Boeing sub-contracting company, I solved this problem in regard to chromium by using an optical colorimetric method which was approved by the National Bureau of Standards. Moreover, many reactions are complicated by the unavoidable introduction of complex ions which trap other substances resulting in a loss of determination. Titrations are also notorious for erroneous results. Many technicians fail to allow for the fact that the indicators are part of the reaction also. People who attempt to determine the acidity of their swimming pools soon discover that the chlorine present bleaches the indicator and therefore leaves you holding onto another false conclusion. (Actually, it is nascent oxygen that does the job but people have this sort of chlorine thing buzzing about in their brains.)

I mentioned the above for a good reason. From what I have read in Mr. Leuchter's report, I would never get too excited until I had some other questions answered. Were the chemical compositions of the pieces of stone identical? Did the "gas chambers" have the identical building material as the "disinfection chambers" (disinfestation chambers)? Are you sure that the wall the samples came from were the identical walls which existed in 1944? Were the time, temperatures, humidity, light and hydrogen cyanide concentrations identical in both sites. In other words, were the fumigation chambers and the "extermination" chambers identically used? If not, then how can you make such a definitive conclusion, Fred? Did enthusiasm cloud your reason?

In the Journal mentioned above, I did not spend much time on the article "The Leuchter Report Vindicated" by Paul Grubach. It is a typical revisionist article — about 90 percent quotes and copied information from whatever sources proved agreeable. (Kosher science. Start with a conclusion and select the data to fit.) When the author slips and ventures a thought or two, he flubs it. Mr. Grubach got the better of (or so he thinks) Mr. Pressac, who authored something called "Truth Prevails". Pressac says this; Grubach says that; Pressac says this; etc. Each thinks the other to be mistaken. They are both correct. It's now Mr. Pressac's turn to babble on (refute, as the experts say) about Mr. Grubach's article.

I'll pause here for a note. Hydrogen cyanide (HCN) exists as a gas and a liquid at standard temperature and pressure. At zero degrees Celsius, water simultaneously exists as a gas, liquid and a solid. "Freezer burn" is the result of solid water changing to gaseous water right in your sub-zero freezer! Your food gets dehydrated without an oven in sight. HCN molecules just hate segregation. When this gas is dissolved in water, we refer to the solution as hydrocyanic acid or Prussic acid. The formula HCN refers to either; hence confusion in some cases. When hydrogen chloride gas is dissolved in water, it is called hydrochloric acid or muriatic acid. Some proton donating substances are normally in a liquid state. Acetic acid is one such case. When it is undiluted we call it "glacial" acetic acid. This is because it turns to a glacier-like solid substance at ordinary low temperatures. When HCN gas dissolves in water, some of the molecules react with the water to produce charged particles called ions. Most of them sit around watching TV.

Mr. Grubach received a diploma and studied something "with concentration in chemistry", as the horn blows. However, Mr. Grubach failed to remember his high school chemistry. On page 453 he quotes (revisionists are always quoting someone or copying something) a Dr. Pauling (the vitamin C kosher crackpot?) and seems unable to tell the difference between a "weak" acid and a "dilute" acid. In the dark, all acids look alike. Dilute refers to concentration while weak refers to dissociation (ionization). Weak acids may be concentrated and strong acids may be dilute. The terms "saturated" and "concentrated" are also confused. It would also be wise if he spent some time contemplating the difference between evaporation and boiling. Gotta keep yer eyes on dem molecules.

Mr. Grubach is also in the mind reading business. Throughout the "vindicating" article are liberal dashes of what "really" goes on in the mind of Mr. Pressac. Why gosh already, Paul can even ascertain all sorts of motives. He probably understands Mr. Pressac better than Mr. Pressac understands himself. I wonder: Can Mr. Pressac also read Mr. Grubach's mind? This all reminds me of the "psychological report" which surfaced in regard to Barry Goldwater in 1964. It was written by an "expert" whose only contact with Mr. Goldwater was through his writings, which may, or may not, have been written in earnest. Crystal balls are everywhere — except on Crystal, who is a girl.

On page 455, there is a glaring example of the faith in printed material as opposed to reality. The boiling point of hydrogen cyanide is 78 degrees Fahrenheit — right out of a book. The poo-plah about this or that because HCN (gas) would condense below this temperature occurs in most of the revisionist twaddle in an attempt to "prove" that "gassing" was impossible without heat and a full moon. (Are American gas chambers heated?) If these people would "get a life" they would soon learn that a little knowledge is dangerous. Water boils (change of state — liquid to gas) at 212 degrees. Below this temperature, if Mr. Grubach's view of the earth is valid, there shouldn't be any water in the atmosphere. Ever hear of humidity? If your body temperature is normal, your lungs are full of water vapor (gas) which is not itching to condense anywhere or at anytime even though it exists as a gas below the boiling point. Water remains as a gas, when evaporated, and never condenses until the "dew point" is reached and then, only a fraction of it. Hydrogen cyanide gas also has its own dew point and that is why Mr. Leuchter's surmise is all gas. Also, according to people who read but don't use their heads, ice shouldn't "disappear" if the temperature is below the freezing point. Sublimate it does and anyone who OBSERVES the world about him, instead of reading about it, knows that ICE DISAPPEARS, on very cold days, in the same way solid carbon dioxide (dry ice) does. At 50 degrees Fahrenheit, hydrogen cyanide can exist in a gaseous state, at lethal concentrations. If this weren't true, every exterminator of barnyard mice and beetles would be out of business. If Mr. Grubach is a man of conviction, then I propose a trial by gas. Let him stand in an unheated closet (50 degrees) and I'll drop a few copper cyanide pellets into a bowl of battery acid which will be at his feet. Nice and cool. After 10 minutes of all that "condensing" going on, Mr. Grubach can leave the closet, smiling and quoting the last article he read. If you believe that he will still be breathing, then I'll tell you a story about how diesel exhaust gases can't kill anyone either. One can quickly demonstrate how easily a diesel engine can be used as an effective killing machine. I only wish I could stuff a few revisionists into a chamber for that purpose, without going to jail. They would absolutely learn something. It would be their last lesson.

It's too bad that Mr. Grubach (follower) and Mr. Leuchter (the leader) never got into the blueprint business. They'd soon discover (hopefully) that in the formation of Prussian blue, the blue is initially a quite stable SOLUBLE substance. (The precipitate is not technically "soluble" but is actually an easily dispersed colloid.) In this state, one can rinse the substance away. In the blueprint section of Taylor-Sybron, excess Prussian blue, on week-old prints, was bleached away, as a matter of course, with nothing more sophisticated than a 4 to 10 percent solution of washing soda (sodium carbonate). (Perhaps Nazi chemicals operate with a different set of rules.) Hydrated chromous oxide, and countless other insolubles, also exhibit the same property. Since the "gassing" took place with all of that sweating, urinating, and vomiting within a chamber that was already damp, one could easily develop a scenario by which the lack of accumulated Auschwitz blue could be legitimately explained. Did the Nazis rinse the chambers after each use? If they used washing potash, then that would explain where all of that potassium came from. Were the chambers ever cleaned with any type of alkali? If so, the "blue" could have been drastically reduced.

During a clothes fumigation process the articles are never fumigated in a wet state. Therefore, this chamber would have "unused" HCN all over the place. When gassing people, the great quantities of moisture present on and in the bodies would absorb large quantities of HCN leaving a lesser amount to react with whatever hematite, siderite or magnetite that was present in the stone walls. Hydrogen cyanide has a very strong attraction to water. It dissolves in all proportions which leads to the strange term "infinitely soluble". You'll find examples of this sort of thing in the Handbook of Chemistry and Physics where "data" is given for a 100 percent(!) solution. This is nonsense since the term "solution" implies at least one other substance. Many people do not realize that a good share of this "authoritative data" is the result of interpolation and extrapolation — educated guesses. It's in the fine print, boys, if you ever managed to read it. If HCN is introduced into a sealed container of water, the molecular attraction to the water is such that the internal gas pressure will be reduced. Ammonia is another gas where this is true and lends itself to a remarkable laboratory demonstration of this effect. If you placed a rodent into a sealed chamber and an equal mass of cloth into another of the same volume, and then introduce equal amounts of hydrogen cyanide gas into both (sufficient to kill the rodent), you'd find that the rodent chamber would have much less HCN left over than would the other chamber. If the walls were such that Prussian blue could be formed, then the walls of the chamber containing the cloth would be more blue. Another question which should be answered is in regard to the frequency. Where the "gas" chambers used to the same extent as the fumigation chambers? Also, if the disinfestation chambers were indeed warmer than the "execution" chambers, then another reason is found for the evidence of a greater concentration of reaction products (blue stuff).

Mr. Leuchter is also strung out on this 78 degree temperature bit. To Fred, hydrogen cyanide would be condensing all over the place. Not so. (How's your dew point?) Under the temperatures and pressures being considered, the hydrogen cyanide molecule has a greater affinity for the water molecule than it does for its own kind. It is a molecular race-mixer. This means that hydrocyanic acid would be formed in preference to the liquid hydrogen cyanide because water is not exactly rare. Moreover, every fumigator knows that it takes very much higher concentrations of HCN to kill fleas than it does people. Here again we have another reason (if you need one) for one chamber having bluer walls than another. Higher concentrations of HCN are needed to kill fleas, bedbugs (they need a lot of gassing!) and lice than would be necessary for human beings or Bushbunnies. So there. My blue is bluer than your blue. Mr. Leuchter also overlooks the fact that crowded rooms get very warm. People are actually radiant heaters and so are the cows which heat up cow barns. Revisionists spend too much time in isolation to know this.

The revisionist thing is a circle-jerk; an endless debate; a merry-go-'round. It is often a business run by people who don't know how to earn a living any other way — an obvious handicap. This doesn't mean that I believe all of those WW II tales. They're mostly nonsense but many people believe all sorts of preposterous things. So what? Do you think arguing will change their minds? I don't. If tomorrow morning everyone woke up and exclaimed that the Holocaust was a hoax, and believed it, would AIDS disappear? crime vanish? the Mexican invasion evaporate? drugs go poof? Huh?

In spite of David McCalden's book Exiles From History, I see a greater strength in the Jewish psyche than in the revisionist one. Revisionists are generally not jews. The jews, unlike christians, don't stomp about the earth bothering people with conversion in mind. They are content to do their thing. No jew has ever bothered me, but assorted varieties of christians are continually disturbing my peace by pounding on the door with the latest "truth". In regard to the "gassing" business, jews simply believe it happened (as well as the 10 million followers of Pat Robertson and other "born-agains") and go about their business with hardly a second-thought. Revisionists appear to have some psychological warp which propels them to proselytize. They WANT to believe in the non-existence of things other people believe existed and spend considerable energy in trying to convince themselves that they are on the path to something. It's an obsession. In many cases, it is merely an occupation.
